Sec. 14. The removal of all garbage and ashes, from places of business in garbage district No. 1, shall be at the expense of the city. The removal of ashes, garbage, manure, night soil and other refuse matter, within garbage district No. 2 described in Section 3 of this ordinance and outside of district No. 1, shall be at the expense of the owner, agent, or occupant.

Sec. 15. All privy vaults and cesspools on property abutting the sewer system embraced within the limits of sewer district No. 1, shall be removed, filled up and connections made with sewer system within thirty days after the date of the approval of this ordinance.

Sec. 16. No person shall empty or attempt to empty any vault, privy, sink or cesspool within the garbage districts except pursuant to a permit therefor received from the board of health.

Sec. 17. It shall be unlawful and a misdemeanor for any person or persons other than persons, companies or corporations holding a permit from the health department, to engage in the business of hauling garbage, manure or other refuse, providing this condition does not apply to persons hauling their own garbage with their own teams.

Sec. 18. All persons engaged in the removal of garbage, manure or other offensive refuse, shall have the word scavenger and the number of the permit in large white letters on black ground, attached on each side of the wagon bed.

Sec. 19. Any person engaged in hauling garbage, rubbish or decaying matter of any kind, through the streets of this Salt Lake City, from the overloading of any wagon, cart or vehicle, or through carelessness or negligence, allows or causes any of said matter to fall and remain in the streets of this city, shall upon conviction be fined as provided in section 21 of this ordinance.

Sec. 20. All persons, companies or corporations, holding permits, shall be entitled to charge and collect not to exceed the following fees for the removal of garbage and refuse matters contemplated in this ordinance, to-wit:

For all portions of Garbage District Number Two (2) as follows:
For each load of manure of 2 cubic yards, $0.75
For each barrel of refuse (not more than 2 gallons) 0.25
For vessels of less capacity than 30 gallons, 0.15
For each load of garbage 0.75
For ash, per load 0.15
For quantities less than one load, shall charge for each basket thereof 0.10

Sec. 21. Any person or persons failing to comply with, or who violate any of the provisions of the foregoing sections of this ordinance, shall be fined in any sum not less than $5 nor more than fifty ($50.00), and shall, in addition to such punishment, be fined the further sum of Five ($5.00) Dollars for every twenty-four (24) hours of failure or refusal to comply with said ordinance.

Sec. 22. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force thirty (30) days after its passage and approval.

TO CLEAN A WATER COURSE.

Rich offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the street department be authorized in place of superintendent of irrigating department to clean out and repair the creek on North Temple street from Sixth to Ninth West streets, as per resolution passed and adopted by this Council about three weeks ago, and that the superintendent of the street department be requested to commence work at once, keep a strict account of the expenditure thereof and have the same charged back to the irrigating department.

THAT CONTRACT AGAIN.

Simonds offered a resolution recommending the board of public works to let the paving contract of Main, First and Second South streets to the Ryan-Griffin company, as they were the lowest bidders.

Fland said he was opposed to the resolution. It was a breach of good judgment. The board of public works had practically said that the Ryan-Griffin company was irresponsible.

Wantland said the resolution was the veriest kind of folly.

Rich was in favor of paving, but the bids of Ryan & Griffin and the Culmer-Jennings company were as dead as if they had been killed a year ago.

Hardy offered the following as a substitute, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the papers and bids sent to this council be returned to the board of public works and they take immediate steps to advertise for new bids at once for the paving of Main street and First and Second South streets.

Moran asked Wantland if he was really in favor of Utah material. The gentleman would not reply, but said through the stupidity of some of the members a big mistake had been made. Moran called him to order and said he was willing to be called a chump, but he was opposed to the insinuation used.

The Chair called Wantland to order and told him he must observe decorum.

GRADE EXTENSIONS.

Evans offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the city engineer be authorized and instructed to extend the street and sidewalk grades over all that portion of the city lying between Ninth South and Sixth North streets, and from Sixth to Eleventh West streets, and to submit profiles of all streets in said described districts to this council for its approval.

Adjourned until Tuesday night.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Vice-President Nelson presided at the meeting of the Board of Education last evening, and there were also present Trustees Duke, Pratt, Baldwin, Newman and Young.

"BADLY OVERCROWDED."

Superintendent Millsbaugh was requested to make a verbal report concerning the conditions of the schools in the Fourteenth building. He stated that the building was badly overcrowded. The High school room was so thronged that the recitation room had to be used for children for a study room. The basement rooms were overcrowded, over eighty pupils being seated in one room and sixty in another. The schools in the surrounding districts were also overcrowded, and there is no prospect for putting children from the Fourteenth in any of them. It was similar all over the city. It was thought that by removing the High school it would greatly relieve all pressure.

The following proposition for renting a building was read to the board:

I will lease you the second and third stories of my building on South Temple street for a period of two years at the annual rental of $1200 for the first year and $1500 for the second year. Respectfully, ISAAC A. CLAYTON.

Mr. Duke moved to accept.

Mr. Young thought the building would not be needed more than for one year and nine months. He therefore moved to amend as follows: That the committee on school work be authorized to close negotiations with Mr. I. A. Clayton for the lease of his building on South Temple street for two years or such shorter time as the committee may deem expedient. Adopted.

AS JANITRESS.

An application was made by Miss M. Graves for the post of janitress at the Ontario school. The applicant was endorsed by Mr. A. B. Martin. Referred to the committee on furniture and supplies.

OFFER OF A ROOM.

Mrs. Tollet offered to rent a building on the corner of O and Third streets for $15 per month. The room is 19 1/2 x 24 feet and was originally built for a schoolroom. Referred to the committee on sites and buildings.

ANOTHER OFFER.

The following was received from the Tenth ward ecclesiastical corporation:

To the Board of Education:

We, a committee authorized by the Tenth ward ecclesiastical board of Salt Lake City, do, upon the representation of the principal, that you are sadly deficient in school accommodations for the children of the Tenth district, and at the earnest suggestion of Mr. McKay, agree to rent for school purposes, for the current school year, the rectory, consisting of two floors, at the monthly rental of $50 per month, subject to the following conditions:

The benches to be large for senior pupils.

The library case to be left in lower room, with access for us to the rear.

The janitor whom you hire to attend to these rooms to be of our selection.

That we have full and free access to said rooms for evening and Sabbath school meetings.

That you furnish the heat for school.

That extra care be paid in keeping these rooms from being damaged.

That in making this proposition we desire to state that the general feeling is that the board of education has not given the attention to our wants which we all think they deserve. At the present time the schoolrooms which our people so strongly cherish themselves to erect and provide for their children, are being occupied by pupils from other school districts, and some of ours are compelled to be content with only half educational rations. We hope by the commencement of another school year that your honorable body will make provisions for our wants in this direction.

We do not desire to extend this lease over the present school year.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM FULLER,

C. W. SYMONS.

Superintendent Millsbaugh said that last year three rooms in the Exposition building were rented and that gave a great deal of school facilities, but those rooms could not now be secured. In the present crowded condition it was impossible to make any headway at all. A motion to accept the offer was carried unanimously.

THIS WAS ACCEPTED.

An offer was made by N. S. Larsen to sell lot 2, block 4, Plat G, Salt Lake City survey, payment to be made on delivery of deed after approval of title by the attorney of the board.

The offer was accepted, and on motion of Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Young was authorized to close the contract with Mr. Larsen for the above property.

A COMMITTEE SPECIALLY REPORTS.

The committee on sites and buildings made the following report:

Gentlemen—The undersigned, the only member of the committee on sites and buildings now in the city, reports that to accommodate in part the children of the Twentieth school, a building has been rented on Sixth street from Mr. Jennings, and is now in use by children of first and second grade. The terms of renting are as follows: $20 per month until the completion of the new building, and the putting of the building in the same condition as that in which it was found. This latter will be at a cost of perhaps $10 for replastering the partition, which has been removed.

We wish also to report the need of four closets for use at the following buildings: One on Fourth South and Tenth East; one on Sixth street, at the building just rented, and two at the Presbyterian chapel in the Fifth ward.

ANTHUR PRATT.

The report was adopted.

MUSICAL BOOKS AND CHARTS.

The committee on school work recommended the purchase of the following musical books and charts needed for the school at this time:

30 First series of charts at $6.25 each.....	$ 202 50
25 Second series of charts at $6.75 each.....	169 75
115 Pitch pipes, one for each teacher, at twenty cents each.....	23 50
70 Mason's first readers at twenty-one cents each.....	14 70
70 Mason's second readers at thirty-three cents each.....	23 10
100 Independent National Readers for the teachers and pupils of High school.....	55 00
30 Tilden's Hand Book of Music Lessons at twenty-five cents each.....	7 50
Total.....	$ 497 55

The following drawings are also required:

80 Elementary Drawing at sixty cents each.....	$ 48 00
50 Drawing Simplified at sixty-five cents each.....	32 50
Total.....	$ 80 50

The committee announced that the high school pupils are short as follows: Ten Collier's Beginning Latin; twenty Milne's Reduction Algebra; ten English Composition—Lockwood.

The report was adopted and the committee instructed to purchase the books.

PAYMENTS TO CONTRACTORS.

The committee on finance reported that in accordance with the resolution of the board it had audited the following bills and directed the issuance of warrants for payment to contractors for the erection of the following buildings:

Crawford Bros. & Bryan, Hamilton school.....	3,320 20
Salma U. Watson, Lincoln school.....	4,950 00
F. M. Wright, Washington.....	2,570 00
Salt Lake Building & Manufacturing Co., Lowell.....	9,301 00
Telfer & Hunsacker, Franklin.....	3,056 80
W. H. J. J. Bryant.....	5,322 00
Total.....	$29,118 00

The report was received and filed.

APPROPRIATIONS MADE.

The following list of bills were reported by the finance committee for payment and appropriations made accordingly:

Messrs. Stant & Droge, removing soil from Bryant school.....	$ 9 00
Utah National Bank, rent.....	60 00
George Forrester, services.....	20 25
Salt Telephone Company.....	2 10
A. Stiefel, freight prepaid.....	1 60

PROPOSED NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.

Mr. Young moved that a set of plans and specifications be obtained from the architects for the erection of an eight class room school building on South Temple street, corner of R, the lot just purchased, at a cost not to exceed 12 per cent. of the contract price, and that the clerk be authorized to advertise for bids for the erection of said building. Adopted.

TREASURER DUKE'S REPORT.

Treasurer Duke presented the following monthly report of the receipts and disbursements:

Receipts—
Balance.....	$192,549 08
Received from D. E. Allen, Territory.....	2,447 92
Received from sale of old house, Jackson site.....	60 00
Received from E. E. Clute, city tax.....	214 24
Total.....	$215,871 24
Disbursements—
Paid clerk's warrants.....	$38,998 37
Balance on hand.....	$176,872 87

The report was referred to the finance committee.

HEATING AND VENTILATING PLANTS.

A special committee consisting of Messrs. Nelson, Young and Baldwin, was appointed to approve the contracts with firms for heating and ventilating plants for the school buildings.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

On the 10th and 11th inst., the Virginia Conference was again held at Batesville, Albemarle Co., Va.

The attendance was not large, but the saints certainly manifested that they appreciated the good resulting from a number of Elders meeting together and preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The following names and addresses of Elders may be of interest to their friends:

Elder Richard C. Harvey, of Heber, Wasatch Co., Utah, president of the conference, still has his postoffice address, Batesville, Albemarle Co., Va. Elder Ephraim Peterson, of Mink Creek, Idaho, and Elder Duncan Gillies, of Beaver, Boxer Co., Utah, are to labor in Rabanahock, Fauquier, and Prince William counties, whose postoffice address is Flint Hill, Rabanahock Co., Va.

Elder W. W. Richards, of Farmington, Davis Co., Utah, and Elder James Vance, of Mariopa Co.,

Arizona, are to labor in Spottsylvania, Stafford and Caroline Counties. Post-office address is Andrews Tavern, Spottsylvania Co., Va.

Elders John Curtis, of Orangeville, Emery Co., Utah, and George A. Smith, of Farmington, Davis Co., Utah, will go to Louisa and Goodland Counties, with postoffice address at Dabney, Louisa Co., Va.

Elder Chas. R. Clark, of Morgan, Morgan Co., Utah, and Elder John P. Cardon, of Logan, Cache Co., Utah, go to Orange, Culpepper and Madison Counties, with their postoffice address at Madison Run, Orange Co., Va.

The Elders feel encouraged in reporting their labors of the past and in contemplating the work of the future.

LITTLE GRAND VALLEY.

Feeling that our little valley is worthy of some consideration by the outside world, I cannot resist offering a few facts in regard to it, its people and its general products.

Little Grand Valley, Utah, is located at the west side of the Sierra Lasal mountains, averaging 12 miles about one and a half mile and about fifteen miles in length, well watered by mountain streams of pure water that assist us in producing excellent crops of alfalfa (lucerne), corn, some small grain, and, in advance of all, our delicious fruits that are quite well known throughout a portion of our western country.

The excellent fruit productive qualities of our little valley, we ask the privilege to claim, are above the average.

Mr. W. W. Warner and others wish a determination to test the orchard qualities of our soil are now obtaining results very much beyond their expectations and are getting largely repaid for the energy displayed in planting fruit trees several years ago.

Fruit growers here are removing inferior trees and replacing them with a good standard fruit from some of the leading nurseries.

Our summers, as a general rule, are not very warm. Located, as our little valley is, at the base of a range of mountains, the warm days in midsummer are followed by pleasant nights.

The people here are beginning to realize that our valley is no longer a tract of desolate sagebrush and greasewood, but a pleasant home, surrounded by orchards, meadows and gardens that help to make life worth living and the most of them are taking advantage of the encouragement presented to them, and are doing what they can to make our little place pleasing to the eye of those who may pass our way.

In the past month our people have donated labor on a mountain road that will give us access to a vast amount of fencing and building material, and also sawed material that is going to generally improve our homes. The outlay on the road will only be a few hundred dollars, while the income can not well be calculated.

The financial condition of our county is excellent, and there is no reason why it should not remain thus.

As to our schools, we again ask the privilege of claiming that they are all we can expect of a small colony.

Instead of a small log room in an old dwelling about two years ago, we are now proud of a neat, substantial, well finished abode building about twenty by fifty feet, fourteen feet ceiling, consisting of a ward school room, a hall or a porch room together with a primary department.

We do not wish to cover our country up from view, but always leave it open to inspection for those desiring a quiet home. Any information concerning our country desired can be obtained by addressing

A CAREFUL OBSERVER.

DEATHS.

SYMES.—September 13, at Moroni, George W., son of William and Betsy Morley 5 mo; born March 31, 1895.

CUTLER.—At Idaho Falls, September 11, 1895, of convulsions Susan Mary Cutler, daughter of John and Susan A. Cutler, aged 14 months.

CLAYTON.—At Ogden, Levi, son of William and Annie Clayton, aged 16 years. Funeral will be announced hereafter.

WELLS.—In the sixth ward of this city, September 17th, Corliss Middemoes Wells, wife of Rufus H. Wells; born March 12, 1874.

HARDING.—In this city, September 14, at 7 o'clock a. m. of cancer in the stomach, William Harding, aged 63 years, 8 months and 29 days.

MCGREGOR.—Died in Salt Lake City, September 10th, 1895, of general debility, Wm. McGregor, in the seventy seventh year of his age.

KLEIMAN.—At Toquerville, Washington Co., Utah, August 29th, of cholera morbus, Henry O., son of Henry and S. V. Spilbury Kleiman, aged one year, ten months and fourteen days.

WOELFEL.—In South Cottonwood, Salt Lake County, on Friday, September 13th, at 3 o'clock p. m., Elizabeth Bath Woelfel, of child and fever. The deceased was 63 years of age and was born in the same hospital three years ago, came next November, of typhoid fever. She was a faithful Latter-day Saint.

LARSEN.—August 26th, at Moroni, Utah, Pernella Larsen, widow of the late Lars N. Larsen, of convulsions and paralytic stroke; born January 27th, 1835, in Sweden.

Also on August 31st, of old age, Anna J. Larsen; born December 21st, 1810.

FARNER.—At the Holy Cross Hospital, Aug. 2, 1895, of acute nephritis, John F. Farnes, aged 23 years. He was the brother of Edwin J. Farnes, who died in the same hospital three years ago, came next November, of typhoid fever, in the 24th year of his age.

SCOTT.—September 9th, at Moroni, Ann Reid wife of Edwin Scott and daughter of Thomas Reid and Alice Middleton; born December 29, 1819, in Ireland. She embraced the Gospel in the city of Manchester, England, on the 23rd of August, 1847, and emigrated to Utah in 1862. She lived and died a faithful Latter-day Saint.

TAYLOR.—At Beaver City, September 2nd, of asthma, Isaiah Wakefield Taylor, son of John and Lydia Taylor, of Salem, Massachusetts, where he was born June 25th, 1816. He deceased joined the Church at an early day, emigrated to Utah in 1857, married Agnes Reid in Salt Lake City November 12, 1861, and removed to Beaver in 1868, where he dwelt until his death.

MORRILL.—At her residence, at Junction, Platte County, Utah, September 6th, 1895, Permelia, wife of Laban Morrill, aged seventy-one years and seventeen days. Her death was the result of an accident. She was the daughter of Joel and Turziah Drury, and was born in Wendell, Franklin County, Massachusetts. She was a consistent and faithful Latter-day Saint. She leaves an aged husband and seven children, with numerous grandchildren and friends to mourn her loss.

WALTERS.—At Weville, Aug. 5th, of dyspepsia and diabetes, Edward W. Walters, son of William and Margaret Williams Walters. Deceased was born in Sandy, Cambridgeshire, South Wales, June 12, 1820. He came to this country with his parents, who settled 1868 in Cache County, where he resided until the time of his death. The deceased has always been a faithful Latter-day saint and an earnest worker in the cause of truth. He leaves a widow, six children, and a host of friends to mourn his loss.—[COM.]

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION

ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION.

ESTABLISHED

TRUTH AND LIBERTY.

JUNE 1850.

NO. 15.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1892.

VOL. XLV.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by President Geo. Q. Cannon, on Sunday, September 18th, 1892, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I will read a portion of the 4th chapter of the First Epistle of John:

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus is come in the flesh is of God: And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world. They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we love God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

The Apostle says further:

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

In standing up to address you, I do so with a desire that I shall have the assistance of your faith and prayers. As we are often told, it is our privilege when we come together as we have done this afternoon to have the presence and the assistance of the Spirit of God, that the very things may be given unto us that are adapted to our various conditions and circumstances. I do not know your thoughts, nor your wants, nor the condition of your minds, nor your temptations or trials; but God knows them, and therefore He asks His servants, when they speak to the people, to rely upon Him, and he has promised if we will do so in faith that He will give us that which shall be appropriate for the instruction and benefit of the people. Therefore, it is not necessary that we should prepare our discourses beforehand, because if we did that we would thwart the purpose of God and prevent the free flow of His Holy Spirit. We are commanded, however, to ponder upon the things of His kingdom, and he will give unto us at the very time that we need that which is adapted to the circumstances and conditions of the people; and we are also commanded not to speak unless we do so by His Spirit. It is a grave responsibility to stand up as a teacher of a congregation like this, and one naturally shrinks from it. But when we come together as we should do, then our minds are filled with light, and there is no one who has come to meeting in that spirit that will go away without being satisfied.

There is a great desire expressed by many when they hear the testimony of the servants of God, to know whether that which they testify to is true or not. The Latter-day Saints bear a very remarkable testimony when they address the world. Their Elders who go forth to preach the Gospel utter a good many sayings that are very hard for the people to believe, and therefore they frequently meet with great opposition. This is an age of enlightenment. I suppose there never was a generation which prided itself more upon its progress in every direction than does ours. We are the heirs of all the ages. All the truth that has ever been known to man is supposed to be concentrated in the breasts of living men in our day, not only religious truths, but truths of every character. It is therefore looked upon as a very hard saying, especially by the religious world, that God has again spoken from the heavens and restored to the earth the everlasting Gospel, and that the churches which are organized among men have departed, in many respects, from the ancient pattern. This wounds the self-love and pride of the world. They feel very much hurt at such expressions, and anger is aroused frequently in their minds because, as I have said, a great many believe that we are living in a very progressive age and in the full blaze of Gospel light. But the truth nevertheless requires that the statements which are made by the Latter-day Saints should be told.

Then the inquiry arises, How are we to know that that which you tell us is true?

Some do not take the trouble to make such an inquiry as this, because they treat with contempt the message that they hear. They consider it unworthy of their attention. They look upon those who make these statements as almost crazy, and pass them by as utterly unworthy of their notice. But there are those in whom this inquiry arises, "If this be true, how are we to know it?"

All the churches that are now organized proclaim that they are true. Each sect claims to be the Church of Christ, and its ministers claim to be the servants of Christ. They claim that by entering their church in a proper manner salvation may be secured. And their effort is to make everyone believe this, and to throw aside all doubts concerning the efficacy of the plan of salvation as they teach it. We have in this city at the present time—I did not intend to allude to this in the commencement, but it comes to mind as appropriate—meetings to which the public are invited, and they are appealed to to forsake sin and to turn to godliness, and they are asked, as I understand, which church they wish to join—that is, those who are converted to the necessity of forsaking sin and becoming religious.

Now, according to our view, this is all wrong. There can be but one Church of Christ. There can be but one plan of salvation. As Paul expressed it, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism,"—not many Lords, not many forms of faith, not many forms of baptism. If we had the truth as it is in Jesus there would be but one plan of salvation, and but one path in which men and women would be required to walk in order to obtain salvation; and that path Jesus described as a straight and narrow path. That was the path in which He expected His followers would walk. If men have the authority to point out different paths, and to frame different plans and different ordinances, and to submit different requirements to the children of men in order that they may be disciples of Christ, then there is something needed to authorize these men more than is found in the Bible. Certainly, the Bible, which is the Word of God, does not warrant any such thing, and I believe Christians generally deny that there has been any revelation from God since the Bible was finished, or since the writers of the different books in the Bible have passed away.

It was evidently the design of our Lord in revealing the plan of salvation and in commanding His servants to go forth and proclaim it, to have but one form of doctrine. It would bring the character of our God into a certain degree, I might say, of contempt if He were to leave so important a matter as the salvation of His children to the judgment and imagination of men; if He were to leave men to say this doctrine is essential and this doctrine is non-essential; to say if you obey this you shall have salvation, or you need not obey that, for it is not necessary to salvation. If it was necessary in the days of Jesus and of His Apostles that men should believe in Jesus and repent of their sins, it is necessary today; and no human judgment, nor no human council can do away with that necessity. God is the Being to grant salvation, and He is the Being to withhold salvation, and He is the Being to pronounce the terms upon which salvation shall be obtained. Therefore, as God did make faith in Jesus a doctrine that was necessary for man's salvation, it is still necessary. Though ages may have passed, this has not changed. It cannot be changed. It takes as much to save a man in this generation as it did eighteen hundred years ago. There may be any amount of enlightenment, of wisdom and of knowledge, but however great this may be, it does not affect in the slightest degree the principle that men must believe in Jesus as the foundation of their faith and of their salvation. They must also repent of their sins. No sophistry, no human wisdom, no human device can remove from the plan of salvation the necessity of the repentance of sin; for the Gospel of Jesus Christ demands absolutely that sin must be forsaken, and in order for it to be forsaken it must be repented of. Therefore, if men say that you can be saved without faith and without repentance, or if the whole world should say this, would it affect in the least degree the salvation of men? Would men be saved because the whole world said they could be without these vital principles? Certainly not. God, who grants salvation, and who is the Author of salvation, has placed these principles in His Gospel as essential to salvation.

I believe, however, that Christendom generally admits that faith in Jesus and repentance of sin are essential. But there are thousands and perhaps millions of professed believers in Jesus who say that anything beyond this is non-essential to salvation. Of course, there are differences of opinion upon these matters. Still, there are many who pronounce other things unnecessary.

But the Apostles of Jesus not only taught faith in the Lord and repentance of sin, but they said that it was necessary for men to be baptized. I need only allude to one case to show how important some of the Apostles thought this ordinance to be. You remember the visit of Peter to Cornelius, the Gentile, and the miraculous manner in which Peter was led to comply with the request which Cornelius had sent to him. It was contrary to the custom of the Jews and considered a very improper thing for an orthodox Jew to associate with Gentiles. But Peter, having received a vision in which he was shown that he should not call anything unclean that the Lord had made clean, complied with the request that was sent to him, and went with the messengers to the house of Cornelius. Cornelius and his household, under the preaching of Peter, received the Holy Ghost, and Peter and his companions were compelled to admit that the Gentiles had received the Holy Ghost as well as the Jews, and after he witnessed this remarkable and unexpected manifestation, he said to his companions, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"

Now, I submit that if such a manifestation was witnessed on our day, and by many who call themselves ministers of Christ, according to their teachings they would have said it was entirely unnecessary to use water, or to have the ordinance of baptism administered unto these people, because they had received the Holy Ghost, and that was all sufficient. The very thing that Peter cited as a reason why they should be baptized would now be cited by some modern ministers as a reason why they should not be baptized. It is evident from this that this great Apostle and his companions deemed the ordinance of baptism essential, even though the persons had received the Holy Ghost. If he had not taken this view of this ordinance he would not have required Cornelius and his household to be baptized. But he considered it necessary, and he baptized them.

Suppose a concave of ministers, calling themselves servants of Jesus Christ, should say to their fellow men, "We consider faith in Jesus and repentance of sins essential to salvation, but we do not believe baptism essential to salvation; people can be baptized if they wish, but there is no particular efficacy in it. If you will only come to the cross and cast your sins at the foot of the cross, they will be washed away by the blood of Jesus; and therefore the ordinance of baptism is not essential." Would that decision of theirs change the plan of salvation framed in heaven and taught by the Son of God? Can mortal men prescribe the terms upon which mankind shall be saved and depart from those required by the Lord?

There are many, however, who have done this and who teach the people in something like the language I have quoted, while others say, "Yes, you might as well be baptized, but what way do you wish to be baptized? Would you like to be sprinkled; would you like to have water poured upon you, or would you prefer being immersed?" I have heard it stated that there are many ministers who offer to the converts their choice as to the manner of their baptism. This is not the way that God intended, according to the Scriptures. This is not the plan of salvation as taught by His servants. There was but one form of baptism, and there is but one now. Jesus, the greatest Being that ever stood upon the earth, a Being without sin, went unto John to be baptized. But John did not say to him, How will you be baptized, my Lord? Shall I sprinkle you, or pour some water upon your head, or shall I immerse you?" John did not propound any such question to the Savior. Neither did the Savior suggest any such performance to John. But He came to be baptized, and John, realizing his own unworthiness to perform that sacred ordinance on behalf of the Son of God, hesitated; but Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." That was the Savior's expression. He looked upon it as essential. If there was any being that was ever born on the earth that could have dispensed with this holy ordinance, it certainly was the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. But He offered Himself as an example to all the rest of us; offered Himself as a candidate for this holy ordinance to a man to whom God had given the authority to baptize. John had received that priesthood from his fathers by virtue of which that holy ordinance could be administered and its administration be recognized by God the Eternal Father. Therefore, Jesus submitted to the ordinance, and testified to all the children of men that should follow afterwards that it was an ordinance essential to salvation. His disciples taught the same doctrine, and administered the same ordinance unto all who received the Gospel and were willing to enter into the Church of Christ.

After this there was another ordinance that they looked upon as essential in those days. You remember that one of the disciples went to Samaria, and he preached the Gospel there, and it seems that he had authority to baptize, for he baptized the converts; but for some reason he did not administer any other ordinance. John the Baptist did not either. He said: "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." When the Apostles heard that Samaria had received the word, they sent two of the Apostles there, who, when they came to Samaria, and met with the men and women who had been baptized, laid their hands upon them and they received the Holy Ghost. This was an ordinance in the ancient Church, and considered essential to salvation by the Apostles; for if they had not so considered it, they certainly would not have put the Apostles to the trouble of going there to visit the Saints and administer that ordinance to them.

So that we have here, not only faith, not only repentance, but we have baptism, and the laying on of hands, as ordinances in the Church of Christ.

Now, let me ask this of all of you. How can it be expiated that where a succession of generations lay aside these important ordinances and say they are not essential to salvation, that the spirit and power and blessing of God and the gift of the Holy Ghost will rest down upon them? It seems to me that any one who would reflect upon this subject would be forced to admit that such a departure from the plan of salvation would inevitably forfeit the blessings that the Lord should accompany the administration of these ordinances. How can men expect the Holy Ghost to rest upon them when they do not obey the ordinances which bring that precious gift? How can they expect any other result than that the Lord will withhold the gift of the Holy Ghost when they refuse to obey the ordinances necessary to obtain it?

I have alluded to these ordinances to show that there is some ground for the testimony of the Latter-day Saints that the everlasting Gospel needed to be restored to the earth; that unless something were done to restore it there could be no enjoyment of the gifts that characterized the ancient Church. Hence, if a man were to ask me, "How shall I know which of these various sects is true?" I should tell him that he must look around for a church corresponding in its organization, in its teachings, in its claims, in its gifts and blessings with the ancient Church which Jesus founded.

There is a great diversity of sects at the present time, each one claiming to be the Church of Christ. There is confusion in the world, and men are distracted almost by the claims that are set up by various organizations. It is no wonder that men throw aside religion entirely and say they want none of it, and that thinking men should feel disgusted, so to speak, with the claims that are set forth in behalf of these various denominations. Here in this city of ours we have already quite a number of organizations of this character, each one claiming to be the Church of Christ. Suppose our young men and young women were to go around, if they had not accepted the Gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and ask which one of these is correct, what confusion would necessarily follow the inquiry! Here is a church organized that deifies the divinity of the Savior and the atoning power of His blood. Others believe that His blood is all that is necessary to salvation. One believes that one form of organization is correct; another says that a different form is the correct one. They are known as churches not by the name of Jesus Christ, but by the names of the founders. These zealous men, believing that reforms were necessary, left the bodies with which they were connected and formed new organizations and they were called after their names. And these have multiplied in the earth until there is no end of confusion, strife and contention concerning the plan of salvation and the true path for men and women to walk in to obtain eternal life.

In the words that I have read in your hearing the Apostle had this condition of things in mind. He advised the people to whom he wrote to try the spirits, whether they were of God or not; and one of the signs—a most important one in that day—was whether the spirit would confess that Jesus was the Christ. That was the crucial test in those days, because Jesus had been born a little while before and had been crucified, and He was denounced as an impostor and a man worthy of death. Therefore, the Apostle could well say, "Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God." But that rule would not apply today with the same force that it did then, because the belief in Jesus is almost universal. Times have changed. Jesus is now accepted, and there are comparatively few men who will openly avow their unbelief in Jesus. But the same reasons exist now for trying the spirits that did then, to see whether they are of God or not. I hope no one will think I am sacrilegious, or that I am lowering my Savior, when I say that when I hear a man confess that Joseph Smith is a Prophet I think he has some of the Spirit of God within him, because it is a good deal of a test nowadays. A man who will admit that a man who lived such a life as Joseph Smith is reported to have lived, and died such a death as he did, is a Prophet of God satisfies me as to whether he is speaking by the Spirit of God or not. Tests vary according to times and circumstances. That which might have been a very excellent test 1800 years ago might not be so much of a test now. Yet when a man today confesses Jesus he does speak by the Spirit of God. There is no doubt about that. That has not changed. It is the Spirit of God that prompts men to acknowledge Jesus, just as much now as it ever did. But it is not such a test now as it was in ancient days. There were very few then that dare do it; and whenever they did it, they did it, it may be said, almost with the fear of their lives before them, because the whole world was arrayed against the Savior, and ready to pounce upon any man who acknowledged Him to be the Son of God.

But we can test the spirits now. Everything that is good cometh from God, I care not where it may be. Do other churches have good in them as well as the Church of Christ? Certainly. The Greeks had good among them. They had truths among them when Paul and the other servants of God proclaimed the Gospel at Athens. When they preached in Rome there was good among the Romans. It would be folly to say that the servants of Jesus were the sole possessors of all the truth there was in the world, as it would be for us, claiming to be the Church of Christ, to say all the truth of the world is in our possession alone. This would be a preposterous and absurd claim that could not be sustained by facts. There is truth throughout the earth. Men are possessed of it everywhere. Even the pagans possess it, and according to the light which they have and their lives being in accordance with that light, they are accepted of God. Every sincere man who lives up to the light that he has is accepted of God to that extent. Before God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, revealed the everlasting Gospel in this dispensation, there were great numbers of faithful men and women living on the earth, and according to the light they had, lived acceptably to God. You have known them, doubtless. I have heard of them. Among my own ancestors, among your ancestors, among the ancestors of all the members of this Church, there were people of this description, living up to the light that they had, worshiping God to the best of their knowledge, receiving from God a portion of His Holy Spirit, filled with good thoughts and holy aspirations, leading moral lives, and doing unto their neighbors what they would have their neighbors do unto them. The earth had many, many such people in it, and the various sects had these people in them. And so it is today. Our Elders are commanded to go out and find these people; to find the honest, the meek, the humble, and the people who want to know about God. We are sent out with this message to the inhabitants of the earth—to proclaim the glad tidings that the silence which has been unbroken for so many centuries has at last been broken and that God has revealed Himself; that He has restored the everlasting Gospel in its perfection, with the Holy Priesthood; that He has organized His Church according to the ancient pattern. Our Elders constantly bear this message and this testimony to the inhabitants of the earth.

John, in this chapter that I have read, makes a remarkable statement. It was reminded while reading it of a similar statement that is made in one of the revelations that the Prophet Joseph received. John says, "We are of God?" [no question about that in my mind; he says this in no doubtful tone, but in the most positive terms] "he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." In section 84 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the Lord, in speaking through the Prophet Joseph, says:

For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ. And the spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father; And the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world.

And the whole world lieth in sin, and groweth under darkness and under the bondage of sin;

And by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin, because they come not unto me.

For whose cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin;

And whose reveleth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me;

Now here is the expression:

And by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groweth under sin and darkness even now.

This corresponds exactly with what John said. The two Apostles received the same ideas, through inspiration from God, and both have recorded those ideas, one upwards of 1800 years ago, the other within sixty years. This is the rule by which we may know that the world groweth under the bondage of sin.

There is this that every human being who has joined this Church knows: that when he heard the testimony of the servants of God there was a spirit in his heart that bore testimony to him that that was of God, that that voice was of the True Shepherd. Thousands have testified that feeling within them. I believe there have been thousands who have visited this tabernacle and have heard the words of God from His servants, borne testimony by the powers of His Holy Spirit, whose hearts have been touched by that testimony, and who would, if they had listened to the voice of the Spirit, have sought to know more, and not gone away rejecting the message they heard. But the love of the world and the fear that they might become converted to what is called Mormonism deterred them from cherishing that Spirit and following its guidance; and they have become under condemnation because of this. By this we know, that the whole world is under bondage of sin, and the power of the adversary is so great that, apparently, they cannot break through that bondage. But there are humble, honest souls who listen to the voice of the Spirit of God; when they hear the testimony of the servants of God their hearts are touched, and they know as well as they can know at that time that it is of God. Not content with listening to the mere statements of the Elders, they go unto God and ask Him, in the name of Jesus, for a testimony for themselves, that they may know whether this is true or not. And no man or woman ever did this in the proper spirit that did not receive a testimony from God that it was true. This is the reason why the Gospel has always been successful, in all ages, among the poor and the lowly and those who had little popularity or this world's goods to sacrifice; among those who were not the pets of the world, and had not such affluent surroundings that they could not throw them aside for the sake of truth. The poor among men have always rejoiced in the Gospel. It is a blessing, therefore, under some circumstances, to be poor. It is a blessing for men and women when they hear the truth. Jesus was born in poverty. His disciples were poor—the poorest of the poor; and He preached the Gospel to the poor. This is one of the evidences that He gave to the disciples of John when they came to Him to make inquiries concerning whether He was the one for whom they should look, or should they look for another. Said He, "The poor have the Gospel preached to them." The rich had the Gospel preached to them in the synagogues. They had their seats and their pews as they now have. They could get preached to, because they had the money to pay the preacher. So it is in our day. The rich have such gospel as is preached by the world preached to them. But the poor among men go untaught, to a certain extent. When the servants of God have gone forth in this generation they have gone like fishers and hunters, among the poor and the lowly, seeking for souls of men which are just as precious in the sight of our God as the souls of the rich, and the learned, and the noble, as they are called. They are the ones that the Gospel net has gathered, because they have been willing to listen to the truth. They have been willing to sacrifice that which they had for the sake of the truth. They loved the truth, and they obeyed it. This is one of the reasons why the Latter-day Saints are despised. We are not rich. We are not popular. We do not swim with the tide, but we breast the current, and contend against the errors of ages and the false doctrines that are taught, and stand up for God and for His eternal truth as it has been revealed by Him.

This is the Gospel of salvation that we proclaim, and we say to every soul, "If you do these things that God has commanded us to teach, you shall know for yourself; you need not depend upon human testimony, but go to God yourself, without the intervention of any priest or preacher, only through the Great Mediator, our Lord and Savior, Jesus, who died for us, and plead His merits, and asked in His name for knowledge concerning these things, and we pledge you that you shall receive for yourself." We cannot deceive you, then, if you take this course. We cannot mis-lead you. We cannot pretend to be that which we are not; for God would expose our false claims if we were to make any. This is the beauty and the strength of the Gospel. Men are not dependent upon their fellow men concerning it, but God bears witness to His children, by the outpouring of His Holy Spirit, that these men who profess to be His servants, and who administer these ordinances of salvation, are His servants. What higher testimony can you desire? And this is the distinguishing feature between the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and other churches. Other churches may have truth; other churches may have many principles that are godlike; but this is the only Church of the Lamb of God. I do not say this boastfully, nor arrogantly. I do not say this to set the members of our Church above all other people. I say it in humility, because everyone is invited to come into this Church and be Latter-day Saints. But the distinguishing feature is that God has chosen His servants, and has placed upon them the authority to preach His Gospel. He has said to them, "If you will go forth and carry this message, and administer these ordinances, I will confirm your acts by pouring out the Holy Ghost upon those whom you baptize." This makes this people different from any other, because they have the authority from God. The Church is organized as it was in ancient days, with all the officers; and the Gospel, when administered, is attended with the same gifts. This constitutes the great difference between us and the rest of the world. We do not claim, as I have said, to have all truth; but we know this: that God has given to us His truth, and that these principles are from Him.

God help you, my brethren and sisters, and my friends, and all of us, to be true to our God and to the truths that He reveals, and to walk uprightly before Him, in my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

THE JORDAN RIVER.

The following has been handed to us for publication:
(Dictated.) Sept. 15, 1892.
Dr. Seymour B. Young, City:

My dear Doctor—I take pleasure in replying to your request to furnish you a statement of results in my examination of samples of water taken from the Jordan River. You will doubtless remember that on the occasion of our visiting the city sewer pump, August 18th last, we found a large flow of foul matter entering the river from a pipe which the attendant designated as the sewer overflow pipe. You will also remember that at that time I took from the river two samples of water, one which I designated "A," from a place about 150 yards above the sewer pipe, and the other, "B," from a position about the same distance below the outflow. These were submitted to analysis and microscopical examination with the following results:

1. CHEMICAL ANALYSIS.

Sample "A" (taken above the sewer outlet) contained, after filtration:
(1) Chlorine (as soluble chlorides) 1.410 grains per gallon.
(2) Organic matter, (determined as free ammonia) .48 parts per million.
(3) Organic matter, (as albuminoid ammonia) .44 parts per million.
Total organic matter, (as ammonia) .92 parts per million.
Sample "B" (taken below the sewer outlet) contained, when filtered:
(1) Chlorine 1.599 grains per gallon.
(2) Free ammonia 1.53 parts per million.
(3) Albuminoid ammonia .023 parts per million.
Total organic matter (as ammonia) 1.562 parts per million.
(Dr. Seymour B. Young, 2.)

2—MICROSCOPICAL EXAMINATION.

Sample "A" shows:
(1) Inorganic debris (sand, mud, etc.)
(2) Vegetable debris (algae, leaf tissue, etc.)
(3) Fresh water animalcules.
Sample "B" shows:
(1) Inorganic debris (sand, mud, etc.)
(2) Vegetable debris, abundant.
(3) Animal debris (epithelial cells, hairs, etc.)
(4) Fat globules.
(5) Living organisms, very abundant.

These results showed such a very great contrast between the sample taken above the sewer and that collected below, that I determined to make other tests; so on the 10th of the present month I visited the sewer a second time for the purpose of examining again the sewer outflow, and of taking additional samples. I found, as on the former visit, a large flow of foul matter entering the river. Six samples of water were taken as follows:

"A"—Fully 150 yards above the sewer pipe.
"B"—About 150 yards below sewer.

You will observe that these samples correspond, as to place of collection, to samples "A" and "B" already described.

"C"—At Second South street, bridge, about half a mile below the sewer.

"D"—At North Temple street, bridge, about a mile below the sewer.

"E"—Near Petit's Farm, taken by people on the place, about 2½ miles below the sewer pump.

"F"—About 8½ miles below the sewer.

These samples were submitted to analysis and examination, with the following results:

1. CHEMICAL ANALYSIS.

The filtered waters contained:
(1) Chlorine (as soluble chlorides).
Sample "A" 1.400 grains per gallon
"B" 1.599 " "
"C" 1.562 " "
"D" 1.5 " "
"E" 1.562 " "
"F" 1.562 " "
(2) Organic matter (as free ammonia).
Sample "A"488 parts per million
"B"524 " "
"C"524 " "
"D"524 " "
"E"516 " "
"F"516 " "

(3) Organic matter (as albuminoid ammonia).
Sample "A"044 parts per million
"B"054 " "
"C"054 " "
"D"054 " "
"E"054 " "
"F"054 " "

(4) The total organic matter present (determined as ammonia) is shown as follows:

Sample "A A"	0.928 parts per million
" "B B"	2.044 " " "
" "C C"	2.044 " " "
" "D D"	2.044 " " "
" "E E"	2.044 " " "
" "F F"	2.044 " " "
" "G G"	2.044 " " "
" "H H"	2.044 " " "
" "I I"	2.044 " " "
" "J J"	2.044 " " "
" "K K"	2.044 " " "
" "L L"	2.044 " " "
" "M M"	2.044 " " "
" "N N"	2.044 " " "
" "O O"	2.044 " " "
" "P P"	2.044 " " "
" "Q Q"	2.044 " " "
" "R R"	2.044 " " "
" "S S"	2.044 " " "
" "T T"	2.044 " " "
" "U U"	2.044 " " "
" "V V"	2.044 " " "
" "W W"	2.044 " " "
" "X X"	2.044 " " "
" "Y Y"	2.044 " " "
" "Z Z"	2.044 " " "

2. MICROSCOPICAL EXAMINATION.

- (1.) Sample "A A" showed:—
Mineral matter, (sand,) mud and the like.
Vegetable tissue (diatoms, etc., etc.).
Some fresh water animalcules.
- (2.) Sample "B B" showed same matters as "A A" and in addition:—
Animal debris, consisting of bits of hair and wool, epithelial cells, and oily matters.
- (3.) Samples "C C," "D D," "E E," "F F," "G G," "H H," "I I," "J J," "K K," "L L," "M M," "N N," "O O," "P P," "Q Q," "R R," "S S," "T T," "U U," "V V," "W W," "X X," "Y Y," "Z Z," showed the same suspended substances as "A A," with some of the matters enumerated under "B B," though in constantly diminishing quantities. The samples taken far down the stream show the suspended matters in a more fully disintegrated condition.

REMARKS CONCERNING RESULTS.

The analyses show that the Jordan River, even above the place of pollution from the sewer pipe, is a very impure stream; such a condition might be expected, however, from the kind of land through which the river flows and from its origin in stagnant waters.

The chlorine present in the water is excessive; but large contents of chlorine are characteristic of most Utah waters, spring, well, river, and artesian. This is doubtless due to the abundance of alkaline chlorides, particularly common salt, in our soils. Chlorine in potable waters, existing, as is usually the case, in combination with alkaline metals as soluble chlorides, is not of itself a source of danger, unless it be derived from decomposing matters. There is a difference of .198 grain of chlorine per gallon of water between sample "A A," taken above the sewer and sample "B B," taken below. This amount is seen to be derived from the sewer itself; and is therefore of very much greater danger than are the 1.4 grains of chlorine per gallon existing in the water above the sewer, and presumably derived mostly from the saline constituents of the soil.

Organic matter is present in excessive quantity. The large amount of free ammonia in the water results from the decomposition of nitrogenous matter; and the albuminoid ammonia indicates nitrogenous refuse still undecomposed.

As to the degree of organic contamination allowable in potable waters, Mr. Wanklyn, an English specialist in water analysis, has said, "It should be inclined to regard with some suspicion a water yielding a considerable quantity of free ammonia, along with 0.05 parts of albuminoid ammonia per million. Albuminoid ammonia above 0.10 per million begins to be a very suspicious sign, and over 0.15 ought to condemn a water absolutely." You may compare these amounts with the 1.5 free ammonia, and the .52 albuminoid ammonia per million existing in the river water. You will see also that the slow stream is not appreciably purified in a 3½ miles journey from the place of its great pollution.

Of course it is understood that the water of the Jordan is not used extensively for drinking purposes; and it is very clearly apparent that any human being who would drink from the river, at any place below the sewer, would be running great risks of danger to health and life. The river is heavily charged with organic filth, much of it veritable sewage, and animals drinking the water are endangered. There would seem to be special danger in the case of milch cows drinking the water. Chemically considered the Jordan water is a fertile composition for the development of bacterial organisms; and germs of contagion entering the water would multiply most rapidly. But many of these points belong to the province of a physician rather than to that of the chemist. Please give me your opinion as to the indications, particularly specifying the dangers or absence of such attending the consumption of the water by milch cattle.

Hoping to see you soon, and converse with you on the matter, I am,
Respectfully yours,
(Signed) J. E. TALMAGE.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Vice-President Nelson occupied the chair at the meeting of the city school board last night. The members present were Duke, Young, Pike, Dooley, Newman and Baldwin.

FOR DARTINGTON SITE.

The report of the attorney on the title to a lot 10x10 rods for a school in Dartington Place was made, and on motion of Mr. Young the warrant for $8000 was ordered drawn.

OFFERED FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

E. G. Adams offered to rent to the school board the basement of the church building on Third South and Seventh East streets, for school purposes, at a rental of $40 per month, to be rented for a period of not less than five months, with the privilege of one year if desired. The room is 40x40 feet and could be partitioned off so as to make two good rooms.

Referred to committee on sites and buildings.

NEW SCHOOL WANTED.

A petition from fifty-five residents, representing 125 children of school age, asking for the establishment of a school on Post street was filed. The nearest school is over five blocks from the nearest petitioner. Referred to the same committee.

ANOTHER BUILDING OFFERED.

A. F. Clineburg sent in a communication stating that he had a building 28 x 50 feet on Post street, suitable for a school room, and in case the board needed such a room he would like to rent it to them. The building has city water.

Referred to the committee on school work.

WANT TO BE JANITORS.

Applications were filed by John H. Hurdman for the place of janitor at the Sixth ward school, endorsed by O. W. Powers and seventeen others, and by E. J. Brooke, who resides near the Twentieth ward, asking for a place in any school.

NEW SEATS ORDERED PURCHASED.

The committee on furniture and supplies reported as follows.

To the Board of Education:

Your committee on furniture and supplies report that they have received several bids for school furniture which have been examined by the members of this board, and no selection has yet been made, and the board is badly in need of the furniture, we recommend that the committee be authorized to purchase two carloads of seats immediately.

J. E. DOOLEY, Chairman.
N. J. NEWMAN.

Adopted,

MORE BOOKS ORDERED.

The committee on school work recommended that twelve sets of English and American classics, at a cost of $50, be secured, and also the necessary chemicals for use of chemistry class, at a cost of $45, be purchased. Adopted.

BILLS ALLOWED.

The committee on finance reported the following bills to be paid by the board:

G. W. McHay, labeling books.....	$25 00
Mrs. L. Huey, labeling books.....	12 00
Clara Hooper, labeling books.....	9 00
Stout & Page, distributing books.....	24 00

Total.....$70 00

Adopted.

TO REMOVE THE OLD HEATING PLANT.

Benjamin Johnson applied for the job of removing the steam heating plant in the Nineteenth ward school when the new building is completed. Received and filed.

BRYANT SCHOOL.

Baldwin moved that the stone inscription on the Eleventh district be changed to Bryant school. Adopted.

PREPARING TO OPEN NEW BUILDINGS.

Pike moved that a suitable programme be prepared for the opening of the Eleventh and Sixth district buildings. Carried.

TO USE AN UNFINISHED BUILDING.

It was moved that the committee on sites and buildings be authorized to permit the use of the upper floor of the Eleventh district, providing that such action be not considered by the contracts as a final acceptance of the building. Adopted.

CONTRACTS WITH TEACHERS.

Duke moved that the officers of the board be authorized to execute the contracts with the teachers for the year, subject to changes in location. Carried.

Dooley reported that the heating apparatus of the Fourteenth was out of repair, and moved that the necessary repairs be made. Adopted.

All the schools in the country will observe October 21st, Columbus Day, and on the recommendation of the superintendent, the committee on school work was authorized to prepare a programme for that day.

Adjourned for one week.

TEMPLE NOTICES.

The Manti Temple will be closed on Saturday, October 1st, and re-opened for ordinance work on Monday, October 10th, 1892. A. H. LUND, President.

The Logan Temple will close on Friday evening, September 30th, 1892, and open again on Tuesday morning, October 11th, 1892.

M. W. MERRILL, Preset.

DEATH PETER W. CONNOVER.

We learn that another well known veteran, Colonel Peter W. Connover, of Provo City, departed this life at 6 o'clock this morning, at the residence of his daughter, at Richfield, Sevier County. The deceased was born September 19th, 1807, and therefore reached his eighty-fifth year yesterday. It is expected the remains will be brought to Provo City and the funeral services held there.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED BY THE DESERET NEWS COMPANY,
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, . . . $2.50
Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, . . . 1.50
IN ADVANCE.

CHARLES W. FENBROE, EDITOR.

Saturday, - - - October 1, 1892.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Sixty-third Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will convene in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning, October 6th, 1892.

The officers and members of the Church generally are cordially invited to attend the meetings of the Conference.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
GEORGE Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH,
First Presidency.

A HYPOCRITE, FALSIFIER AND TRAITOR.

It is unnecessary to make any introductory explanation to the following correspondence:

HAROLD HORTY County, S. C.,
September 14, 1892.

Editor Deseret News:

Copies of a letter have been circulated in this county by a Methodist minister from one of his brethren in Ogden, which is perfectly ridiculous and the cause of much persecution. If you feel as if it will do good to expose his wickedness do so. It has been the cause of some of our Elders being mobbed, and I received a letter giving me ten days to leave the country and it enclosed two charges of ammunition. If there is any way to expose the conspirators and put a stop to such treachery it should be done, for thieves of honest and innocent men are in jeopardy.

I will enclose a copy of the letter, or that portion of it which refers to us, and you can use it as you see fit, it being a public matter. Copies of it have been put in circulation and it has also been read from different pulpits. Yours Respectfully, HENRY S. TANNER.

HILL'S LETTER.

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
OGDEN, Utah, July 2, 1892.

J. Wesley Hill, Pastor.

Dear Brother Ferguson:

I mail you a copy of my lecture on the question about which you write. Will furnish you all you want at 20 cents a copy.

Mormonism means ignorance, hostility and blasphemy. It is a foul system, reeking with all that is vile and debauched. Those missionaries should be whipped out of your community as enemies of morality and polluters of purity, but I need say no more for my lecture will give you a perfect photograph of the beast. My prayers are with you. Spare no strength in striking at the monstrosity. If they say polygamy is dead, tell them they had better return to Utah and bury the putrid abomination. The truth is, it is being practiced all over the Territory and Joseph Smith is the only Savior they know.

There is this consolation, however; none but the low, sensual and senseless, ignorant, idiotic and mentally deformed will fall into the Mormon net.

Sincerely yours,

J. WESLEY HILL.

P. S. You are at liberty to use this letter and lecture in any way you deem necessary. Living in Utah I have buried these hot truths into the old Blue Beards camp for four years. J. W. HILL.

We cheerfully undertake to comply with the request contained in Elder Tanner's letter. This pleasure is enhanced because it involves the performance of a duty—the exposure of an unconscionable hypocrite. The task is one of easy performance, the subject being unusually vulnerable.

Hill designated in Ogden, where he is held in marked contempt, as "the Kid." He has quite a reputation there as a stealer of other people's sermons and palming them off on the public as his own. He also enjoys the unenviable distinction of being the most murderous-minded and all round vindictive individual in this intermountain region. This latter trait has been especially but by no means exclusively exhibited toward the "Mormons." He has frequently expressed a wish that they should all be hanged, and fiendishly uttered a desire to take part in the total extinguishing of the Saints by means of assassination. It is needless to say that as a hollow-hearted hypocrite he is a pronounced success.

This unregenerated wretch winds up his slanderous attack upon an unoffending and upright community by saying, with characteristic bravado, "I have buried these hot truths into the old Blue Beards' camp for four years." Everybody here, "Mormon" and non-"Mormon," knows that what he calls "hot truths" are cold-blooded, malicious falsehoods. When uttered here they excite derision and contempt. They are manufactured and used for outside effect, and they are sown abroad in the instance under consideration for this purpose. He wants the Elders "whipped" and no doubt murdered, for the spirit, if not the blood, of Cain is in him. Should assassination by mob violence be the result of his retail falsehoods at "20 cents" a batch, he would be necessary to murder before the fact.

J. Wesley Hill knows he utters an unmitigated slander when he accuses the "Mormons" and their religion with being saturated with corruption. The non-"Mormon" population of Utah and surrounding States know what we say to be correct. Even in the heat of prosecutions under the Edmunds law, those who were engaged in enforcing the statute and who went to extraordinary extremes in doing so, publicly stated in open court that outside of the practice of polygamy, the Latter-day Saints were a chaste people. We cite Mr. W. H. Dickson as having expressed himself to that effect when he was United States District Attorney for Utah. Mr. C. S. Varian, who succeeded Mr. Dickson, made a similar statement in the course of an argument in court—ing a case. Chief Justice Zane, whose opportunities for observation on the subject have been in some respects unequalled, entertained the same view. Since the abolition of the practice of polygamy, which was obnoxious to the nation, the Saints have not changed in relation to chastity.

As to the unscrupulous assertion about the "Mormons" being "senseless, ignorant, idiotic and mentally deformed," the very use of such an expression from a professed follower of Christ and teacher of His doctrine shows that the mind of him who uttered it is abnormally warped, knarled and impregnated with intellectual and moral pottrefaction.

It is appropriate that we draw from other sources for a portraiture of this small-spined phenomenally inhuman wretch, who has even recently exhibited toward one of his superiors the characteristics of Judas Iscariot. This we will explain further along.

The local public will have some recollection of the disgraceful squabble which broke out among the Methodist clergymen and other officials of that Church over the proposed university of the seat at Ogden early in 1891. The leading contestants in the scandalous quarrel were the Rev. Samuel Small, president of the university, and J. Wesley Hill. The latter made serious charges of embezzlement against Mr. Small while he was in the east obtaining funds for the founding of the educational institution in question. When he heard of the allegations that had been made against him he sent the following telegram, which was published at the time in the Ogden Standard and also in the News:

"Philadelphia, Pa., April 8.—The charges made by Hill and Franklin are the same malicious slanders that Hill retracted by telegram March 28. I am moving for Hill's expulsion from the ministry and this last act by Hill and Franklin is an endeavor to bulldoze me. It does not succeed. I will not quit. I am ready for the fullest investigation of my accounts. I have done no wrong and have nothing to conceal or fear. I have perfect showing for every cent.

Signed, SAM'L W. SMALL."

We now present another and more elaborate portrait of the Rev. J. Wesley Hill, drawn by the same artistic hand. A dispatch dated at Atlanta, Ga., May 5th, 1891, also over the signature of Mr. Small, contained the following:

"Many newspapers continue, from some motive I cannot imagine, to publish the slanderous telegrams concerning me, sent out from Utah by the hands or connivance of that infamous liar, hypocrite, and lewd sham preacher, Rev. J. Wesley Hill, of the first Methodist church at Ogden.

"This is the same thief and swindler who came to Philadelphia, wormed himself into the Methodist pulpit, lifted collections for his church which he pocketed and squandered upon himself, and his family; who sponged upon the hospitality of new made acquaintances and turned their houses and hospitality to ridicule and jeering; who forced a lot of real estate upon benevolent Methodists at inflated prices and with a series of lies that would appal a bunco man; who did this in the name of the church when it was the private anap speculation of himself and a gang of Ogden sharpers; who lives a double life, preaching 'holiness' in the pulpit and indulging his lecherous lusts in private;

who deceived me into accepting the presidency of an alleged university, the scheme of duplicity, chicanery, and land speculation; who induced me to hold on when I would have resigned months ago, and urged me to try to redeem the cause of the college and save the good faith of the church by a new measure to secure a sufficient endowment, which action of mine he is now trying to have the official board repudiate; who has set going all the flood of newspaper slanders upon me because I would not help him swindle a brother minister in Philadelphia, Rev. Merritt Hubbard, or join him in a scheme to use the university and the church for the purpose of getting big money for ourselves.

I here reiterate that this said Rev. J. Wesley Hilt is the most infamous and versatile rascal outside of any penitentiary, false in word and oath to his wife and his God, and a hypocrite in every private relation and public function. I am ready to prove him all this."

Now for further proof of the Judas Iscariot characteristics of J. Wesley Hilt. The local public are familiar with the recent exposure of the plagiaristic feat performed by the Rev. Dr. Hilt. We stated yesterday that the expose was effected by two Methodist clergymen, but we did not give their names. We now present the name of J. Wesley Hilt as the principal of the two traitors to their chief and the interests of their church. He it was who called at this office and asked for a copy of the Salt Lake Tribune of March 21st, which contains the address borrowed and delivered by Dr. Hilt. He stated at the time that he had sent several men to the Tribune office to procure the paper, but he could not get it there. We know the gentleman from whom he borrowed it for the purpose of exposing Dr. Hilt, his superior ecclesiastical officer. He betrayed his chief, as Judas betrayed his Master. We feel assured also that it was he who betrayed the proceedings of the meeting of Methodist clergymen convened for the purpose of considering Dr. Hilt's dilemma and gave them to a local newspaper. His exposure of the Rev. Hilt was doubtless inspired by mingled malice and ambition. In getting in his treacherous work he showed no regard for the injury he inflicted upon the church of which he professes to be a minister and the interests of which it was his duty to protect.

SANITARY INSPECTION.

THE Health Commissioner of this municipality is active in endeavors to improve the sanitary condition of the city. This is to be commended. We believe he receives due support and assistance from the Sanitary Inspector. Both these officers will, no doubt, excite criticism from people who are indifferent to filth, and who cannot understand the effects of seepage, the disease that lurks in decaying animal and vegetable matter, and the fact that clear-looking, cold water may be impregnated with the germs of death, undiscernible to the sharpest naked eye. But the public generally will applaud all genuine, consistent and impartial efforts to keep the city clean. We use these terms because anything that has the appearance of partiality or movements for effect will not meet with public favor. We think the officials named ought to be supported in their legitimate endeavors to enforce the sanitary ordinances.

The Health Commissioner has submitted to the City Council a plan for a systematic inspection of the sanitary condition of the city. Most of it appears to be proper, and the object in view is certainly praiseworthy. If the threatened approach of any form of disease will prompt a movement in the interest of cleanliness and the purification of the city, the alarm will not be without good results.

However, we suggest to the civic authorities that the catechism prepared by the Commission ought to be carefully revised before it is adopted. It should be brought within the lines of the law. Questions about conditions for which no law has been enacted, may be legally left unanswered. People cannot be compelled to take notice of them. For instance, no person need tell, unless he chooses, whether or not he or his children have been vaccinated. There are other matters of query in the list submitted that are on the same footing. Don't attempt too much and thus make a failure of the whole business.

We have been in favor for years of a strict system of sanitation in this city, and have pointed out what in our opinion ought to be and could be done in this direction. Any system will require a certain amount of official surveillance, and that will of course be obnoxious to many sensitive or ignorant people. Make it as thorough and yet as inoffensive as possible, and the vast majority of our citizens will encourage its adoption and execution.

FOR TOWN AND COUNTRY.

THE sanitary question should be agitated until something practical is established in the form of a common sense system. A letter from Farmington, which appears in this issue of the DESERET NEWS, brings up the subject again. For this city and other places where people congregate in comparatively large numbers, special and vigorous measures ought to be adopted to establish and maintain cleanliness and prevent accumulations which are the breeding spots for disease. In country places other regulations may be adequate. But everywhere intelligent people ought to be diligent in preserving sanitary conditions that will conduce to health and comfort.

Farmington, it is supposed to be the most healthful, frequently prove to be very deceptive in this particular. People go into the country for health and pleasure, and often bring home sickness and misery. Why? Because no efforts are made to dispose of decaying vegetable matter nor to remove nuisances that would not be tolerated in cities, not even in Salt Lake City. Open cesspools, steaming manure heaps, decaying fruit, rotting vegetable refuse, stinking outhouses, fill the air with odors that are stifling and with germs of destruction which, borne upon the breeze, are carried into houses or are breathed into the lungs of people susceptible to disease, and finding congenial surroundings, fructify and multiply and put in their deadly work. Country places, villages, hamlets, farming regions, isolated dwellings, everywhere need sanitary care, as well as do the populous towns and cities, which commonly receive it in some degree. Dry earth is the best and most natural deodorizer in existence on this globe. It is so simple of use, so inexpensive and so near at hand everywhere on land, that there is little or no excuse if it is not brought into general requisition.

The world that blows up the dust and scatters it everywhere are often very disagreeable, but they are blessings in disguise, for they help to disinfect many a filthy place, and thus become a great aid to effective and much needed sanitation. People can accomplish much more by the frequent use of the dust than the breeze can do by occasional blasts.

HAMBURG, THE PLAGUE STRICKEN.

EASTERN newspapers are clamoring for the removal of Charles H. Burke, acting consul of the United States at Hamburg, because he gave the vessel "Moravia" a clean bill of health on August 18, on her departure from that city. On September 1st he did the same with the "Bohemia." Mr. Burke's position is awkward. It is admitted that he might have some excuse for his action as to the "Moravia," because the Hamburg authorities tried to conceal, and did so, the first ravages of the pestilence. But for the "Bohemia," which sailed on September 1st, it is considered there was not the same excuse, because telegrams from Hamburg were published in American papers on that date stating that cholera prevailed to the extent of 300 deaths a day. So that Burke must have known about the condition of affairs in that city and his conduct is at present inexplicable and appears to be criminal.

Hamburg is a poorly governed city. It is one of the old free towns of Germany. It was founded by Charlemagne away back in 804. In the thirteenth century it was a great trade center. It is situated on the Elbe, 75 miles from the German ocean, and has had the free navigation of this river, and the right of levying toll on foreign ships. The history of this is largely the history of Western Europe for many centuries. Napoleon the First intended making it the stronghold of Northern Germany. It is now the commercial emporium of Northern Europe. Next to London it has the largest money exchange transactions of any European city. It is perhaps the greatest emigration port in Europe. It is a city of wealth, and its people are so absorbed in money-getting that the government has recently become the synonym for corruption. It is still a free town, though deprived of most of its ancient privileges. It is governed by a Senate of eighteen members, chosen for life. The municipal council consists of 192 members, elected of six years.

The recent outbreak of cholera has aroused public attention in Germany to the defective government of Hamburg. The Emperor is so enraged that he contemplates bringing it under the imperial system of all German municipalities. The police are said to be the most venal and corrupt in all the world. They levy blackmail, and sell privileges to evildoers. The sanitary inspectors will permit all sorts of nuisances for a trifling bribe. And it was not until cholera had obtained a foothold, reaching 800 cases a day, that its existence was known in other German towns. The steamship companies bought up the city officials, but the emigrant and merchandise traffic should be injured.

It is hardly possible that Mr. Burke was ignorant of the condition of affairs and it is hinted that he was not any better than the city officials. He is to be held responsible for the evils arising from the carrying of cholera germs on the Hamburg vessels to the port of New York, and his official doings ought to be investigated.

A RAILROAD WAR IMMINENT.

THE Transcontinental Association, an organization of the principal overland railroads, is on the point of dissolution. This was a sort of pool, or syndicate or trust for the purpose of maintaining certain rates agreed on, and for paying a subsidy to the Pacific Mail steamers, so that these rates could be sustained. Virtually it was a railroad monopoly, and operated almost on the same plan as if owned by one corporation.

Some time ago the Canadian Pacific, the Northern Pacific and Great Northern gave notice of withdrawal, and now the Atchafalpa, Topeka & Santa Fe gives notice of similar action. This means the absolute disruption of the association. The remaining roads cannot remain together with the Santa Fe a competitor. This also means the abandonment of the subsidy to Pacific mail steamers.

The Transcontinental was virtually a department of the Western Traffic Association, and from the latter the Southern Pacific has given notice of withdrawal. This means a war between the Northern and Southern overland railroads, and also general demoralization in rates all over the country during the fall and winter. A cut of nearly $8 has already been made between Chicago and New York, and the supposition is that before many weeks extensive rate cutting will prevail throughout the country.

The Canadian Pacific, the Northern Pacific and Great Northern comprise the northern transcontinental systems. They are strong corporations, and in their fight for the Asiatic trade will be supported by Portland, Tacoma, Vancouver and the territory contributory to these towns. They will also be supported by St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, and all the cities along the northern belt. They traverse a rich country, and can command a good local traffic. The Santa Fe, the Southern Pacific and the Pacific Mail comprise the Southern systems. Their disadvantages are many. They traverse sparsely settled Territories. They must depend largely on through traffic for support. But the Santa Fe has good eastern connections, and it is said a branch from some point in Arizona to run into Utah and tap the Union Pacific either at Provo or Salt Lake is contemplated by this system.

San Francisco had better hurry up and build that projected road to this city, or else when the war commences she will be left desolate and alone in the center. Portland on the north and Los Angeles or San Diego in the south will absorb much of her trade, and reduce her to a much lower grade than she now occupies in the rank of commercial cities.

OPPOSITION IN RELIGION.

DURING the first years of the rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the principal weapons employed in the numerous efforts made to wipe it out of existence were argument, calumny and violence. The first named of the three was the first to be relinquished. Its withdrawal was the result of its proving ineffectual in attaining the object for which it was applied. Those who had recourse to it were, in the majority of instances when it was brought into play, routed by their "Mormon" opponents. The field was then left almost exclusively to falsehood and violence, and the latter has been for many years growing in disfavour, until it also has practically disappeared, except where it has been incited by such infamous professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus as J. Wesley Hill. Such characters as he have occasionally aroused a spirit of murderous mobocracy among ignorant people by the circulation of the most atrocious falsehoods.

So far as relates to the Church in its gathered capacity another force has been operated to disintegrate the community of Saints. Its nature is such as to recall the advice given by Baal to the King of the Moabites and Midianites regarding the most efficient method of conquering Israel. It was to the effect that if the children of Abraham could be induced to enter into the practices of the surrounding peoples the Israelites would become an easy prey to their enemies. Baalistic views have been expressed and their application advocated with regard to the "Mormon" people, especially the youthful portion of them. The degrading concomitants of modern civilization have been named as desirable and effective means of causing them to break away from the restraints of their religion and the influence of its teachers. All the allurements of sin have been introduced, and while some have fallen a prey to them the Church still remains strong and intact, and doubtless will continue to grow in power and dimensions.

Recourse to calumny and falsehood has been, during late years, becoming gradually less frequent, because its potency has diminished. This is the result of their being no longer effective weapons against "Mormonism" and the "Mormons." The Saints are becoming better known among the intelligent people of the nation and the world at large than formerly. As a consequence, hobgoblin anti-"Mormon" stories are no longer swallowed as formerly, when the people's throats were greased and ready to receive them. Now they make wry faces at them and as a rule regard them for what they are worth. Of course, exceptions to this situation occur where ignorance and malice prevail.

We are by no means displeased to observe a resumption of some of the original means used to wean the "Mormons" from their religion. We refer now to the religious forces that have recently been centered in this city, and which are now operating. They embody religious sentiment and explanation. The recent revival meetings were not strikingly conspicuous for either explanation or argument. They were rather distinguished for emotional or sentimental tendencies, and embodied little or no information. The present exercises in connection with the big tent take on more of an explanatory hue, and have argument associated with them. But neither the one nor the other offers anything new to intelligent Latter-day Saints. Many, perhaps most, of the themes of the discourses of the gentleman who now holds forth north of the Knutsford have been treated by the "Mormon" Elders for half a century past; and besides, the Church has had upon them the additional light of modern revelation.

We presume that the recent and present religious efforts are chiefly pointed in the direction of the conversion of the Saints, seeing they constitute the large majority of the population. Many of them will doubtless attend the meetings now being held. They were present at the Mills revival in large numbers. This is simply indicative of an interest in religious movements, themes and questions. It has no significance with regard to conversions. On the contrary, the effect will be, in our view, to increase with them a desire to adhere more closely and with greater fidelity to their own doctrines and principles. It confirms them in the conviction that "Mormonism," the fulness of the Gospel of Christ, revealed anew in this age, comprehends all there is of power and worth in religion.

No person can reasonably object to religious people and organizations seeking, by proper sentiment, explanation and argument, to gain converts to their views with regard to the most consistent way to serve the Lord. This method is in unison with civilization and the rights of man. And we hope to see the day when the Saints in every part of the world will be given as great freedom from molestation while conducting evangelical work as they have always accorded to religionists of every faith who have come among them. We anticipate a time in the future when falsehood, calumny, mobocracy and murder shall not be employed as weapons for the destruction of religious freedom. We do not think that day is very far distant.

WHY SHE IS A POLITICIAN.

THE Countess of Aberdeen, a lady who is active in British public affairs, tells why she is a politician, as follows: "Friends and foes alike often and often tell us that politics will always mean dirty work, and that fine sentiments and high aims are all very well for public platforms, but that they will not go down in practical, daily life; and that this being so we had better keep clear of what will inevitably coarsen and tend to lower our standards of right and wrong. But we must face it out, and see on what these objections are founded. That they do point to a possible danger we must admit, and we must beware of it. But, as a rule, I think we may say that we shall find that the objections proceed principally from two sources—(1) a very partial idea of what a woman's life should be; and (2) a low estimate of politics. Let us look at the last first. When we go to political meetings—men's political meetings—we hear often a great deal of what the objections should be; how that the end of all politics is the well-being of the people. Many are the eloquent speeches we hear on this subject. And yet they come home and tell us that politics are not for women; that it would debase and degrade them—these politics, which are to raise the whole people, would contaminate us.

How do we reconcile these two statements? Do those who make the speeches believe in what they are saying publicly, or do they say it only to catch the ear of the people, and do they really believe in their hearts that political life as a matter of fact only means a race between men and between parties for power, and influence, and place, and fame? With such an estimate of political life we can have nothing to do, and we do not wonder that any who incline toward such a view should use their best endeavor to keep us out of it. But we believe that there are sound principles which must stand which should, inspire the government of the people, by the people, for the people; and we believe implicitly in their power, when properly applied, to reform, and enoble and uplift.

"Any of us who know anything of the lives of the poor know how the social questions which we discuss backward and forward are living, pressing realities to them. Questions about education, labor, the sweating system, licensing, the housing of the poor, the work-house system are all sternly real to them, and especially so to the women, and they are affecting their day by day. We must so believe in our politics that we shall both believe and act as if it must deal with these questions."

THE TRICKY UTAH COMMISSION.

We publish today the report of the Utah Commission for the present year, as furnished to its organ in this city, with the exception of documents that have already been printed and do not need to be republished.

It is a characteristic production, dishonest, untruthful, cunning and full of the pettifoggery, special pleading and trickery which are usually found in the later reports of that useless and expensive body. Again we notice the conspicuous absence of the name of that sturdy old warrior, Gen. McClelland, who has proved himself, all along, too honorable to endorse the subtleties of his associate officials. It is signed by all the others.

The first part of the report deals with the political change which has taken place in Utah. It is spoken of as a "sudden" and the sincerity of the people is mentioned in a doubtful way. The writers being too cowardly either to deny or confess their belief in it, but in a shifting way express the doubt that other people are alleged to feel. The "sudden" change—the disorganization of the People's party, had been contemplated and discussed for years, and it is well known was as gradual as anything of the kind could possibly be.

The Commissioners parade their appointment of Judge Zane and Secretary Seals as registration officers, as proof that the Commission has not appointed irresponsible and disreputable persons for such places. The selection of those gentlemen was everywhere hailed as a new departure, a "sudden change" on the part of the Commission. There is no need here to give a detailed list of persons who were not only irresponsible and disreputable but whose record has demonstrated their dishonesty and chicanery. The appointment of the two gentlemen named is viewed as the exception which proves the rule of improper selections, and that is notorious in the Territory.

The Commissioners deny that they "approved" of changes that were made by the Legislature in the election laws but which were vetoed by the Governor. They resort to the pettifoggery method of playing upon the word "approved," and say they had no authority to approve. Everybody knows they had no official authority in the premises, but every sane person also knows that the Commissioners could express their approval of the changes. And as a matter of fact, they did so, and it was largely because they did so that the Legislature passed the measure making the changes. As to the Governor's part in the matter we have nothing to say. We are dealing now with the tricky Utah Commission.

But it is on the polygamy question that these officials display their malicious and paltry untruthfulness in its vilest form. Referring to the resolution adopted at the General Conference of October, 1891, they enter an evasive and contemptible answer. The Conference denied emphatically a former statement by the Commission to the effect that the Church dominates its members in political matters, and that a number of persons in Utah had entered into polygamous marriages since the issuance of the manifesto against them. The Commissioners now try to make it appear that the first denial amounts to a confession that Church domination in politics did exist in the past. And as to the legal polygamous marriages, say the reports on which their information was founded are on file, and that the officers who furnished it live in and are familiar with the precincts. They further plead that neither they nor these officers can have anything to gain by perverting the truth.

The language used by the Conference signified, as plain as words could make it, that no such domination as charged by the Commission had been exercised by the Church. The case of excommunication referred to in a garbled way by the Commission does not affect the matter one iota, but only shows to what miserable means those officials resort to try and make a point and divert attention from the main issue. The reference by the Conference to the appearance of a union of Church and State in consequence of men holding both ecclesiastical and civil offices, was not any admission of the charge of the Commission, but was cited in explanation of an appearance that was not a reality. The quirk by which the Commission attempt to take advantage of this exposes their pettifoggery proclivities.

What they charged and what the Conference denied was, that a certain number of persons during the year then last past had entered into polygamous marriages. This was also denied by the President of the Church who should know of the facts. The Commissioners now say "Denials and denunciations prove nothing." Perhaps not. Neither do unsupported assertions, particularly when after being challenged, not a scintilla of evidence to substantiate them is offered. This is the situation. Denials and denunciations do prove something under these circumstances. They prove that the Utah Commissioners either dare not bring forward their alleged proofs of information or that they have none to produce. Denials and denunciations, in the face of their failure after a year's challenge, are worth more than their trumped-up assertions for which they offer no proof.

But they dodge again from the question as to the fact of new polygamous marriages being contracted, to the question of belief in the rightfulness of such marriages in the absence of civil law against it. They quote Dr. Faillage and the statements of the Presidency before the Master in Chancery which related to the belief of the Latter-day Saints, to bolster up their own false charges about recent plural marriages. Pettifoggery again in its most despicable shape! What certain persons may possibly believe is one thing, what they are charged with doing is another and different thing. The attack upon President Joseph F. Smith is of the same sort. He denied the truth of the Commissioners' charges. His seclusion and his religious belief had nothing to do with the issue.

The culminating point in the dastardly attempt of the Commission to make it appear that the manifesto was a pretense and that "polygamy still exists" is the assertion that: "The commission has reports of fifteen male persons who are believed to have entered into polygamous marriages during the last year and of more than three hundred persons who are known, or believed to be living in polygamous relations."

Observe the cunning way in which these charges are put, so as to do as much damage as possible and creep out of the responsibility of preferring them. They have "reports." The reports speak of male persons "believed" to have entered into these marriages, or who are "believed to be now living in polygamous relations." Shame on the cowardly officials who make these statements in this non-committal, timorous and misleading manner! If we were to tell all the tales we have had by way of "reports" to us of the doings of some of these same Commissioners here and elsewhere, they would be planting suits for libel or hiding their heads on the "underground."

"It is believed," they say. By whom? No answer. We challenge the Commissioners to produce the names of the accused and the names of their accusers. They have been thus challenged when they bore similar false witness before. But they have been as silent as the grave on this question of proof. They dare not give the names lest their craven and groundless charges be so clearly disproven that they stand exposed for the miserable liabellers that they are.

As to having "nothing to gain by narrating falsehoods or perverting the truth," who has anything to gain in this matter if it be not the Commissioners who are clearly convicted of this wrong? Have they not been fighting for their places with a desperation pitiable to behold? Have they not been willing to take less than half their former salaries to keep hold of their easy offices? Do they not now plainly plead for continuance by showing the necessity for it? The motive for "narrating falsehoods" is plainly manifest. This is what we now charge them with. They are retailers of scandal. They are mouthers of dirty gossip. They know that they are only circulating reports which are not verified, and they expose their own meanness by the covert manner in which they publish to the world the vile insinuations that they do not attempt to prove. Nothing to gain by it! No, indeed, nothing that anyone but time-servers, place-hunters and official pap-suckers would stoop to secure by such miserable methods.

Their attempt to gain credit for the "changed conditions" in Utah is truly ludicrous. They admit that they have no jurisdiction in the enforcement of penal laws against polygamy, and yet endeavor to make it appear that, by the action of those laws, the "Mormon" Church has been compelled to abandon its practice, and they are "the only agency" by which the Church was induced to issue and adopt the manifesto. The Utah Commission have had no more to do with the actual suppression of polygamy than the clerks in the Department of Justice had to do with the suppression of the Homestead riots.

The Commissioners, with remarkable inconsistency, after reciting the application of leading Church officials for amnesty, express their desire that it may be granted. And thus, after inferentially accusing of deception and falsehood the men who make the application, they insinuate that plural marriages are still solemnized in spite of the manifesto, and that leading "Mormon" officials are living in polygamous relations, and yet endorse the application for amnesty which contains a virtual denial of these accusations!

There are many other things in this contemptible document that ought to be ventilated, but we have not space to-day to enter into their discussion. A more desperate and transparent attempt to retain place by distorting facts, coloring incidents and repeating slanders, was never made before the United States government and the American people.

HILL'S PREDICAMENT.

WE are reliably informed that the Methodist church authorities have determined to request J. Wesley Hill to tender his resignation as pastor of the M. E. Church of Ogden. The exciting cause of this action is the part he played in connection with the recent exposure which has injured the cause of the church in this part of the country. In case Hill shall decline to offer his resignation, a charge of immoral conduct will be preferred against him. Those having the case in hand are confident of their ability to prove the allegations, and should that point be reached expulsion from the M. E. Church will be the result.

It has been recently stated, in general terms, that J. Wesley Hill is a notorious plagiarist having been guilty of the practice of stealing other people's sermons and delivering them from the pulpit as his own. Yesterday a gentleman drew our attention to an instance in point, when Hill delivered one of Dr. Witt Talmage's best productions as his own. The sermon of the Brooklyn pastor as spoken by its author and as delivered by its purloiner was published in parallel columns, so our informant stated, in the Ogden Standard.

Mr. Hill's clerical career appears to be approaching a collapse. His situation brings vividly to mind the following words of a revelation: "There is a time appointed unto ever man, according as his works shall be."

HE COULD NOT COME IN.

WHITE men and Mongolians are putting their heads together for the purpose of devising an effective method of evading the Geary Chinese exclusion law. The latest attempt in that line is rather ludicrous. A Chinaman has presented himself for admission to the United States on the ground that he is a British subject, and that as such he has a right to enter and leave this country at will.

This case presents a new phase of the question, the United States being under treaty obligations with England to admit the subjects of the latter country untrammelled. This particular Chinaman was not permitted to benefit by this pretext, and it is not likely that the British lion will show his teeth and wish his tail over the action of this country in the premises. He would make himself ridiculous if he did. The Chinaman evidently did not become a naturalized Britisher for the purpose of remaining within the boundaries of Great Britain's territorial dominion, but to escape from it and enter that of the United States. It is not to be supposed that England would permit its naturalization laws to be used as a means of enabling the Chinese to evade the laws of this country.

The agitation aroused by the Geary exclusion statute is becoming daily more intense. A great many white people are opposed to it on the ground that they believe it to be unconstitutional. Steps are being taken to have it constitutionally tested. We hope it will be pushed through that process as speedily as possible. Many prominent men take the ground in these times, however, that the country has virtually no written constitution, the will of the people being superior to it. If it really has come to a point when the tribunal of popular opinion takes precedence of the supreme law of the land, the Geary bill may be reasonably considered valid from that standpoint. Unfortunately the popular will is not infrequently widely separate from that which is right and just.

PROTEST AGAINST THE ADDED TAX!

A MEETING of the taxpayers of this city and county is called for this evening, at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce on Second South street west. The purpose of the meeting is to take into consideration the proper means to test the legality of the additional assessment levied by the Territorial Board of Equalization. The call is made by the Chamber of Commerce, at the request of a number of influential citizens.

It is to be regretted that this announcement was not made earlier, so that taxpayers from distant parts in the county as well as those in the city could have been notified in time to attend. As it is there ought to be a large gathering. If any means can be devised to resist this levy it ought to be used. The times are inauspicious for excessive taxation, and the raise comes after many people have, as they supposed, paid their full taxes for the year and obtained their receipts.

It is generally conceded that the county assessor has made, in the main, a fair valuation of the assessable property in the county. Complaints have been but few, and not many mistakes have been made. People have prepared to meet the obligations imposed by the assessment, and now, when many of them are discharged, and as much effort as is possible to others has been put forth to settle in time, this proposed additional burden is not relished by anybody.

We think the Board has done injustice to the taxpayers in this county, in the first place, in raising the assessment ten per cent., or at all, and in the next place, by leaving their action until after many settlements for taxes have been made and after the date mentioned in the law that created the Board and defined its powers.

Let the wise men among the people present their views, and let a protest go up from the taxpayers of this county which will be heard if not heeded. Everybody knows that we are taxed enough already.

THE SEWAGE NUISANCE.

THE complaints about the nuisance near the Jordan river continue, notwithstanding the efforts that have been made to belittle them. The difficulty we foresee, and of which we forewarned the municipal authorities when the defective sewer system was first advocated, is a foul and pestilent existing fact. Sewage is emptied into the Jordan river in such quantities as to befoul the stream and become an abiding nuisance. The analyses made by Dr. Talmage are proof positive of this, and they cannot be cried down or ignored. A remedy is loudly called for and there must be some effectual plan devised to dispose of the city's sewage which will not endanger the life and health of the citizens.

But the point of discharge the other side of Jordan, to which place the greater part of the sewage has been pumped, is so vile and fetid from the filth deposited that it is beyond the power of language to describe its nastiness. People who have habitations anywhere near it are sickened and driven from the spot, and one well known citizen has been compelled to vacate his premises which have in consequence gone to ruin. He has this day entered suit against the city. The following copy of the complaint presents his case clearly and the cause he has for demanding damages:

In the District Court in and for the Third Judicial District of Utah Territory, County of Salt Lake.

Peter F. Goss, Plaintiff, vs.

Salt Lake City, a Corporation, Defendant.

Complaint.

The plaintiff complains and alleges:

I. That the defendant is, and at all the times hereafter mentioned was, a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of Utah Territory, in the county of Salt Lake and Territory of Utah.

II. That the plaintiff is, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was, the owner and in possession of the following described land and premises, and of a certain dwelling house, barn and other improvements situated thereon. The said premises being bound and described as follows, to-wit: All of the east half of the southwest quarter of section thirty-two (32) in township one (1), north of range one (1) west, and lots two (2) and three (3) of section five (5), township one (1) south of range one (1) west, of the Salt Lake meridian, United States survey.

III. That ever since the year 1878 the defendant has been the owner and in the possession of a certain strip of land about four (4) rods wide and forty (40) rods long, running through plaintiff's said premises, and that a certain stream of water known as the "Surplus Canal" is situated thereon; that the plaintiff's dwelling house is located near the bank of said stream and about six (6) rods therefrom, the plaintiff's land lying on both sides of said canal.

IV. That during the spring of 1880, the defendant made and constructed a sewer from Salt Lake City to a point near the plaintiff's said premises, and from about the month of May, 1880 till the present time has conveyed the sewage from said Salt Lake City through said sewer, and discharged the same into the said "surplus canal" at a point near plaintiff's premises and dwelling, and the said sewage matter has been conveyed by said canal onto plaintiff's land. That the said so-called canal is neither a natural stream nor an artificial channel constructed to convey water, but from the place where the sewage is discharged into the canal (through plaintiff's land), the canal consists of a series of natural hollows, which are from ten rods to forty rods in width; that the canal is an open stream and has but little fall, so that the water therein flows very slowly, and the sewer matter discharged therein by said defendant through said sewer has settled in the bottom of said canal where it runs through plaintiff's premises, as well as at other places on each side of his said land, to a depth of several inches, instead of flowing through the canal; that the said canal is, and at all the times mentioned in this complaint was, wholly unsuitable and unfit to receive the said sewage and carry the same away, and that it was and is totally unfit for the said purposes for which it has been used by the defendant, that by reason of the defendant's carelessness and negligence in the construction and maintenance of said sewer and canal, and because of the discharge of said sewage into said unfit and defective canal, the defendant has created and maintained a nuisance and has caused noxious and offensive smells, and has tainted and corrupted the atmosphere so as to render the dwelling house and premises of the plaintiff unfit for habitation, and has compelled plaintiff to move from and abandon the same, and has thereby prevented him from renting or otherwise receiving any income therefrom, and has greatly depreciated the value of his said premises and caused irreparable injury thereto, besides injuring the live stock and other property of the plaintiff thereon. That by reason of the said acts of the defendant the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars.

Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment:

1. That the said nuisance be abated and the defendant restrained by injunction from maintaining or using said canal, to the nuisance of the plaintiff, or permitting it to be so used.

2. That the plaintiff recover from the defendant twenty-five thousand dollars damages and his costs.

We learn from Mr. Goss that the effluvia near his place arising from the sewage is unbearable. He has not only been compelled to vacate the premises, but has had to abandon all cultivation of his land there and all care of the place, for no living being can stand the stench. He and his family had to remove from it. Persons sent to take care of the premises returned and refused to remain. Men employed to work there had to decamp and bring away the teams, for nothing could endure the horrible nuisance.

Mr. Goss is a reliable citizen. He had a valuable place near the surplus canal until the sewer discharge ruined it. During the boom he was offered $55,000 for it but held it at a higher figure. Today it is comparatively worthless. He has engaged the efficient services of Richards and Moyle, the popular attorneys, and they think he has a very strong case. This refers not so much to the force of the odors around his premises as to the cause he has for legal action.

How many other suits the city will have to meet if the nuisances are not abated, and some efficient means is not soon provided to dispose of the sewage, we are not prepared even to guess at. Something ought to be done to remove the evil and it ought to be done quickly.

A CHOLERA CURE.

In these times of alarm, a simple cure for ailments resembling cholera is more than ordinarily valuable. We do not believe that there is any genuine Asiatic cholera in this mountain region, although some cases have been claimed. But bowel complaints are quite common and they create fear that aggravates the disease. The Sun cholera mixture, which can be obtained at the drug stores, has proved an excellent remedy in such cases. We have found, in many years' experience, a remedy even more simple for cholera morbus and kindred "summer complaints." It is a saturated tincture of camphor, which forms one of the main ingredients in the Sun mixture. For an adult give four drops on a piece of white sugar every fifteen minutes for one hour. Wait an hour. Renew the doses each alternate hour until the purging moderates. One drop for a very young child or less for an infant, either in sugar or water, is sufficient in quantity.

An efficient cure for cholera is said to be a teaspoonful of chloroform in four times as much water. A gentleman who saw it used in Cuba thus speaks of its success: "I went to Cuba to help organize the insurgent army and I had a chance to try the remedy, for a cholera epidemic broke out among the troops. My first experience was on a negro, who was in the last stages. It cured him and hundreds after him. When we marched, the officers carried bottles of chloroform, and if a man fell out, sick with cholera, the remedy was applied, and he was able to resume his place. I have seen men lying by the road side in a state of collapse, almost dead. An officer would ride up, dismount, and apply the remedy, and before the column had passed the man would be in the ranks again."

We have heard that the same remedy has been applied with great benefit in some parts of the Southern States. It may be that chloroform in smaller doses will prove specific in milder stomach diseases than genuine cholera.

FINLAND IN RELATION TO CRIME.

SOME of the public journals are commenting upon the terrible sentence upon a young married woman in Finland. Her chief crime was the murder of her husband. In addition to this she had several times forged his name to papers for the purpose of obtaining money. For the murder she has been sentenced to be beheaded. Before decapitation her right hand will be cut off, as a penalty for forgery. These punishments are inflicted under the provisions of a medieval law, which has never been repealed.

The comments of the press upon this case are mostly confined to condemnation of the judgment on account of its barbarity. The subject is, however, suggestive of some thoughts in another direction. In an inadvertent upon the fact that Finland is behind the times in preserving such a statute on its books, the cause of it not having been repealed ought to be considered. It is evident that that country has not advanced at the same rate as other nations in law reform because statutory changes have not been so necessary there as elsewhere. This particular case indicates that if Finland has not kept abreast with other countries in changing its laws, it has been because she has also been behind in the march toward a criminal vortex in the direction of which the world is hastening. The balance of the nations have been compelled to modify punitive processes in some classes of offenses because of the increase of crime.

The time when stealing and other minor offenses were in Great Britain capital offenses is yet within the memory of men. This was when honesty was more largely the rule than now. As crime increased modifications of the criminal statutes were demanded and conceded. The same development has been going forward in the other nations, Finland being evidently a notable exception to the rule.

As a matter of course the enlargement of population accounts, to an extent, for the appalling increase of crime, but only to a limited degree. The proportion of criminality to the population of seventy-five years ago and now would, we believe, make an exhibit favorable to the older times. This is a result of the selfishness of modern civilization, which differs in its expression from that of barbarism. The former is, however, the same concentrative unchristianism as the latter exhibited by different methods. One of the most notable tendencies of the times is the decay of human sympathy in the world. This of course is but another way of stating that selfishness is being developed. The symptoms of this situation bubble and boil at every exciting cause, no matter how comparatively small, as, for instance, in the recent brutal resistance to the landing on Fire Island of the "Norman" passengers. The increase of selfishness, which is anti-Christ, must be co-existent with clashing, quarrelling and violence, because it means commotion resulting from men seeking to gain advantage over their fellows.

In view of these considerations it will be well to give Finland its due credit for morality, while commenting on the barbarous character of some of its penal statutes.

EVILS OF CARELESSNESS.

The following excellent hints on the bad results of negligence are clipped from the Youth's Companion and are worthy of universal attention:

"Every one knows, in a general way, how fatal habits of carelessness may prove. Yet few mothers—we say mothers, because the training of the young is mainly in their hands—are sufficiently impressed with the importance of vigorously training their children to habits of carefulness.

"An old Latin proverb said, 'The mothers of the timid seldom weep.' We do not wish children trained to timidity, but to thoughtfulness—to considering the probable consequences of their conduct. Certainly, in the transition period from childhood to youth, the formation of right habits in this respect can be begun.

"I didn't think," should not be a full excuse for many little misdeeds, or for a costly piece of carelessness.

"If the habit of negligence is once formed, it will assert itself through life—probably in a disastrous way. A habit of carelessness is formed, it will be a lifelong benefit—probably beyond all that its possessor may realize.

"Stagings are constantly giving way, resulting in death or broken bones, because those who put them up were careless in a dangerous way. A friend of ours, a retired householder, never had an accident of the kind during his long life. He had formed the habit of assuring himself that every stick of timber and every nail was sound, and that every nail was well driven home.

"A gentleman who had gone to watch with a sick friend opened a door which led to the cellar, but from which the stairs had been removed. He fell and was killed. What a wicked neglect to have such a door unbarred in the front hall!

"A mother stopped out for a moment, leaving a tub of boiling water on the floor and a young child in the room. She was detained, somewhat, and returned to find her child scalded to death.

"At a camp-ground last summer a lady intending to do some ironing filled her stove with wood and went to a neighbor's while the irons were heating. The stove door opened, coals fell out, the cottage and several others were burned, and the utmost exertions barely saved from destruction all the other cottages and public buildings, with many grand and priceless trees.

"A physician left his horse and buggy in a lane a short distance from his patient's house, where he thought he could see them from the window. The horse was well-bred, kind, tractable and accustomed to stand untied for hours. But it quietly backed out of the lane and ran, and killed another horse. The law held it a case of gross neglect, and the physician had to pay for the other horse, besides the cost of the suit."

A NEW KIND OF FUEL.

HERETOFORE the lower grades of molasses caused considerable annoyance to the sugar planters of Louisiana. Last year the article, being unfit for commercial purposes, was dumped in large quantities into the rivers and ponds to get it out of the way. Some planters who entertained the idea that by storing the stuff for a time it would improve, tried the plan, but it only became still more useless.

The molasses could be manufactured into a species of rum which doubtless would command a sale, but would take capital and plant to start rum distilleries, and the planters have enough to do to attend to their sugar making.

The next purpose for which it can be utilized is fuel. It is worth about two cents a gallon, that is, about $3.33 a ton. It will equal Pittsburg soft coal, and can be used for running the machinery of all the sugar houses. A "sprinkler" has been invented which distributes the molasses on the dried sugar cane, which burns better than most kinds of coal and emits a stronger heat. The planters, having concluded that this is the most profitable way to utilize the waste molasses, have determined to avail themselves of this process and are using it as fuel, and are doing so this season.

A MAGNIFICENT PROGRAMME.

THE World's Fair committee on ceremonies has prepared a magnificent programme for the dedicatory services on the 21st of next month. President Harrison will be present, but the two orators of the day will be Breckenridge and Depew—both splendid speakers. The exercises will take place in the manufacturers' building, the hall of which has a capacity of 125,000 people. And it is expected that it will be crowded on this occasion to its full extent. This means that its capacity is about twelve times that of the Tabernacle in this city. The musical part of the ceremony will be performed by a chorus of 5000 voices, besides instruments in large numbers.

It is rather disheartening to learn that not more than three of the South American countries will be represented at the Fair. It is reported that Mexico's site was forfeited two weeks ago, and that the sites of others of the Latin-Americas will soon be abandoned also. This is peculiarly unfortunate, because the relics and curiosities of ancient America, which are found in abundance in these countries, would make a most interesting feature of the Fair. The managers should endeavor to obtain, at the expense of the United States, as complete a collection of these remains as possible.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

"The spirit and the body are the soul of man." That is the "Mormon" idea of human existence. That there is a spirit in man is one of the oldest inspirational sayings on record, and "Mormon" theology regards it as signifying that there is within the body of man a personal spirit which is the intelligent ego. The account of the creation given in the Book of Abraham, published in the Pearl of Great Price, states that when man was formed from the dust his spirit, (that is the man's spirit,) was put into the body, and the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils and he became a living soul.

The spirit of man was, therefore, a preexistent entity, and the body is formed for a covering to it, a medium by which the spiritual being may be brought in contact with grosser material things. The spirit, having existed before the body which it quickens and animates, can exist after the body has paid the "debt of nature," or, rather, the penalty of sin, and has crumbled back to dust. It is that which thinks, feels, moves and gains experience; what are commonly called the senses being vehicles of communication from the material world to the spiritual being that dwells in the physical body. These two components become so intimately connected that they form one person and are mutually affected by things both temporal and spiritual.

The spirit of life, light, intelligence and wisdom is not the personal spirit of man, but it operates upon him. When it ceases to do this entirely, the spirit and the body separate. The dust "returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it." Both return. The body to the elements out of which it was formed, the spirit to the Creator who placed it in the body, the process being ordered according to eternal laws, both in the union and the disunion of the components of the human being.

What becomes of the individual spirit when freed from the flesh, and what its condition was before it was placed in the body, are subjects which we do not wish now to touch upon. It is the fact of a spiritual entity within but different from the body, and capable of a separate existence, that we now desire to draw attention to. There has been a belief in this existence from the earliest ages. The spirit, commonly called the soul, has been regarded as immortal by thinking people among all races.

There have been different opinions, however, as to its origin, substance, location and destiny. The common idea is that it was born with the body and had no anterior existence. Also that it is immaterial in substance. Some have contended that it was located in the brain, some in the heart, others in various vital organs, an old idea being that it was in the pineal gland at the base of the brain.

The doctrine of the "Mormon" Church is that the spirit of man is the offspring of God, and that the body conforms to its contour. That while it is spiritual in its texture it is not immaterial. It is altogether different in many respects from what is commonly called matter, but has some qualities in common with matter, and is therefore not immaterial. It has extension and bulk, it occupies space, it has relation to duration, it can be in but one place at one instant, it can affect and be affected by grosser material things, and in other ways is somewhat similar to the lower forms of substance and therefore it is not immaterial. Indeed the "Mormon" idea is that there is no such thing as immaterial substance, but that the terms are self-contradictory and involve an absurdity.

In many important respects spiritual substance and the grosser forms of matter are widely different. They are governed by different laws. They have their separate spheres. But it is the eternal, inseparable union of the spiritual and the material in perfect harmony that brings a fulness of joy.

That the spirit of man is a separate entity from the body of man is believed by nearly all people who profess the Christian religion. Atheists and Infidels of various schools deny this, and are of the opinion that mind, if not a product of matter, is so connected with it as to be dissolved when the body decays, and that the death of the organism is the end of the individual. Arguments on either side are as a rule a waste of effort when the disputants are tenacious in their views. There have been, however, some experiences that are worthy of notice and that may have some effect on the skeptical mind, while they help to confirm the faith of those who believe in things spiritual.

The Prophet Joseph Smith declared that at the time he was dragged from his house by a mob in the night, beaten, striped, tarred and feathered, a vial of acid fluid broken on his mouth and his face excoerated with the nails of one of the infuriated wretches who assailed him, his spirit left the body and, standing in the air above, he looked down upon his bruised and battered form which he saw distinctly, and to which he was suddenly attracted afterwards. Others have given testimony to very similar experiences. Joseph's statement was made nearly sixty years ago. Recently there have been some interesting testimonies given to the world to the same effect, tending to show that the spirit of man is an entity that can exist as a person outside of the body of man. In the Review of Reviews for September, two very interesting cases are reported the particulars having been furnished by the Society of Psychical Research. They are related by Mr. F. W. H. Myers. One is the personal experience of Dr. Witte of the St. Louis Medical and Surgical Journal. The other is that of Mr. Bertrand Huguenot minister. They are both worthy of public attention.

Witte came to the point of death with typhus fever. He was in full possession of his mental faculties but his voice failed, his strength left him, he stiffened and lay for four hours to all appearance dead. He became unconscious, pulseless, a needle was thrust into various parts of his body without effect. He described his own sensations in waking up to consciousness and discovering that his "soul" or spirit was in the body but not of it. He says:

"With all the interest of a physician, I beheld the wonders of my bodily anatomy, intimately interwoven with which, even tissue for tissue, was I, the living soul of that dead body. I learned that the epidermis was the outside boundary of the ultimate tissues, so to speak, of the soul. I realized my condition and reasoned calmly thus: I have died, as men term death, and yet I am as much a man as ever. I am about to get out of the body. I watched the interesting process of the separation of soul and body. By some power, apparently not my own, the Ego was rocked to and fro, laterally, as a cradle is rocked, by which process its connection with the tissues of the body was broken up. After a little time the lateral motion ceased, and along the soles of the feet beginning at the toes, spreading rapidly to the heels, I felt and heard, as it seemed, the snapping of innumerable small cords. When this was accomplished, I began slowly to retreat from the feet toward the head, as a rubber cord shortens. I remember reaching the hips and saying to myself, 'Now, there is no life below the hips.' I can recall no memory of passing through the abdomen and chest but recollect distinctly when my whole self was collected into the head, when I reflected thus: 'I am all in the head now and I shall soon be free.' I passed around the brain as if I were hollow, compressing it and its membranes slightly on all sides towards the center, and peeped out between the flattened edges of the skull, emerging like the flattened edge of a bag of membranes. I recollect distinctly how I appeared to myself something like a jelly-fish as regards color and form. As I emerged from the head I floated up and down and laterally like a soap bubble attached to the bowl of a pipe, until I at last broke loose from the body and felt lightly on the floor, where I slowly rose and expanded into the full stature of man. I seemed to be translucent, of a bluish cast, and perfectly naked. With a painful sense of embarrassment I fled toward the partially opened door to escape the eyes of the two ladies whom I was facing as well as others whom I knew were about me; but upon reaching the door I found myself clothed, and satisfied upon that point I turned and faced the company.

"As I turned, my left elbow came in contact with the arm of one of two gentlemen who were standing in the door. To my surprise, his arm passed through mine without apparent resistance, the several parts closing again without pain, as at reunions. I looked quickly up at his face to see if he had noted the contact, but he gave me no sign—only stood and gazed toward the couch I had just left. I directed my gaze in the direction of his and saw my own dead body.

"I saw a number of persons sitting and standing about the body and particularly noticed two women apparently weeping by my left side, and I knew that they were weeping. I have since learned that they were my wife and my sister, but I had no conception of individuality. Wife, sister or friend were as one to me. I did not remember any condition or relationship; at least I did not think of any. I could distinguish sex, but nothing further. Not one lifted his eyes from my body.

"I turned and passed out at the open door, inclining my head and watching where I set my feet as I stepped down on to the porch.

"I crossed the porch, descended the steps, walked down the path and into the street. There I stopped, and looked about me. I never saw the street more distinctly than I saw it then. I took note of the redness of the soil and of the washes the rain had made. I took a rather pathetic look about me, like one who is about to leave his home for a long time. Then I discovered that I had become larger than I was in earth life and congratulated myself thereupon. I was somewhat smaller in the body than I just liked to be, but in the next life, I thought, I am to be as I desired.

"My clothes, I noticed, had accommodated themselves to my increased stature, and I fell to wondering where they came from and how they got on to me so quickly and without my knowledge. I examined the fabric and judged it to be of some kind of Scotch material—a good suit, I thought, but not handsome; still neat and good enough. The coat fits loosely, too, and that is well for summer. 'How well I feel,' I thought. Only a few minutes ago I was horribly sick and distressed. Then came the change, called death, which I have so much dreaded. It is past now, and here am I still a man, alive and thinking—yes, thinking as clearly as ever, and how well I feel!

The second case is that of Mr. Bertrand, who was traveling in the Alps with some pupils. While ascending the Titile Mountains, becoming wearied, he sent the students up the mountain while he rested. He sat and smoked and viewed the scenery, and suddenly felt himself struck as with apoplexy. His head was perfectly clear but his body was paralyzed. 'It was the sleep of the snow.' Here is his own account of his experience:

"A kind of prayer was sent to God, and then I resolved to study quietly the progress of death. My feet and hands were first frozen, and little by little death reached my knees and elbows. The sensation was not painful, and my mind felt quite easy. But when death had been all over my body my head became unbearably cold, and it seemed to me that scavenger pliers squeezed my heart, so as to extract my life. I never felt such an acute pain, but it lasted only a second or a minute, and my life went out. 'Well,' thought I, 'at last I am what they call a dead man, and here I am, a ball of air in the air, a captive balloon attached to the earth by a kind of elastic string, and going up and always up. How strange! I see better than ever, and I am dead—only a small space in the space without a body!'

Where is my last body? Looking down I was astounded to recognize my own envelope. 'Strange!' said I to myself. 'There is the corpse in which I lived and which I called me, as if the coat were the body and if the body were the soul! What a horrid thing is that body—deadly pale, with a yellowish-blue color, holding a cigar in its mouth and a match in its two burned fingers! Well, I hope that you shall never smoke again, dirty rag! Oh! if only I had a hand and scissors to cut the thread which ties me to it.

"When my companions return they will look at that and exclaim, 'The professor is dead! Poor young friend! They do not know that I never was as alive as I am, and the proof is that I see the guide going up rather by the right, when he promised me to go by the left; W. was to be the last, and he is neither the first nor the last, but alone, away from the rope. Now the guide thinks that I do not see him, because he hides himself behind the young men while drinking at my bottle of Madeira. Well, go on, poor man; I hope that my body will never drink of it again. Ah! there he is, stealing a leg of my chicken! Go on, old fellow; eat the whole of the chicken if you choose, for I hope that my miserable corpus will never eat or drink again. I felt neither surprise nor vexation; I simply stated facts with indifference. Hello! said I, there is my wife going to Lucerne, and she told me that she would not leave before tomorrow, or after tomorrow. They are five before the hotel of Lungren. Well, wife, I am a dead man. Good-by.

"I must confess that I did not call dear the one who has always been very dear to me, and that I felt neither regret nor joy at leaving her. My only regret was that I could not cut the string. In vain I traveled through so beautiful worlds that earth became insignificant. I had only two wishes: the certitude of not returning to earth and the discovery of my next glorious body, without which I felt powerless. I could not be happy because the thread, though thinner than ever, was not cut, and the wished-for body was still invisible to my searching looks.

"Suddenly a shock stopped my ascension, and I felt that somebody was pulling and pulling the balloon down. My grief was measureless. The fact was that while my young friends threw snowballs at each other our guide had discovered and administered to my body the well-known remedy, rubbing with snow; but as I was cold and stiff as ice, he dared not roll me for fear of breaking my hands still near the cigar. I could neither see nor hear any more, but I could measure my way down, and when I reached my body again I had a last hope—the balloon seemed much too big for the month.

"Suddenly I uttered the awful roar of a wild beast—the corpse swallowed the balloon, and Bertrand was Bertrand again, though for a time worse than before.

"I never felt more violent irritation. At last I could say to my poor guide: 'Because you are a fool you take me for a fool, while my body alone is sick. Ah! if you had simply cut the string.'

"The string? What string? You were nearly dead?

"Dead! I was less dead than you are now, and the proof is, that I saw you going up the Titlis by the right, while you promised me to go by the left."

"The man staggered before replying. 'Because the snow was soft and there was no danger of slipping.'

"You say that because you thought me far away. You went up by the right and allowed two young men to put aside the rope. Who is a fool? You—not I. Now show me my bottle of Madeira, and we will see if it is full."

"The blow was such that his hands left my body and he fell down.

"Oh," said I brutally, "you may fall down and stare at me as much as you please, and give your poor explanations, but you cannot prove that my chicken has two legs, because you stole one."

"This was too much for the good man. He got up, emptied his knapsack while muttering a kind of confession, and then flew away.

"When I arrived in Lucerne I asked my wife why she had left Interlaken sooner than she had told me.

"Because," she was afraid of another accident and wanted to be nearer."

"Were you five in the carriage and did you stop at the Lungren hotel?"

"Yes." And I went away laughing.

These narrations are, to say the least, exceedingly interesting. Coming from such sources, they will occasion much thought in circles where purely theological questions are seldom discussed. They go to prove that the spirit and the body, which are the soul of man, are separate organisms though joined in mortal life; that the spirit can live when the body is lifeless; that the body without the spirit is dead; that when "the silver cord is loosed," the spirit can return to give an account to the God who gave it, while "the dust returns to the earth as it was."

These experiences, which are not entirely new to many persons, will be treated by the intensely skeptical as dreams or vain imaginations. But they will confirm the faith of those who believe in the Christian religion, and to the Latter-day Saints will be additional evidences of the truth of the doctrines they have received concerning the immortality and eternal life of man.

THE CHINESE WILL NOT GO.

It has already been published that the six companies which control the Chinese element on the Pacific Coast have instructed their subjects to ignore absolutely the provisions of the Geary law. The San Francisco Chronicle says that so far only one Chinaman in the whole United States has complied with the law, and he has been boycotted and driven from business by his countrymen. In San Francisco nine persons applied for registration, but afterward withdrew their application. Collector Quinn of San Francisco wrote to the six companies informing them of the provisions of the new law, and the consequence arising from non-compliance. He was informed in reply: That the law is unconstitutional, as it is discriminating against the Chinese and imposes unusual punishment; that it is contrary to treaty agreement and that it lays the Chinese merchants open to blackmail, as they can be arrested at every hamlet in the United States, and subjected to heavy expense.

The Collector has forwarded a copy of the reply to the treasury department. Nothing can be done until May 6th, next, when the penal clauses of the law can be enforced. Then the Collector says he will arrest every Chinaman who has not complied with the law.

THE PROGRESS OF RECIPROCITY.

CENTRAL America comprises five political divisions, known as Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Two of these, Salvador and Guatemala, have entered into reciprocity arrangements with the United States. Costa Rica has just completed its treaty in this line, Nicaragua is waiting for its Congress to assemble to enter also, and Honduras, now in a state of political turbulence, is expected when quiet is restored to come in with her sisters.

Costa Rica is a prosperous little republic. The President is elected quadrennially. He is assisted by four ministers whom he appoints himself. He is chosen by an electoral assembly, which body also elects the members of the House of Representatives.

The Supreme Court is composed of eleven judges by Congress every four years. There are also criminal courts and subordinate judges generally called mayors. The country is divided into five provinces and two territories, each under a governor appointed by the President.

According to the Handbook of American Republics the area of Costa Rica is 23,233 square miles (English), and the population 213,785. The principal city, San Jose, has a population of 25,000. The country is rich in minerals and forests. Coffee and bananas are the chief products, and are largely exported. In 1890, 161½ miles of railroad were in operation, and since then new developments have been made.

Under the new treaty with the United States, the usual reciprocity arrangements have been entered into. Great Britain has been, until the present, the chief commercial trader with Costa Rica. Germany and France had also large interests there. The United States did fairly heretofore, but under this treaty it is believed that she will become the first in trade with that country. The tariff on flour is $2.50 per 100 pounds, and on cereals of all kinds 35 cents a bushel. These imposts will be removed from United States goods, and also all machinery, agricultural and mining, from this country will be admitted free.

ON THE VERGE OF DISASTER.

"LAND AND WATER," a journal published in London, England, speaking of the recent financial upheavals in that country, says:

"The financial crisis, which first found serious expression in the Baring collapse, is becoming more acute. The situation is rendered worse by the artificial efforts made during the last two years to postpone the inevitable result. Within the last twenty-four hours seven clubs in the West End have been definitely closed. Several London journals are on the verge of disaster, five of the largest and most important estates in England are shortly to be sold, several commercial firms of hitherto good reputation are now discredited, and the number of well known men prominent as society entertainers is vanishing."

THE NEW MARSHAL.

THE appointment of Mr. Irvine A. Benton to the office of United States Marshal for Utah seems to give general satisfaction. Mr. Benton has made an excellent postmaster. In this he has shown good executive ability and has been so painstaking and diligent that his course has recommended him to the notice of the President. Of course, the duties of his new position are altogether different to those which he is about to relinquish. But the ability he has exhibited in the one office will be valuable in the other, and his integrity, which seems to be unquestioned, is a consideration in any office. We congratulate Mr. Benton on the confidence reposed in him by this appointment. We are glad that the choice has been made of a straight Republican rather than a so-called "Liberal," and take it as an indication of the views of the President and his cabinet in regard to this local question.

LET THEM FURNISH THE PROOF.

It was to be expected that the "Liberal" Utah Commission would be applauded by the "Liberal" organ for still further misrepresenting the condition of affairs in Utah. The Commission has been largely governed by that organ and the organ has been ready to defend the Commission. They have worked together for the same end. They have talked the same things. They have scattered the same slanders. And when they have been asked for proofs they have utterly failed to respond, but have demanded that the accused shall prove their own innocence. The organ now wants us to prove a negative.

Is not this the proper mode of procedure: The Commission make the charge, in effect, that fifteen male persons have during the past year entered into polygamous marriages. Let the names of those persons be given. If the Commissioners have them they can produce them. If they have them not, they have no right to make the charge. And, if they do not know these names, they have the names of the persons who make this report to them; let them give the names of the accusers. If they will not do either, why should anybody be expected to attempt to disprove the accusations. But the organ complains that we are engaged, "not in disproving the charges made, but in hurling anathemas at the Commission." No anathemas, however strong, would do justice to the feelings of contempt we feel for men who take the cowardly course that these Commissioners have pursued. But why should we be engaged in "disproving" a bald assertion without a solitary fact or argument or witness to support it, and couched in such language that those who make it dodge from the issue in the most sneaking manner possible?

The Commission are repeating the old slander they have been repeatedly challenged to substantiate. They have never attempted to prove their covert charges. The Presidency and the General Conference of the Church solemnly denied them and the only answer of the official slanderers is, "denials and denunciations prove nothing." It is for the Commission to furnish the proof. All that the other side is required to do is to plead. If no evidence is forthcoming there is no need for anything but the denial. Again we challenge proof that fifteen or any number of male persons have contracted polygamous marriages in Utah during the past year. They are afraid to give the names of the persons alleged to be suspected, because the falsehood of the charge could then be exposed. That is what is the matter.

Their organ rushes to their rescue with the insinuation "they may have gone over the line to be married." They "may" have gone to heaven or some other place. What they may have done is not the point. Give us the names and the proofs. We deny that either in Utah "or over the line," wherever that may be, there have been since the adoption of the manifesto fifteen polygamous marriages solemnized by the "Mormon" Church or any of its authorized ministers.

The Commissioner's organ says: "Any member of the priesthood can marry a Mormon man to a Mormon woman and by some trick a good many of those marriages have been solemnized." If by "those marriages" is meant plural marriages, the statement is utterly and knowingly false. No member of the priesthood in this Territory is permitted by the Church or its authorities to marry any "Mormon" woman to a "Mormon" man who has a lawful wife living and undivorced. Nor is it true that "any member of the priesthood" is authorized to solemnize a marriage between a "Mormon" man and a "Mormon" woman, even if it be lawful. The Commissioners' organ is dealing in the same kind of deception as the Commissioners are themselves. The civil law permits a recognized minister of any denomination to solemnize a marriage, but the "Mormon" Church does not authorize all the members of its Priesthood to so officiate, and the whole statement to the contrary is manufactured to deceive.

We deny that "by some trick," or in any other way, these polygamous marriages that the Commissioners and their organ are circulating lies about, have occurred during the past year or the year before that. Raking up rumors about alleged occurrences just after the passage of the Edmunds Act will not do. They will not divert attention from the charge that during the present year or two, notwithstanding the manifesto and its adoption, polygamous marriages have continued to be contracted by the "Mormons." That charge is groundless, and we believe no one understands that better than the Commissioners who give it publicity, and the organ that supports them in their duplicity.

As to the belief of the "Mormon" people, thank God neither the Commission nor any other earthly power has any business with that! Our opinions are our own. We ask nobody's consent to entertain them. We are indifferent to the sentiments of such persons as the Commissioners in relation to them. While we submit to the law the law has no issue with us. If we choose to uphold the law, even believing it to be unwise or unjust, we are constitutionally protected in our freedom of faith. And if there were no constitution or declaration of human rights in this respect, the liberty of thought and belief exists and is beyond the power of mortal man to suppress.

We say that the "Mormon" Church and the "Mormon" people have ceased to solemnize and contract plural marriages, out of deference to the law of the land. We say that they have been wonderfully submissive to the acts of Congress in relation to polygamy since they agreed to observe them. And we regard the effort made by the Commission to hold them up as insincere and recreant to their agreements, as one of the most dastardly and cowardly and mercenary attempts to malign a noble people, for the purpose of retaining a petty office, ever perpetrated in a civilized country.

"Denials and denunciations" may be distasteful to persons who engage in such malicious work, but they provoke denials by their assaults and lay themselves open to denunciations by their repeated dissemination of slanders for which they offer no element of proof. As it is, they are official retailers of stale scandal, and even their greatly reduced salaries are, for such work, a gross imposition upon the government and people of this country.

GENERAL JOHN POPE.

ANOTHER of the historic characters of the civil war passed away in Ohio on the 24th inst. In army annals the name of Pope does not figure as brilliantly as Sherman, Sheridan, Hooker and several others. However, it is universally acknowledged that General John Pope was a dashing soldier, but his military career has been so acrimoniously discussed that it is difficult to estimate it accurately.

Pope was born in Illinois in 1823, graduated at West Point 1842, served in Florida 1844, fought at Monterey and Buena Vista 1846-48, was made brigadier-general of volunteers in 1861, commanded the army of the Mississippi in 1862, and later on the army of Virginia. At the close of the war he was mustered out of the volunteer service, and placed in command of the department of the Missouri with headquarters at Fort Leavenworth. He published a work entitled "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande," now embodied in the Pacific railroad reports, vol. 3. He also published a history of the campaign in Virginia during July and August, 1862.

DR. ILIFF'S ERROR.

THE Salt Lake public are familiar with the charge of plagiarism against Dr. Iliff, of the M. E. Church. They also understand the explanation, given by the gentleman's friends, of the circumstances under which he made use of some eloquent utterances of Dr. Guard's without giving credit for them. We have exposed the treachery of some of Dr. Iliff's pretended friends and fellow ministers, in hunting up the evidences of this plagiarism and giving them to a daily paper to print. It was a traitorous stab in the back, and the hand that made the cowardly thrust was dyed deep with the stain that it intended to stamp upon Dr. Iliff.

We regard the failure of the gentleman to inform the public of the source of his extracts, when they appeared in print as his own, as an error of judgment which has, no doubt, pained him more than it has injured anybody else. When the address he delivered appeared in a public journal without proper credit, a few lines of explanation would have put the matter right, saved Dr. Iliff much mortification and absolved him from the charge of intentional plagiarism, which some of his co-religionists have been eager to fasten upon him.

On Sunday morning at the close of the services in the Iliff M. E. Church, the following frank and manly statement was read by Dr. Iliff to the congregation:

"It is already known to the public that early in September I asked Presiding Elder J. D. Gillilan to call my brother ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Utah together, and proposed to them to take any step that might by them be deemed desirable in order to prevent or curtail any harm that might otherwise come to the church, or the cause of religion and morality in this community, through the covert knowledge or the open publication of charges affecting my standing as a minister. It is also known that my brethren unanimously resolved that no public statement at present was necessary or desirable, and resolved that no mention be made of the matter outside of ourselves. Now that all has been said by way of accusation that can truthfully be said concerning my use of portions of addresses by Dr. Guard, and now that all the harm has been done to my own reputation and influence, and to the cause of religion and morality, by such publication, my sense of honor and duty suggest that I must speak, notwithstanding the advice of some of my most trusted friends that no good can come of further statement. I wish to perform all my duty toward my God, my church and my fellow men. I do not now write this to palliate or deny my use of the thoughts and words of Dr. Guard and others, although in justice to the truth I do assert, that could all the circumstances be fully understood and be given their full value. It would be seen that this was done rather to great pressure of business, hurry and haste, and to subsequent unpardonable carelessness, than to dishonest forethought. I cannot excuse myself for this, and I do not ask the public to condone it. Any statement by way of palliation, however honestly or humbly made, would probably be regarded by some people as but an attempt to shift blame from my shoulders. I am willing to suffer all the penalty that may come to me personally, in the form of chagrin and mortification, and the loss of prestige or position. I do not desire, therefore, to lay aught at the door of any who may censure or censure me, nor do I make any appeal for lenient judgment on the ground of my past life and conduct. To the consequences of error I humbly bow my head.

But having submitted the above statement, or—if the public chooses so to call it—confession, is it too much to ask of the good people of this city and Territory to grant me charity for past offences, and sufficient probation in the future to enable me to demonstrate by my life and my deeds that I still merit their confidence? T. C. LILLY.

The official board of the church then presented the following resolutions:

"We, the official members of Iliff Church, have heard from Dr. Iliff his statement and explanation concerning his use of the thoughts and words of Dr. Guard and others, and are perfectly satisfied with the same.

"Resolved, That we most heartily approve of the manly and honorable course pursued by Dr. Iliff in bringing the matter before the members of the mission, and especially the Christian spirit which has characterized his conduct throughout with the same.

"Resolved, That we extend to Dr. Iliff our warmest sympathy and assure him of our utmost confidence in his integrity and Christian character.

Resolved, That we pledge him in the future a heartier co-operation and support in all the work committed to his hands.

A. M. JAMES,
MRS. M. N. RATHBONE,
E. G. ROGSON,
C. W. HARVEY, M. D.,
F. A. GRANT,
E. GRIFFITH,
C. M. WOOD,
W. J. HALLINGER,
J. A. DRYDEN,
MRS. H. E. LINCOLN."

After the services were closed, a meeting of the church members was held, Dr. Iliff not being present, when the following was adopted unanimously.

"Whereas, Rev. T. C. Iliff, D. D., has this day, Sunday, September 23, 1892, made a full statement relative to the publication of an address delivered by him on the anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association last March; therefore be it.

"Resolved, That we, the members of Iliff church and congregation, accept his statement and explanation as perfectly satisfactory.

"Resolved, That we heartily endorse the action of the members of the official board, and with them assure Dr. Iliff of our sympathy and confidence."

The proper thing for the public to do now, we think, is to endorse the action of the board and the church, and let the matter drop as far as Dr. Iliff is concerned. But the sneaking conduct of his traitorous brother clergy-men ought not to go unrebuked. The chief plotter in the scheme to degrade the preacher is undeserving the fellowship of the church which he disgraces, and is unfit for association with decent people of any society, religious or secular.

A MANUSCRIPT FOUND.

The Chicago Tribune of last Sunday contains particulars of the recent finding of a valuable and interesting document in Egypt. It was submitted by Professor Hechler to the International Oriental Congress in session at Paris, France, on the 17th inst. Mr. Hechler is chaplain to the British embassy at Vienna. He is a well known oriental scholar. The document is a papyrus manuscript, and is supposed to be the oldest copy extant of portions of the Old Testament books of Zachariah and Malachi. The pages are ten inches long and seven wide, each containing twenty-eight lines and written on both sides of the sheet. It is supposed to have been copied from some original Septuagint Bible, translated into Greek about 280 B. C. for the use of Jews in Egypt who had forgotten Hebrew and learned to speak Greek. The papyrus, though apparently copied from another work, bears marks of revision by a writer other than the copyist. The ink of the reviser shows a different color from the other. The manuscript shows that it has several new readings which surpass some of the other Septuagint texts in clearness of expression and simplicity of grammar. The subject matter is divided into verses, which was not the case with the original. Follows are six verses from Zachariah xii, 2-8, as translated from the newly found manuscript:

"2. Nations round about, and in Judah there shall be a siege against Jerusalem.

"3. And it shall come to pass in that day that I will make Jerusalem a stone trodden down to all the nations, every one tramples on it, mocking, is mocked, and there shall be gathered together against it all the nations of the earth.

"4. In that day, saith the Lord Almighty, I will smite every horse with amazement and his rider with madness; but upon the house of Judah I will open mine eyes and all the horses of the nations I will smite with blindness.

"5. And the captains of thousands of Judah shall say in their hearts: We shall find for ourselves the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the Lord Almighty their God.

"6. In that day I will make the captains of thousands of Judah a firebrand among wood and as a torch of fire in stubble and they devour on the right hand and on the left all the nations roundabout; Jerusalem shall dwell again by herself.

"7. And the Lord shall save the tents of Judah as at the beginning, that the house of David may not magnify itself and the pride of the inhabitants of Jerusalem against Judah.

"8. And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the weak ones among them in that day shall be as David."

By comparison it will be found that the above text in verses 2 and 3 differ materially from the following as reproduced from the revised version.

"Behold I will make Jerusalem a cup of reeling unto all the peoples round about, and upon Judah also shall it be in the siege against Jerusalem; and it shall come to pass in that day that I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all the peoples; all that burden themselves with it shall be sore wounded; and all the nations of the earth shall be gathered together against it."

Prof. Hechler said it was to be hoped that this most valuable papyrus of the Bible, probably the oldest now known to exist, would soon be published in facsimile for the strict examination of biblical scholars. He also said that it was the duty of the British government to institute an organized and scientific search for papyri in Egypt. There were, he thought, great treasures for the modern scholar hidden away in this old cradle of civilization and religion.

PATRICK SANSFIELD GILMORE.

PATRICK SANSFIELD GILMORE, the well known bandmaster, died of heart disease, in St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday evening last. Of his popularity and celebrity as a musician in this country little need be said. In every hamlet, town and city in the United States his name became familiar, and in Salt Lake his friends and admirers were numerous.

Mr. Gilmore was born in the suburbs of Dublin, Ireland, on Christmas day, 1829. While he was an infant his family moved to Galway, in the west of Ireland. At an early age he was placed in a mercantile house in Athlone, but his tastes inclined entirely to music. He joined the Athlone band, and soon acquired local fame as a musician. His employer in the mercantile business released him from his indentures.

At the age of eighteen he left Ireland and came to America. Immediately on his arrival in Boston he became a bandmaster, and before many years had a reputation as a leader all through Massachusetts. He organized Gilmore's band in 1858, in Boston. With this band he attended the famous Charleston Democratic convention of 1860. Ben Butler was a delegate from Massachusetts at this convention. It was one of the stormiest in the political history of the United States. At one period of its sessions, a riot was imminent. The hot-blooded Southerners called for a battle air, and named the "Marseilles," but Gilmore struck up the "Star Spangled Banner," and notwithstanding the howls and protests of the Southerners he played it until the hall was empty.

At the opening of the war Gilmore and his band accompanied Burnside and served in the Carolinas two years. He moved next to New Orleans, and became a favorite there even with the rebels. At the inauguration of Governor Hahn in March, 1864, Gilmore was given charge of the musical part of the ceremonies. He trained 10,000 children to sing "The Star Spangled Banner," and at the inauguration they sang it, though the fathers of most of them were in rebellion at the time. But not a word of objection was uttered, and Gilmore said he hoped to live to see the North and South join in singing the national anthem, and he did, for it is as much a favorite in Louisiana today as it is in B-ston.

At the close of the war Gilmore directed his attention to the organization of a peace jubilee. It took him two or three years to prepare. He collected $250,000 for the work, and in 1869 the celebration came off. His grand international jubilee took place in 1872. Johann Strauss and Ferns Abt attended. In 1875 Gilmore visited Europe, and obtained prizes in every large city on that continent.

One notable feature of his war career is now remembered by both sides with pleasure. When in a position that the two armies could hear, he invariably played "The Star Spangled Banner" and "Dixie Land" and was cheered on all sides.

For some time he had in preparation a special production entitled "The Voyage of Columbus" for celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America. The composition illustrates the main incidents in the famous voyage. It begins with a farewell to Spain, then a storm, a meeting, Columbus predicting land, and so on until the cry of "land" is raised. The piece concludes with a hymn of thanksgiving and "Hail Columbia."

Mr. Gilmore leaves a wife and one daughter. The latter has published two volumes, one entitled "Pipes from Prairie Land" and another entitled "A Son of Esau." Both works were commendably mentioned in the Eastern press.

THE UTAH COMMISSION REPORT.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 15, 1892.

To the Hon. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.:

Sir:—The Utah Commission respectfully submits the following report of its proceedings for the year ending September 1, 1892, during which time three sessions have been held, one at Chicago, from September 22 to September 29, 1891, and two at Salt Lake City, one from January 11 to March 12, and one from July 21 to August 13, 1892.

POLITICAL.

In its report for 1891 the Commission recorded the abandonment of its organization by the People's party, and the proposed division of its voters upon national party lines. But one general election has been held upon that basis, and it may yet be considered in the light of an experiment, although, in the opinion of the Commission, a change is apparent in the political situation in Utah, which, if properly fostered and honestly managed, will be productive of good results.

It is hardly to be expected that a people who have been taught for years to hold themselves aloof from, and even in hostile attitude towards, all who differed from them in religious beliefs and political methods, should at once be able to conform themselves to an entirely new order of things, or to familiarize themselves with the great questions upon which the great parties naturally divide. Such a thing would be anomalous in human affairs, and it was for this reason that the Commission expressed no opinion upon the sincerity of the sudden change. It may be said that a large majority of the Gentile population of Utah doubted and still doubts it, although many are beginning to feel that the change must come sooner or later, and that reforms never move backward.

The commission is glad to note the interest that is manifested generally in political questions and the growth of sentiment on party lines. It does not believe, however, that the end is reached. Rather it believes that a beginning has been made which augurs well for the future, and hopes that no hasty or unwise legislation may be enacted, which might retard rather than hasten the desired results.

The Commission has been severely criticised by the authorities for asserting that the Church interfered with and directed the politics of its members, and in the general conference of the Church in October, 1891, a series of resolutions were presented and adopted declaring the statement to be false. It may be noticed, however, that the resolutions (which will be set out later in this report) implicitly admit that there has been appearances of such interference and domination in the past, and declares that "there is no foundation or excuse for the statement that church and state are united in Utah, or that the leaders of the Church dictate the members to political matters."

MORMON CHURCH

It is noticeable, too, that the statements of the Commission were based upon a case in the Mormon ecclesiastical court at Provo, in which, as late as January, 1890, Joseph D. Jones was tried and excommunicated upon a charge of having joined the Loyal League of Utah, and because "its principles are in direct opposition to some of the principles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for instance, the principle of celestial marriage and local self-government," and that, while the conference denied the existence of any interference or dictation, it did not, and never has, denied that such trial, conviction and excommunication occurred just as the Commission stated it.

The official declaration of the Church referred to, if followed out in practice, is a new departure, and cannot but prove to be another important step in advance.

Prior to the municipal election for Salt Lake City held in February last, the Commission appointed Hon. Elijah Sells, secretary of Utah, as chief registration officer. It also requested Chief Justice Zane to hear and determine objections which might be filed to the right of those registered to vote.

This fact should be sufficient answer to the malicious charge that the Commission takes care that only irresponsible, and sometimes disreputable persons are appointed to perform those duties. No complaints were made to the Commission in regard to the registration, and not a single objection was filed against any one registered as a voter. The judges of election for each poll were appointed from each of the three parties—Republican, Democrat and Liberal.

The result of the election was a victory for the Liberal party, it having a clear majority over the Republican and Democratic parties combined.

As the Liberals had a minority representation in the election machinery at each poll, this fact should set at rest the virulent charges which have been so often made—that, in preceding elections, it had only succeeded through fraudulent practices.

Here follows a list of the municipal elections held this year.

CHANGE IN ELECTION LAWS.

In March last, the Legislative Assembly of Utah, by law duly approved by the governor, provided that on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1892, and biennially thereafter, a general election for Territorial, county and precinct officers shall be held, the term of the officers so elected to begin on the first day of January following, and continue for two years, except in the case of County Collectors, whose terms are to begin on the last day of June.

Also, that on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1892, an election shall be held in each city, town, village and school district (except in such cities as shall have held an election in 1892 prior to May 31st), for all elective municipal officers, the term of the officers so elected to begin January 1st, 1893, and continue one year, the terms of present incumbents to end at the same time. That on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1893, and biennially thereafter, in each city, town, village and school district, an election shall be held to fill all elective offices therein, the officers so elected to hold their offices for two years from the first of January following.

Also, that an election for members of the Legislative Assembly be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1893, and biennially thereafter.

Henceforth, the Territorial, county and precinct elections have been held in August, and the municipal at times ranging through nearly every month in the year. By the new enactment,

ALL ARE TO BE HELD upon the same date, the Territorial, county and precinct elections occurring in the even numbered years, and the Legislative and municipal in the odd numbered years.

To correspond with this change of holding elections, the registration laws were also changed, so that the registration commences now on the first Monday of August of each year, throughout the Territory, to be completed before the first Monday in September.

Omissions may be corrected during the week commencing on the last Monday of September, and the completed lists and affidavits are to be delivered to the clerk of the County court on or before the second Monday in October. The filing and hearing of objections to the right to vote is left as before.

To comply with the law will require at least two and perhaps more sessions of the Commission in each year, only the long winter sessions being rendered unnecessary.

Complaint was made before the Congressional committee that after the Commission had suggested changes in the registration law, the legislature enacted a law to remedy the evils, which was approved by the Commission and still was vetoed by the governor.

This is an incorrect statement. The Commission has not "approved" such an enactment. It has no authority so to do. Advice has more than once been asked of individual members of the commission upon such proposed legislation, and their opinions as to the propriety of the proposed reforms have been freely and frankly expressed, but the acts when passed have always contained features which could not be endorsed by the Commission.

The act in question contained features and provisions which seemed objectionable to the governor, who alone has the power of approval or veto, and it failed to receive his approval. With his reasons of failing to approve the act the Commission has nothing to do, but is satisfied that the Governor not only acted conscientiously in the matter, and for what he deemed to be the best interests of the people of the Territory, but that he was right in withholding his approval.

POLYGAMY.

Prior to the last report of the Commission the President of the Mormon Church had issued a manifesto on the subject of polygamy which was claimed by the authorities to have the force and effects of abolishing that institution. But because the Commission pointed out the fact that it was merely an advice to suspend the operation of what the Church authorities still claimed was a divine law, and presented facts which tended at least to show that polygamy and its kindred offenses were still to some extent being practiced, it found itself at once the subject of the most violent denunciations as retailers of falsehoods.

The report was published in but one of the Salt Lake papers on the 6th of October, 1891, its first appearance in print in Utah. On that day the General Conference of the Church was in session, and a committee was appointed and on the same day presented the following preamble and resolutions:

These resolutions have already been published.

If by these resolutions and declarations they mean to say that the Commission states falsely that it has such information, the reports are on file in the archives of the Commission. If they mean that these sworn officers of the government report falsely, it may be answered that these officers live in and are familiar with the precincts, make the house-to-house canvass for registration, and cannot possibly have an interest in reporting anything but the facts, and that common rumor abundantly corroborates their reports.

Denials and denunciations prove nothing. Both have been resorted to by the Church authorities for many years. They denied the existence of polygamy when it did exist, and only ceased to deny when it could no longer be hidden.

The Utah Commission has, and can have, nothing to gain by inventing and narrating falsehoods, or perverting the truth. It aims to "set naught down in malice, and naught extenuate."

How long was it before the formulation of the offending report that Professor Talmage, principal of the Latter-day Saints' College, a school where both sexes are taught, testified under oath in the United States district court at Salt Lake as follows:

"We teach that we have a right to obey all the revelations of God. I believe that the revelation in regard to plural marriages is from God, and believe that if the Constitution was properly administered, the law against plural marriage would never have been passed. I think Congress overstepped his authority in passing that law. . . . We teach pupils that the revelation in regard to celestial marriage is from God, and that it is their duty to obey. All plural marriages are celestial, but all celestial marriages are not plural."

The revelation on plural marriage has not been expunged from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, nor have the countless arguments in its favor been withdrawn from the hands of the people or their teachers. What avails it then to say the doctrine is not taught? Since the report of 1891 was made some of the highest authorities in the Mormon Church have been called upon to testify in the United States District Court in what is known as "the Church Eminent Cases."

Here is given the testimony of Presidents Woodruff, Cannon and Smith and Apostle Lorenzo Snow before the Master in Chancery in the Church cases.

The foregoing is not a statement made by the Commission. It is the sworn statement of the beliefs and teachings of the highest dignitaries of the Mormon Church two weeks after they placed before the General Conference of their Church and had unanimously adopted their denunciation of the Utah Commission as liars, because it said in its report that they believed and taught that doctrine.

It is the testimony of the three dignitaries who affixed their names to the "Declaration of the First Presidency," saying of the Commission's report: "It is utterly without foundation in truth."

It may be added that this Joseph F. Smith who spoke so certainly upon this subject had in the Territory for nearly eight years until the meeting of that conference. During that time he had been a fugitive from justice, in hiding on "the underground," evading the officers of the law, and upon his full confession that he had been guilty of the practice of this very doctrine, and his earnest appeal for clemency, and solemn promise to obey the law in the future, had just received the pardon from the Executive which permitted him to be present and attack and denounce as falsifiers representatives of the government who had been on the ground from six to eight months of every year of the eight years during which he was a fugitive and in hiding in other parts of the world.

NOT BEEN VISIBLE

The Utah Commission would call attention to the fact, which it esteems no cause for regret, but rather something to be gratified with, that in all three of the public and official declarations of the church which marks its change of front as to the heretofore cardinal doctrine of its creed, the acts of the Commission are given as the reason for their promulgation. The Commission considers this fact stronger evidence than it could elsewhere adduce to prove that the work it was called upon to perform has been well and thoroughly done.

The Commission credits the church with all that can reasonably be claimed for it from the official declarations it has promulgated.

Much credit has been assumed by the Mormon Church and people for their change of front on the subject of polygamy and their asserted willing submission and obedience to the laws of the general government, and profound reverence for the rulings of the courts of the country. In this connection it may not be unprofitable to recall certain facts which may have had a potent influence in producing that change of front.

It is a matter of history that by reason of their peculiar practices they were DRIVEN FROM OHIO, MISSOURI AND ILLINOIS.

When they migrated to the mountains they were left to themselves from 1847 to 1862, and there openly established and practiced polygamy, not then made a crime by statute, but a practice in violation of the common law of the country, and of the sentiment of the civilized world. In 1862 the practice came under the ban of the penal laws of the nation, by the enactment of what is known as the Poland law, but these people openly defied and set that law at naught, and the courts for twenty years found it impossible to enforce it or to punish for its violation, by reason of the united action of the people in preventing the execution of the laws and process of the courts.

The country demanded

MORE STRINGENT LAWS,

and the Edmunds law was passed in 1882, giving the courts more power, adding the penalty of disfranchisement, and authorizing the appointment of the Utah Commission, whose powers are limited to the provisions of one small section of the law. The courts were busy, and became able to make their power felt, and the work of the Commission was progressing, but both were always confronted with the united and determined opposition of the Mormon people acting under shrewd and able leaders. The people of the country were impatient at the slow progress made, and further legislation was had in what is known as the Edmunds-Tucker law of 1887, which strengthened some of the weak points of the former law.

The opposition was still active, united and determined. Hundreds and perhaps thousands were convicted and went to the penitentiary as convicts rather than submit to the law. Thousands submitted to be deprived of citizenship rather than give up this so-called "divine principle" and sacred right. No spirit of inspiration came upon the minds of their spiritual advisers, to suspend the operation of the practice which was causing all this suffering. No signs of submission to the laws of the land, no reverence for the authority of the government were visible, but in all Utah those laws were denounced as wicked and unconstitutional and their enforcement as persecutions.

At last, in the adjoining Territory of IDAHO, the legislature passed a measure practically disfranchising all persons who gave adhesion to the Mormon Church. Later, the same, or a similar provision was incorporated into the Constitution under which Idaho was admitted into the Union as a State.

Cases were litigated under one or both of these provisions of disfranchisement, which in due course of time reached the Supreme Court of the United States, where the acts of disfranchisement were held to be valid, and not in conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Very soon after this decision of the Supreme court bills were simultaneously introduced in Congress, one in the Senate by Senator Cullom of Illinois, and the other in the House by Representative Struble of Iowa, embodying similar provisions for the disfranchisement of all adhering to such ideas and teachings in any of the Territories of the United States. These bills were considered respectively by the committees on Territories of both houses, and each reported on favorably, and their passage recommended.

Shortly after these reports were made, and when the passage of such a measure was reduced almost to an absolute certainty, the divine impulse began to stir the heart of the First Presidency of the Church, with the result that "inspiration" brought forth the celebrated of September, 1890, wherein this Commission was made the scapegoat for the denunciation of the Church hierarchy, the better to conceal their bitterness towards the government.

MANIFESTO

That agency of the government which had been most active, persistent and instrumental in exposing the iniquities of its practices, and invoking the powers of the government for their suppression, was selected as the butt for the concentrated wrath of the Church, rather than the government which had created the agency.

Delegate Calne said in Congress that "a great deal of credit had been claimed for the Utah Commission for the wonderful service it had rendered the country by the suppression of polygamy in Utah. Let me ask what these commissioners have done in that regard?"

"I fail to see wherein the Commission can claim any credit for the suppression of polygamy."

Perhaps others can read history to better advantage than he. For thirty-five years polygamy flourished in Utah, and for twenty years of that time in defiance of the penal laws of the land.

THE COMMISSION

was organized, and in eight years time the steady and inflexible enforcement of the laws, aided, perhaps, by fear of further disfranchisement, compelled the authorities of the Church to abandon their cherished doctrine and openly declare their willingness to obey the laws, and the Utah Commission was the only agency referred to as the reason for leaving the "inspired" manifesto.

Where, before, in the history of the world has been recorded any instance of a powerful church with numerous and devoted followers, giving up an article of faith in their creed, given to them, as they aver, and many doubtless believe, by a direct revelation and as a command of God, upon the advice simply of the head of the church, with perfect unanimity and without even a manifestation of discontent?

Such is the marvelous condition of this important change. It is said by the Church organ that the manifesto when read to the conference was adopted by one unanimous uplifting of hands in the Tabernacle. So far as can be seen by those living among these people the only visible manifestation of discontent or of belief or unbelief in the Divine inspiration of the manifesto, is seen in the continuation of the practice by members of the Church in defiance of law and of the manifesto, as shown by the frequent arrests, indictments and convictions for polygamous offences.

It would seem to clearly demonstrate that the charge made against the Church, that it seeks and exercises temporal as well as spiritual power and through dominates its members and willingly or unwillingly compels compliance with the will of those who govern the Church is well grounded.

CHURCH INFLUENCE,

That the Church has taken this step only a few months since, while still claiming the doctrine a "Divine command," would seem to be no reason why the government should at once withdraw all the safeguards it has confronted and surround these people with, or deliver over to them the sole and complete political power of the Territory. "Time proves all things."

It should not be forgotten that at one time the military power of the Nation, and for thirty years the most restrictive legislation and its vigorous enforcement has been required to bring about this very condition they claim now to exist. Every step has been gained over an intense and united opposition led by those same men who are so free to denounce others, and so loud in their self praise.

There seems to be a misapprehension in some quarters as to the

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION,

and even Congressmen appear to think it is charged with the enforcement of penal laws against polygamy, and it was lately said on the floor of the House that no convictions had resulted from its work.

The Commission is not a court to prosecute cases of polygamy. It cannot compel witnesses, and might fail to establish the absolute verity of any case. Its functions are confined to the electoral provisions of the law.

That it has reports which indicate that polygamy is not wholly abandoned is the truth. Is it to be wondered at that a people which has been taught for many years that polygamy is a Divine principle, that the principle is still divine, and merely suspended by an advisory proclamation, should have some members who will prefer the "divine command," which is in accord with their lustful proclivities, rather than comply with the advice which would cut off the source of their highest felicity, not only in this life, but in the kingdom their faith teaches them awaits the devotee who lives up to the "divine command" which enjoins the practice of polygamy?

Is it all a matter of surprise that, in a Territory of many thousands of square miles, whose settlements are in valleys isolated from each other, and many of which are inhabited wholly by Mormons, who, whether polygamists or not, are all firm believers in this tenet of their Church faith, and will neither betray their neighbors nor bear witness against them, but on the contrary, will use every effort to conceal the facts, it is supremely difficult to obtain absolute proof of facts which the whole community may believe exist?

COMMON REPUTE

throughout the Territory, would bring conviction to most minds, but without giving weight to that, the Commission has information which compels it to believe that the practice of polygamy has not yet wholly ceased.

A distinguished Judge of the United States District Court for Utah, making a statement in favor of the claimants for statehood or home rule, before the House committee last February, instanced the case of a young man who had married as his plural wife a young woman whose father did not know of the marriage until it was found that his daughter was pregnant with child, which child was born as late as last July." With such secrecy surrounding such marriages, it is difficult to understand why the Commission is expected to furnish direct, formal and conclusive proof of the cases it reports. That the Church has formally spoken against the further solemnization of such marriages; that a large number of its members apparently accept it as final, and profess a willingness to obey the law, is gratifying, and a fact the Commission is glad to record.

But that polygamy still exists and that there are many cases constantly coming to the public knowledge of association between polygamists and the plural wives they had professed to have put away, is a fact that in the face of the statistics presented, can hardly be converted. The cases of arrest for unlawful cohabitation have of late been very numerous, and men of prominence in the church are found among the number.

Possibly this is due to the weakness common to the majority of mankind, but whatever the cause, the fact remains.

Much stress was laid in the statements before the Congressional Committee upon the fact that have lately been had, as if that finally disposed of the question.

NO CONVICTIONS FOR POLYGAMY

The convictions for unlawful cohabitation, which means living in polygamy, are numerous, and would doubtless be more numerous were it not for the fact that it is so difficult to convict. Not all the acquittals had upon the ground of innocence, but in many cases because the plural wife and the evidence is spirited away, or can not be produced in court.

The Commission has reported fifteen male persons who are believed to have entered into polygamous marriages during the past year, and of more than three hundred persons who are known or believed to be now living in polygamous relations. Some of these are stated to be high dignitaries in the Church, and none are believed to have lost standing in the Church by reason of their polygamous practices.

Cases that have come to the judicial knowledge of the United States court since last report.

COURTS.	Total.	Formation.	Adultery.
First District, Provo.....	128	38	3
First District, Ogden.....	128	38	3
Second District, Beaver.....	14	3	1
Third District, Salt Lake City.....	14	3	1
Total.....	66	57	116

INDICTMENTS FOUND.

Court.	Total.	Formation.	Adultery.
First District, Provo.....	9	37	4
First District, Ogden.....	16	7	1
Second District, Beaver.....	12	9	1
Third District, Salt Lake City.....	12	9	1
Total.....	49	62	6

CONVICTIONS.

Court.	Total.	Formation.	Adultery.
First District, Provo.....	18	17	1
First District, Ogden.....	18	17	1
Second District, Beaver.....	18	17	1
Third District, Salt Lake City.....	18	17	1
Total.....	72	68	4

ACQUITTALS.

Court.	Total.	Formation.	Adultery.	Polygamy and Bigamy.
First District, Provo.....	57	17	1	1
First District, Ogden.....	40	17	1	1
Second District, Beaver.....	11	9	1	1
Third District, Salt Lake City.....	11	9	1	1
Total.....	119	52	4	4

Cases involving sexual offenses by the United States Commissioners:

Total.	Formation.	Adultery.	Polygamy and Bigamy.
Complaints.....	1179	1179	1179
Held to Answer.....	1179	1179	1179
Dismissed.....	1179	1179	1179
Total.....	1179	1179	1179

ATTACKS UPON THE COMMISSION.

During the HEARING BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES of the Senate and House of Representtatives last winter, the Commission were violently assailed, and without opportunity for defense, as no resolution of Congress required an investigation of the acts of the Commission, nor was it invited to appear and answer to the attacks made upon it. In fact, when it addressed a respectfully worded communication, enclosing marked copies of its official reports for the years 1889 and 1890, and asked that the marked portions be brought to the attention of the committee and be made a part of its record, as the answer of the Commission to the wholesale charges which were being made before them, and published to the world, no attention was paid to the request, so far as the record shows.

The marked portions of these reports contain what the Commission deem a complete answer to and refutation of many of the stale and unfounded slanders then being rehearsed before the congressional committee, and need not be repeated here, but a few points thus met are deemed proper to be noticed.

In the memorial of the Utah Legislature to Congress is found the following:

The most vicious interference with the vestige remaining of four local liberties in the maintenance and action of the Utah Commission, who, in the appointment of registration officers, have often selected corrupt and irresponsible persons. These have filled the registration lists with fictitious names and resorted to other devices by which repeating and other brands might be successfully perpetrated at elections.

In the statement of Mr. C. C. Richards before the Senate committee, he said:

In the selection of the deputy registrar for each precinct, care is taken in all the important precincts that an irresponsible, and in many instances, disreputable electors are chosen. Men who would as soon be engaged in fraudulently striking off and adding names to the list of voters as to be employed in some honorable pursuit, are selected to hear and determine objections to the rights of electors to vote. The judges of election are appointed the same way, and to a considerable extent from the same class of people.

[It may be noted that this gentleman has frequently been appointed by the Commission as judge of election. He should know of what he speaks.]

The same gentleman appeared before the House committee and elaborated his charges to a much greater extent than before the committee of the Senate. In one case he becomes specific, and states:

We have often called the attention of the Commissioners to such appointments and protested against them, but to no purpose; they continue the creatures in power. For some time the deputy registrar for the precinct in which I lived in Ogden has been a man who for many years has had a public and notorious reputation of being a gambler, saloon man, and proprietor of low dives. He makes up the list of voters, keeps the affidavits for registration and hears all objections to the right to vote of persons registered. That ward is the key to the political situation locally, as the hotels, boarding-houses, saloons and dives are all in that ward. The opportunities for crime are there, and are utilized. Do you suppose that the Commission are ignorant of the fact? Certainly the people of Ogden do not think they are.

Mr. Franklin S. Richards (a brother of the last named) was more conservative in his statement before the Senate Committee, but stated as to appointments made by the Commission that they were:

Men who were irresponsible, who could not be made to respond in damages for anything that they might do, and in some instances corrupt men. That is true. * * * I say that class of men has been selected, and in some cases repeatedly.

[After protest? A.—Yes, sir, after protest, I know whereof I speak in this matter. * * * The Commission have appointed men known to be professional gamblers, without any pecuniary responsibility, and whose word would scarcely be taken on oath.

These are

CHARGES OF A VERY SERIOUS NATURE, and were there any truth in them, the Commission would freely admit that its duties had not been well performed. Their weakness lies in their absolute falsity.

It is true that in some instances complaints have been made to the Commission of the acts of its appointees. It is not true that these complaints or protests have been unheeded. In every instance investigation has been promptly made, and if wrong was found, it has been righted as far as the power of the Commission could go. In many instances complaints were, on investigation, found to be unwarranted by the facts. In one notable instance the vice-chairman and secretary of the People's or Mormon party, to which both Messrs. Richard belonged, preferred charges in writing which were of so serious character that the chairman called the Commission to meet in special session in Salt Lake City to investigate them. This was in December, 1889. The Commission sat for nine days hearing evidence upon the charges preferred, and came to the unanimous conclusion that they were

UNFOUNDED AND FRIVOLOUS.

A full report of the charges, hearing and finding was made in the report of the Commission to the Secretary of the Interior for 1890. It is not true that the Commission has ever selected "a corrupt man," a "known gambler" or a "disreputable character" for registration or election officer knowingly, and if by chance such a person has been appointed, it has not yet been brought to the knowledge of the Commission.

The Commission has, since its organization, acted uniformly upon the rule of selecting for county registrar, one of the best and most intelligent of the citizens of the county who would accept the position. He has always been called upon to nominate for deputy registrars, a competent and reputable elector of the precinct to be registered, and the appointments have generally been appointed on the county registrar's recommendation. The exception has been, when some objection has been made to the person thus recommended, in which case investigation has always been made, and some other person appointed, if the objection proved to be well founded.

Referring to the specific charge of Mr. C. C. Richards that in his precinct in Ogden, "the registrar for many years has had a public and notorious reputation of being a gambler, saloon man, and proprietor of low dives," and his insinuation that the Commission was not ignorant of the fact, the Commission has to say, that immediately upon the publication of Mr. Richards' statement made before the House committee, the chairman and another member of the Commission proceeded to Ogden and made

INVESTIGATION INTO THE FACTS.

They found that the registration officer of the precinct (Second) in which Mr. Richards lived, was one William Tudor. That he had no such reputation as Mr. Richards attributed to him, was not known as a gambler, a saloon man, or proprietor of low dives. That his registration work had always been well done, that no complaints had ever been made to the Commission in regard to him, or the performance of his duties, and that none of the Ogden people of whom they inquired had ever heard of the charges until made by Mr. Richards before the Congressional Committee. The preceding municipal election in Ogden had a "Citizens' or Reform party" in the field, which was successful in obtaining control of the city government, and Mr. C. C. Richards was an active supporter of the candidates of this party. When it got control of the city government it bore testimony to the good character of Mr. Tudor by appointing him to a responsible fiduciary position under the city government—that of which, it is believed, he still holds. He has again, in August, 1892, been strongly recommended to the Commission for the position of registrar of his precinct. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Richards was misinformed when he made the statement he did before the congressional committee. Another charge of a serious nature is contained in the statement of one before the same committee. He said:

DOG TAX COLLECTOR,

H. W. SMITH

For every commission issued to any officer appointed in the Territory, the secretary gets the money in the first instance, but who gets it afterwards I do not know. The report of the Utah Commission shows that 744 of these officers were commissioned in 1891. That was the year in which but few officers were elected. During the year 1892 (the gentlemen who are with me and myself have discussed the matter), it is estimated that 1800 additional officers would be commissioned. Take it for the two years and something like 2500 officers would be commissioned and the fees for their commissions would be $12,500, a right comfortable little sum, more than any this committee gets. And that money is fished out of the pockets of the people without authority of law.

This statement refers directly to registration and election officers appointed by the Utah Commission, and he says "that was the year when but few officers were elected."

Had Mr. Smith desired to state the truth, he could easily have learned that not a cent had ever been charged to or paid by any officer appointed by the Utah Commission for issuing commissions to such officers. Further, that there is but one class of officers who are by law charged a fee of $5 for their commissions, and they are Commissioners of Deeds for Utah in other States, and that the only other officers to whom is charged a small fee for commissions are those officers who, by the Territorial laws, are required to be commissioned by the Governor. With these officers the Utah Commission has nothing to do, except such as are elective officers, and these receive their certificates of election from the Commission without charge or fee. Much was said in those Congressional hearings in regard to the members being of the Territory, who only went there "once a year" about two weeks before the election, and sometimes not that early," and packed up and went away, "leaving sometimes while the votes were being counted."

NON-RESIDENTS

It has seemed to be the policy of the government to appoint non-residents of Utah upon the Commission, probably upon the theory that such a Board would be less imbued with the local prejudices than one formed from the bitterly warring factions of Utah, and that disposes of the first position of the complaint. As to the time spent by the Commission in the performance of its duties, the Commission can hardly conceive how gentlemen like ex-Governor West and ex-Territorial Judge Judd could be induced to make such unfounded statements. At the same time they were making their statements before the congressional committee, and before they left Salt Lake to go to Washington, this Commission was in session in the City of Salt Lake—a session commencing on the 11th of January, 1892, and ending March 12, 1892, a period of sixty-one days. It assembled a month before the election and continued in daily session until after the votes were counted and certified. During the preceding year it held four sessions of 114 days. The average time spent in the performance of its duties annually since the organization of the Commission in 1885, has been about six and one-third months, and some years more than eight months. The sessions have never been held less than three times each year, and generally four times.

Here is inserted a table of the

TRAVELS AND SESSIONS

of the Commission showing:

Total number of days 2008, or 5 1/2 years. Average time each year, 61-3 months, with two sessions necessary to complete the work of this year.

This showing exhibits as much time spent in the performance of its duties as is spent by members of Congress in theirs, if not more; and yet the Commission was attacked on this score by the honorable chairman of the House committee on Territories in a speech delivered in the House on the 8th of July last. He seems to have fallen into the error of taking as true, statements such as have been quoted above. The Congressional Record reports him as saying:

"These gentlemen who have composed this Commission during the last ten years have found their duties so congenial, have found a junketing trip to Salt Lake City once a year so pleasant that they have held on with death-like tenacity year after year, and have on an appropriation bill some years since had their salaries increased from $3000 to $5000 per annum, and their contingent expenditures have more than equaled the sum paid them as salary."

Sir, the members of this Commission are paid $800 per annum and traveling expenses, for going once each year to Utah, where they spend two or three months on a tour of recreation and pleasure. The remainder of the time they are at liberty to spend at their homes in the several States where they reside attending to their private business affairs.

Again, on the 14th day of July, he said: "We pay to five men $2000 per year and contingent expenses amounting to $10,000 per annum to go to Utah once in twelve months."

It is presumed the honorable gentleman collected his supposed facts from the statements made before his committee, but, unfortunately, these statements contained a vast amount of misinformation and very little that can be recognized as truth.

The Commission was authorized by act of Congress, approved March 22, 1882, and the members' salaries were fixed by that act at $3000 per annum. Before appointing the Commission President Arthur requested Congress to increase the salaries to $5000 on the ground that he could procure a better class of men to serve than at the low rate of compensation fixed. Congress complied with his request before any appointments were made, so it is not true, as charged, that the Commission, by lobbying, had their salaries increased upon an appropriation bill.

It is regretted that the honorable gentleman was misled by the misstatements and perversions of fact contained in the statements made before his committee.

That he had opportunity to hear the other side of the question, and especially to learn that the "junketing trip once a year" was a myth of the imagination, is evidenced by the following letter sent to him during the time the statements were being made and before the hearings were concluded.

A letter from Commissioner Robertson is annexed to the above:

THE DELEGATE FROM UTAH,

in a speech delivered in Congress July 14th, also attacked the Commission, and, in support of his statements, gives what purports to be letters from two prominent "Gentlemen," "one of whom was formerly a member on this floor, and who has lived in Utah over twenty years," and "the other went there some years ago as a Federal Judge." He neither gives their names, nor does he state which of the two is the author of the statement in regard to the Utah Commission:

This communication has appeared in the Delegate's speech.

The statements contained in this anonymous letter are without semblance of truth, and it is difficult to believe that the speaker who presented it was unaware of their untruthful and venomous character.

It is not true that the Commission "has insisted upon exercising legislative, judicial, and executive powers."

On the contrary, nearly every annual report of the Commission has pointed out the want of power to enforce its rulings, and has suggested the propriety of having conferred upon it the powers it was expected and constantly asked to exercise.

It is not true that "by the false and scan-alous representation and lobbying of its members, they have induced Congress to fasten the Commission upon the Territory."

It is not true that "they have persistently maligned the people of Utah."

The reports of the Commission are public documents, and may be left to speak for themselves upon this point.

It is not true that "they have refused to recognize the formation of National parties," or "that they declines to appoint any judge of election from either the Democratic or Republican parties after being requested so to do."

On the contrary, at the only general election held in Utah since the disbanding of the People's party, and when the Republican and Democratic parties made their first appearance and cast their first vote, a representation was awarded both parties on the boards of election, in the following manner: Two judges were appointed from the Liberal party at each poll (except where none but Mormons resided) and the third judge was chosen alternately, as far as practicable, from the Republican and Democratic parties. In the Mormon precincts all the judges of election were professedly Republican and Democratic.

This rule of selection was adopted because there had theretofore been no Republican or Democratic parties holding elections in Utah. Their birth was in expectancy, and it was concluded not to recognize fully, parties which had not yet cast a vote to give evidence of their existence. The only election of importance held since then, was the municipal election held for Salt Lake City in February last. For that election the Commission notified the chairman of each party organization, Democratic, Republican and Liberal, to furnish it with names of proper persons to act as judges of election at the several polling places, and from lists furnished in response of such notice, appointed a judge of election from each of the three parties for each polling place in the city. The result was, that whenever a question arose at the polls, it was invariably decided by the Democratic and Republican judges combining to decide against the Liberal.

It was also noticeable that there was fully as much, if not more, complaints of

UNFAIR METHODS

in this election as ever before.

Mr. Caine, when he made public the letter quoted from, knew these facts as well as any one living in Utah. When he said in the same speech, that "the polygamists of Utah, after the passage of the Edmunds law, neither attempted to register or vote," he knew that large numbers of them did attempt to register, and were only prevented from so doing by the registration officers appointed by and acting under the instructions of the Commission. He knew that out of that number ten cases were selected as representing all the different phases and characteristics of the questions which might be raised for adjudication; that ten test suits for damages were brought against the members of the Commission for refusing to allow them to register and vote, and that all these cases were appealed by the claimants of the right to register, from the decision of the Territorial courts to the highest judicial tribunal of the Nation, where they were decided against them, and the refusal to register them sustained. See case of Murphy vs. Ramsey et al., U. S. Reports, pp. 15-44.

It is also a fact that at every election held in Utah since the passage of the Edmunds law, numerous persons barred by that law for polygamous and kindred sexual offenses have appeared before the Commission, often bringing attorneys and others to advocate their claims, and demanded the right to register and vote.

The Commission has been constantly subjected to these hostile assaults from its organization to the present time.

The act of Congress known as the "EDMUNDS LAW," which provided for its organization, was passed, not hastily, but when the people of the country were in deadly earnest. The Commission was provided for as one of the instruments of government to carry out a purpose. The purpose was to compel an unwilling people to obey the laws of the land. To the courts and their officers was assigned the duty of administering the penal portions of the law. To the Commission was assigned the duty of administering that portion of the law relating to electoral privileges, and to put an end to the alleged abuse of power as between Mormon and Gentile people of the Territory. Naturally those most affected by those laws, but whose acts had rendered their enactment and enforcement necessary, chafed under their enforcement by the Commission, and they have kept up a constant warfare against it from the beginning until now. Nearly every session of Congress for many years has seen the active partisans of the People's or Mormon party, presenting themselves before the committees on Territories, and there inveighing against the government officials of the Territory, collectively and individually. They have repeated the same story of

ALLEGED WRONGS

with all the variations that ingenious minds could devise, but with wearing iteration and reiteration, until volume upon volume of committee reports have been filled by them with the same kind of charges against all the government officers in Utah, and the Commission has borne in all these years its full share of denunciations, without appearing before any of the committees or being invited so to do. The attacks of last winter are from the same partisan sources, and the same attacking force, aided by a few allies who have lately joined them. The animus of the attacks and the superabundant and conspicuous lack of the element of truth remain as before.

The Commission feels free to assert that whatever cause for complaint in regard to registration and the conduct of elections may exist, arises wholly from the harsh and cumbersome laws enacted by Mormon Legislatures in the past, and not in the acts of the Commission in construing and following them, as it is required by the law of Congress to do. Those laws were passed in 1878, prior to the provision for a Commission, and require the registration officers to make a canvass from house to house, taking the old registration lists as a basis. No authority is given either to make new registration lists or to purge the old ones, except under the narrow limits of the following section of the statute (Section 240, Revised Statutes, Utah, 1888).

So high an authority as Ex-Judge Judd asserted positively to the Senate committee that the laws "provided for PURGING THE REGISTRATION LIST," and that "it had not been done." As the foregoing is the only law upon the subject, it would seem that lawyers might honestly differ from the learned judge in the opinion so emphatically expressed, and still retain their reputation as lawyers. In fact, the most serious complaints which have been made to the Commission have had their origin in this statute.

In 1889 leading members of the People's or Mormon party, among whom were George Q. Cannon, F. S. Richards and John T. Caine, appeared before the Commission demanding a construction of the statute, and instructions to the registrars of Salt Lake City and county, who, they alleged, were threatening to strike from the lists the names of all persons not found in the "house to house canvass." It was argued strenuously that the law required the registrar to find from "careful inquiry" that the person registered had "died, removed" or was "otherwise disqualified" before they could purge the list of the name. It was represented that great injury would be done their people if the opposite course were to be pursued, as many of their voters were absent on church missions, on ranches temporarily or engaged in temporary work at a distance.

The Commission considered their construction to be the correct one and so instructed the registrars.

A few months later the same persons, accompanied with C. C. Richards of Ogden, came before the Commission, representing that the Ogden lists were loaded down with names of persons who could not be found and who they believed had died or removed, and they feared frauds were intended by the Liberal party in voting men upon their names. They asked instructions to the Ogden registrars to strike off the names of all who could not be found. Their attention was called to the opposite instructions they had asked and obtained for Salt Lake, and the request was refused.

Much was said in the Congressional inquiry last winter in regard to attempts to the names of Mormons unjustly, and the Commission was blamed for the attempt. Such a thing is only possible under the provision of the law of 1878, which authorized objections to be filed shortly prior to the election and summarily decided.

STRIKE FROM THE LISTS

It several times came to the knowledge of the Commission that an improper use was intended to be made of this provision of the law, but in each case the Commission promptly and summarily suppressed it as soon as its attention was called to it.

The last instance was prior to the election of 1890. The Commission had appointed Judge Heed to hear objections to voters in several precincts of Box Elder county, including Brigham City. It was informed that objections had been filed before him to the names of nearly three hundred of the members of the Mormon party and that they were intended to be stricken off on evidence that they were Mormons merely, the ground for such action to be that a Mormon was necessarily an aider and abettor of polygamy.

The Commission at once dispatched two of its members to the scene with power to act summarily in the removal and substitution of registration and election officers and intended. It was found that it was intended to strike off the names, and such measures were promptly taken as to wholly prevent it. It may be mentioned here that Mr. Heed stated to the members of the Commission present at the conference that he had been advised to do it and that such action would be legal, by "Kentucky" Smith.

SUPPRESSING THE WRONG

The next morning one of the Commission met Mr. Smith in the car going to Ogden, and told him that Judge Heed named him as his advisor as to the propriety and legality of the proposed "purging" of the lists, and he did not deny having given the advice.

The gentleman spoken of as "Kentucky" Smith is a lawyer of prominence in Ogden, was then an active Liberal in politics, was the author of the Idaho test oath, acted as the attorney for those who favored disfranchisement of Mormons, made many arguments in its favor, was strongly anti-Mormon in his acts and words, and is the same H. W. Smith who made the attack upon the Commission before the committees on Territories heretofore noticed.

The Commission would not have noticed so extensively these statements were it not for the fact that they were made before committees of Congress, and have been published to the world in public documents and through the columns of the press, without any opportunity being afforded the Commission to meet them.

Former reports of the Commission fully refute many of the and restated before the committee on Territories at the last session of Congress, and they will remain further unnoticed.

CHARGES REVAMPED.

No matter how often refuted, they appear again and again, perhaps upon the assumption that by frequent repetition they will come to be believed. There seems to be some grounds for this assumption, as, after years of iteration, they have found believers among those who have not stopped to investigate whether the statements so boldly made are true or false.

If the enforcement of the laws in Utah by the courts and by the Commission has brought about a condition of affairs under which it can be claimed that all now are ready and willing to obey the law, and that there is no longer a necessity for the continuance of the Commission, the conclusion must be that its work has been well done. The Commission would be content with that verdict. It merely suggests that the law-making power of the government should be sure that such a state of affairs really exists before complying with the demands of those who have constantly opposed the execution of those laws for many years; the hereditary enemies of the Commission and opponents of its work.

AMNESTY RECOMMENDED.

On the 18th of December last, the Church authorities petitioned the President for a general amnesty for the Mormon people. In the opinion of the Commission it is the most important of the documents the Church has issued and contains the most direct and positive statements of its desires and promises for the future, which has yet come from that source. It is signed by the First President of the Church and the Twelve Apostles, and pledges in the most solemn manner their "faith and honor for the future."

The petition for amnesty has been published and need not be here repeated.

Without assenting to all the assertions of this appeal, the Commission would be glad if the relief prayed for could be granted under proper conditions as to the future observance of the pledges so solemnly made.

It does so because it believes these people have been led into the practices and rebellion confessed by their leaders and teachers, and because much of the hardship resulting from the enforcement of the penal laws naturally falls upon those misled rather than upon the rich and powerful leaders who have misled them; and, more than all, because it believes in mercy and in putting these people upon their honor, giving them an opportunity to prove that the reliance of the government upon their pledged faith and honor is not misplaced. In so doing it does not recommend, nor does it understand that such an act of grace to the petitioners would accomplish the turning over at once to the pardoned people the sole and absolute control of the machinery of government in Utah, either through Statehood or so-called home rule.

CONCLUSION.

That Utah is advancing on the plane of progress and prosperity should satisfy all who are interested in its welfare.

That it is making rapid strides in that direction the Commission freely admits and is glad to report.

As the Commission is informed that the Governor will report the statistics showing the material advance of the Territory, the same will be omitted from this report.

Respectfully submitted,

G. L. GODFREY,
R. S. ROBINSON,
A. B. WILLIAMS,
ALVIN SAUNDERS.

THE CHOLERA.

QUARANTINE, Sept. 21.—Dr. Jenkins ordered back to Lower Quarantine this afternoon the Allen line steamer the "State of Nevada" on account of the recent death of a stoker after her arrival in dock. The "City of Paris" at five p.m. was allowed to proceed to the dock.

CAMP LOW, Sept. 21.—Perfect confidence was restored among detained passengers by the announcement that no new cases or suspicious cases have been found in the last twenty-four hours. The sick in the hospital are all in a fair way to recovery except an unknown infant whose mother and two little sisters died on the "Rugia" while at sea. Through neglect of the ship's steward, and stewardess, it is reported dying from the effects of absolute starvation. This has given rise to very severe strictures among the people here, and expressions of the most bitter indignation at the wanton cruelty of the steamship people.

Late this evening Major Huntington, commandant of the Marine Camp, reported the death of Joseph McMahon, a private of the marines, from purpural hemorrhages, a disease of the veins, from which he suffered for a long time.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—The health department received this afternoon from Professor Biggs the result of the bacteriological examinations made in the case of John Knox, a fireman of the steamship "Nevada" and Louis Weinbagen. The report states that both cases were genuine Asiatic cholera.

Another case of suspected cholera was reported to the board of health this afternoon, Patrick Stewart, a boiler maker employed in the Brooklyn navy yard.

A Mrs. Grappelas died tonight. It is thought from cholera. She was seized with vomiting and diarrhoea during the afternoon and at 8 o'clock died.

Action was begun in the United States court today by C. H. Van Rassaer to recover $10,000 damages from the Hamburg-American Packet company. Mr. Van Rassaer was one of the passengers on the "Norman" detained in quarantine. He claims when he was booked for passage the company's agent told him there would be no steerage passengers on board.

HAVRE, Sept. 22.—Four new cases and three deaths of cholera here yesterday.

HAMBURG, Sept. 22.—According to official cholera returns there were 150 new cases and 97 deaths yesterday, including 39 new cases and 28 deaths not included in previous reports. Those figures show that the disease is growing worse.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Up to date there have been six deaths from cholera in this city. The health officers today report that the death of John Car was due to cholera. The "State of Nevada," on which Fireman Knox died of cholera, left her dock this morning and went back to quarantine.

CAMP LOW, Sandy Hook, Sept. 22.—This morning opened with dismal rain. Five persons are this morning suffering with diarrhoea, but it is reported that it is not choleric. All the convalescents are improving.

BABYLON, L. I., Sept. 22.—Dr. Vaught announces that the passengers of the steamer "Wyoming" will be released tomorrow, if all are well.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—The people of Berlin accept the chance of cholera becoming epidemic quietly. A careful watch is kept upon the water supply.

The unceasing vigilance of the sanitary authorities gives the public confidence that an outbreak cannot attain serious proportions. It has been clearly traced that those stricken with the disease here, apart from imported cases, owe their illness to the extremely filthy water of the Spree. The announcement that the river is infected with cholera bacilli set the people on guard.

Extraordinary precautions are being taken at Hamburg and other points regarding river traffic and the use of river water.

QUARANTINE, Sept. 25.—The cholera outlook grows more satisfactory every day. There have been no new cases and not even a suspect since Thursday last. All patients are out of danger and it looks as if the last named of any victim of the disease had been recorded. The "Bohemia" and "Scandia," now at lower quarantine will remain there some time. Their cabin passengers are now aboard the "New Hampshire" and will be released tomorrow. The steerage people on the "Scandia" will be moved to the "New Hampshire" Tuesday and those of the "Bohemia" will subsequently follow them to Hoffman Island. The "Stonington" has been turned into a measureable hospital and about forty people are on board of her. The "Surviv" which arrived this afternoon, will be released tomorrow, having no steerage passengers on board. The "Werra," from Genoa today, was released after a few hours.

The following steamers were released from quarantine today: The "Adriatic," "Augusta Victoria," "Werra," and "State of Nevada." The cabin passengers of the "La Touraine" were released.

HAMBURG, Sept. 25.—There were two fresh cases and twenty-eight deaths yesterday.

PARIS, Sept. 25.—In the city and suburbs yesterday there were forty-five fresh cases of cholera and seventeen deaths. Two deaths were reported yesterday in a steamer twenty-two miles from Calais. In Havre there were seven fresh cases and four deaths.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 26.—"Cholera is over and at present the port of New York is free from disease," was the cheerful report of Dr. Jenkins this afternoon.

For the first time since the "Moravia" arrived, August 30th, there are no cases of cholera in quarantine.

The "Arizona" and "Anchora" were released this afternoon. The "Saele" from Bremen arrived this evening with 323 cabin passengers. No sickness.

The captain reports that Mrs. G. Arneumano, who was accompanied by her daughter, is missing. After a thorough search, the conclusion was reached that she must have thrown herself overboard, especially as she had given her jewelry to another lady to keep for her. She was 60 years of age, and a resident of New York. The cause is a mystery.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—Two new cases of cholera were reported on the steamer "Bohemia" this morning, the first in seven days.

The patients are two Bohemian children, aged seven and eight. The latter has since died. The steerage passengers were to be removed from the vessel yesterday, but rough weather prevented it.

At noon three more cholera patients were removed from the steamer "Bohemia," Carl Gassman and two children. The first cabin passengers of the "Scandia" and "Bohemia" arrived in quarantine at noon on the tug "Everts" of the Hamburg-American line, en route for the company's dock Hoboken. There are 28 from "Scandia" and 10 from "Bohemia."

NOT PAID IN GOLD.

In your issue of Sept. 20th you say: "Trade returns between the United States and Europe from 1843 to 1891, inclusive, show an excess of exports from Europe to this country over exports from here to Europe of $478,000,000. This sum, it is supposed, was paid in gold, but still about $700,000,000 [in gold] remain unaccounted for."

The italics are mine. The statistical abstract of the United States for 1891 shows, pages 54 to 57, inclusive, that in merchandise alone, during the period from 1843 to 1873, the amounts stand:

Excess of imports.....	$1,576,688,256
Excess of exports.....	87,837,144

Gain in merchandise.....$1,488,851,112

In gold alone the amount stands:

Excess of exports.....	$563,007,694
Excess of imports.....	88,230,182

Loss of gold.....$414,776,512

In silver alone, the account stands:

Excess of exports.....	$ 659,478,825
Excess of imports.....	7,598,761

Loss of silver.....$ 62,179,122

Add in loss of gold.....$11,776,512

Total loss of specie.....$1,060,855,034

Gain of merchandise.....$1,488,851,112

Gain in merchandise not paid for in specie.....$ 421,865,082

These statistics show that while prior to 1873 there was a tendency to settle balances of trade in specie, yet they show that tendency was never complete. They show, in brief, that nearly half a billion dollars' worth of merchandise imported into this country in excess of the amount exported was not paid for in specie, or, if paid for in specie, that the pay remained in this country.

At this period, however, the banking and clearing-house system was but partially developed. Let us see what recent years show.

Taking the period from 1874 to 1891, inclusive, our excess of exports of merchandise alone was

Excess of imports.....	$1,739,619,345
Excess of exports.....	56,255,069

Loss of merchandise.....$1,660,364,273

During the same period, our excess of gold imports was

Excess of exports.....	$984,652,328
Excess of imports.....	253,940,901

Gain of gold.....$ 11,712,235

During the same period the account with silver stands:

Excess of exports.....	$ 211,927,797
Excess of imports, none
Loss of silver.....	111,927,797

Total loss in merchandise, gold and silver.....$1,669,734,337

This exported surplus of nearly two billions has not been paid for in gold. That is, the pay has remained abroad.

The statistics give very different results from those of popular superstition. According to the popular notion, if exports exceed imports the pay will be returned in the shape of gold and silver. And the further back we go in historical statistics, the nearer we seem to get to that time when "balances of trade" were actually settled in gold; but we never quite reach that time in history. If there ever was such a time, it was probably when the use of Spanish money was general over the commercial world. In our day, gold and silver are commodities, products of labor, whose price is enhanced, of course, by their use as money. But they are bought and sold by weight, like wheat or cotton, and an excess of merchandise today usually carries with it an excess of specie also. Thus, in our trade with Europe and South America in 1890, the accounts stand for this country:

	Our Imports from	Our Exports to Europe.
Merchandise,	$449,997,364.	$683,736,297.
Gold and Silver,	6,740,732.	20,230,681.
America.
Merchandise,	$203,574,930.	$131,682,038.
Gold and Silver,	23,159,285.	6,155,376.

Usually, as shown here, where we sent most merchandise we sent most gold and silver. In our day, when "balances" are not paid in merchandise, or settled by transfers of credit, the "balances" remain and are invested in the countries to which the merchandise has been sent.

I have verified results precisely similar to those just given in the commerce of Great Britain and of France.

Truly yours,
J. H. PAUL.

WRITING PAPER ADVANCING IN PRICE

The cholera embargo on rags in the East is having a curious effect upon the production of certain kinds of paper. At a meeting of manufacturers held in Boston a few days ago it was resolved to shut down the writing paper mills for two weeks in October next, and to raise the price an average of two cents a pound. In addition to the scarcity of rags, chloride of lime, which is used for bleaching the rags, has advanced from two to eight cents a pound, because of the demand for disinfecting purposes on account of the cholera scare.

Fully one-half of the rags used in producing paper in this country come from Europe. It may seem strange that such an article as the rag should become so important a commercial factor. In Europe wages are low, and persons who cannot work at laborious employment turn to rag picking. Over there it has become a regular business. In the United States wages are better, and more can be earned at any sort of employment. Though latterly in the large cities of the East, rag picking is becoming quite an industry.

Since the cholera scare New York and Philadelphia forbade the trimming of refuse piles by pickers, and all combustible material is burned. This regulation largely curtails the domestic supply. The average price of rags has advanced thirty-five per cent during the past month. In the present condition of Europe, it would be very unwise to admit rags from there unrestrictedly, and the prohibition will probably be made to extend over the winter.

CAMP LOW, Sept. 25.—Nothing but favorable reports were heard on all sides today and the old cases of diarrhoea are all convalescing.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 27.—It is reported the steamer "Empress of India," from Yokohama, has cholera on board. The Dominion health officers say they will not quarantine the passengers without special instructions from Ottawa.

GOD AND MAN.

"There is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

These words, spoken by God to Moses on the mount, indicate that His works and words are all for the ultimate benefit of man. And why? Because He is the Father of the spirits of all men; and fathers have affectionate parental solicitude for their children. Should children become unfortunate, entailing misery upon them, the tender care of a loving Father is especially manifested towards them, as is, and ever has been, the case with God and fallen man.

The term man, as here used, includes woman also—the male and female, the one as necessary as the other to man's existence.

We speak of God as Father; and we must be spoken of as children—children of a God in our spiritual creation, which was independent of the temporal creation. Therefore the Apostle reasons in this wise, "We have fathers after the flesh whom we reverence; how much rather be in subjection to the Father of our spirits and life."

That which is spiritual is also eternal. He who is without beginning of days or end of time, begets that which is like unto himself. One part of man therefore is eternal, and the mortal part must become immortal to blend with and forever be associated with the eternal. This is the labor of man's life, to exchange the mortal for the immortal and thereby be prepared for the eternal.

Now, the question arises, how is this to be done? We must learn how to come in possession of the mortal, which is death with all its entailments, and then take the directly opposite course to secure opposite results. We are now in time with mortality and death; these are the opposites of eternity, with immortality and eternal life.

We are informed that by sin—transgression of the law, came death with all its consequences of mortality, and that by obedience, the grace and favor of God may come unto eternal life.

All, then, of immortality is included in the one single fact of obedience to divine law, which is the law of God—the Father of our spirit, who is immortal and eternal. To learn the law and keep it becomes the whole duty of man, necessary to his highest possible attainments.

To demonstrate the truth of this reasoning, we have only to refer to what has been the history of man, and what logical facts proclaim must be his future. God, our Father, who is the Creator of all things, created the heavens and the earth to be a temporary home for His children, and gave to them a material organization in which the spiritual could dwell and form an eternal union. As one principle or element can never exist in perfection without relation to another, so it became necessary that the spiritual and temporal should be united in an eternal bond, in order to be made partaker of the fulness of the Father's being and glory.

When man was placed upon the earth, provided with all a Father's wisdom could devise for His children's happiness, there was a law given to him which if broken, the penalty was to be death—a separation of the body from the spirit—counteracting or destroying the very purpose for which he came to earth. More than this, he was to be cast out where he could not see his Father's face. This was both a temporal and spiritual death; an entire separation of body and spirit, and the child from Father's presence.

What a fearful condition to be plunged into by one sinful act of man, when in the exercise of his agency and self-control he chose what would bring to him evil and dissolution, instead of the good secured by a Father's favor. Man was now hopeless and helpless. Death, his mortal enemy, now stared him in the face, haunted his brief mortal existence with no visible means of escape from the terrible consequences of violating the Father's law—an act for which he could offer no excuse, it being a negative law so far as he was concerned. It was a requirement of him not to do that which required an effort on his part; hence no plea of justification could be urged. The now shame-faced culprit could only plead that he had of his own free will listened to the tempter's voice rather than to a Father's law. A violated law demanded justice; an attribute of the Great Eternal whose word was irrevocable—"Thou shalt surely die." Such is man today and ever has been—subject to death and shut out from his Father's presence.

And is there no hope for man? Oh! what a blessed word is hope, a virtue as Deity as eternal as is justice. It may now claim its rights on fallen man—may now find a field worthy of its unbounded favor in a plan devised by which the lost may be recovered—the fallen be redeemed.

The tidings of that plan comes heralded to earth; a sacrifice is provided to atone for sin, and if you will now choose to accept my law, and do my will, you shall again enter into and abide my presence, after the demands of justice have been satisfied; and you shall symbolize the sacrifice which I have prepared by shedding the blood of the firstlings of your flock, and I will satisfy the demands of justice in your behalf by sending my first born Son, whose blood shall be shed for you in the meridian of time; for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins; and that must be innocent—an offering free from guilt—of one who has power over death and can restore body and spirit to their former eternal union, that my work in the creation of man may not be frustrated, but be to his immortality and eternal life, and to my glory."

The promised Deliverer appeared midway between the time of man's fall and the time of his final restoration, with power to demonstrate the fact that by virtue of His mission the spirits and bodies of all men should be reunited after death; that there should be an end to the power of death; and without the exercise of any agency on his part he should be made man again and be brought into the presence of the Father, to give an account of the acts of his life, as to having accepted or rejected the atonement made in his behalf.

Evidence of acceptance was to be by obedience to law, as the only competent test; while disobedience to law should be evidence of his choice to remain subject to the power of death. Remaining in sin and thereby approving the conditions which brought death, will not prevent man from appearing in the divine presence, as man, with spirit and body, raised from the dead to render a final account of deeds done in the body; but as the Father is unchangeable and will not allow sin to dwell in His presence, all these must then again be cast out from His presence the second time. This is called the second death, from which there has never been anything revealed giving hope of redemption to those on whom the sentence shall be passed.

The first sentence passed upon man in the Garden of Eden was to be able in its far reaching consequences, as a world of woe and death has witnessed from that day to this; but far more terrible must be the consequences of that condition which the second death promises to those over whom it shall have power, with no ray of hope for a release from its torment, the extent of which never has nor ever will be revealed to man. Among all the sufferings of the present we may have hope of final deliverance. Not so to those who are made partakers of that second death.

Man's condition and relation to his Maker are such that the first principle of his nature to be put into active exercise is that of faith. To worship an unseen God faith is necessary; for that is the assurance we have of that which is unseen. We must believe that He is before we can seek Him with any hope of obtaining favor, or that He will reward those who diligently serve Him, by keeping His commandments; or punish those who are guilty of disobedience to His Law.

A Being worthy of our worship and adoration "must be one with whom we have an affinity, one possessing similar qualities and attributes, in order that mutual sympathy may constitute a bond of fellowship by which each becomes necessary to the other's happiness. This is characteristic of the relation of parents and children, and is evidence of the restoration of the relation between God and man, which existed in the beginning before the fall of man was compassed by the evil one.

With this faith in God hope is always associated; it is an attendant virtue, and as necessary to a living faith as the mortality of man is to the Father's glory. These co-workers and charity—which is the love of God—are implanted in man for his exercise of them on earth, and they ever abide with the Father in the holiest condition of spiritual existence. Faith prompts to obedience, hope sustains and is as an anchor to the soul in its most trying adversity, and charity, which is love, is the fulfilling of the law; placing man in harmony with God and the heavens, and secure to him all the good and happiness that can be derived from them, or that they are capable of bestowing.

Possessing these virtues, love becomes the characteristic of humanity, as it is the most prominent excellence of the Deity. It is written, "God is love," and it must be under the con-troubling influence of that never failing undying love, that all other attributes of his being are ever exercised towards man.

The term "love" is not used here as is often spoken of and exercised among men; which when not under the control of reason is simply a passion that often leads to jealousy and crime, entailing misery upon its possessor; while that love which is contrived by the right, is the fulfilling of the law—the perfection of the being whether on earth or in heaven. All of the Father's dealings with His children must be considered with this demonstrated fact ever uppermost in the mind.

How Godlike the gift—"He so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son," etc., and again, the message that came with His Son—"Peace on earth, good will to man." That Son bore the buffettings of a persecuting world without resentment, and when put to death by those who could find no just cause for doing so, He pleads with the Father to forgive them, because of their ignorance of His true character and mission; though they were compelled to acknowledge that He went about among men doing good.

This Son was a representative of the Father, and could not exceed Him in mercy, kindness and love, and we may know from the history of Him who was seen, and did dwell among men, something of the character of Him whom the Son personated; the one dwelling among men and of the nature of man, to die; while the other is unseen, with none of man's fallen nature, and cannot die. He has conquered all, is above all, even as the heavens are high above the earth, and man who is upon it.

God will not destroy the agency of man. All intelligence is independent in its sphere. He will not even tempt an intelligent being to do a wrong or violate a law which He gives to him, but when wrong and wickedness exist within his dominion, justice and judgment must be exercised in defense of the right. Otherwise there would be no God.

When a nation, people or individual becomes established in wickedness, and have given themselves up to work iniquity, it is only an act of mercy on the part of Him in whose hands their life is, to take it from them. The issues of both life and death are in His hands; from Him the breath of life came to man. By it was he quickened and became a living soul.

A life of crime must be followed by the punishment justice demands, and that punishment may be alleviated by shortening the life; thereby diminishing the crime.

The Father has often resorted to this act of mercy with the children of men, to preserve them within the limits of his pardoning grace, if they will but repent of their sins. Love and truth are ever the habitations of His throne, as also are justice and judgment; and under the influence of the former is the latter ever administered. Mercy, the fruits of God's love for His children is over all, and it "endureth forever." Though ever maintaining justice and the right, love precludes over every administration of His power to give, take, or perpetuate life, and sanctify it for immortality.

Justice is ever compatible with the love of God. He sends the message of warning before his indignation is permitted to fall upon the transgressor. Whom he loveth he chasteneth, and would that the chastisement should produce the fruits of peace and righteousness. His words and works among the children of men, all are to the end that they may have restored to them the immortal life man once possessed, freed from the power of sin and death, and be restored to Father's favor and presence—the glorious destiny of all who do the will of the Father.

We may reason, then, with all propriety, as did the Apostle, that as surely as there is a child, there is a father to the child; as surely as there is a man there is a God who made him, and the world a home for him to dwell in. This world of variety and beauty was not made by man, but for him, and it affords evidence of skill, wisdom and knowledge far beyond human conception, and when contemplated in its relation to other worlds with which it is associated, can only fill the mind with awe and reverence for its Creator. When assured, as Moses was, that all was a view of man's immortality and eternal life.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Notwithstanding other attractions, the meeting of the Sunday School Union last night was very largely attended. All the city wards were well represented except the Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Twentieth and Twenty-third. The schools of Bluff Dale, South Jordan, Farmers, North Point, Brighton, East Mill Creek and Big Cottonwood south district, of the country schools, were well represented.

The musical exercises rendered during the evening were given by the Twelfth ward Sunday school choir, led by Brother E. A. Midgley. Stake Superintendent F. C. Griggs presided. Elder C. W. Hardy opened the meeting by prayer.

Bishop Frederick Schoenfeldt, of Brighton gave an instructive lecture on "Theological Class Teaching." While upon a recent lengthy mission in Germany, he felt a strong anxiety for the spiritual welfare of the children of Zion, and resolved that if he lived to return home he would spend all the spare time of the Sabbath in teaching his own and other children of the Saints the principles of the Gospel and how to obtain a testimony for themselves of the truth of the work of God. In teaching his class he required that each member bring a note book and he gauged his instructions to the capacity of the class; and while he did not require many lengthy addresses from his students, he required that they search out passages of Scripture to sustain and verify the position taken by us in regard to the Gospel. In illustrating the Gospel principles, he would show by suitable references, the harmony of the Gospel in all ages of the world, using the Book of Mormon and modern revelation to elucidate and simplify the lessons presented. In showing the great apostasy from the truth, he has used the works of Mosheim and others, not only to prove the fact of the apostasy, but to show the causes that led up to it, so that the lessons of history may not be lost upon the lives of the young Latter-day Saints.

But aside from the excellent lessons, well planned and thoroughly prepared beforehand, the speaker felt that his greatest aid to success was an earnest love for the Sunday School work. He felt that it must be a very grave duty that would keep him away from the Sabbath School. The example of such an earnest spirit would not be lost upon the young. The speaker felt that an effort should be made in the Sunday school to encourage young Latter-day Saints to acquire the language of their fathers, so that they could do more efficient missionary work in the world.

"Zion prosper, all is well," was excellently rendered by a quartette of male singers.

"MUSIC IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS."

The following paper on the above subject was read by Superintendent Griggs, from the pen of Prof. Evan Stephens, who was unavoidably absent:

"I sincerely believe that I do not overestimate the importance of this subject by placing it at the head of the list of the good things that make a Sabbath school what it should be. I never knew a school where general good singing was the rule that was not in a live, prosperous state; and I never knew a school remain in such a state long when the music was either neglected, entirely mismanaged, or left to take care of itself. Hence my opinion of the importance of music in the Sabbath school. By this I mean real music—not the formal 'anything in the shape of singing' at the commencement and close, according to custom, but singing that is felt by every earnest worker in the school to mean something—not a form, but a real part of the school exercises—something with progress in the very ring of it, and that at once awakens the attention of every child in the room, setting it to the actual doing of what it came to school to do.

Anything short of this is of but little use, though it may help to keep up appearances and be better than no music at all. However, I very much doubt whether extremely poor, formal, slow, lifeless singing (such as I know some schools to have) is better than doing without it entirely, despite how strange and out of custom that might appear. Many a Sunday school will use, three times during each session, music old and musty they would hiss indignantly if offered to them for their entertainment at the cheapest kind of concert. Now this is not an idle comparison. Let me solemnly assure you that your children today have ears that convey impressions to them just as definite in musical matters, as the eye or the nose would do in the other mentioned case. They know perfectly well what singings should be; they have experienced the delight of singing with their whole hearts until the countenances beamed with pleasure; and if any other kind of singing than this contents the Sabbath school they attend, there is a danger of their esteem for everything in the school—measuring the excellence of all other exercises by that of the singing, which they know to be not of the best.

What is good Sabbath school singing? Singing that may be deemed in, comprehended, and enjoyed by the majority of the children present. Singing, that while elevating in its character, is simplified in the use of the child, with a certain amount of movement and rhythm in it, are sentimentally, naturally, earnestly, and cheerfully expressed. Slow, solemn hymn tunes should never be heard in Sabbath school, though the tempo, is sympathetic, if carefully, earnestly and meaningfully used are within the realm of youthful thought and expression. The musical exercises should never be taken beyond the reach of the possibilities of the child's taking art in the Sabbath school.

The Sunday school choir should, in my opinion, be abolished. The entire choir should be the choir. Much precious time and labor are now wasted in the musical field by a wasteful system. Our adult singers are called upon to be members of the Tabernacle choir, the ward choir, the mutual improvement choir, the Sunday school choir, and they are not let members of any unless they take time to receive some training, which necessitates the attendance at a singing class every week. They try to do their duty by singing all, and find it impossible. Then one organization begins to tear the other down. Then a good Sunday school choir, a poor ward choir, and vice versa, etc. Something must be neglected, and it is a constant struggle to keep up organizations. Choir leaders become disheartened, and all progress is stopped. A choir is not only unnecessary as an independent organization in the Sabbath school, but a detriment, inasmuch as it deprives the majority of the privilege of taking actual part in this exercise which should be the one class for all in the school. Singing should be one of the regular studies of every Sabbath school, taken by all at once. Twenty minutes, or even half an hour, should be devoted to it—the last of the session.

Here the songs would be taught, part singing would be practiced, the entire school turned into a choir, one night's work less for the over-worked singers and conductors (a blessed relief) and equally a beneficial relief for most schools to have half an hour less of other exercises supplanted by as much in sing.

While there are a few, a very few, competent men in charge of our Sunday school singing, the great majority of them are far from being capable of putting to good use the vast amount of talent found in the schools. The very time they have to spend in the struggle of keeping up the choir precludes any self-improvement, and as Brother Maeser often so truly tells us, "A man can not impart what he hasn't got." Today it is painfully evident throughout the Territory that our leaders in music have not kept pace with the advancement of the masses. Do not misunderstand me. The masses do not understand music now better than the choir leaders; but while the people in general have advanced a hundred per cent. in love and appreciation and ability in music, during the last fifteen years, the average choir leader of today is but little more proficient or progressive than the choir leader of fifteen years ago. Why? He hasn't had time to progress—too many duties have been piled upon his broad shoulders. He has ambition to delve deeper, that he might have more treasures to impart; but he hasn't a free moment in which to delve; hence by degrees he gets into a beaten path and soon lives in the past. Who of you is not grateful that there are schools where young men may attend for years to learn how to properly teach the principles of the Gospel? Is it not true that those whose ability and love for music prove that God has implanted it there for some noble and practical purpose should have time and opportunity to fit themselves to lead and direct progressively the tens of thousands who are growing up, bubbling over with song, within our mountain valleys? These leaders must have special training for this, or fail to command the full confidence of even children in their work. If you would have your singing in your Sabbath schools improve, see that he who has charge has the time and opportunity to improve also, as the one becomes impossible without the other. You need a training class for young conductors, just as much as you do for young missionaries or school teachers. Again, do not misunderstand me. Music should not and cannot be studied for any practical use alone, but the instructors in music (and a choir leader is nothing if not an instructor), must give special study to that branch.

How much of my own work here in Salt Lake City has been made comparatively fruitless for the want of unity in action between myself and the various leaders having local charge of music, where the children under my training should have become of service in the ward Sabbath schools. The various modes of procedure—no two alike—were all perhaps different to mine, and the children, being successful with me, naturally had no confidence in a reverse course. Hence the cry would often be "We can't do anything with Stephen's pupils." Once, while paying a visit to a certain school in this city, I was openly accused of this, notwithstanding that nearly all their young ladies (scarcely out of my children's classes) who constituted the choir were my pupils. The singing at the school did not show that anything was being systematically done by anybody's pupils; it was a house full of fine material in a confused state. So far as the singing was concerned, I had prepared the material, but the local leader had not the least idea how to put them in their places; and because they did not jump into position and arrange themselves or fit in any shape his fancy for the moment might suggest, I was to blame, of course.

Take the building of our great Temple as a comparative case. The architect has done his work; every stone has been calculated upon and chiseled into exact shape; all is correct. But the stone layers have no idea of his plan; they have been accustomed to build at random, and they misplace the stones. Result: even the shaping of each stone makes it a misfit, and the stone layer, or those in charge, blindly blame the stone cutter for making the stone unfit to be laid—at random.

How ridiculous you say. It has been precisely my experience in my labors with the Sabbath schools of this city. What will obviate such a difficulty? A proper study of plan and action. If I prepare the material, is it not reasonable that those who use them should understand the method of preparing, and continue in the work in systematic order? The Sabbath school of this city need a class for the instruction of young music leaders, and if even the few of mature experience attended such a class, it would result in system and uniformity.

My opinion on the point as to what music we should sing is that the selections to be found in the new book just issued by the Sunday School Union cannot be excelled or even approached in suitability, even of music (to say nothing of sentiment) by any eastern published books. I would wish for but little if anything else from which to train my school in singing for the next three or four years! I had charge of a school; and it is my belief that leaders who ignore it for eastern selections are pasturing in mistaken fields, neglecting fatter food, especially prepared for them. I do not believe in singing blindly exclusive. There are sweet morsels even for children to be culled from outside works, that it would be a veritable loss to pass them by. Leaders should be conversant with the best of everything published in their line. Then if our home work falls behind they can be a means of stirring up our own talented composers to better work.

The singing book should be the property of the child using it, and become a part of the Sunday school dress, as it were. The neat, clean dress, combed hair, blackened shoes, kerchief and music book in hand, should be the leading points of the picture—"a child on its way to the Sabbath school." One book might serve two children, provided they can stand or sit together during the musical exercises. The work of rousing the young, and the old to some extent in music has been so well accomplished by jubilees, classes, schools and concerts, that now they pause, waiting for capable men and system to lead them on to greater perfection.

Our future, musically, depends upon what shall be done in this direction. Our wonderful musical talent will avail us little if not intelligently directed in a proper channel. With these few reflections I will close, wishing a speedy renewal of progress to music in the Sabbath school.

Supt. Griggs suggested that as frequent circulars were sent by the general officers of the Sunday School Union, which often were important for reference, and if the Sunday schools were to provide themselves with a scrap book in which these circulars could be preserved, they would be more useful to them.

The Thirteenth ward school was requested to furnish the music at the next meeting of the Union.

Benediction by Supt. C. H. Gold, of Brighton.

JOS. HYNUM PARRY, Sec'y.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 25.—Dr. Gardner reports that Mrs. Harrison slept several hours today and is comfortable and resting quietly tonight.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session last night, President Loofbourn in the chair. It was long after the hour fixed by law when the transaction of business commenced. In this respect the present administration is fast becoming an unequalled success. The members present were: Rhob, Folland, Hardy, Horn, Karrieh, Moran, Bell, Lawson, Evans, Ewing, Beardsley, Wentland, Helsa.

In the absence of Recorder Stanton Deputy Ellsworth acted as chief clerk, and was assisted by Fred Dennis.

As a preface to the meeting there was a warm discussion on the paving question between Councilman Horn and Engineer Doremus.

The conflict was a wordy one and was carried on in an undertone as far as Mr. Doremus was concerned, but his councilmanic antagonist occasionally allowed his voice to rise to such a pitch as he gesticulated excitedly that spectators in the auditorium of the legislative chamber looked on and laughed.

City Attorney Hoge being in California no a pleasure trip, his assistant, Mr. Ed. F. Coad, acted as corporation counsel for the municipal law makers.

It was the unanimous opinion of those present that he was a better adviser than his superior officer.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, after which were read and referred as follows:

PETITIONS

P. L. Schmidt and other residents on Fourth West street protested against the Utah Central railway using that thoroughfare for depot purposes. Referred to the mayor.

Charles E. Beers and others asked that Eighth East street be opened and put in a passable condition between Ninth and Tenth South streets. Committee on streets.

Sarah A. West protested against the payment of $5 to the city engineer as fee for sidewalk grade. Committee on claims.

Wendell Benson asked why some of the property of the Third South district was exempted from sidewalk improvements. Board of public works.

Ellis Morris and others protested against the construction of a railway switch and fast running of trains on Third West street between Second and Fourth South streets. Referred to the mayor, the city engineer and marshal.

S. and J. E. Baumberger asked to be allowed to construct their own flagging sidewalk.

The Groesbeck company made a similar request. Board of public works.

M. H. Walker and others asked that certain streets be opened. Committee on streets.

F. Smith and others asked that Seventh East street between Ninth and Tenth South be put in a passable condition. Committee on streets.

William J. Backman and others asked the city to accept Jeremy street as needed to it by T. J. Jeremy. Committee on streets, with city engineer and attorney.

H. J. Dinnyan asked the city to sell him a certain piece of property located in the southeast quarter of section 27 north one range one east. Committee on public grounds.

A BROKEN PANE.

The Groesbeck company, by its attorneys, asked to be reimbursed to the amount of $100 for a large window glass broken by city workmen in excavating for a water trench in front of their property on Second South street. Committee on claims.

MORE LIGHT.

Hugh Ward and others asked for an electric light at the intersection of Seventh East and Ninth South streets. Committee on improvements.

J. C. Taylor and others petitioned for an electric light at the intersection of Canyon and Second streets. Committee on improvements.

EMANCIPATION OF SLAVERY.

The following from the Afro-American League club of this city was read: To the Honorable Mayor and Members of the City Council:

Gentlemen—You are most cordially invited to attend the celebration of the emancipation of slavery at the Auditorium hall, at the corner of Fourth South and Second West streets, on the 22nd of September, 1892, at 3 o'clock p. m.

Respectfully and filed.

THE MAYOR BOUGHT IT.

The Mayor sent in the following:

Gentlemen—In pursuance to the authority conferred on me to purchase 850 tons of six inch standard pipe, I beg leave to report that I have purchased the necessary pipe, delivery to be made within thirty days, the price to be paid is $36 per ton as will appear by the accompanying contract, which I submit for your approval, and upon such approval by the Council, it will be delivered to Rhodes Brothers of Denver, and go into effect.

Approved.

IN THE INTEREST OF HEALTH.

Health Commissioner Beatty sent in the following:

Gentlemen—I respectfully recommend that a sanitary inspection of Salt Lake City be effected at the earliest possible time, for the purpose of securing data outlined in the form therewith submitted. Permit me to urge the adoption of this measure as a matter of vital importance. By no other can the health department be enabled to accomplish so much good in this community nor can money measure the far reaching beneficent effect that would result. By this method all insanities and defective plumbing and unsanitary conditions of every kind, may be ferreted out and removed and disease that is born of and nurtured by these conditions may be defied and checked in its ruthless course. This is not figurative or exaggerated. It is a momentous fact that many lives may be saved that would otherwise be sacrificed by seeking out systematically and removing the manifold preventable causes of disease everywhere existing in this city. I earnestly feel that a grave responsibility rests upon those who have the power to authorize this measure.

Sanitary committee.

THE BLANK

referred to is as follows:

SALT LAKE SANITARY INSPECTION.

1. Ward.....Street.....No.....
2. Name of occupier and of owner.....
3. Area of lot.....of house.....
4. of out-house.....
5. Site of house wet or dry.....
6. Age of house.....material.....
7. No. of stories.....
8. No. of living rooms.....No. of sleeping rooms.....
9. Cellars and basements.....
10. Sinks, drains and cesspools.....

9. Privies or water closets, location and condition.....
10. Yards.....
11. Hogs or other animals.....Fowls..... where kept.....
12. Public nuisance on or near premises.....
13. No. of families in house.....Total No. of occupants.....
14. Sickness now in house.....What disease.....
15. Sickness during last year.....What disease.....
16. Deaths during past year.....What disease.....
17. Persons vaccinated.....
18. Water supply, whence derived.....
19. Sanitary needs and estimated cost.....
20. Additional observations.....

Diagram of Lot

H—House.
W—Well.
P—Cistern.
CP—Cesspool

DIRECTIONS.

- 1 and 2. Give the exact and full name of the owner and occupant of the premises, of street name and describe location so it cannot be mistaken.
3. Give relative position of privies, cellars, to living rooms.
4. State whether site is above or below or at same level with adjacent land.
5. Examine cellar carefully and describe condition with regard to dampness, amount and kind of filth, ventilation, drain, etc.
6. Is there any offensive smells from sink, drains or water-tight, clogged or uncovered?
7. Privies and vaults, describe condition particularly. Are they foul, leaky or overflowing? shallow or deep, connected with sewer, cess-pool, etc.?
8. Describe the kind and amount of filth, heaps of filth around the premises, and general condition of yard.
9. Public nuisances, as sewers badly drained, streets, gutters, ditches, stable, etc.
10. Note overcrowding and social condition of families.
11. If water is used from well, state depth, distance from privy or cess-pool, whether or not such influence, and whether any drain probably drains into the well.
12. State what is necessary to be done to remove nuisances and improve the sanitary condition of premises, and the probable cost if same.

THE MAYOR AND THOSE BILLS.

The following from the Mayor was read:

In regard to the bills referred to me in pursuance of the report that of the committee on waterworks, I beg leave to report that the matter of the allowance of the claims covered by said bills is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Council. When any or all of the items of said bills shall have been allowed by the Council it will then become my duty to either approve or disapprove its action. Until then the matter is not within the scope of my jurisdiction.

Among the bills referred to was one for $140 from Superintendent of Waterworks Ryan for repairing his buggy and harness, damaged in a runaway.

Rich and Hardy opposed allowing the bill inasmuch as it had been reported to them that Mr. Ryan was out on a pleasure trip when the accident occurred. Some discussion also followed the reading of a bill for $900 worth of pipe purchased by Mr. Ryan without authority.

The bills were allowed, Rhob, Folland and Hardy only voting against them.

COVERED CONDUIT.

The board of public works reported that it had entered into a contract with twelve property owners on North Temple street, between State and East Temple streets, to construct a covered conduit for City Creek waters. The amount to be paid by the property owners is one-half, or $2708.75, being $1 se rate of $2.50 per foot front. Report approved and work ordered done at once.

BOLD FOR TAXES.

Recorder Stanton reported that he had sold certain property for delinquent taxes for $3800, that he had received 10 per cent. cash therefor, the balance to be paid upon confirmation of sale by the council. Sale confirmed and the Mayor authorized to convey the property to the purchaser.

WATER COMMISSIONER'S REPORT.

Water Commissioner Pendleton reported that he had found several new claims in Parley's canyon, the owners of which were using city water which he had turned back into the stream. Most of the owners of the stock yards along the stream had cleaned up their premises. He had found several herds of sheep in the canyon and had made two arrests.

The water at its normal rate, on July 27, measured 12,788,000 gallons or day; on August 22, it measured 7,880,000 gallons. Himself and the watermaster had examined the Parley's creek and found considerable rubbish in the bed thereof. In the matter of new claims he was collecting evidence in regard thereto to submit to the attorney.

In the matter of the Emigration canyon cowboys they had all been removed. The lost agreement with "Eckus Bros. had been found and placed in the hands of the attorney.

In concluding his report Mr. Pendleton recommended that no secondary water rights be granted in Emigration canyon. Received and filed.

NO JURISDICTION.

The board of public works sent in a communication returning the petition of 768 owners of property on Main street asking that the width of sidewalk in front of their respective premises be increased, with the statement that the petition did not come under jurisdiction. Received and filed.

AN IMPUDENT OFFICER PROPERLY

CRUBBED.

The following was read:

In regard to the work to be done in City Creek canal Mr. Rich knew the reason the work had not been done, as I had explained to him fully in regard to the matter before he introduced his resolution. Now I will explain to your honorable body, as I did to him, the reason the work has not been done. First, the city has a contract with the farmers to furnish them water from the Jordan and Salt Lake Canal in exchange for creek water, and it would not do to shut off the supply until close of the irrigation season, as that would annul the contract. Second, if the canal furnished nine-tenths of the city with irrigation water, and it is my duty to supply the people with water. Third, I intended to do that work as soon as the irrigation season closed. Fourth, the work could not be done before, as City Creek is the outlet or the waste water of the canal, and four or five millions gallons of water run here from time to time according to the amount used by the people. Fifth, Mr. Rich was talking through his hat or purposely misrepresenting when he said that place had not been cleaned in ten years, as I had it cleaned two years ago. Sixth, I would respectfully recommend the city and the sides of City Creek be cleaned with stone from Sixth to Eighth West street, so that would make a good job for all time, but if your hon. body thinks that too expensive I would suggest that the fluming be extended from Sixth West street, present terminus, to Eighth West, as that would give more room for travel on south side of the creek; it would also save expense of cleaning an open ditch.

Respectfully submitted,

J. M. HARVEY, Watermaster.

When that portion of the report was reached which referred to Mr. Rich talking through his hat, Lawson and Simonds sprang to their feet simultaneously and moved that the report be tabled indefinitely. They didn't propose to allow the head of any department to address such a communication to the City Council.

Rich asked that it be allowed to lay on the table until miscellaneous business was reached, as he wished to reply to it.

Lawson moved that it be referred back to Mr. Harvey. Carried.

ENCROACHMENT ON CITY GROUNDS.

The city engineer reported regarding the occupancy and encroachment on lands owned by the city by private individuals and suggested the advisability of having the boundaries of lands beyond the corporation limits accurately defined and marked by permanent monuments. It was expensive but he believed the work would justify the expenditure. Received and filed.

Watermaster Ryan reported that the pipe had been ordered for the north bench. That it would be impossible to fill the same with water unless the reservoir in City creek should be completed at the head of high line pipe. Committee on waterworks and city engineer.

NEW ENGINE HOUSES.

The committee on fire department recommended the building of branch fire departments in the northeastern, the southeastern, and southwestern parts of the city. The estimated cost of constructing the same is $22,000.

Rich favored the building of one at a time. The city could not afford to build all of them immediately.

Some discussion followed after which the report was referred back to the committee on fire department.

PACIFIC PAVING COMPANY ESTIMATES.

The committee on claims sent in a majority and minority report on the matter of the final estimates to the Pacific Paving Company for the work on State street.

The majority report, which is signed by Messrs. Horn and Simonds, is as follows:

The committee believe all of the street except the stone block paving is fairly done in accordance with the contract, so far as can be judged. The stone block paving is not, in quality of blocks and manner of laying, up to the requirements of the specifications, but the difference in actual value to the city is hard to determine. We believe that the ten per cent retained under the terms of the contract and the bond given by the company to repair and keep said work good and make it good if it should fail will be sufficient security to the city, and we therefore recommend that the company be paid according to the terms of the contract.

The minority report, signed by Messrs. Folland and Looftbourow, is as follows:

We beg to make a report in the matter of the claim of the Pacific Paving Company for paving State street. We believe all of this work except the stone block paving is fairly up to the requirements of the contract. As to the stone block paving we do not believe the contract has been complied with in this respect. How far short of the contract requirement in point of value it is hard to determine. The city as we understand it retains 10 per cent. of the contract price and also has a bond to secure the contract of the Pacific Paving Company to keep this part of the work in repair for two years. If the said company would agree to keep this part of the work in repair for three or four years instead of two years we believe it would be a fair compromise and we recommend that they be paid for the work as provided in the contract when they enter into a contract as above indicated to keep said work in repair for four years from this date with acceptable security for the performance of same.

With these reports the city engineer sent the following:

A short time ago the city engineer was instructed not to issue an estimate upon the work in question until certain deficiencies had been made good. The work remains in the same condition as it was at the time and is deficient under the specifications.

As a compromise to the property owners for this deficiency the contractor should either amend the work or extend the term for which its durability is guaranteed, and believing that an extension of this term from two years to five years would be a fair equivalent, I recommend that the granting of the petition be made conditional upon such extension.

Beardsley moved the adoption of the first report read.

Hardy moved the adoption of the second report.

Lawson said that if the work of paving on State street had not been fully complied with the city engineer was responsible.

Horn declared that the engineer had been kicking on technicalities. He had done so all along. As a consequence the city was getting into ill repute with contractors. The men who did the work should be paid their money and released.

Wantland believed that State street was the best paved thoroughfare in the west. The contractors should be paid in full without further delay.

Folland said that there was no denying that the rock work was imperfect. It would only be a question of time when the city would have a cobbled paved street instead of a stone block pavement. The blocks were laid entirely too far apart.

Looftbourow concurred with Folland. He said that the expert representatives of the company admitted before the committee that the work was not up to the standard. It was evident that Mr. Wantland did not understand the proposition. He, it seems, is in favor of the three year guarantee. The four year recommendation is not too long.

Simonds stated that the objections seemed to come principally from the councilmen. The property owners admitted that the work was superb and a credit to the city as well as the contractors.

On a vote being taken the three year guarantee was accepted and the company ordered paid.

TO BE FILLED UP.

The canal on Seventh West street between Second and Sixth North streets was ordered filled at the city's expense.

SEWER ORDINANCE PASSED.

The sewer ordinances recently vetoed by the mayor were amended so as to conform to his recommendations and repassed and again sent to him for his signature.

THE ANNEXATION SCHEME.

The petition of Samuel Paul and others asking that certain subdivisions southeast of the city be added to the corporate limits came on motion of Simondt, and the election ordered as set forth in the petition.

GOING TO KENTUCKY.

Moran offered a resolution providing that $250 be appropriated to Chief Stanton of the fire department to attend the meeting of the National Association of Engineers to be held at Louisville, Kentucky.

On motion of Rich, the amount was raised to $525.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were made:

Boston-Gardner Co.	$ 27.95
Utah and Montana Machinery Co.	10.00
Utah and Montana Machinery Co.	1.91
Morrison & Merrill.	222.00
Driver Mercantile Co.	35.00
Driver Mercantile Co.	43.35
W. O. Reed.	72.30
Tribune Printing Co.	5.50
Utah and Montana Machinery Co.	490.00
Wassett Drug Co.	4.40
Salt Lake City Gas Co.	80.50
Salt Lake City Gas Co.	19.79
Salt Lake P. L. & H. Co.	14.32
Salt Lake P. L. & H. Co.	2,977.80
Walker Bros. & Fyler Co.	1.00
Utah Paint and Oil Co.	95.85
Tribune Publishing Co.	75.40
Ackerman Printing.	7.00
Grover Printing Co.	15.00
William Skewes & Co.	15.00
Hoy Cross hospital.	88.00
Simpson Hill Drug Co.	16.15
A. W. Cairne & Co.	45.80
A. W. Cairne & Co.	3.00
Kelly & Co.	57.00
Kelly & Co.	12.00
C. H. Parsons.	3.30
C. H. Parsons.	1.45
J. C. Murphy.	140.00
Neder & Cleland.	140.00
W. L. Pickett.	23.50
Harratt Brothers.	5.30
National Tube Works.	9,550.00
Perkins & Co.	28.50
Brown & Carter.	12.00

TO MAKE IT FIRE PROOF.

Moran offered a resolution providing for a report from the joint city and county building on the estimated cost of making the two upper stories of the joint city and county building fire proof. Adopted.

The Council then adjourned until Friday night at 7:30.

An adjourned session of the City Council was held Friday night, September 23rd, President Looftbourou in the chair. The councilmen in attendance were: Rich, Holt, Hardy, Karriek, Horn, Moran, Bell, Evans, Simondt, Beardsley, Helms, Wantland.

There was not the usual crowd of spectators in the Council last night when the meeting opened, but before it was concluded the room was well filled.

DECLINED WITH THANKS.

Recorder Stanton read the minutes of Tuesday night's session. They were amended and approved, after which a communication from F. S. Walker who was elected to fill the office of councilman from the second precinct was read. The resignation of Mr. Ewing was read. Mr. Walker thanked the Council for the election but said he would not be able to fill the office on account of the illness of his wife and the pressure of important private business. Received and filed.

$75 FOR RALEIGH.

The committee on police reported favorably on the recommendation of ex-Marshall Janney to appropriate $75 to George Raleigh for attending extra council meetings. Adopted.

MUST COMPLY.

Councilman Horn offered a resolution compelling the West Side Rapid Transit to improve the streets in accordance with its franchise. Adopted.

CURB STONES.

Wantland offered a resolution providing for placing curb stone on Main Street between South Temple and Fourth South streets.

TO SURVEY THE WARM SPRINGS.

Moran offered a resolution providing for the survey of the Warm Springs property. Adopted.

CRIME ON THE INCREASE.

The police committee offered the following:

We beg leave to report as follows in the matter of the addition to the police force, we believe the city is in need of further protection, as it seems that the lawless element is on the increase. We recommend that the force be increased by adding four men.

Adopted.

G. S. L. & H. S. RY. FRANCHISE.

A substitute resolution granting a franchise to the Great Salt Lake and Hot Springs Railway was introduced by the committee on municipal laws. It provides:

That the Great Salt Lake and Hot Springs Railway company, its successors and assigns, have the consent and authority of the Council, and the permission is hereby granted it, to construct, maintain and operate a single or double track standard gauge railway on hereinafter specified, to be operated by steam, electric or cable power, with all the necessary or convenient switches, side tracks, turn-out and cross-over tracks, on the following streets and roads of Salt Lake City, to wit: A single or double track commencing at the intersection of South Temple and Third West streets and running thence north along said Third West street to Ninth North street; together with two single tracks, switches or turnouts in the form of a "Y," easterly from said track across the sidewalk of said Third West street, to the premises described as the north one-half (½) of lot four (4) in block eighty-four (84), plat A, Salt Lake City survey. Also a single or double track beginning at the south boundary line of Oak Street of Folsom's Addition, at a point opposite an alley between lot one (1) and thirty-eight (38) of block seventeen (17) of said addition; thence northerly across said Oak street and along the alley-way last aforesaid, and across Chestnut street, and along the alley-way running through block sixteen (16) of said addition to Cleveland avenue; thence northerly along Cleveland avenue and the County road thirteen hundred and twenty (1320) feet to a point on the westerly boundary line of said County road.

Then follow the conditions usually imposed in such cases.

Sec. 2 provides that the franchise is granted for the term of twenty-five years from the date of the passage of this ordinance, and accepted on the following condition, viz.: That if the grantee, its successors and assigns, shall fail to perform all the stipulations of this resolution, the City Council, after six days notice, and on failure on the part of the company to provide a remedy, or make satisfactory arrangements therefor, may by a majority vote declare the privilege herein granted forfeited, and proceed to take possession of the roadbed, and do all the same as if this resolution had passed.

Sec. 3. In consideration of this grant and franchise, said grantee shall within four months after the date of the passage of this resolution (unless granted further time by the City Council), begin the actual construction of a broad-gauge railway to the west from Salt Lake City.

Sec. 4. That if this grant with the conditions herein contained be not accepted in writing by said grantee within thirty (30) days after the passage of this resolution then, the said grant and franchise shall become null and void.

The resolution was read the first time and on motion of Folland was laid on the table until Tuesday.

TWENTY FEET SIDEWALKS.

The city engineer was instructed to report the estimated cost of constructing twenty feet sidewalks on both sides of First South street, between State and West Temple streets.

OTHER SIDEWALKS.

The committee on streets recommended that sidewalks be constructed on First and Second South streets. Following is the estimated cost: Abutment proportion, $2256.80; city's proportion, $412.80; total $2669.60 for each of the streets.

Karriek—Did the Council authorize the city engineer to submit these estimates?

Wantland—The committee on streets asked the engineer to submit the estimates.

Karriek—I object to the committee assuming the functions of the Council.

Folland thought it would be time enough to act when the property owners signified a desire for them.

Horn said it was no use to wait for petitioners; if that was done sidewalks would never be built. The only way to get sidewalks was to lay them.

Rich said the financial condition of the city and abutting property owners should be taken into consideration in all such improvements.

Evans was opposed to the proposition. It would be taking snap judgment on the citizens.

"No! no!" said Wantland with emphasis.

Karriek: But I know it will. Again I say that I am opposed to sidewalking isolated districts.

Beardsley said that he knew the true name of the property owners in the district named were in favor of laying the sidewalks.

The recommendations were adopted.

NATURAL AND COUNCILMAN'S GAS.

The Natural Gas & Pipe Line company franchise then came up on the reports of the committee. The majority report recommended the granting of a franchise, while the minority objected to the granting of a franchise until the company made some headway.

Evans moved the adoption of the minority report.

Bell wanted to have the Indians people treated fairly in the matter. The fact that the company had not done much work so far should not militate against it.

Hardy—When a home company comes here and asks for a franchise its application is denied. But when an outside corporation comes in the Council seems willing to give it the earth and will attempt to tear off a piece of the moon for it. I am in favor of assisting local capital first and those who will work for the development of the resources of the Territory.

The Chair—I was not aware that any company had been denied a franchise.

Karrick—Yes, sir; that is a fact. The Salt Lake Gas company which has spent $9000 dollars and has driven a well to the depth of 900 feet has been so treated.

Wantland said that Colorado capitalists had been interested in the affair and had machinery on the way to prosecute the work. The granting of a new franchise would have a bad effect.

Bell declared that no reasonable man could agree with Wantland. (Laughter.)

Then followed a wordy, unnecessary and unprofitable discussion of twenty minutes' duration, after which it went to the committee on streets.

THE ROAD TO MORGAN.

The city engineer's report on the construction of a road to Morgan via City Creek and Hardscrabble canyons, came up for consideration. The estimated cost is from $4000 to $5000. A communication from the county clerk of Morgan favoring the building of the road was also read, received and filed.

Wantland and Rich spoke at length in favor of the proposition. The trade of most of Morgan county could be secured by building the road. Today Ogden got the benefit of that trade.

Folland moved that authority be given to construct that road. Carried.

THE SEWAGE QUESTION.

The report from the special committee on sewerage, recently published in these columns, came up for discussion.

Hardy moved the adoption of the report.

Rich said if the motion carried it would necessitate the purchase of sixty acres of land. He wanted to know where it was located and how much it would cost per acre.

Hardy said the land was on this side of the Jordan river, about four miles north of the present sewer pump. The land would cost $250 per acre.

Rich—How many people will one acre of land accommodate?

The City Engineer—One hundred.

Rich—Then we should have more land.

Beardsley—I think so, too. If we don't get it we will have a filthy swamp on our hands.

Hardy—There is sufficient fall in the ground from the sixty acres selected to carry the sewage over Jordan to where thousands of acres of ground can be purchased at the rate of $15 per acre.

Folland—The report seems to be incomplete. A right of way will have to be obtained. An expenditure of a large amount of money, perhaps a half a million dollars, will be made if the report is adopted. He moved that the city engineer be instructed to make preliminary survey and report back to the council the estimated cost of construction and that the remainder of the report be referred back to the committee. Carried.

STANTON'S COMMISSION.

Horn offered a resolution appropriating $99 as commission to the recorder for selling a piece of city land. Adopted.

MORE HELP.

Chris Diehl, city assessor and collector of water rates, asked that he be given another clerk in his office and asked that his own salary be raised to $150 per month. Mr. Diehl was authorized to employ a clerk at $75 per month.

SANITARY INSPECTION.

The sanitary committee recommended a sanitary inspection of the city.

Rich wanted to know how much the inspection would cost.

Beardsley replied that he did not know.

Rich insisted that it would cost three times as much as the average census.

Evans thought the scheme was a good one, and should be at once put into practice.

Wantland thought it was a matter that should be pushed through without delay.

Folland said it was time the Council tried to practice a little economy. He wanted to know how much the inspection would cost and how long it would take.

Moran moved that the report be referred back to the committee with instructions to report on the cost and such other details as they might see fit. He thought a few men with wagons and shovels would do more good than a thousand men with a thousand questions. Carried.

THAT UNION PACIFIC SWITCH.

Evans moved to reconsider the action of the council whereby the Union Pacific was granted a franchise to lay a switch on Third West street onto the premises of the Symmes Grocery company. Lost.

APPROPRIATIONS

were made as follows:

J. S. Morse & Sons.....	$ 87 75
Goldsmith & Co.....	9 75
Nedley Mountain Bell Telephone Co.....	80 00
People's Towing company.....	24 00
J. S. Morse & Sons.....	1 00
A. W. Caine & Co.....	3 95
A. W. Caine & Co.....	5 00
Mason & Co.....	80 77
George M. Scott & Co.....	8 05
K. C. Coffin Hardware Co.....	18 78
Peoples Towing Co.....	15 00
George M. Scott & Co.....	22 75
Grover Printing Co.....	8 50
A. W. Caine & Co.....	33 35
Utah and Montana Machine Co.....	200 10
Wasatch Drug Co.....	3 55
J. W. Whitecar.....	2 00
Belly & Co.....	3 50
Edith P. & Co.....	4 50
C. W. Nunn, veterinary surgeon.....	6 00
T. G. Armstrong.....	30 60
S. Bell & Co.....	3 50
Sierra Nevada Lumber Co.....	24 01
A. J. Pendleton & Son.....	3 50
C. H. Parsons.....	60 00
T. C. Arnold & Co.....	12 75
D. J. O'Mahoney.....	3 75
A. W. Caine & Co.....	1 80
K. C. Coffin Hardware Co.....	66 27
Tulliver Co.....	3 50
Utah and Montana Machinery Co.....	50 01
Utah Plumbing Supply Co.....	13 02
J. W. Farrell & Co.....	20 12
James. Spencer, Bateman Co.....	2 12
Hemington, Johnson & Co.....	34 00
A. G. Padlock.....	14 00
G. M. Scott & Co.....	3 70
G. W. Haleigh.....	75 00

KEESLER REMOVED.

Hardy—Before we adjourn I move that Mr. Fred Kesler be discharged.

Moran—Does it not require a majority of the members elected?

Horn—Yes, it requires two-thirds.

The Chair—No it does not. A majority of those present can do that.

Horn—It is not fair to take snap judgement on the man. I want to know why the gentleman make the motion. I move to adjourn.

Hardy—Well I can state why but I do not care about going into details unless compelled to. I will say this, however, that he is incompetent and a disgrace to this city.

Evans moved to adjourn. Lost.

Bell—I think Mr. Kesler should not be disposed of without a hearing.

Moran—Mr. President I ask, is Mr. Kesler an officer?

The Chair—I believe not, Judge Anderson held that he was not.

Moran—Well, Judge Anderson is wrong. Kesler is down on the salary roll as an officer and I am satisfied he is an officer. That being the case I say it will take a two-thirds vote to remove him.

The motion to remove was insisted upon and resulted as follows:

Ayes—Beardsley, Folland, "Loof-bourrow, Wantland, Hardy, Karrick, Rich—7.

Nays—Horn, Evans, Moran, Bell—4.

NOT PRESENT.

Messrs. Simmonds and Heise for some unexplained reason took their departure from the council chambers before the matter of removal came up. Adjourned until Tuesday next at 7:30.

FILTH IN FARMING DISTRICTS.

The Semi-Weekly News of 11th Inst. contains an interesting letter from Credenda, of Enterprise, Morgan county, but his comments concerning remarks made at our late Stake conference held in Farmington are not so strictly correct as they should be.

I took notes of a sermon referred to and am better prepared to report what was said than your correspondent, who I am positive got his information in what may be termed a second or third hand manner, and consequently the speaker's remarks and meaning would be very apt to be changed and distorted.

He did not say that Morgan was a dirty little town and that some of the residents "did not know enough to keep clean." He talked rather on general principles and in referring to the lack of wisdom in farmers by allowing filthy corrals, stables, pig-pens, etc., to remain near their dwellings he rather incidentally mentioned Morgan City as being very filthy in this respect, as he had lately visited that locality.

His remarks about their outhouses were similar—and no doubt correct. The mistake was in mentioning one of I presume all the cities and towns in the country similarly situated, in regard to the condition of outhouses.

The immense area of mountain and other range for stock in Morgan County will account for the farming community being compelled to have yard and stable room for such stock.

But a remedy for the outhouse unnecessary nuisance is the moral I wish to again impress on the minds of your readers. In the clean and costly seweraged city of Salt Lake, about 240 steps southwest of the News office, in an open lot, is an outhouse that is almost as strong a nuisance as a putrid dead ox could create, and dozens, perhaps hundreds, more, exist in Salt Lake City.

As the unwelcome news of the gradual approach of cholera will cause your readers to better appreciate an effective and simple remedy for the outhouse nuisance, I will enclose a clipping from the News of June 10th last on the subject of keeping wells secured against worms and other reptiles falling in, also on ventilating houses and the dry earth system. I think it would be a good plan to again publish the cheap and easily manipulated dry earth system therein described.

SOME TIMELY SUGGESTIONS.

Search was recently made for a lost bucket in a well which had been cleaned out only a few months before, and I assisted by flashing the sunlight from a looking-glass to the bottom of the well, and a discovery I then made has prompted me to write the present article.

The bottom of the well was quite thickly covered with dead angle worms, and a fruit can was drawn up containing about three dozen.

A neighbor whose well is shallow and easily cleaned out informed me that he empties his well every few weeks for purpose to clean out the dead angle worms.

An important question here arises for consideration: It is a difficult matter to clean out a deep well with a heavy flow of water, and yet worms, mice and other vermin, also vast quantities of filth, are more apt to be found in such wells. The trouble is that they are not often sought after, and the mischief done is unaccounted for except in injured health.

Some wells are not cleaned out for years in succession and when they are so treated such things are brought to sight as often make one shudder to think what the family has been "taking down" for so long a time.

Bill Nye possibly has written one truth when he stated that a schoolhouse, well cleaned out during his school days, accounted for the mysterious disappearance of the teacher two years before, his body having been found at the bottom of the well with a full supply of dinner buckets and other edibles.

The only remedy, I suppose, is in replacing dry rock walls with stone or brick walls laid in good lime mortar, or cement, for a few feet below the surface, and fitting the frame work with the same material; then with a handily arranged trap-door in the curb, where buckets are used, water can be kept in a reasonably pure condition. If some of your readers who have had experience will tell me through the columns of the News how far below the surface the wall laid in mortar should extend, and furnish any other useful information on the subject, it will be greatly appreciated.

Every town ought to be compelled, either by legal action or taxation, to own a force pump, with suitable hose, specially for this business. It would be another step in the right direction to have it fitted on wheels and supplied with those suitable for use in case of fire where a better organization is not in existence to extinguish fires.

It might be proper here to mention, as a precautionary measure, that unless a very heavy insurance policy is carried, it is a good plan to have water ditches and ditch gates always in good repair, also a few barrels of water, secured against the accidental drowning of children by boards being nailed on the barrels.

A kindred subject to the above is ventilation in private and public houses. Poor ventilation causes the digestive organs to be impaired and in other ways seriously affects the human organization. Our newspapers and preachers ought to call the attention of the public to these things oftener than they do. A presiding officer who does not know that an adult person breathes 600 cubic feet of air in an hour ought to study some work on the laws of health.

I have seen meeting houses packed with suffering humanity for nearly two hours at a time, and only supplied with fresh air from occasionally opened doors or through holes in the windows, the latter caused, no doubt, by thoughtless boys who did not realize that they were thus saving the lives or health of their zealous but also thoughtless parents.

A great evil that ought to be remedied (and the strong arm of the law should be invoked to protect innocent people from suffering thereby) is the unnecessary and yet almost universal and disgraceful practice of not adopting some proper method of attending to our outhouses.

A brief description of an effective and simple mode of doing away with the nuisance is as follows:

Have in the outhouse a box of dry earth and a small shovel. Behind the building there should be a quantity of loose earth on which the ashpan should be emptied. If a roof is over this pile of earth it will be more effective. As often as it is found necessary, dig a hole in the large pile of earth and shovel in the same the contents of the outhouse. Place two stakes in the corners of the hole thus filled and repeat the same all over the surface of the earth mound. Afterwards the plan can be repeated with but little if any unpleasant smell, as the dry earth will soon cause all offensive matter to decompose and mix with the earth. The same earth can be used for several years, it appears, without any particular necessity for changing it. As nothing but labor is involved in carrying out this system, there can be no excuse given by any person for not adopting it. C. T.

FARMINGTON, June 3, 1892.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder M. W. Dalton of Willard City, Box Elder County, gave us a pleasant call today and gave us some interesting particulars about his labors as a missionary in the States and abroad. Elder Dalton left this city on the 28th of December, 1891, in company with Elder Andrew Kimball and spent about one month in Indian Territory. Then he left for England with the special object in view of gathering genealogical data. He visited London, Liverpool, parts of Wales and Ireland. He remained in Dublin about two months and returned home on June 4, 1892, having spent about two months in the Eastern States.

Elder Dalton was very successful on his mission. He obtained over 10,000 names, and having had experience in this kind of work, Brother Dalton was able to say that he will cheerfully assist those who may wish information about the best way of obtaining genealogies, and this without any monetary consideration. He has formed a plan, the details of which will be published here long, for the benefit of those who wish to obtain the names of their ancestors without knowing how to proceed in the matter.

DEATH OF ALMIRA LAUD.

Mrs. Annie Blaylock, of North Ogden, Utah, is just in receipt of the sad intelligence that her mother, Mrs.

Almira Laud, passed away August 11, 1892, near Sodi, Montgomery county, Mississippi, after an illness of several weeks, with dropsy. Many traveling Elders scattered over Utah, Colorado and Idaho, who have often found a welcome in the hospitalities offered by herself and worthy companion, Ence Laud (who preceded her into the great beyond July 30th, 1889), will remember those kindnesses with a silent prayer for the bereaved. Deceased was born in Jasper County, Ga., November 3rd, 1824, and with her companion embraced the Gospel in an early day. She started to Nauvoo about the time of the exodus, but was prevented from reaching there by the then unsettled conditions of the Church. She was re-baptized and confirmed by Elders John W. Gibson, of North Ogden, Utah, and Henry Bartholomew, of Blaterville, June 7th, 1880. She leaves a numerous posterity residing in Miss., Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Utah. A brother of the deceased, Nevias Keith, resides in Fairview, Sanpete County, Utah.

DEATH OF JAMES W. BURBIDGE.

James W. Burbidge, an old and respected resident of the Seventeenth ward, died suddenly of apoplexy at 12:30 this morning. Recently he had been employed as nightwatchman at the Wasatch block, being physically incapacitated to such an extent that he could no longer follow his trade. Last night he prepared to leave home to go on duty as usual and had just stepped outside the door and was proceeding towards the gate when he commenced to reel. In vain he attempted to recover himself and fell heavily to the ground. He was carried back to the house and the usual restoratives applied pending the arrival of Dr. Benedict who was promptly summoned. The doctor made a hurried examination of the patient and declared that the end of his earthly existence was near at hand. This statement proved correct, for he died soon afterwards.

The deceased was born in Bedfordshire, England, February 27, 1837, and came to this Territory in 1854, where he resided until his demise. He was known as a citizen of sterling qualities, was a good husband and an indulgent father. His death will be mourned by many friends.

DEATHS.

WEILER.—In Salt Lake City, September 22nd, 1892, Maria Gais, daughter of E. M. and E. F. Weiler, aged 1 year, 6 months and 11 days.

SMITH.—Died in Salt Lake City, September 25th, 1892, Sarah, relict of the late father Geo. Smith; in the eighty-seventh year of her age.

MANNING.—In the Thirteenth ward, Salt Lake City, Utah, September 21st, 1892, of disease John Manning, aged 71 years, 6 months and 25 days. Deceased was born in Stourbridge, Warwickshire, England.

ROBERTS.—In Salt Lake City, September 17, 1892, of palsy, Owen, son of Evan and Ellen Tudor Roberts. Deceased was born September 28, 1826, at Landowgen, Merionethshire, North Wales; embraced the Gospel in 1847; emigrated to Utah in 1849, and for many years was employed as a stone cutter on the Temple block. During the last eight years of his life he was troubled with paralysis and suffered much. He was a faithful Latter-day Saint. He leaves a wife to mourn his loss.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION

ESTABLISHED TRUTH AND LIBERTY JUNE 1850.

NO. 16. SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1892. VOL. XLV.

COURT AND CHRISTIANITY.

I learn by a late issue of your paper that a reverend gentleman of this city has publicly declared that the courts have decided that "this is a Christian nation." This is such a remarkable statement from a professed Christian minister, that I cannot but express a few thoughts relative to the truth and propriety of such decision if ever made.

The question arises—by virtue of what law could such a judgment be rendered? Courts are supposed to act by authority of and to decide all cases and questions in conformity with law. The actions of courts without law would be extremely ridiculous if not positively absurd.

The Constitution of our country forbids the making of any law "respecting an establishment of religion." Am I to suppose that the Constitution has been wantonly violated; that courts are acting upon unconstitutional provisions? This would be so if the reverend gentleman's statement be correct. Certainly such a condition of things could not add much to the Christian character of the country nor to the reputation of its judiciary.

The fact that neither the judicial nor law-making departments of the country can have anything to do with religion in their official capacity, is perhaps somewhat suggestive of the condition of the country as to its Christianity—a country in which it can have no encouragement from the source indicated. So far as the courts are concerned, infidelity or atheism is just as good, and has the same rights and liberties as Christianity. Why the rev. gentleman should appeal to such a source for defense of the nation's purity is somewhat inexplicable.

Christianity, I freely admit, should be the pride and boast of this great nation; but we must search for and find it elsewhere than in its courts.

The few Christians that are in the land recognize Christ as the Author of their faith; that the doctrines and principles He taught concerning Christianity, and the practice of these principles, are necessary to constitute a true Christian and make men followers of the Christ. This admitted, we find ourselves under the necessity of turning to the Bible and to the ministers of the day to find evidence of our nation's Christianity. We rely upon the Bible as evidence of Christ's life and teachings, and by examining closely we may be able to arrive at just conclusions in reference to our country's claims.

Christ's mission to earth was heralded with the cry of "Peace on earth, good will to man." This was the nature and character of the Gospel taught during His ministry. He strove to reconcile the children of men to God, by their doing His will; and to establish peace and fellowship among men, by bringing them all to a unity of that faith and doctrine which He taught. There was but one faith, one Gospel, and one baptism, to which all must submit, to be recognized by Him as His disciples, obedience to which secured to all the same spirit.

Having the same faith and possessing the same spirit, made men one, even as He and the Father were one. "Except ye are one ye are not mine," is Christ's declaration to his followers. No matter what sect or occupation they came from, His most earnest prayer for them was that they might become one. Without this oneness in faith and spirit there is no positive, practical evidence of Christianity.

To believe that Christ died among men and is the Personage He claimed to be, does not alone make men Christians. Men without any religion, and even devils, believe this much as well as the professed Christian ministers who have lived both in his day and in our day. Both history and tradition have stamped a belief in Christ's life upon the minds of both saint and sinner; but it is no evidence today of a holy life for a man to say he believes in Christ. A life conformable in all things to the doctrine and principles He taught can alone be evidence of love for Him. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; if a man love me he will keep my words; and my Father will love him." So spake Jesus.

That portion of the world called Christian is today, as in Christ's day, divided and subdivided into a multitude of faiths and organizations, all at variance with each other; so much so that many will not commune with another sect or society than their own.

A similar state of things existed in the time of Christ when men were zealous in keeping the law, but He recognized none of them as His in their divided and discordant condition. They were opposed to the oneness and spirit of the Gospel which He taught, and which His followers were required to cherish one towards another.

From the history of the past, and the union required of men in Christ's day, our nation presents a most unchristianlike appearance; and the many sects that are crying "Lo here, and lo there is Christ," are so many evidences that they are indeed anti-Christ in spirit, as well as in the practical development of Christian life.

If Christ were to come again to earth in our day, He would find ample cause to say to the sects, as of yore, "Except ye are one ye are not mine."

Leaving these and many other like scriptural evidences which might be given in support of this cardinal doctrine of Christ, that love, unity, fellowship and perfect communion must characterize the lives of men to make them acceptable to Him, brief reference must be made to the clergy of our day who claim to be ministers of Christ to the people.

They are the class of men who persist in maintaining this constant strife and division, multiplying sect upon sect, society upon society, both recognizing and cultivating the prevailing discordant faiths that constitute our notions of Christianity.

This was a prominent feature of encouragement held out to the few converts made at the late revival meetings held in this city. They could name their own minister, and chose the society with which they would be connected; thus simply consigning converts to a condition of recognized disagreement in church standing and fellowship.

As a class of men, it is pitiable to know they are not what they should be. We do not always find them representing in their lives the life of their Master—the meek and lowly Jesus. Too many of them are educated as other professionals are—for the mere purpose of obtaining a good living by their services. The ministerial circle has not power to claim its ranks from the infancy and criminal disgrace which so frequently appear in the public journals, and which serve to make Christianity a hiss and a byword with the observing mass of the people. There are too many among them who are as willing to send people to hell as to heaven, should they happen to disagree with them as to the way and mode of getting there.

It is a notorious fact that many of the Christian ministers are foremost and unrelenting in their persecution and misrepresentation of other societies as Christian as themselves, when engaged in religious controversy.

It is not beyond recollection that a young man in this Christian nation had faith enough in God when converted to religion, to ask of Him which of the many churches he should join, and when he received answer, and proclaimed it to the world, that he was to join none of them as being the Church of Christ, a storm of persecution arose from these pious, religious leaders that never ceased while he lived, and the few who showed favor to the young man and befriended him, were made sharers with him of the same demoniac hate.

This was in our land of religious liberty, where no law interfered with a man's faith in God, and where no court was supposed to tell men how or what they should worship.

Some ten years since, the crimes committed in one year by ministers, and published in the public papers, were gathered by one man to the number of 261, and these were presumed to be not one-tenth of the actual number perpetrated by the Christian clergy of our nation. These crimes were committed by 202 preachers, who were convicted in the courts and their cases published. This possibly may be the reason why the rev. gentlemen of this city make reference to the courts being competent to decide upon the Christianity of the nation bearing such fruits of righteousness, in which it is alleged that the clergy, as a class, commit more crime in proportion to numbers than any other.

Other instances may be considered; such, for instance, as an internal fratricidal war of years' duration—the despoiling of nearly one-third of the nation by robbery, and by expending millions of money in the noble Christian work of destroying hundreds of thousands of lives and leaving millions of sorrowing wives, children and friends whose cries have ascended to heaven while mourning their loss. Then there is the haughty pride and arrogance that reigns supreme throughout the land in the midst of affluence, while the despised, neglected, starving poor are eking out a miserable existence with none to pity, and to whom death would be a welcome relief. All these, with the daily crimes committed—which are enough to "make the angels weep"—might be put in the scales and weighed in contrast with our nation's excellence, and then let that God, who will not look upon sin with any degree of allowance, instead of the nation's court, decide by the standard of righteousness upon the nation's Christianity.

While, this revolting condition of things exhibits a vast amount of hypocrisy and downright wickedness, we know the nation has a vast number of devout worshippers who reverence God and recognize the mission of Jesus Christ in its true significance as far as their knowledge enables them to comprehend the truth as through Him revealed. These may be considered as the salt of the earth, by virtue of whose influence many may be saved.

Courts may by investigation know something about men's crimes, but their knowledge of men's faith and religion is too trifling to pass a reliable judgment that will secure the endorsement of Christ to their decision.

Christianity is not a matter of mass conventions to be determined by majorities, but is individual property, the value of which can only be appreciated by its possessor. S. W. R.

DIAZ PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.

A DISPATCH from the city of Mexico states that on the 29th inst. Porfirio Diaz was formally declared President of Mexico for the ensuing four years, beginning December 1st. Diaz is certainly the greatest man of the present day in his own country. His record as a statesman, a soldier and patriot is honorable, enviable and noble.

Mexico achieved her independence in 1821. At that time Iturbide tried to set up an empire. The first republic was established, and the first constitution adopted in October, 1824. Two parties, the Centralists and Federalists, then prevailed. The former advocated Spanish interests, the latter liberalism. The struggles of these parties kept the country in a state of civil war for many years. During the war with the United States factionism was for a time suppressed. At the close of this, two parties again appeared, Conservatives and Liberals. The former represented the church and the aristocrats, the latter the advocates of religious freedom and liberal government.

In 1857 the Liberals succeeded in adopting a new constitution, which is now in force. Under it Comonfort and Juarez were elected President and Vice-President. Comonfort developed into a dictator, and was forced to fly the country. Juarez then assumed executive power. The Conservatives, under Miramon, inaugurated civil war, which lasted for three years. Juarez proclaimed the separation of church and state, freedom of opinion, liberty of worship, suppression of monasteries, and confiscation of church property. In December, 1869, the Conservatives were completely subdued, and Juarez was elected president in 1880.

The coalition forces of England, Spain and France landed at Vera Cruz early in 1861. Part of the Conservatives took sides with them, but the remainder joined the Liberals in resisting the invaders. Spain and England became ashamed of their action and withdrew. France remained in the field. It was at the battle of Puebla, May 6th, 1862, that General Diaz distinguished himself against the French, who were defeated. In 1868 another battle was fought; Diaz was captured by the French, but escaped. Juarez and his cabinet retired to Paso del Norte. The French took possession of Mexico, and proclaimed Maximilian Emperor.

Meantime Diaz was not idle. He assumed the leadership of his people against the invaders, and fought at every point, until he carried by storm Puebla, a Maximilian stronghold, in 1867. Shortly after, the City of Mexico surrendered to Diaz. This ended French rule. Juarez was elected President. Four years after he was re-elected, it is said, by an air means. A revolution occurred, in which Diaz figured. Juarez died in 1872 and peace was restored. Lerdo de Tejada succeeded him.

In 1876 a revolution occurred again, the partisans of Diaz and Lerdo taking part. Diaz escaped to New Orleans, but returned soon after to Mexico, raised an army and drove Lerdo out of the country. Diaz was elected President in 1877, and if we remember aright is now entering on his fourth term as President of the Mexican Republic. The advance which that country has made since 1877 is marvelous. The Garza revolution was said to be inspired by the Catholic Church for the removal of Diaz, but the Diaz people themselves deny this, and say it was only the folly and rashness of a few adventurers in politics.

OUR CRITICISM OF THE UTAH COMMISSION.

THE "Liberal" organ is viciously angry again because we have exposed the jerryd of the Utah Commission in their misleading official report. It calls names with all its old malignity, and evades the points at issue with its accustomed shiftiness. It does not matter though. The public have become familiar with its methods and epithets which might mean something in a respectable paper, but are regarded as so much expletive and nothing more when they are voided by the Tribune.

Calling the DESERET NEWS a liar, of any age or description, will not settle the facts. They are, that the Commissioners have done their utmost to impress upon the government and the country the idea that new polygamous marriages are being contracted, and hundreds of cases of unlawful association are occurring in Utah in the face of the manifesto. That they have endeavored to forty three false charges, preferred in such a way as to escape criminal responsibility for making them, by figures which misrepresent the truth. That they have endeavored to besmirch gentlemen who have given evidence of the wrong-doing of the Commission, and have officially denied facts that are well known and susceptible of positive proof. That they have adopted the methods and the arts of the cheap pettifogger and political trickster. And that all we have shown against them is supported by their official report.

The court records are the best evidence of our statements in regard to the cases which the Commissioners have tabulated. They will substantiate all that we have urged in this respect. No billingsgate of the Tribune's will wipe them out or reconcile them with the charges of the Commissioners. The answer to their query of what object they could have in view in narrating falsehoods, is in their evident desire to keep hold of their soft seats and their lucrative salaries, to which they cling as tenaciously as though the emoluments had not been cut down to a clerk's stipend.

They cannot escape the criticism which their paltry and untruthful effort will provoke when the truth is made clear, and we do not propose to be silent when it is necessary to expose them. We certainly will not be deterred from doing anything that appears to be our duty, because it provokes the "Liberal" organ to the use of language which exhibits its naturally brutal and mendacious disposition.

PRACTICE VS. PROFESSION.

The fundamental principle of Christianity is self-sacrifice for the good of others. It received its perfect exemplification in Christ, who by His life of self-abnegation and His ignominious death, manifested a love which embraced the whole human race. To be a Christian is, so far as possible, to put aside the selfishness of the world and follow His example. Those who are imbued with His spirit take within the embrace of their solicitude the human family. The adoption of the whole life-example of Jesus of Nazareth brings out all that is noble and beautiful in the human character, because to become Christ-like is to reach the closest possible proximity to the perfection of goodness.

These reflections are superinduced by incidents which exemplify the direct opposite of Christian characteristics. When these tendencies are exhibited by people who, according to their profession, ought to stand out prominently as shining examples for their less conspicuous fellows to imitate, the spectacle is all the more sad. As a case in point it may not be amiss to refer to a part of a letter, heretofore published in this journal, written by the Rev. J. Westey Hill and addressed to a Methodist friend of his in South Carolina. Speaking of the Latter-day Saint Elders laboring in the South he said: "Those missionaries should be whipped out of your community." In the Salt Lake Tribune of this morning there is what purports to be an interview between a representative of that paper and Hill. In it this passage occurs:

"Mr. Hill was pleased to learn that his letter to the South Carolina people had had such a praiseworthy result. The holy elders were given a few hours with which to get out of town, and they got, rather than stay and be tarred and feathered."

We regard the act of incitement to whip the Elders as a crime, not only from a moral, but also from what ought to be its not a legal standpoint. This proposition needs no argument to sustain it. The gloating of this person over the mobocratic and liberty-depriving results of his diabolical machinations, renders the offense doubly revolting. The fact that he not only professes to be a Christian but a teacher of the principles enunciated by the meek and lowly Nazarene renders his conduct without the shadow of an excuse.

We have been gratified at hearing expressions of unqualified condemnation of Mr. Hill's attempts to incite persecution against the Elders in the South from non-"Mormons," some of the latter being connected with the church of which Mr. Hill professes to be a clergyman.

MURDERED BY APACHES.

A LETTER from Apostle George Teasdale, written at Colonia Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico, dated September 20th, gives the details of a shocking tragedy, which occurred at the adjacent settlement of Pacheco. The story is told in the following extracts from two letters from Bishop Jesse N. Smith to Brother Teasdale, and which reached the latter by courier:

"PACHECO, Monday, September 19th, 1892.—I send courier to inform you that our outkirk have been attacked by Apaches. The wife and elder son of Brother Hans Thomsen were killed this morning at Brother Pratt's place, and the younger son now lies at the point of death, being shot through. We have taken steps to gather in all scattered families to this place."

The following was received later by Brother Teasdale:

"PACHECO, Monday, Sept. 19, 1892—10:30 p. m.

"Further particulars are received regarding the terrible tragedy at Brother Pratt's place this morning. Brother Thomsen had left home last evening and came up here to work on the threshing. Just after breakfast this morning his boys had started to the field and when near the corral, where they had gone to feed the pigs, they were fired upon from behind the stable. The older boy Hyrum was shot down and killed. The younger one and the little girl, who had gone to carry the feed pail back to the house, ran towards the house, where the other boy was also shot down from behind the cellar. The little girl, aged perhaps about ten years, was un-molested. The mother was then killed in the door yard, I believe, and the Indians entered the house. Meanwhile the younger boy had slipped away, although severely wounded, and secreted himself where he could see the entire proceedings. The little girl was pushed or tripped when she interfered with them, but was not harmed. While the Indians were ransacking the house, she ran to her brother and possibly thus saved herself from being made a prisoner. The Indians took all the bedding, including feather and straw beds, which were emptied upon the ground; all the clothing, burning boxes and cutting valises. All the ammunition, guns, and perhaps fifteen head of horses. They started northward, toward the head of the Tinaja Wash. Couriers have been sent to San Pedro and Corrales, in the hope that parties from there can intercept them. We will also send a posse on the trail, under the leadership of Brother George C. Williams, early in the morning. The boy reports that there were five Indians, one squaw and one papoose in the party. They are probably headed for the United States."

Brother Teasdale's letter states that vigorous steps had been taken to pursue and capture the murderers, and that Mexican officials had tendered assistance.

THE account of the murderous attack by Apache Indians on a family of Latter-day Saints in Mexico, published in yesterday's issue, has caused much interest to be felt in the affair and intense sympathy to be awakened for the survivors of the tragedy. The locality of the scene was not at the Pacheco settlement, but at Cliff ranch, twelve miles north of that place. We are enabled to present additional details embodied in the following extract from a letter from Brother Joseph C. Bentley, written at Juarez and bearing date of September 20th:

"Hans A. Tomson and family, formerly of St. Johns, Arizona, have been living on the ranch for some time past, and last Sunday evening Brother Tomson left for Pacheco to start work on the threshing next day, leaving his wife, two sons and little granddaughter at home. Early Monday morning the Indians, seven or eight in number, surrounded the house, and while the two boys and little girl were feeding the pigs, opened fire on them from behind the barn, killing the elder son Hyrum, aged about seventeen years. The other boy, Elmer, aged about fourteen years, and little girl started to run for the house, when a shot from the corral entered the boy's right side, causing him to fall to the ground. The Indians then rushed for the house, threw the little girl to one side, and meeting Sister Tomson in the door yard shot her, but finding the shot did not cause instant death, picked up a rock and mashed her head with it. They then entered the house, cut open beds, valises and burst open trunks, carrying away to where their animals were guarded by a squaw and papoose all the clothing, guns, ammunition, saddles, etc., they could find, and returned the second time to search for the little girl, whose life they had spared, evidently intending to carry her off a prisoner. The boy after falling managed to crawl into the chicken coop, while the Indians were in the house, where he found his little niece. Here they had remained watching the proceedings of the terrible affair through the chinks of the log coop. After the Indians returned the second time and found the little girl had escaped, they went to the corral and drove off fifteen head of good horses. When they were well out of sight the boy and girl crept out of their hiding place and started for the ranch of brother George C. Williams, some three or four miles distant, to give the alarm, but the boy soon fainted from the effects of his wound and the little girl was left alone to make her way the best she could. On her way she met Brother Sullivan Richardson, who returned to the wounded boy and immediately conveyed them both to Brother Williams' ranch and despatched a messenger to Pacheco. Word has just arrived to the effect that the wounded boy has died."

WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The West Virginia conference was held on Saturday and Sunday, September 3rd and 4th, President Layton presiding. Meeting convened at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. President Kimball was the first speaker. Elders Whitehead, Cranny and Brown occupied the remainder of the time.

Two meetings were held on Sunday. Elders Layton, Taylor, Butler, Head, Kroger, Cullmor, Little and President Kimball were the speakers. The two first meetings were poorly attended on account of other meetings in the neighborhood.

In response to an invitation by T. H. B. Shouder, the Elders and several Saints from neighboring counties met at his residence, where a very interesting meeting took place. President Kimball gave some good advice to all present. The remainder of the evening was made pleasant by songs and recitations.

President Layton and Bro. Head were appointed to labor in Kanawha and Jackson counties, Elders Taylor and Brown in Kanawha and Clay, Elders Butler and Little in Pendleton, Randolph and Tucker, Elders Whitehead and Cullmor in Grant, Mineral, Hampshire, Elders Cranny and Kroger in Upshire.

NICHOLAS WEBSTER,
MOUNT LOOKOUT, September 3rd.

Two Italians were fined $10 each in New York recently for firing at the statue of Garibaldi in Washington square. It is evident all Italians do not believe in the red-shirted hero.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, . . . $2.50
Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, . . . 1.50
IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, . . . October 8, 1892.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

In the article on "The Spirit of Man," published on Tuesday evening, we gave some interesting extracts from a paper furnished by Mr. F. W. Myers to the Society of Psychical Research. There was one part of the experience of Dr. Witte which was inadvertently omitted. As the article seems to have attracted considerable attention we here supply the omitted portion. It will be remembered by readers of the article that Dr. Witte, after experiencing the sensations of death, found himself out of the body, a man, somewhat larger than when in the body, and beholding it lying on the death bed, with weeping relatives around. He passed out into the street and took note of its appearances and surroundings. So light and joyful did he feel that he fairly danced with glee. The narrative goes on to say:

"Then noticed that he could see the back of his coat with the eyes of his old body, while the spiritual eyes were looking forward. He discovered that a small cord like the thread of a spider's web ran from his shoulders back to his body, and was attached to it at the base of the neck in front. Then he went through the air upheld by a pair of hands, which he could feel pressing lightly on his sides. He traveled at a swift but pleasant rate of speed until he arrived on a narrow but well-built roadway inclined upward at an angle of 25 degrees. It was about as far above the roadway as it was below the clouds. The roadway seemed to have no support, but was built of milky quartz and white sand. Feeling very lonely, he looked for a companion, and as a man dies every twenty minutes, he thought he ought not to have to wait long. But he could see no one. At last, when he was beginning to feel very miserable, a face full of ineffable love and tenderness appeared to him. Right in front of him he saw three prodigious rocks blocking the road. A voice spoke to him from a thunder-cloud, saying: 'This is the road to the Eternal World; once you pass them, you can no more return to the body.' There were four entrances, one very dark, the other three led into a cool, quiet and beautiful country. He desired to go in, but when he reached the exact center of the rock he was suddenly stopped. He became unconscious again; and when he awoke he was lying in his bed. He awoke to consciousness and soon recovered. He wrote out this narrative eight weeks after his strange experience, but he told the story to those at the bedside as soon as he revived. The doctor who was at the bedside said that the breath was absolutely extinct so far as could be observed, and every symptom marking the patient as dead was present. 'I supposed at one time that he was actually dead, as fully as I ever supposed any one to be dead.'"

What exists in the sphere beyond the barriers to the spirit world, no person who has returned to the body after a temporary separation like that described by Dr. Witte can explain. The so-called revelations of spiritualism are vague and unreliable, most of them are "glittering generalities" without definite information, and, granting that any of them are communications from the unseen world, there is nothing to prove positively that they come from the persons pretended or that they may not be designed by fallen spirits to deceive mankind.

None of these communications demonstrate immortality. They may help to prove the conscious existence of the spirit after the death of the body, but they do not prove that such existence is eternal. It is only by the revelations of God that the mysteries of the eternal world are brought to light, and it is only by the aid of the Spirit of Truth that they can be fully comprehended. We are living in an age of revelation and as it advances the revelations of science will come to the aid of the revelations of religious truths and together they will flood the world with the light and knowledge of things both temporal and eternal.

VALEDICTORY.

THE transfer of the DESERET NEWS and all its effects to a new company brings my connection with the paper to an end. For more than fifteen years I have devoted my energies, influence and what talents I possess to the editorial department of this journal. My personal interests, health and convenience have been subordinate considerations in view of the duty which its conduct imposed upon me. It was a labor of love. The DESERET NEWS has ever been the champion of truth and liberty and particularly of the rights and interests of the people of Utah, the defender of the faith of the Latter-day Saints, and the exponent of the principles and discipline of the Church. It has been my aim and desire to represent these principles and support these interests with all the vigor and persistence which so great a cause should command. That I have met with some degree of success appears in the many expressions of approbation and confidence which I have received, particularly of late, and which are far more valuable to me than riches. For twelve years I have had the editorial charge of the Daily, Semi-Weekly and Weekly DESERET NEWS, and have been aided by a corps of talented, faithful and diligent assistants, with whom I have been on the most friendly terms, and whose work I now most cordially commend. Of my associate editor, Elder John Nicholson, who also retires from this office, I cannot speak but in terms of the highest praise. The soul of honor and integrity, a man of sound judgment and unswerving faith, he has given his whole force of mind and character to the promotion of the public welfare, which has been identified with the DESERET NEWS. I part with these gentlemen with profound regret and with the same feeling I close my communications to the public through these columns. However, I do not expect to cease my labors in behalf of the people and the cause which are dearer to me than life. I trust I shall be ever found upon their side, and expect that my voice and pen will still be used in their service. Soliciting for the new company the support of the public, and desiring the happiness and prosperity of the people whose welfare I have sought nearly all my life, I bid them, editorially, an affectionate farewell.

CHARLES W. PENROSE.

CATHOLIC AGGRESSIVENESS.

THE German Catholic convention which has been in session during the last few days at Newark, N. J., gives additional proof of the fact that the additional proof of the fact that the Catholic church has been, during the last few years, pursuing an aggressive "plan of campaign" all over the world, and especially in this country. The resolutions of the Newark gathering appear to be of an exceedingly radical character, and in several respects somewhat crude. They express uncompromising adherence to whatever St. Peter endorsed and repudiation of what he did not take kindly to. It is difficult to see the necessity of dragging the worthy ancient Apostle into the questions and controversies which are now agitating the religious and political world, seeing that conditions are so radically changed since he held the presidency on earth of the true Church of Christ. We rather imagine that he would be more than likely to repudiate the resolutions which refer to him were the matter to be actually placed before him and he were to act on it.

The resolutions are of a similar trend to those passed a couple of years ago at the Catholic laymen's conference at Baltimore. They favor the resumption of the temporal power of the Pope, full submission to the church and pontiff, and complete papal independence—non-interference—legality with the head of the Catholic organization.

One feature which is most threatening to the welfare of the country is the openly declared intention of the convention that candidates for office who oppose Catholic interests will be denounced at the polls, as Romanists will vote against them. That church is by far the most powerful of any of the sects in this nation, and the use of the ballot to support its interests will yet cause a church and state question to arise in the country that will lead to serious trouble, if not to bloodshed.

Quite recently Catholic resolutions denunciatory of Senator Davis were adopted. This action was taken because of his having, in the course of an argument against the passage of the Chinese exclusion bill, pointed out the greater danger to the country from Catholic immigration and schemes to denationalize America. The strictures passed upon him demanded that he retract his statements or he would be knifed at the polls by the Catholics. The senator's utterances which were excepted to were directed specially against what is called the Cabanely scheme. Seeing that the subject has been lately revived, it may not be amiss to reproduce some of the remarks made by him in the discussion upon the bill referred to. He said, as reported in the Congressional Record:

"I said a few moments ago the Chinese government is not seeking to take possession of our institutions. It has no such desire. It does not care to see its people go abroad; it requires them to come back. I wish, Mr. President, the case were so all over the rest of the world. I wish that in another continent, where the authorities are willing that certain classes of their people may be suffered to come to this country, they would not seek to possess themselves of our institutions or unduly to influence them. There is more matter for profound concern in the attempts of Herr Cahensly made last year to denationalize American institutions and plant as many nations as there are people of foreign tongues in our midst than in all the Chinese questions which have arisen since 1858. He proposes to use the power of the Catholic hierarchy to bring about this great political result."

Senator Davis quoted liberally on the occasion from Herr Cahensly's memorial to the Vatican. The following is a portion of what he read:

"The want of representatives of the different nationalities of emigrants in the episcopate.

"As every nationality has its own characteristics, its own habits and customs, it is important also that the priests should not only speak the language of the emigrants, but that they should be of the very same nation. Hence it is desirable that every different national group of emigrants should be organized into a distinct parish, with a priest of his own nationality.

"Some are of the opinion that the language can not be kept beyond the second generation, and that the grandchildren of the emigrants will certainly speak nothing but English. The facts of experience offer triumphant objections to this opinion."

Senator Davis having declined to make the retraction demanded, it will probably be impossible for him to be re-elected. This incident indicates that if the Catholic church were to develop sufficient strength it would practically govern this country.

A CUMBERSOME AND COSTLY SCHEME

The bill drawn up by the Health Commissioner and which he intends to press for adoption by the City Council, needs close scrutiny and some changes before it is put into the force of an ordinance. Its text will be found in another column. It consists of two parts; one in relation to wells, the other to vaults and cesspools.

It will be seen on close examination, that under its provisions no present well, however excellent it may be in every particular, can be used to furnish drinking water in any part of this city.

The bill proposes to make every person whose property abuts on or has access to the city water system, either connect with that system within thirty days, or make a well as this scheme requires. He must not use any well he has, nor go without. He must feed the plumbers or contribute to the city treasury by way of fine. No person is to be allowed to take a drink from any well that is not piped with iron and is not a hundred feet deep or such below an impermeable formation. Nor must he construct even such a well without a permit from the board of health and without inspection by an officer.

Every vault and cesspool has to be made of certain dimensions, of brick or stone, with cement mortar and plastered with cement inside and made perfectly water tight. Dry earth closets may be permitted above ground but not below. These vaults must also be constructed under permits and inspections from city officers.

Both provisions require needless expense, and appear to be framed for the purpose of pestering and annoying property holders and making work for plumbers, masons, inspectors and others. A ground vault properly dug, treated to dry earth when needful, is far less of a nuisance than a water-tight brick or stone receptacle. A well properly walled up does not need to be iron plated, and may have a pure spring of healthful water at far less than a hundred feet deep.

The City Council ought to do all that is reasonable to preserve the public health, but it should not be played upon by any public officer to introduce laws that are unnecessary and impose upon the taxpayers additional burdens which will be resented throughout the city.

We believe there are vile nuisances that ought to be abated and some wells that ought to be filled up. But these can be attended to under present ordinances and proper inspection. There is no need to resort to a scheme that will pile up expenses mountains high, to make a harvest for plumbers and public officials. It is a good scheme to sit down upon.

RAILROADS IN TROUBLE.

TRouble still continues among the transcontinental railroads. The Union Pacific has been ordered by the Commissioners of the Western Traffic Association to restore rates to points in Montana to what they were some time ago. It will disobey the order, and leave the association sooner than adopt a course which would only benefit the northern trunk lines. In fact the association is already virtually defunct, and it is only a matter of time when its demise will be officially announced.

The system of pooling which has prevailed for some time among railroads is in a transition state, and a new plan must soon take its place. The Pacific Mail Steamship company has been paid annually for many years the sum of $550,000, for the sole purpose of keeping up rates by land. The Californian people have endeavored to liberate themselves from the railroad thra'dom which enveloped them. In October, 1891, they organized a Traffic association for the special purpose of freeing themselves. Arrangements were made with two lines of oiler ships to transport freight between the Atlantic and Pacific. This was the thin end of the wedge, and now the whole fabric of railroad monopoly is on the point of falling, if it has not already fallen, to the ground. Besides, the Tehuantepec railroad is now an assured fact. This means another route to the Pacific, and it will then be almost impossible to maintain a transcontinental railroad monopoly.

THERE are in America 25,000 newspapers, and on them are employed 200,000 persons.

MARRIAGE AMONG THE JEWS.

THE St. Joseph, Mo., Herald has the following in regard to the marriage relations of the Jews, who are popularly supposed to have abandoned many centuries ago the plural form of matrimony that existed among their forefathers for ages side by side with monogamy:

"It was during the reign of the first Napoleon, about 1807, when the Jews abolished polygamy at one of the greatest councils, or Sanhedrims, ever held by that body of religionists in modern times. Up to then polygamy had been quietly practiced by them in such a manner as to attract no attention to the communities they resided among. This act of the Jews at their assemblage attracted much attention at the time, but the fact has been almost forgotten."

A FEMALE PUGILIST

THE following is from the Milwaukee correspondence of an eastern paper:

"Hattie Leslie, known in private life as Mrs. Lizzie Spont, who claimed the title of 'champion woman pugilist of the world,' died at 7 o'clock yesterday morning in the Exchange hotel of typhoid fever. The husband will accompany the remains to Buffalo for interment there. Hattie Leslie was born in Buffalo, Nov. 14, 1868, and first obtained pugilistic notoriety when she defeated Alice Leary on Navy Island, in Canada, for it is said, $500 and the championship. Mrs. Spont had been filling a week's engagement at the People's theatre in Milwaukee giving sparring exhibitions with a male opponent."

A SILVER STATUE OF JUSTICE.

MONTANA has offered to erect a silver statue eight feet high and costing $50,000, standing on a pedestal of pure gold worth $250,000. Miss Ada Rehan has been accepted as the model of this statue, which will be called Justice. The sculptor is R. H. Park, who will receive $10,000 for his work.

The figure will represent Miss Rehan standing on the globe, with one foot resting on the continent of North America. In her right hand she will hold a sword, and in her left scales regularly balanced with gold and silver.

Miss Ada Rehan is a well known actress, and is said to be physically a perfect type of beauty, harmony and proportion.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

It is supposed that railroads in the British Islands are operated on a more conservative basis than those in this country. It is also supposed that the British road is more free from accidents, and that employees there are less liable to bodily injury. According to the report of the British Board of Trade the accidents to railway employees in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland during 1891 were: killed 549, injured 3,161. According to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, accidents to railway employees in the United States during 1891 were: killed 2,451, injured 22,394. But then it must be remembered the mileage of British roads is about 20,000 miles, as compared with 166,500 in this country.

That is, our mileage is nearly eight times as large as that of Great Britain, while our accidents in proportion to mileage are much less. On America's 155,500 miles, 2,451 persons were killed; on England's 20,000 miles 549 were killed. On the mileage proportion that would make 4,249 deaths on 155,500 miles of road.

A ROAD TO MORGAN COUNTY.

THE proposition to open the road up City Creek canyon so as to meet a road from Morgan County and thus open up direct communication between that county and this city, will strike most people here as a good one. We understand that the city owns the road as far as it is proposed to be opened at municipal expense. If that is so we see no valid objection to the making of the road at the cost of the city. The benefits that would accrue will be perceptible to everybody. The only detriment we have heard suggested is that traffic up and down the canyon will below the waters of City Creek, and thus injure the people who use them for culinary purposes. This danger, we think, is rather far-fetched. It is only in a few places that the creek is exposed to anything of this kind, and we are of the opinion that they can be guarded against it, while proper screening at the water works will purify the waters and prevent the injury anticipated. It is said the Mayor will veto the measure. When his reasons are heard it will be time enough to determine definitely what is best for the public welfare.

HOW THE CHOLERA EFFECTS PRICES

THE cholera scare has the effect of calling the attention of the American people as a whole to the close relationship between their country and foreign nations. First, accounts of incoming steamers telegraphed to every hamlet and town in the United States directed attention to the extent of foreign immigration. It was found that half a dozen vessels a week arrived in New York, each bringing from 500 to 1000 steerage passengers, hailing from every clime from the Mediterranean to the Polar sea. Of course, figures are regularly published relating to immigration, and we are told that 500,000 persons annually land on our shores, and so on. But figures presented in this way do not strike the public ear. In the same manner as those furnished during the past two months. For instance, it was shown how the price of writing paper went up a day or two ago, because of the embargo in rage. Now comes a report from New York that sugar has gone up one cent a pound owing to the cholera scare. The large refiners depend on raw material from abroad. Germany and Austria supply great quantities of beet sugar in a crude form. The Dutch West Indies also supply crude cane sugar. In this form the sugar is a favorite cargo with ship-masters. The article is packed in sacks. It is very heavy and answers excellently for ballast, while at the same time it affords a handsome revenue. Imports in this line are all but suspended. The Havemeyer refinery of New York, with a capacity of 800 barrels daily, is about to shut down, owing to the difficulty of obtaining raw material. These little incidents show forcibly the extent and sensitiveness of our relations with foreign countries. The prices of olives, raisins, cardines, prunes, figs, and in fact all kinds of imported dried fruits are ascending.

SUBSIDY A FAILURE.

In 1885 the government of Germany adopted a system of subsidizing ships for the purpose of extending commerce, and strengthening her merchant marine. A line was established between Germany and India, one between China and Japan, one to Australia, and one between Trieste and Egypt. The government subsidies paid aggregated about $1,000,000 annually. After over 6 years of trial the government has discontinued the subsidies, and the shipping interests revert to the old plan of individual efforts.

It is presumed the abandonment must have been occasioned by the fact that the payment of subsidies brought no corresponding benefits to the nation or its people, while positively it benefited individual ship owners and masters.

A GREAT LAND CASE.

AN exchange refers to a case which comes up in the Denver courts October 15th next, as one of the greatest land claim suits on record. The case involves a tract of land in Salt River Valley, Ariz., fifty miles long by one hundred and fifty wide, containing 7,450,000 acres.

From existing records in Guadalajara, Mexico, it is seen that this land was granted in 1742 by Emperor Ferdinand of Spain to Don Miguel Peralta, Baron of Colorado. His sole heir and descendant is a Mrs. Reavis of Missouri, in whose name the contest is to be made. By the terms of the Hidalgo treaty all the old Mexican titles are guaranteed by the United States Government, and if contestee is successful she will be paid $1.25 per acre for land occupied by settlers.

The grant includes the Pima Indian reservation, the White Mountain Indian reservation, and several valuable mining districts. There is a large stone at one corner of the tract. It was used by the Spanish surveyors as the beginning point of their work, and on its surface is traced a rude map of the survey.

The grant of 1742 was confirmed in 1773 by Carlos the Second. Persons living on the land, however, need be in no way disturbed. They are fully protected in their individual rights whichever way the case terminates.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 2.—Dr. Gardner reports Mrs. Harrison resting well and improving.

POLITICAL HATS.

WE have never been struck with admiration for the custom which largely obtains among politicians of wearing hats and neckties bearing the names of different candidates. It is a rather ostentatious way of worshipping a political idol. However, this is a mere matter of taste which all are free to indulge or otherwise, according to preference.

There are situations in which it would be more consistent to dispense with these preferential symbols of political devotion than to wear them. We now have special reference to conspicuous head gear. Those who usually wear emblematical hats would do well to put them aside when they go to attend religious services, Sunday schools and gatherings of that class. When a man goes to church or to attend to religious duties and observances it is just as well that he lay away every suggestion of worldliness, or association with that which is indicative of existing difference. This allusion does not apply to gentlemen who have no other than Cleveland or Harrison hats with which to cover their caputs.

PERFDY OF THE UTAH COMMISSION.

THE grand jury of the First Judicial District, sitting at Ogden, in their latest report, unfortunately severely on the undue attempts made to put innocent persons to trouble and expense, through alleged infractions of the anti-polygamy laws. They said:

"There is a matter which we desire to call your honor's particular attention to, and that is the great number of witnesses that are brought here at the expense of the Territory and the government, whose testimony is absolutely worthless and on which no indictment can be found. We understand this matter has been reported on by former grand juries, but the fact still remains that these witnesses are brought here from long distances, and their testimony cannot be used after it is brought before the grand jury.

"It seems to us that there must be persons in authority whose business it is to look into these matters and see that this enormous expense is not contracted in entirely groundless cases. There seems to be a disposition on the part of the committing magistrates to send everything no matter how trivial, to the grand jury to investigate, when the cases come under their proper jurisdiction and ought to be heard and determined by them. This, aside from the item of expense to the government, renders the work of the grand jury more arduous and tiresome than there is any need of.

"We understand it is the custom of the United States commissioners to accompany the deputy marshals and assist them in making arrests under the Edmunds-Tucker act at all hours of the night. This, we submit, is undignified, and makes these arrests savor more of persecution than legitimate prosecution."

This ought to make good reading for the Utah Commission. In the report of that body, framed for the evident purpose of creating new prejudice against the "Mormon" people, and of retaining offices which are supposed to be beneficial for the suppression of poly-amy, the numbers of persons arrested, indicted, acquitted or convicted, are tabulated in a very misleading manner. Most of the cases were of very long standing which had not been brought to trial for various reasons.

Among the number tabled as "acquitted" were scores of cases which in truth were dismissed on motion of the prosecuting officer, because there was not sufficient evidence to bring them to trial. At the last term of court at Ogden there were thirty-nine such cases dismissed. They were sent up on insufficient evidence, in the way the grand jury deprecated so strongly, and ought never to have gone beyond Commissioners' courts where they were originally heard.

When, it is well known here that a large number of those cases tabled as "convictions," were old cases in which the defendants pleaded guilty to a technical infraction of the law, and were either fined a small amount or sentenced to pay the costs, because they had ceased to violate the law against unlawful cohabitation and promised to obey it in future.

The tricky and cunning Commissioners carefully concealed these facts, and put the matter in the way that seemed most likely to do damage to the cause of the "Mormon" people and justify a fresh outbreak of popular opinion against the Church, while it would be a virtual argument for the retention of the Commissioners in their easy offices.

This is clear from the comments made by many of the leading newspapers of the country, which have been deceived and misled by the report of the Commissioners. They have overlooked the manner in which the charges of new polygamy cases is conveyed, and state that the condition of affairs hinted at by the Commission is actual.

We call the attention of our contemporaries who desire to be just to the fact that the Commissioners merely give voice to a pretended belief, and do not assert anything definite. They say they have information concerning fifteen male persons who "it is believed" have recently contracted polygamous marriages. But they do not say they believe it themselves, they do not say who does believe it, they will not give the names of the male persons thus covertly accused, nor of those who are alleged to have accused them. They acted in the same cowardly manner last year, refusing to make a specific charge and have made themselves simply retailers of village scandal, repeaters of groundless gossip, dispersers of the broth of slander and all for a mercenary and malignant purpose.

Measures should be taken to show them up in quarters where they desire most to appear needful to good government, and their falsehood and folly ought to be made manifest throughout the land.

WHAT NEXT WILL THE LIBERAL COUNCIL DO?

The action taken by the City Council in Tuesday evening in relation to the suit against the bogus members of the Council, was, to say the least, peculiar. By "Liberal" trickery six gentlemen, duly elected to the Council in 1890, were kept out of their offices for the greater part of their term, and six "Liberals," who were not elected, were admitted and kept in the seats to which they had no right. The whole affair was disgraceful to the officials and their dictator and boss who manipulated it.

The courts decided the legality of the claims of the gentlemen elected, and the six "Liberals" were ousted, after securing the salaries for many months, which they had no right to be paid. The legal incumbents demanded of the city the emoluments of the offices of which they had been defrauded. The Council refused to pay. Thereupon suit was entered against the individuals who had illegally received the money.

They are in no sense a part of the city government. They have long since ceased to have even the fraudulent connection with it which their "Liberal" associates helped them to maintain. Yet the present Council, or the "Liberal" majority of it, has voted to instruct the City Attorney to defend the suit against these private individuals at the city's expense. That the Council has not the shadow of a right to do this, must be clear to every rational person. But the wrong of the thing is the more aggravated from the fact that the City Attorney had previously given his official opinion that the city was not responsible in any way for the money sued for, but the defendants were as individual citizens. The City Attorney called the Council's attention to this fact, yet it not only insisted upon the city's defending these private persons, but that the City Attorney should conduct their case, although conceding that he might have his assistant appear in it.

There is nothing in the ordinance defining the duties of the City Attorney which will justify this prostitution of his power as a city officer. He is to "prosecute and defend in all courts in all actions on behalf of the city; and defend in all actions against any officer or agent of the city on account of official acts." But these persons whom he has been instructed to defend are not and never were "officers or agents of the city," but were usurpers; and they are not to be defended "on account of official acts," but in a suit to recover from them funds illegally obtained.

The charter of the city authorizes the Council to require of the city officers additional duties to those prescribed in the charter, but the Council must do this by ordinance. The ordinance gives no definition of the attorney's duties which will cover the action now required of him to take. He has no more right to defend those usurpers of office in this case, than to appear as City Attorney, at the city's expense, for a stranger sued for an ordinary debt.

The attorney very properly protested against the course of the majority of the Council, and his legal opinion, furnished at their request is evidently sound. Any private citizen who is proceeded against in a civil court has as much right to the services of the City Attorney in his defense, as have the men who are now sued to compel them to disgorge their unlawfully gotten gains from the public treasury. The Council exceeded its powers, and the attorney would be fully justified in refusing to act as directed.

NEW RAILWAY INVENTION.

MR. WM. T. SHAFFER, of Evanston, Wyo., is a man of unusual versatility. He was formerly editor of the Chief, a position he occupied for several years; has tried his hand at poetry; is now the treasurer of Uinta County and has lately entered the field of invention.

His latest production in the last named line of his mental activity is a railroad device of novel construction. It is, in most of its features, distinct from any of the systems now in operation. Mr. Shaffer obtained a government patent on his railroad contrivance in the early part of the present year. Plans of it upon a regular comparative scale have been drawn by Mr. Wm. J. Silver, who is himself an inventor and one of the most ingenious and progressive engineers in the United States. Mr. Shaffer is now having a perfect model of his device constructed. When it is completed he expects to give public demonstrations of the correctness of the principles of his proposed railroad by operating it upon a small scale by means of the model.

To enter into descriptive details of this production of the Evanston inventor would take up too much space; consequently we will only attempt to give a general idea of its character. Instead of running on the surface of the ground, as with ordinary lines, the car is suspended and glides along without touching terra firma. Instead of the wheels being underneath they are above the coach and run in a straight consecutive line, in the form of two trucks. The wheels run on a single rail, from which the car is suspended. This rail, which thus bears the entire weight of the train, is sustained by a framework of suitable strength. There are two other rails slightly below the parallel of the bottom of the car; other wheels which revolve horizontally run on those rails, and thus the car is kept in position. All of the wheels—upper and lower—are so constructed as to give sufficient play to admit of easy passage along curves.

The car itself is of ingenious construction. Being suspended from the top rail after the fashion of a pack-saddle on the backbone of a mule, it is necessarily divided lengthwise into two compartments. A row of double seats runs along the outer wall of each division, the aisle being parallel with the inner wall. An interesting feature of the construction of the car is the method by which the inventor has provided for communication between the two sections of the coach. This is effected by means of a cupola on top and between. This of itself forms a small compartment, and can be reached by a stairway leading from each division.

As a matter of course the inventor does not claim that his railroad is suited for heavy freightage, but he does hold that it is admirably adapted for passenger traffic, and for small parcel and mail carriage. He claims also that any desired rate of speed, up to 200 miles an hour could be attained by it and that it is just the thing for use in populous cities. According to Mr. Shaffer's estimate it would, if adopted, evidently give a tremendous boom to suburban property, and real estate dealers would have special cause to rise up and call him blessed.

The inventor holds that steam can be applied to this system of railroading, but that electricity is the better motive power for it, and that the latter could be used from stationary power houses along the line or according to the storage battery plan.

It is claimed that railroad disasters would be reduced to a minimum under the proposed new system, as the cars could be sufficiently elevated to avoid collision with cattle, while at points where traveled roads intersected it, danger of striking teams, etc., could be avoided by reducing the level of the roads. Where it passed through cities the height of the line could be commensurately increased. He has not yet, however, taken into account the adventurous small boy who has not sufficient self-command to resist climbing every post that happens to catch his eye. Should he climb up into the framework of Mr. Shaffer's railroad line and then await the approach of a lightning express, the result would be terribly disastrous to the venturesome modicum of humanity. Perhaps the inventor will find some means of banishing any apprehension that might be felt by passengers lest the upper rail, from which the train must wholly suspend, snapping in twain on account of a fatal flaw or from its being impregnated with frost. A mishap resulting from such a cause, would be that the cars would dive earthward and join in a cumulative mass that might leave the travelers without sufficient time to find out what struck them before they took a sudden trip to a country from which they had not taken out a return ticket. Of course this liability would depend upon the strength of the rail and its supports.

One thing is clear in reference to this device—it exhibits remarkable originality on the part of the inventor, who is undoubtedly a genius in his way, and we hope he will have full opportunity of testing the feasibility of his interesting production. It has been examined by numbers of engineers, who all admit that Mr. Shaffer's system embodies principles of great value.

A DISORDERLY MEETING.

THE meetings being held in the big tent by Mr. Lamb, the Adventist, are somewhat unruly and consequently unprofitable. The lecture last night was on Spiritualism. The lecturer excited the ribilities of the audience by a number of eccentric and, in the estimation of the listeners, incoherent statements. As an instance, he started out by reference to the temptation of Eve by the serpent. The latter, he asserted, gave the first exhibition of spiritualism. He quoted numerous passages from the Bible which had no particular reference to his theme, and made running comments upon them which had no logical connection. He told a little of his own experience with a spiritualistic medium, through whom it was claimed the spirit of Mr. Lamb's father spoke with him. He said it was not his father, however, but Satan. He reached the climax of this statement by asserting that the devil had become acquainted with his father's life and conduct because he had been a faithful servant of his satanic majesty. These assertions created laughter, and Mr. Lamb lost the respect of his audience. Merriment was succeeded by desultory comment from some of the listeners and retorts from Mr. Lamb. In fact, the whole affair was devoid of dignity or profit, and therefore the attendance of decent people will soon diminish unless succeeding meetings are an improvement upon that of last night.

A PLEA FOR THE COYTE.

FROM an article that lately appeared in the Reno (Nevada) Gazette, it appears that the despised coyote is not entirely devoid of usefulness. This may be regarded as a recent discovery; heretofore that unsightly brute, which makes night hideous on the western plains, has been regarded as a mistake in nature. The writer referred to states through the Gazette that the coyote is a devourer of field mice, gophers and rabbits, and therefore a friend to the western farmer. While the coyote himself does some damage to the property of the granger, his destructive powers in that direction are small compared with those of the little pests to which he is a deadly foe. Here at last is a plea in behalf of an animal to which western people have always acted as natural enemies.

THAT SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

THE San Francisco Chronicle of September 24th has the following in the form of a dispatch from Sacramento:

"It looks as if Northern California will have another railroad. For some time there has been a good deal of talk about a new transcontinental railroad from Salt Lake, with its Eastern connections there. A tangible sign that now leads to the hope is the fact that a large corps of engineers are at work in Sacramento today laying out a feasible route. The party has headquarters at a camp near Peters ferry, below the city."

"This morning the chief engineer of the party called at City Surveyor Boyd's office and asked for data by which the city's monuments might be accurately known and located. The 'monuments' mark the lines of street intersections. The information was cordially supplied at the city surveyor's office. There seems to be no doubt that the party is here in the interest of the Great Salt Lake road."

ROMAN CATHOLICISM IN THE EAST.

DISPATCHES from eastern cities contain particulars of a rather sensational character in relation to religion. A few days ago a riot of a serious nature was rekindled in Cheyenne, Wyoming, because of religious ill-feeling. A lecturer, named Lyons, engaged a hall to discuss on the enormities of Roman Catholicism. Members of that creed attended and succeeded in breaking up the meeting. The lecturer was armed with two revolvers. He used one, and wounded three persons. The situation there is described as a sort of miniature civil war.

Public opinion will certainly go against the Catholics in this instance. In the United States every citizen has a right to the free expression of thought. If anything libelous, indecent or ribald is said there is a civilized remedy. If false statements are made, meet them in the press, or on the forum. So Mr. Lyons, who, it is said, is an apostate Romanist, ought to be let alone, and the Catholics of Cheyenne have done themselves a greater injury by their own rash and ill-considered action, than ever Lyons could do them by his American Protective Association rubbish.

The Catholic church is, however, assuming quite a formidable front in the East. For the past week dispatches relating to German Catholic conventions, conferences, and congresses contain indications of aggressiveness on numerous questions. The Iowa Congress censured Senator Davis of Minnesota for his speech in the United States Senate on the occasion of the Chinese exclusion bill. The senator then stated that there was more danger to American institutions from such projects as the Cahenly idea—which had for its object the Germanizing of American schools and the suppression of the English language—than there was in the introduction of Chinese.

The German Catholics are numerous in Minnesota, and it appears their Lutheran countrymen endorse them in every particular. Bishop Ireland, who though a Roman Catholic of the right kind, is an American first, condemned the Germans, and told Senator Davis that he would support him against the Cahenly men.

Dr. Conway, editor of the Catholic Chronicle, published at St. Louis, also supports Senator Davis, and says that the Cahenly idea is down right treason to the United States. He was surprised that the Catholics at Dubuque should offer the resolution relating to Davis.

The German Catholics now assembled in congress at Newark, N. J., are quite pronounced in their attitude on the school question. A dispatch in this issue of the DESERET NEWS gives a fair idea of the stand they have taken. But what seems anomalous in the present attitude of the Catholic church, is the fact that Germans are becoming its champions, defenders and propagators. The more orthodox of the Irish-American Catholics are also siding with them. But the school question will ultimately cause a slight schism in the church. It cannot be much, for the Germans, by reason of their capacity for organization, and their systematic method of working, will ultimately absorb the Bohemian, Austrian, Hungarian and Polish Catholics, and possibly make the German the language of the church.

ODESSA, Oct. 1.—Cholera is officially announced at Tiraspol, Bender, Kikchneff, Nichejff. Troops patrol the towns to prevent disturbance. The government has ordered all falls in South Russia closed for another month. Owing to the increase of cholera between Kieff and Odessa, five more large barracks for patients have been erected. All trains have invalid carriages attached.

AS TO OURSELVES.

Of the change which was to take place in the editorial and business departments of the DESERET NEWS on October 1st, the readers of this paper—through formal announcement of the fact some weeks since—and the general public, thanks to the ingenious enterprises of our esteemed contemporaries, have been thoroughly advised. Absurd as were some of the rumors with which the fact was associated, and distorted as were many of the motives and intentions attributed to us in the premises, we should have been contented nevertheless to let the whole matter adjust itself in the public mind without assistance in the way of explanation from ourselves. But recent events have rather forced us to become at once confidential with our friends. Hence these lines.

Expression can not be given nor can space be accorded to all the hopes we entertain for the DESERET NEWS, for the people whose interests it has guarded, for the Territory which we inhabit, for the great Nation of which that Territory is a component part. These hopes extend, indeed, to the honest in heart of all lands and conditions, ruler as well as subject, lowly as well as mighty. We believe that as a whole the world is growing better because more intelligent; and we hope that in the general improvement, the DESERET NEWS, its patrons and friends, the Territory and the Nation are making some advancement and will continue to do so in the future.

The high character for courage, honesty and reliability which the DESERET NEWS has maintained during all the years of its existence, and which is freely conceded by enemies as well as friends, stands before us as a bright incentive to unwearied endeavor; we hope to prove worthy of such prestige and such honored predilection, and to cherish and preserve in integrity and security the trust we have received from them.

Briefly and specifically stated, the intention of the present proprietors is to continue the NEWS as the authorized organ of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and the friend and advocate of righteousness everywhere; to keep it free from partisan bias and wholly unprejudiced and independent in politics; to conduct it as the people's newspaper and not in the interest of any party or candidate. And their hope is to be able to preserve its neutrality without lapsing into dumbness, and display all needful courage without peril to its convictions. We had hoped to escape the formality of a salutatory. Such an effusion is almost invariably made up of either regrets or promises. We have no regrets in this connection and prefer to make no promises. At the same time we are not unconscious that we shall need a kindly public's patient consideration. For that much we ask, realizing that our further reward must be as our performances merit.

THE DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING CO.

The heat of the campaign increases inversely to the ratio of the falling temperature.

THE COUNCILS WORK.

THE City Council has a most unhappy habit of falling into a wrangle over nearly every measure of importance that is taken up for consideration. Last evening the bone of contention was a bill for an ordinance relating to cesspools within the city limits, and it is a great pity that a measure looking so directly to general sanitation should have been even deferred by reason of the disposition referred to. Some of the members wanted immediate action, others thought there should be reasonable delay, and the upshot of the matter was it went back to the committee.

One would think that in dealing with matters of so much consequence, the committee having any special subject in hand would thoroughly consider it in the light of its intrinsic merits and surroundings, and perfect it as to form and phraseology, before bringing it in for the Council's action. But in all cases they do not; in fact, the reverse would seem to be the rule, and a measure passes backward and forth between the Council chamber and the committee room until much of the usefulness it might have accomplished is lost.

What on the face of it would seem to be a much needed and altogether wise measure was taken up last night, read and passed. It is somewhat in line with the one previously spoken of and will be found in full in our new columns as an ordinance prohibiting the sale of unwholesome food and drink and regulating the sale of milk. This is most important, as indeed are all enactments having in view the health and well-being of the community. A season of sickness seems to be upon the earth, and while devising schemes to meet and subdue it, it is just as well to give it no opportunity for destruction by forestalling it in having everything that is eaten pure and all our surroundings as clean as circumstances will admit of. Let the Council forego its disposition to wrangle now and then, more particularly when dealing with matters of the kind herein indicated.

HORSE TALK.

It is undoubtedly the case that there is a limit to the speed, as there is to the endurance, of horses; and it must be also generally recognized that that limit has about been reached in the recent performance of Nancy Hanks at Terre Haute, Indiana. To talk about limiting anything as to the matter of speed, in view of the marvellous performances of the present generation, is to many to assume the unpleasant position of an "old fogey;" and were it mechanism or the more subtle among applied natural agencies that were under consideration, we should scarcely have the temerity to be sponsor for such a declaration. As it is a matter of flesh and blood, however, that is being dealt with, there would seem to be less risk and under any circumstances little to recall.

It should be remembered, in this connection, that in the early part of this generation, equine performances on the turf rarely if ever came within a full half minute of this

Kentucky mare's Terre Haute achievement; indeed, the making of a mile with the cypher in her case transposed (2:40 instead of 2:04) was considered a feat worth going miles to see, and so indeed it was; but the scale has been gradually narrowing, and steadily so, until, all things considered, the horse must have well-nigh reached the condition of perfection in the matter of speed at least. That he—or she, as in the latest instance—may clip off a few more seconds from the score, may bring it down to an event two minutes and possibly make it fall a shade below that figure would seem to be possible and even probable; but that it will ever reach a point as far below the two minute mark as it is now above it, we are scarcely prepared to believe.

It all speaks volumes for the climate and soil which some portions of our favored land are in possession of, and no less does it constitute a meed of praise for those who have made the improvement of the horse their special care and study. That is the race among animals which stands nearest to mankind, and to simply breed him is not enough; he must be taken care of and, in his way, educated and encouraged to useful as well as dashing achievements.

"GREEN GOODS."

NOTWITHSTANDING several exposures, arrests, and, in some cases, punishments, the "green goods" fiend still piles his rascally calling. These genties are not only dishonest, but doubly so—deceivers as well as law-breakers; they endeavor to entice those with whom they communicate into becoming participants in their lawless schemes for purposes of nefarious gain, and when a victim is captured their part of the proposed transaction is not kept—a real swindle perpetrated out of a proposed one.

Before us is a letter from one of the "green goods" concerns, addressed to a gentleman of high standing in the community. The annoyance to which he was subjected by reason of it is of course a matter of no concern to the senders, who distribute their vile literature indiscriminately, wherever they can find names to send it to, with the hope that out of many, one at least may be induced to "bite." Their mode of procedure has been described so often that it is useless to do it again. We have as little sympathy for the betrayed as for the betrayer in this case; both deserve, as both will surely feel sooner or later if they keep at such business long enough, the stern and heavy hand of the law resting upon them.

Today (Monday) the trial of Case Hite takes place for the murder of Adolph Kohler at Green River about a year ago. This is the second trial, the jury having disagreed in the first one. The legal talent in the case is among the best in the Territory.

The Silver King Mining Company has been incorporated by Marcus L. Hewitt, Curt C. Darrow and Wm. C. King, with a capital stock of $1,500,000 divided into 500,000 shares. Operations will be carried on in Jefferson county, with offices at Butte.

A SAD INCIDENT.

THE news item detailing the carrying off by a mountain lion of a little child in Colorado reads so much like olden times that we can scarcely realize the wondrous advancement that has been made. The frontier has been pushed back and its traces one by one worked out until it has become the commonly accepted idea that practically there is no frontier and therefore no wild beasts or savage men to contend with. The fact that this is not yet the case should be borne in mind by those who live in thinly settled mountainous regions, and thus such a harrowing realization of it as that spoken of be avoided—a realization rendered all the more acute and distressing from the utter failure to either overtake the monster or gain any traces of his victim.

A FAMOUS TRAVELER'S WIDOW.

LADY BURTON, widow of the famous traveler, Sir Richard Burton, who wrote a book about Utah, is now living at Mortlake, a suburb of London, England. Her husband is buried in the little Roman Catholic cemetery of that village. She engaged a house near the cemetery, and has the inscription "Our Cottage" written on the gate. She is writing a life of her husband, and finds consolation and comfort in visiting his grave daily. When asked about the burning of her husband's oriental manuscripts, she stated he gave her absolute authority to treat them as she desired. During the closing years of his life, his health was not in its usual condition. He was not able to judge what was good for the public. Besides, he always wrote disregarding of public opinion, and this habit became intensified during his illness.

Lady Burton sits while writing at a table, near which is placed the chair formerly occupied by her husband. She has also a case of photographs of Sir Richard taken at different times of his life. There are suits and stauettes of him all over the room. His watch and chain hang by her side. She says it was not the wish of her husband to be buried in Westminster or any such public place, because it horrified him to think that a tourist guide should point to his tomb for a penny. Her heart, her soul, her happiness are all in the little grave at Mortlake.

NORWAY'S ALTERNATIVE.

THE political tangle in Norway which for some time has threatened to result in a rupture between the Scandinavian kingdoms has recently had a new light shed upon it by a correspondent from Stockholm, who asserts that the Emperor of Russia may eventually claim possession of Norway. He thinks that although the Danish King in 1813 renounced all claims to Norway for the benefit of the Bernadotte dynasty, this renunciation would be invalid should the people of Norway sever their connection with this dynasty. The Emperor of Russia carries among his numerous titles also this, Successeur de Norvege, by virtue of his connection with the Danish royal family, and this would indicate that, should the union between Sweden and Norway be broken, the question of Russia's right to the latter country would at least be open to discussion. A Danish writer ridicules the idea, but the precedents in Europe give very little room for hilarity, particularly in Denmark. Germany's proceedings in the Sleswick-Holstein matter prove that questions of succession based on assumed rights by inheritance sometimes are serious enough for small monarchies who are unable to emphasize their protests by gunpowder.

A CREDIT TO SPAIN.

HENRY DUPUY DE LOME, the new minister to the United States from Spain, was born in 1851 in Valencia. After having studied law at Barcelona, he entered the diplomatic career in 1869. As a diplomatist he has had much experience, having been attached to the legation in Japan, performed a mission to Belgium, and been chargé d'affaires at Buenos Ayres. In 1881 he became secretary of the legation at Paris and later the same year at Washington. Since then he has served at Berlin, Rome and Montevideo, his services in all these places being greatly appreciated. He comes to us, accordingly, clothed with much experience acquired during twenty years in the diplomatic service.

Signor De Lome is also well known as a writer. He has contributed valuable articles on various subjects to Spanish papers and the subject of the tariff is one to which he has given special attention. Those who know him consider that he will soon become one of the most popular ministers at our nation's capital.

A DUTY AND A PLEASURE.

At the Stake Priesthood meeting on Saturday last, several of the speakers touched upon a matter that is in every sense timely and worthy of consideration by the Latter-day Saints living in Salt Lake City and the immediate vicinity. We allude to the suggestions with reference to providing accommodations for our friends from the country who will be in attendance at the General Conference.

Citizens of Salt Lake have certainly not deprived so far from their aforesaid instincts and inclinations as to need more than a hint on the subject of hospitality. The same generous impulses that prompted every family in the good old days to fill its table with guests, to air the spare bed-chambers and spread couches upon every floor, and to provide shed and stall and corral room for the animals and vehicles of the country come from far and near, are assuredly still existing, though perhaps a trifle rusty through disuse. Railroads and rapid transit have worked many changes, it is true, and made unnecessary many of the arrangements of former times. We refuse to believe, however, that the putting on of metropolitan apparel has expelled from the hearts of our citizens the cordiality of welcome that made our semi-annual conferences such seasons of wholesome pleasure and mutual enjoyment.

Of all the household arts and graces, real hospitality is the most admirable. The hearty gratitude of a guest well-entertained is of more value than money. Display or ostentation is not necessary—it adds nothing to the flavor of the viand nor to the restfulness of the slumber; and he is indeed a thankless, ungracious guest who is not better pleased with homely fare and unaffected treatment, than with all the pomp and strained magnificence that wealth can supply. The whole-souled welcome, the "make-yourself-at-home" feeling, the indefinable sympathy and friendliness between host and visitor—these are what constitute genuine hospitality in its best sense; and its exercise, when these are present, truly blesses and benefits both him who gives and him who receives it.

We trust that no reader of the NEWS will neglect through thoughtlessness to provide himself with the pleasure that is in store for those who follow the advice given at the Stake Priesthood meeting and keep open house for friends during Conference.

SPEED THE PARTING.

No piece of news of recent date will convey more genuine pleasure to the majority of the citizens of the northern part of Utah than the announcement that Reverend J. Wesley Hill of the Methodist church in Ogden has "accepted a call" from the First M. E. church in Helena, and will proceed thither without delay. To say that the impudent young upstart has dishonored his creed and following would be perhaps too strong a statement, since the conduct of one personage, no matter how reprehensible, ought not to prejudice any cause whose objects are good and whose methods are reputable. But to say that he has dishonored his calling, grossly insulted the general community, and specially pained and humiliated the self-respecting members of his own church is so easily within the limits of truth that no honest man will rise to dispute it. He has been shown to be a shameless sermon-thief, an arrant hypocrite, an utterer of base fabrications, and a venomous bearer of false witness. Of his other qualities it may be said that he is a striver after the sensational in the pulpit, a mendacious of supreme effrontery for the church coffers, and a bustling promoter of questionable land speculations from which he doubtless hoped the church would derive some profit. If these be merits, happy are we to be able to accord them to him.

Given a field where the sight of a "Mormon" or the sound of "Mormonism" could not strike his pious senses, the young man might make a fairly acceptable exhorter, for he talks like a mill-clapper without pause or ceasing. It may be that only in Utah and when thinking about Utah the rabies attack him. We shall hope so for the sake of the good people of the First M. E. church of Helena, Montana, to whom we now gratefully commend him. Few tears over his departure will be shed in Ogden, where for these several years he has been a stumbling block to good fellowship and an offense to Christianity. We rather suspect that were the full facts to be made public it would be found that the "call from Helena" was not so potent as the kick from Ogden in bringing about his change of pastorate.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

THE NEWS acknowledges the receipt of a circular letter from the executive committee of the Associated Press, and has given it a careful perusal.

The circular is issued, as alleged, because of "false and misleading reports" which are being promulgated to injure the Association, whereupon it becomes necessary to make certain defensive and explanatory statements. One of these is the somewhat refreshing one that the company is an organization for the collection and dissemination of news; that its object is not to make money, but through co-operation to obtain the best news service possible for its members and clients. The statement as a whole would have been just as strong if not a little stronger without the reference to money making, because it is pretty well understood by those who pay its bills that they are sufficiently numerous and sufficiently high to cover all expenses and leave a considerable margin of profit; this must go somewhere, and it is idle to say it goes to charity, while it is an assured fact that so far it has not gone to the betterment of the service. The surplus receipts have, of course, gone where they should go, and where no well-disposed person will object to their going—into the pockets of the owners and managers of the enterprise. While this may not be the object, it is undoubtedly an object, and being entirely unrepensible need not be denied.

The circular then goes on without enlightening us as to what the "false and misleading reports" are, but leaves us to conjecture, by the force of implication, that such reports are the negative of what is affirmed—namely, that some one has said that the Associated Press makes money one of its reasons for living, and that it does not seek through co-operation (or otherwise?) to obtain the best news service possible for its members and clients. This latter charge, if a negation can be called a charge, might be "false and misleading," and being, unlike the other, a blow at the company's reputation and standing, might properly be denied in toto and specifically if such denial can be made upon truthful grounds. But we are not long permitted to engage in so defensive a thought, for a little further on we come to the admission that "owing to complications which have existed until recently the service has been allowed to become inferior to its standard," and that steps have been taken to overcome this defect and place the workings of the company upon a proper footing. This is coupled with numerous other statements and promises of a more or less rose-hued character, for the realization of which the A. P.'s subscribers, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

It is very evident that if the company's legal adviser prepared the circular they ought to change attorneys without delay. Even as a plea of confession and avoidance, it is a sorry piece of bungling, but let that pass. We lend a hearty approval to that portion of the circular which says the service has become inferior, plead ignorance to the allegation regarding false and malicious reports, and hail with delight the promise of better things at once. The Associated Press is a very useful if not an indispensable factor in the make-up of the modern daily newspaper, and few if any there be who seek to cripple, misrepresent or annoy it, while its rates are promptly and in most cases cheerfully paid. The only remonstrance against or hard talk concerning inadequacy or incorrectness in the service, is such as hardly ever if at all reaches headquarters, so we fancy that the idea of "false and misleading reports" is the result of a conscientious impulse born of long-enjoyed immunity while realizing that a wrong practice was going on. No matter; we all want the Associated Press to be what it ought to be, all that it can be for the money, and hail with especial pleasure the promise of reform.

DEATH OF RENAN.

A DISPATCH in Saturday's NEWS briefly announced the serious illness of Joseph Ernest Renan, and foreshadowed his early demise as a conclusion of the physicians in charge. The latter's judgment proved to be correct; the great theologian, orientalist and philologist yielded up his immortal part yesterday, the cause of death being congestion of the lungs with sympathetic affection of the heart.

Renan was born in 1823 at Treguier, France. He early developed intellectual qualities of a high order, and after a preparatory stage of education at the hands of priests was sent to the seminary of Abbe Dupanloup at Paris, to be graduated in the ministry. He later completed his philosophical studies at Lausanne, and from there went to St. Sulpice. His, however, proved to be a case of instruction leading to different results than was intended or expected by his instructors, his thoughts and expressions assuming a range of freedom and flight at times wholly incompatible and at nearly all times not in perfect harmony with strict orthodoxy. He early became an author and soon acquired distinction; editorial pursuits also occupied a portion of his time, he having founded La Liberte de penser ("Liberty of Think," otherwise free-thought), in 1848. Perhaps the work which attracted the greatest attention of all his productions, was a comparatively recent one—La Vie de Jesus, ("The Life of Jesus.") This book created something of a commotion throughout the intellectual world; it denied the divinity of the Savior and treated Him simply as a man of unusual and philosophical characteristics, of good general disposition and deportment, but not entirely above some of the mortal weaknesses.

It is perhaps fair in summing up Renan's general character, to place him among the intellectual giants of the age, one of those whose acquirements are the result of a reliance upon the merely sensuous impressions of the mind and in which the soul takes but little part when it takes any part at all. In brief, he led the van of the modern school of free thought, or agnosticism as it is more recently termed, and gave us in his wonderful developments of intellectual power a complete exemplification of the mind of a philosopher, the training of a Jesuit and the instincts of an infidel united in one and the same being.

LETTERS OF ACCEPTANCE.

THE letters of the two principal candidates for the Presidency have been placed before the people, read and considered. According to party usage, those of the candidates for the Vice-Presidency are now in order, commencing with that of Mr. Reid and followed closely by that of General Stevenson. It is the unwritten law of parties that the one in power must lead out in the matter of holding conventions and issuance of letters of acceptance by the leaders, followed in like order by letters from the lieutenants; we may therefore look for Mr. Reid's official declaration of willingness at any day.

There are several other tickets in the field this year—the People's party, the Prohibitionists, Socialists, and Social Reformers, the last named representing the ultra Woman's Rights element and those who believe in fewer social restrictions, and is headed by Victoria Claflin Woodhull Blood Martin; the organization and the candidate's name seem to have a peculiar fitness for each other, but it is not likely to attract much attention otherwise. None of the candidates of these parties have so far seen fit to comply with the letter-writing custom, and it would seem that none of them intend to engage in that feature of political procedure.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

THE world-startling performance of a little Kentucky mare, who with the speed of lightning in her heels has clipped nearly five seconds from the time of the fastest trotted mile, recalls a name that is only less revered because not generally known. History gives us in the first quarter of the century a mere glimpse of a good-looking young woman whose graces of mind and person were all but buried in the recesses of a western forest and amid the poverty which such a life at such a time involved. But the freedom of the pure air and the boundless woods brought contentment to her stout heart, and devotion to her husband sweetened her life of toil. In time a child was born to her, a sturdy but not a handsome boy; and a few years later she passed away from earth. The lonely little fellow wandered silently through the sombre glades and crushed beneath his restless feet the forest flowers, drinking in the love of nature and of liberty while still nursing his childish sorrow. Winter's snow and summer's sun succeeded each other with due regularity, and the boy gained in stature and strength and intelligence. His springing forth from the wilderness into the hot arena of public life need not here be traced—history has been generous with him, and in every land his name is held in high esteem as among the most illustrious of mankind. But it is strange that while all people and languages know him, so few, even of his own countrymen, know his mother. The fame of Abraham Lincoln will live throughout all time; but how many are there who know that the fair young being who gave him birth and who so soon left him motherless, bore the homely, honest name of Nancy Hanks?

The greatness of the gallant little race-mare and the coincidence that in all her record-breaking work she is encouraged by her pacesetter, Abe Lincoln, will not be lessened one whit by the fact that she bears the name of the martyred President's sainted mother.

THE COTTON FIELD.

COTTON may not be as kingly as it once was, that is, it is not so much the unapproachable despot of ante bellum days; but it is yet a mighty factor in the economic scale. The census bulletin on this subject just issued by Commissioner Porter shows the increase in acreage and yield in one of the Southern States during the past decade to be something delightfully wonderful and altogether unprecedented, this State being Texas, which, while being the largest is not the most populous nor in all respects the most productive State; there the yield for 1889-90 was 3,932,755 acres against 2,178,435 acres in 1879-1880, the crops respectively amounting to 1,470,353 bales and 805,284 bales—an increase of 665,069 bales, being an advance at the enormous rate of 80.53 per cent, and 82.59 per cent respectively. Of course this gain is not uniform throughout the cotton belt; on the contrary, those States lying nearest the northern limit show something of a falling off both as to acreage and yield, indicating that they are gradually drifting into other pursuits which are to them more profitable. The other Gulf States are not reported on, but it is reasonable to suppose that they will at least keep pace with Texas, and all contribute to making the Southern side of the American Republic the great cotton empire of the world.

AN AWFUL CONDITION.

In this issue of the NEWS will be found a communication from Dr. Seymour B. Young responsive to one addressed to him recently by Dr. J. E. Talmage. We request that the readers of this paper do not overlook the letter, and, having read, do not forget its contents or its import. It contains matter which no one can afford to ignore or treat slightly, if he values his own health or that of his neighbor.

We do not propose to assume the role of alarmist, nor do we ask that the people of this city become unduly apprehensive because of the unwelcome and threatening state of affairs which the Doctor's letter discloses. But we do propose to contribute what little of effort we may toward advancing the hygienic condition of the community; and to that end do we fully subscribe to the statements and endorse the conclusions contained in the communication.

The condition of the Jordan river below the point where the sewer is discharged into it, has been a source of apprehension ever since the pollution of its waters began, not only to those resident near the banks of the stream but to all others in the neighborhood. The evil has now attained such proportions that something will have to be done and that quickly, or we may have to endure a pestilence next season no less to be dreaded than the cholera itself.

THE SILVER CONFERENCE.

THE friends of silver—which means nearly everybody in this western country—have not been greatly encouraged regarding the situation of the white metal of late years. For a few weeks in 1891 it took an upward turn, went above 100 like a rocket and kept soaring till it threatened to reach the place it occupied before its demoralization in 1873; but the cause of this movement had its origin, no doubt, as much in enmity as did the act which made it simply a commodity—that is, the speculators saw an opportunity to use silver just as at times they use wheat or railway stocks, and so the "bull" movement was imparted to it. When the holdings of this interested gentry were let go at the highest point, naturally the downward movement set in, and the rocket became a stick, falling even below the point from which it started on its upward flight, and it has been groveling around in the depths ever since.

It is greatly to the credit of the present administration that some consistent tangible steps have been taken looking to the relief of silver from its present debasement. Realizing that, with so many of our people, and they chiefly eastern men and capitalists, arrayed against it, it would be futile to attempt its restoration as money in the United States alone, the President has succeeded in having an international conference constituted, composed of representatives from all the nations interested. A dispatch received by the NEWS yesterday briefly announced that Brussels had been agreed upon as the place and November 22 as the time for holding the conference, so that the plan for remonetizing silver may now be considered as fairly under way.

On this side of the Republic, the Brussels conference will be one of the most important ever held. It is called to adjust a question which not only directly affects our material welfare, but in a certain sense that of the people generally at home and abroad. Silver mining reduced to dollars and cents and with the white metal at its full value, is one of our principal industries. This relates not merely to itself but to its dependencies also, for with the silver mines closed down every other industry in Utah and the adjacent States and Territories would suffer. Some would be slightly affected, others would shrivel up until practically suspended, and others again would disappear altogether. This is not a merely selfish plea as previously suggested. Silver is the "common people's" money everywhere, and will shrink in value or become curtailed in volume, their power to purchase commodities and pay debts is reduced in like manner; so that all classes, except those who live and thrive by speculation pure and simple, are deeply concerned in the furtherance of silver mining and the restoration of the metal to its legitimate function as money.

It is quite probable that the conference will not adopt the standard in vogue in this country, that of sixteen to one; but that does not so greatly matter. What we want and must have is a standard of some sort, and that when fixed will remain and be recognized by all the powers, and then there need be—in fact cannot will be—restrictive laws regulating the amount of silver which the government mints will coin; one dollar being the equal of any other, the miner or any one else having silver bullion will be treated like the patron of a mill or factory—his product will be converted into coin of the realm to the fullest extent, as in the other cases the wheat is converted into flour and the wool into cloth. This will be free coinage with a substantial, unchangeable meaning attached to it; and when one is struck that assays so much in silver, the owner will not as now be in doubt as to what extent his possessions are augmented, if, in fact, they are augmented at all.

Success to the Brussels conference, say we all.

CHOLERA FREAKS.

It is now asserted that it is all a mistake to suppose that the Russian Jews brought the cholera to Europe. The results of an investigation conducted by certain rabbis are said to prove that the Hebrew race has been all but exempt from the plague; that of nearly 250,000 victims, only forty were Jews. The cholera, it is said, did not take the communities of this people in on its deadly march but passed them by. Another fact brought out by this investigation is that the epidemic has not followed the railroads but the canals and rivers. "It came," says a correspondent to a New York paper, "from Asia by water, and fastened upon the swarms of workmen and tramps who in the summer go southward to the lower Volga for employment. When they returned northward and westward to their homes they carried cholera with them. Wherever they went their routes were chiefly the valleys of the rivers Volga and Don. These were all fiercely devastated by pestilence. Wherever they left the main course of water travel and tramped overland into the interior, there also cholera went."

WITH A devotion that under other circumstances would be sublime, the Tuscarran band have hoisted in their local wigwag the banner behind which they marched to inglorious defeat at Chicago. Some people are of a delicate, sensitive a nature that the less they see an unpleasant reminder flaunted in their faces, the better they like it. Of such, however, are not the Tuscarrans. They desire to be known as possessing neither delicacy nor sensibility.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

FIVE weeks from today the voters of the United States will make a formal declaration of whom they will have to serve them as President and Vice-President. In doing this they merely express their preferences, having no choice in the matter except indirectly; for, as is well known, it has frequently been the case that while the people have largely inclined one way, the electoral college chosen by them has gone the other or another way, and thus the candidates who have received a minority of the people's direct suffrages were successful. It is not our present purpose to explain the why and wherefore of this or to moralize upon it, as both have received sufficient attention in these columns and elsewhere to render such use of space unnecessary.

It has been frequently observed by prominent politicians of all shades of opinion and others that the campaign so far has been an abnormally quiet one, the apathy exhibited by those who are most interested being something utterly unprecedented. Various causes are assigned for this state of things, but in every case such cause has some special application favorable to the party of the one who expresses it, and is therefore not very valuable to the independent mind seeking for actual facts. Perhaps the real source of the prevailing indifference is the fact that there are no vital issues before the people, at least none but what have been presented and canvassed before, so that the campaign has more or less semblance to "thrashing out old straw." This, coupled with the additional fact that the principal candidates for the first office have also been before the voters for the same place, and that therefore there is little that is new to be told, would seem to complete the case and furnish about as satisfactory an explanation as can be given.

Above and beyond every other question demanding the attention of the people is, as was the case four years ago, the tariff. Prior to that time it had generally occupied a secondary place, or was even further down the scale than that. The issues growing out of the war absorbed the greater part of the people's attention politically for many years, economic questions being more or less subsidiary; as time wore on, however, the former gradually grew less while the latter advanced in a corresponding ratio, and now there is scarcely anything left of war material, which of necessity throws the burden of making up issues upon those who deal with commercial, mechanical and productive affairs. The alleged abeyance of the Lodge election bill, commonly called the "force bill," which the Democrats claim is resting until the Republicans are strong enough to make it law, lends a shade of variety to the situation, it being a political measure pure and simple; but the Republicans disclaim any such intention, and insist upon it that their opponents are using it as a scarecrow to keep the South still. However that may be, the bill is receiving a full share of attention; in fact, in the South it fairly divides the honors with the tariff and all other subjects before the people.

Whether it be due to the indifference stated or to some other cause, it is undeniable that there has never been an election since the war which cast so dim a shadow before it. So far nothing is known as to how any part of the nation will go, and even the conjectures which are ventured are in most cases purely visionary, while the claims made are what they usually amount to—just so many claims. There have been three State elections held recently (not counting the one going on in Florida today)—in Arkansas, Vermont and Maine. The first named went overwhelmingly Democratic, but as it is a Democratic State anyway, this only serves to show that the hope of the Republicans to break up the solidity of the South is futile this time, and that the effect of the Populist vote has been overestimated. In Vermont and Maine, which are always more or less strongly Republican, there was a slight falling off in the majorities for that party. These facts taken together cause sanguine Democrats to anticipate certain victory; but they may not be fairly so considered, for the reason that in the last two cases a light vote was polled. Many voters stay away from the polls when a local election is going on, and are on hand "early and often" when it is a national contest. So that we are only permitted to draw such results to conclude—that we are as much at sea as before.

If any one could tell how the Empire State is going to vote, he could come pretty near to a correct conclusion as to the result at large. It is true the Democrats are making a vigorous campaign in the Northwest and are already "claiming" enough States in that region to offset the possible loss of New York; but such claims are not based upon precedent and no one will be safe in depending entirely upon any such outcome. The Republicans may lose some of the silver and other States west of the Missouri river; but all of such losses combined would only be a negative gain for the Democrats. Even if a full gain, they would not be compensated for the thirty-six electoral votes which they would lose if they failed to carry New York.

NIAGARA HARNESSSED.

BEGINNING today, and continuing four days, will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., the second congress of the National Real Estate Association, at which it is expected that every State and Territory in the Union will be represented by one or more of its liveliest real estate dealers. To predict with confidence that the meetings will be full of snap and interest, one needs but to remember the bustling, high-pressure characteristics of your successful real estate operator everywhere; and it goes without saying that where several hundred of his species are congregated together, there will the world be made to wag rapidly and the currents of the air be set into a commotion.

While the general public may take but slight interest in the proper and regular proceedings, one feature of the congress will demand considerable attention. It is not only land and air, but water also that will feel the presence of the rustlers. It is proposed to devote a day to the examination of the great tunnel by which, as the glib-tongued Buffalo operators put it, "the power of Niagara is brought to the doors of Buffalo and made to turn the wheels of civilization." As explanatory of how these wonderful things are to be accomplished—it will be observed they are not yet all done—it may be interesting to know that the scheme is estimated to supply about 120,000 horse-power for turning the aforesaid wheels. The tunnel, which has been over five years in building, has been made from the level of the lower river, just under the falls, extending for nearly two miles up the river, and at a depth of 160 feet below the river level above the falls. It will be seen that an almost unlimited number of shafts can be sunk, discharging into this great waterway, which is 29 feet in diameter and 8,000 feet long.

It is by tapping this tunnel that the 120,000 horse-power is obtained. But the whole of Niagara has not yet been made ready for man's service. It has been calculated that there are 6,000,000 horse-power in the mighty cataract. But using only 120,000, Buffalo will have seven times as much power as Minneapolis and five times as much as Holyoke; and the river not only never runs dry but can never run dry.

Naturally the aim of the Buffalo representatives present at the congress will be to make Niagara's boom boom their city as the coming manufacturing city of the continent. In view of the enterprise that has been shown in prosecuting the work thus far, it is safe to say they are entitled to all the success they will be likely to achieve in a gathering where so many sections are represented, each pulling earnestly and exclusively for itself.

WONDERFUL IF TRUE.

AN eminent professor of Heidelberg, Germany, named Meyer, in an address to the students two years ago, said that chemistry was the great revealer of hidden mysteries. "We may," said he, "reasonably hope ere long it will teach us to make the fiber of wood a source of human food. Can the cellulose in wood be made into starch? I would not be at all surprised to hear that some savant had manufactured a nice food from what were once the most unwholesome elements."

The German chemists took the matter up, and ever since have been experimenting in this direction. It is now reported that they have succeeded in making corn starch from wood cellulose, and bread from the starch. It is further stated that this bread is chemically purer than that made from either barley or rye. It is possible that the day may not be far distant when a half dozen good staples or cottonwoods may be as valuable as a half acre of wheat land. Besides it would be much easier to irrigate an acre of oaks than of wheat. This bread-wood business would solve the question of food supply and several other important economical issues.

LETTER FROM NEW ZEALAND.

PALMERSTON NORTH, New Zealand, Sept. 6th, 1892.—At this season of the year, our friends in Zion usually seek cold mountain retreats, and, while many are rusticating on the hills enjoying their midsummer holidays, the people of the Southern Hemisphere are protecting themselves against the storms of winter. Boomers assure us that, in New Zealand, "there are no extremes of heat and cold, as compared with other countries." Certainly, the forests are ever green, cattle graze on the hills or in the pastures all the year round, flowers bloom in the gardens, and frosts are not severe enough to destroy vegetables. But this does not make it a paradise. Rain, rain, rain is the order of the day, and a Mormon missionary has many opportunities of testing its searching qualities. After facing a "tonga," or cold south wind and rain storm all day, we are convinced that the cold frosty breezes of "our mountain home" are preferable. The damp, cold atmosphere is chilling and disagreeable as compared with our bracing and invigorating northern winds.

We are looking forward to an early spring, and farmers are commencing to plow and put in crops.

The work of the Lord is still progressing in this part of His vineyard, though it is principally among the Maoris. We have a good branch of the Church at Rotoatane, near Palmerston North, and also a number of European members in the vicinity. We have held a number of cottage meetings recently, and our congregations have been quite interested. Of course, we do not meet with the opposition or ill-usage which our Elders experience in some countries, but still the enemy is alert, and striving to counteract the work.

An Episcopal minister ventured to attend one of our Maori meetings a few weeks ago, and listened attentively while the Elders explained the principles of life and salvation. At the close of the meeting, he asked the privilege of addressing the Maoris, which was readily granted. He endeavored to controvert our doctrines, but our Maori brethren soon took the matter in hand, and discussed the principles of the Gospel with him, and soon confounded him by presenting the truth, with scriptural proofs. He was glad to retire complused, carrying with him many testimonies, as food for reflection. The Maoris needed no help from the travelling Elders, as many of them are living compendiums.

We often find instances of the old spirit of intolerance and bigotry among those who profess to be ministers of Christ. A visit was paid, a short time ago, to a lady who had been investigating our doctrines, and we were amused to learn that she had been convinced in a peculiar way that Mormonism was true. An evangelist or revival minister had visited the town, and called at her residence while making house to house visits. The reverend gentleman in smooth, bland tones, assured the lady that he was not proselyting, but was seeking persons who were not church members, for "in heaven there were many Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, etc.," "Are there Mormons in heaven?"

queried his listener. At once the reverend gentleman's countenance changed as he indignantly replied, "Decidedly not, madam;" and then followed the usual abuse of a people, of whom he afterwards acknowledged he was ignorant. He convinced the lady that he did not possess the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus, and she is now ready for baptism.

There are a number of small towns in the northern part of Manawatu district, including Palmerston North, Foxton, etc. Palmerston North is the chief town, and the railroad lines to various parts of the island radiate from this point. The borough comprises an area of 4900 acres, and is laid out in a natural level clearing. Usually the country is covered with heavy brush and timber, and this has to be cleared off to prepare the land for cultivation. The brush is rapidly disappearing in this vicinity, and small farms are now under cultivation in all directions. The town is laid off to good advantage, a large square being reserved in the centre, around which are the main business blocks. It contains a very enterprising class of citizens, and will undoubtedly rank as one of the foremost inland towns of New Zealand. Arbor Day was observed this year, and a large number of trees were planted, which will tend to beautify the town. The chief industry is sheep and cattle raising, and public auction sales of horses occur weekly. A familiar figure on the streets is the Texas cowboy, as a company have located here, and are engaged training horses and conducting a livery stable. The population of Palmerston North is about four thousand, but it is rapidly increasing.

Foxton is a small town situated on the Manawatu river. It possesses an excellent wharf, and has fine shipping facilities, as the river will permit small steamers and sailing vessels to enter, which trade regularly between Foxton and Wellington in the south. Considerable flax is prepared for shipment in this vicinity, and there are many fax mills constantly at work.

Manawatu Gorge has always been a point of interest to tourists. Here the Manawatu river flows between two mountain ranges—the Tararua and Ruahine. The gorge is the boundary line of the two provincial districts of Wellington and Hawke Bay. The scenery on the Manawatu side is very picturesque. The railroad is constructed on tortuous side-cuttings, and at times appears to be winding along the edge of a precipice. At the bottom of the yawning chasm the river may be seen flowing at one moment like a silvery stream and the next dashing and breaking over massive boulders. The mountains are covered with forest trees and dense brush. An immense landslide occurred recently which destroyed a section of the railroad track, and as our train rushed through the gorge and over the new-made road it appeared as though half the mountain had fallen away.

The Hawke Bay conference or Hul was held at Tamaki, near Danevirke, on the 3rd and 4th of September. The Maori "tipu," or settlement, is situated in an open flat, and on every side is dense brush, or forest land. It is situated near the railroad station, and on Thursday, Sept. 1st, a carriage load of visiting Saints from Manawatu district, alighted from the train and received an enthusiastic welcome. The conference was held in a large Maori whare, 100 feet long. The windows were draped with lace curtains, and the walls were elaborately decorated in true Maori style. Chandeliers were suspended from the ceiling, at each end, a large stained-glass door and mirrors contributed to its comfortable and home-like appearance. Large tables were spread with the bounties of life, and beautifully adorned with large vases of flowers.

A Maori "Hui" may fitly be termed "a feast of fat things." No expense is spared in providing for the comfort of all comers, and many attend who do not regard the religious services as the most attractive feature. However, many outsiders are induced to attend by this means, and an opportunity is furnished for preaching the Gospel to them, and applicable to a baptism often follows.

On Saturday, September 3rd, the Hawke Bay conference was called to order by Elder John G. Kelson, president of the district. The following Elders from Zion were present: Elders W. Douglass and T. L. Cox, of Hawke Bay district; Elder Wesley Gibson, from Wairarapa district, and Elders P. P. Thomas and E. Goddard, from Manawatu district. There are seven branches in the district, and most of these were reported in a good condition by the presidents. Elder Kelson greeted the Saints, expressing his pleasure in meeting so many of the members, and heartily welcomed the many visitors from Manawatu district. Elders Thomas and Douglass and several native Elders also addressed words of encouragement to the people, exhorting them to faithfulness. A priesthood meeting was held in the evening, and instructions were given on the duties of those holding the holy priesthood. The first Sunday in the month is observed as fast day, and the second day of conference was, therefore, so regarded. The Sacrament on such days is administered during the forenoon meeting. After Sacrament Elder Cox addressed the Saints, and referred to his early experiences and explained the first principles of the Gospel. In the afternoon about fifty Europeans were present, and the apostasy of the primitive church and the restoration of the Gospel was treated upon by Elder Goddard. A testimony meeting was held in the evening. Elder Gibson addressed the people and afterwards Saints bore their testimonies, and the meeting continued until midnight. The following day five persons applied for baptism.

On Tuesday a scene occurred characteristic of Maoridom. After morning "Karaka," or prayer, one of the rangatiras (or chiefs), suggested the marriage of a young couple, who had met for the first time during conference. In olden times children were often betrothed by their parents, and marriages were seldom solemnized without consulting the whole tribe. Often a whole day and night is spent discussing the subject in order that the tribe may unanimously agree upon it. On the occasion referred to all forenoon was spent in arranging the union, and though the young couple were present no expression of opinion was required from them as the chief's claim jurisdiction in such matters. It was finally decided that they should be married, the ceremony to take place in the evening. During the afternoon "karakia," or prayers, Elder Kelson addressed the Saints on the subject of marriage and the importance of observing the laws of chastity, etc. The bridegroom and bride then came forward and were united in the bonds of holy matrimony in the usual manner. Afterwards the friends and relatives greeted the newly married couple and cheered over the celebration of the nuptials. The company then enjoyed a social dance.

Land matters receive considerable attention in this country, as all the land originally was claimed by the native tribes collectively. Land courts are now organized to grant the land to individual claimants. The Maoris own 10,000,000 acres of land in the North Island, two-fifths of which is agricultural, and the rest grazing land. A considerable portion of it is covered with dense timber or brush, and is quite mountainous. The government has control of all the land courts and the Maoris complain of the heavy assessments and taxes levied upon their lands. Land is often leased to Europeans, and in many cases, the assessment exceeds the rental. In order to remedy this evil, the Maoris are organizing what is termed a Maori parliament, and petitioning the government to grant them absolute control of their own land affairs. Hamiora Mangakia, an educated native lawyer, is premier. He is one of the oldest members of the Church, and was present at our conference. He stated that about 21,000 Maoris had signed the agreement and petition for said parliament, and that the object was to control the leasing and sale of the land, also to encourage the cultivation of it and to locate and build towns after the European style. The proposition is receiving the support of prominent statesmen and it may probably encourage the Maoris to become more industrious and energetic.

The News is always a welcome visitor in this far-off land and we are all interested in the progress of affairs in Zion. Even political questions are not overlooked and Cleveland and Harrison men are sometimes met with who would be glad to cheer for their respective candidates.

We are gratified to notice the increased desire to do justice to Utah and that so many now acknowledge the loyalty of her citizens.

The following literary gem, received from a "Mormon" friend, contains sentiments which may convince some of our sceptical opponents that there are as loyal hearts in our mountain valleys as can be found in Uncle Sam's domains.

PHOENIX.

Our Nation's Natal Day.

(Lines addressed to "Phoenix," while on a mission to New Zealand, July 4th, 1892.)
We stood and watched her silent coming

From the heavenly arches there,
Saw her enter with the dawning
Robed in festal garments fair;
While she stood upon the mountain
In Morn's softest, sweetest flush,
From afar a signal greeting
Broke upon the solemn hush.

From afar the guns are pealing
Heralds crying, "She is here!"
"Bid her welcome! welcome! welcome!"
Rang the echoes loud and clear;
Echoes from a thousand cannon
Like to thunder's mighty roar—
Followed soon a sacred stillness
When the welcome shout was o'er.

In the hush, the short, sweet stillness,
While the earth exultant stands,
To the soul is sung an anthem;
And God's benedictory hands
Seem to hover now so near us,
That we bow in reverent down,
To receive the gems that spangle
Freedom's fair immortal crown.

Far and wide is heard the anthem,
And a nation's mighty heart,
Beats responsive to the music,
While all nature adds her part
Like a rush of glad thanksgiving
Wafted to the realms on high—
Man hath caught the sweet vibration
And doth raise a joyous cry.

"Thy heard," "th' heard!" and forth from Slumber
Like a vast restless wave,
Comes a human tide with greetings
For the banners of the brave.
Stars and stripes! O beauteous emblem
Of freedom that is ours;
Emblem of our strength and union,
Of divine, God-given powers.

Midst the rush of loud acclaiming
Oft I've paused this natal day,
Paused—'til thoughts of thee, my brother,
Thou so far, say! far away.
Lost to thee hath been the tumult
Of the country's maddened joy—
Banners flutter, guns saluting,
Space and distance doth destroy.

But, methinks, thy soul hath listened
And hath heard the sweet refrain,
The spirit anthem sung by Freedom
This fair morn, o'er hill and plain;
That thy heart in quick pulsations
To the music hath kept time.
That the blessings with it wafted
Reached thee thus in thy distant clime;

That thy praises, breathed in answer,
Reached the mountain home we love,
Mingled here with prayers of dear ones,
And were wafted far above;
That, before the proud rejoicings
Which a nation's voice hath given,
With the praises of the "Chosen,"
They were heard by Him in Heaven.

THE JORDAN RIVER.

The public are familiar with the previous correspondence that has passed between Dr. J. E. Talmage and Dr. S. B. Young on the subject of the impurities in the Jordan River below the sewer outlet, also with the analyses by Dr. Talmage of samples of water taken from the stream above and below that point. In continuation of the important subject, the News takes pleasure in laying before its readers the following communication:

SALT LAKE, Sept. 23th, 1892.

Prof. J. E. Talmage

Dear Doctor—In your communication of the 15th inst., containing analysis of the Jordan River water, you requested my opinion as to its use by the inhabitants along its banks, and the effect it would produce on milk taken from cows who are in the habit of drinking this water. I trust you will kindly extend pardon to me for having postponed my answer to this date, but excessive labor, professional and others, must plead an excuse for me.

To begin then: Prof. J. Herbert Sheed, U. S. C. E., says: "Water is an essential element of existence. The presence and need of water is nearly universal. It is no less a primary want of human life than air and food. A subject of such vital importance as water supply demands the most careful consideration as its influences for good or evil are of the gravest character." The need of water in a community may be classed in two divisions—public and private uses. The public uses are such as for extinguishing fires, cleansing and sprinkling streets and flushing of sewers, for public fountains, baths and similar purposes. The private uses are for the household, for manufactures and other purposes affecting each consumer individually. When once used it is soiled and must be got rid of and the manner of doing this will affect others in the community; it may be by contaminating their source of supply, or causing foul exhalation, which the air will convey to their dwellings.

It seems desirable, says Dr. Parks, to give the public some sort of an idea what waters may be used and what may not be, and I think the following standard will convey the most important points connected with the supply of drinking water. He proposes to form a class of wholesome waters, under which two sub-classes of waters may be included.

First, the purest and most wholesome water which is free from suspended matters and contains very little dissolved organic matter, say under one grain to the gallon, and that probably vegetable, and of dissolved mineral matters under seven grains per gallon. This will include all the waters supplied from the primitive rocks and some of the sands, which contain less than that quantity of mineral matter, and is probably the purest water on the whole which can be obtained in sufficient large quantities. Rain water after filtration might come under the same standard.

Then the second or sub-class in the first order would be what may be called pure and wholesome water, to which no objection can be made I believe in a sanitary point of view, but which is not so pure as the former. This water is also measurably free from suspended matters, having dissolved organic matters under two grains per gallon, the greater part of that being vegetable. Of dissolved mineral matters it would contain less than twelve grains per gallon, consisting principally of the carbonate of lime and alkaline carbonates and chloride. The second sub-class would include the best chalk waters, which are generally very free indeed from organic matter.

Then the second grand class I would make, I would call usable waters. Those are all waters, with no suspended matters, or suspended matters easily separated by the coarse filtration usually resorted to by the water companies. The organic matter must be chiefly vegetable, but it should not exceed three grains per gallon, owing to the diseases which would probably arise if it exceeded.

that quantity, and if the organic matter is apparently of animal origin it should not exceed one grain per gallon. The small amount of mineral salts it may contain should consist of a class of salts which do no injury to the human system such as alkaline carbonates, alkaline chlorides, chloride of sodium and chloride of potassium in less quantity, and possibly a small amount of carbonate of lime also. I would exclude all sewage throughout.

The third class would be what I would call suspicious water, which would be any water with much matter suspended. Such water as that would in all probability contain mineral matters in fine particles which are harmful, such as clay or organic matters very finely divided and not very easily separated by filtration, or if it contains any indication of nitrites, nitrates, ammonia, etc., showing that organic matters had passed into the water and had then been oxidized. Any indications of that kind I consider would bring the class under the head of suspicious water.

The fourth class would be impure water, which would include any turbid and bad smelling water, with suspended matters not easily separated by coarse filtration, also dissolved organic matters above two grains per gallon especially if of animal origin, or large indications of fatty acids, ammonia, etc., all of which indicate the passage of organic matters, animal in all probability, into such waters.

To sum up I would propose as a popular division:

1st—Pure and wholesome waters, such as are found at West Houtfield in our largest and best flowing artesian well.

2nd—Usable waters, such as our City Creek and Emigration Canyon waters from which our city supply is largely taken.

3rd—Suspicious, waters as the Salt Lake and Jordan Canal and the Jordan River water above the sewer outlet.

4th—Impure waters, such as we find in the Jordan River below the sewer outlet. This latter meets all the indications of the 4th class, turbid and bad smelling, for this water, as we gathered a sample below the sewer outlet, showed a dark and turbid condition and smelled so badly that the operation of taking the water from the stream was anything but a pleasant one, and the appearance of the stream, at best a sluggish one, thickly studded through all its perceptible parts with large and small fecal masses so plentifully that in dipping for the specimens for analytical purposes we could not secure a dipper full without these masses being largely apparent in each part taken.

You state in your paper on the analysis of this water from the Jordan, that in your opinion a human being would be greatly exposing himself to take a drink of the Jordan water below the sewer outlet, and while this will be readily taken for granted, I may state here that the stench from this sewer-polluted river will endanger the health of all people living contiguous to it and not only these but the entire city will be made to suffer if this menace to life and health is not in some manner abated.

You further ask my opinion as to the effect it would have upon milk taken from cows who constantly drink this sewer impregnated water. I will give my opinion in the following statement, and I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction: There is not a civilized community in the world that would knowingly permit such milk to be brought into the city limits, much less allow it to be sold daily for consumption among its community. To what extent this same milk may be diseased would belong to the field of the bacteriologist to determine, and the nature of the bacilli there found.

Very truly and fraternally yours,
SEYMOUR B. YOUNG.

DROWNED WHILE BATHING.

There was another mysterious drowning at Beck's Hot Springs about 5 o'clock last evening. The victim was George Shuster, a locomotive engineer and a recent arrival from Chicago, Ill. He has a mother and sister living at Danville, Ill.

Shuster met a man here named Charles Spence. Both men were members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and friendship soon sprang up between them. Yesterday afternoon, about 8 o'clock, they went out to the Springs. They had been drinking, though it is said neither was intoxicated. In the pool the men became separated. Spence declares that the last he saw of Shuster he was teaching a lady how to swim. About an hour after he missed him, he became alarmed and at once instituted a search for him and found his body lying on the bottom of the pool dead. The coroner was notified and the remains brought to this city.

The spring employees say that Shuster was exceedingly reckless and that he dived frequently from the top railing around the upper tier of bath-rooms, though warned that such pastime was dangerous.

The general accepted theory is that he struck his head against the bottom while diving and was rendered unconscious thereby and strangled while in that condition. There were several letters on his person. Among others the following:

DANVILLE, Ill., Aug. 3, 1892.

Dear Brother—I received your welcome letter yesterday and was so glad to hear from you. We were near to death last week, and ma was sick, and you might know how I felt until Will came home Saturday. It was mean in him not to tell you about coming home, but he took home-ick and picked up and came, and we were awful glad, too, that he did come, as we had heard that he had left Munkington and didn't know where he was and couldn't hear anything from either of you. I guess that was most of ma's sickness, and now I don't want either one of you to wait so long again. I sent you two letters last week. It is a wonder you wouldn't answer some of them, but of course it has been so warm that a person didn't feel like writing. I know, but I couldn't help wondering.

I hope Will arrived safe and do hope he has a job now. George, if he gets a job and you both are working, stick to it and do good and then we will all be right. We had promised to do his part and I know you will do yours. I suppose Will has told you all about the trouble, and so it won't be necessary for me to write it. . . . I hope you will come home soon, as Will said that if he got work you could take turn abouts in coming home and then we wouldn't be so lonesome. Now, George, you look after Will, as you know he hasn't been away from home any. I will close, hoping to hear from you both soon. Our love and a kiss for you both from ma and myself, and I remain ever, your affectionate sister, ANNA.

Another bearing no date is as follows:

DANVILLE, Ill.

Dear brother—What in the name of sense is the matter, that you don't write? You and Will, put together, will drive us crazy worrying ourselves to death about you. We have been looking for a letter from you from one mail to the next one. No letters come. Now, imagine how we feel. Ma is sick, and I am alone to contend with all. You said that you were going to answer my letters right away and you haven't done it. What is the matter? Now, George, I want you to answer right away. I got one letter from Will, and that is all. We heard, through Mrs. Swift, that he was awfully homesick. I must stop, so good-bye. From your sister,
ANNA.

Now, do let this be the last short letter I have to write to you. Answer right away.
ANNA.

I will look for an answer Saturday.

The body was brought to this city by Coroner Harris and the inquest set for this afternoon.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

The police force organized by the Union Pacific at Cheyenne some months ago has put a stop entirely to the operations of box car thieves.

The honey crop is going to be about this fall, according to reports from Payson and other localities. It is claimed that the bees have hardly been able to store enough to keep themselves over winter.

A gang of petty thieves and burglars are at the present time "working" Boise. The fellows are said to be adepts at their trade, and thus far the municipal police have failed to capture any of them.

The outlook for an extension of a railroad to Richfield from Saltus is reported to be excellent, as this railroad company and the Richfield people seem to agree well and the company have a large amount of steel rails at Thistle.

Jack Guy, manager of the cattle ranch of Sam'l Comman, of Chicago, and one of his cow-boys, whose name was not learned, have been drowned in the Yellowstone while attempting to cross a herd of cattle near Custer station. Guy leaves a widow and four small children.

Says the Lehi Banner: Dr. Park has just finished a trip through Cache, Box Elder, Weber, Salt Lake, Utah, Morgan, Juab and Summit counties in the interest of the educational department. He has received encouragement all along the line and will receive exhibits from most of the schools.

Postmaster Butler of Laramie, Wyo., has received a communication from the Department, stating that the free postal delivery system will be inaugurated in that city the first of December, if the law is complied with in the numbering of streets and residences and in other respects.

A recent sample of ore from Deep Creek assayed by Mr. Krupps shows 187 ounces silver and $47 gold. The mine in which this vein was struck sold recently for $50 and not a cash transaction at that. The men who bought the mine are from American Fork and they gave a silver watch for the claim.

The case of Wm. L. Allen against Eliza Rausch has been settled at Helena, Mont., by Judge Buck rendering judgment in favor of defendant. The suit was over the possession of some town lots, that have been in litigation for twenty years, having gone to the Supreme court of the United States. The case possessed some fine legal points.

President Joseph F. Smith on Friday last addressed the students of the Brigham Young Academy. His subject was morality. He quoted from Christ's sermon on the Mount, and spoke in relation to the various ideas there brought forth. The students listened to his instructions very attentively. Among others who were present, then the teachers and students, were President David John and Dr. Karl G. Maeser.

Last Sunday about 7:30 a. m. John, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lorraine Ashman, of Nephi, was found dead in bed. The little fellow had been ill with diphtheria for some time past, but had become better and was thought to be out of danger. He awoke his father about 6 o'clock Sunday morning and they talked for some time. Both then fell asleep, but the boy, with his head resting on his father's arm, was soon afterwards found to be dead.

Orders have been sent to Camp Belten, on Powder river, Wyoming, for the headquarters and four of the six troops of the Ninth cavalry, encamped there since the first part of last June, to return to their station at Fort Robinson. Two of the six troops of the Ninth will remain at Camp Belten for the present and they will be designated by Col. Biddle. The headquarters and four of the six troops of the Sixth cavalry have been ordered from Camp Elkins to their station at Fort Niobrara. Camp Elkins was established near old Fort Fetterman about the 1st of June, and two troops of the Sixth are to remain for the present at that camp. Major Emil Adam, the commander, is ordered to return to his permanent station, Fort Washakie. The new colonel of the Sixth, Col. Gordon, will take command of the regiment.

A large number of the parties interested in La Plata mines recently had a survey made to ascertain whether or not the mines were located outside the Southern Pacific railroad land grant. It was thought by means of this survey, if it were found that the mineral hill lay beyond the railroad land grant it would stop all further litigation without taking the case to the land office for settlement by other methods. The survey was completed and the findings of the engineers were that the boundary line of section 11 was located about a mile and a half beyond the grant made to the railroad. As it now stands La Plata mine owners will need to prove that the land can be classed as mineral, which there is not the least doubt they can do and unless the government has given the railroad company a patent to the land it is presumed the injunction will be dissolved.

John D. Draper, aged 15 years, came to an untimely end at Moroni a few evenings ago by the hand of his playmate, Levi Frandsen, aged 18. The two boys were walking along the street together, returning from an entertainment, when Draper insulted Frandsen and provoked him to retaliate by using a very hard name for his young friend, who in turn hurled Frandsen to the ground, then ran a few paces away from him. Frandsen in rising to his feet picked up a couple of cobble stones about the size of his fist. The first he threw missed its mark, but the second struck Draper on the left temple, crushing in the temple bone. The poor lad lived about four hours when he expired, probably from paralysis of the heart, caused by blood clotting. Dr. Woodring of this city went over and held an inquest, and the facts produced were substantially as above stated. County Attorney Erickson filed an information against Frandsen and had him arrested. — Mount Pleasant Pyramid.

The Brigham City Bugler of October 1st, says: This week, County Recorder Burrows received for record two important deeds from Nolan & Brady, Chicago attorneys. They cover the sale of the Sherwood and Iron Blossom mines situated near the old Garfield mine, four miles north of Brigham. The Utah Mining Co. are the purchasers and H. C. Baker the seller. The price paid for the property is $500,000 for each of the two claims of 600x1500 feet. The deeds were of an iron-clad quit-claim order. A valuable limestone ledge showing iron oxide runs through both of the said properties. Mr. Baker was in town a short time ago with one of these three-time-a-millionaire mining capitalists, who was here inspecting the property. He spoke of great pending improvements and developments on the property. The Garfield mine near by contains a 200-foot tunnel which shows fine prospects.

Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Friday night, during a terrific thunderstorm, flames were seen to shoot forth from Thomas H. Vincent's barn, located on E street, about two blocks below the railroad track. Mr. Vincent was aroused by his wife crying, "The barn is on fire." He immediately rushed to the barn and set loose a number of horses. The fire spread rapidly and soon the entire barn and sheds were a mass of fire. Guns were fired throughout the city; the firebell pealed forth its alarm. Citizens and the fire department rushed to the scene, only to discover that the nearest hydrant was a distance from the barn of three blocks, which could not be covered by the hose. The horses were rapidly driven back to the court house and the engine was brought. As the fire was a distance from the court house of over a mile, this required considerable time, and before a stream of water could be thrown it was too late to do much good. It is generally admitted that the fire was caused by lightning striking the barn, and it is believed that a mare was killed by the shock. The property destroyed consisted of a barn and cattle sheds, a brood mare, forty tons of hay and a lot of straw, two or three Jersey calves and several chickens, valued in all at about $3000. The insurance amounts to $1500. — Provo Enquirer.

The mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Mabel Loomis, of this place, (says the Helena, Montana, Daily Journal), has created considerable excitement, and gossip is rife as to her destination and the circumstances surrounding the case. Last Tuesday morning a hack drove up to the house, shortly after Mr. Loomis had gone to work, and into it Mrs. Loomis loaded her trunk and bundles. A few minutes later it seems she went down Hoback as far as Ninth, disguised and heavily veiled, and at that point entered another hack, which is supposed to have conveyed her to the Montana Central depot just in time to catch the outgoing train. These facts are related by the neighbors who witnessed what went forward, but they attached no importance to it until it was definitely known that the lady had left the city. Investigation on the part of her husband, who is well nigh distracted, has failed to reveal anything relative to her whereabouts or the motives that inspired her to leave him. They were married about fifteen months ago, Mrs. Loomis is but 17 years of age, and her husband fears that improper influences have been brought to bear to cause the separation. The idea that she has gone to her home in Spokane is not entertained by her friends, and the mystery deepens with the belief that she took the Montana Central for some point unknown. Mrs. Loomis apparently quit the house within ten minutes after her husband's departure, leaving a note telling him that she was going to leave him and that no one was to blame for her departure but herself. She enjoyed a wide acquaintance, and the confidence and respect of her friends.

TO TEST THE TAX RAISE.

The committee appointed to consult with property owners as to whether they would be willing to subscribe to the fund for testing in the courts the action of the Territorial Board of Equalization in raising the taxes in Salt Lake county have met with success, as will be seen by the signatures attached to the following paper:

To defray the expenses of testing the legality of the increase in the Territorial school and county taxes for Salt Lake county, as made by the Territorial board of equalization, and in consideration of being made parties to an action to be commenced against the collector of Salt Lake county, restraining him from collecting said increased taxes, we each agree to pay 10 per cent. of the amount that our respective taxes are raised by such increased assessment, said payments to be made to William H. Sherman, treasurer of the committee appointed to take charge of the litigation, upon demand, provided an amount is subscribed sufficient to pay the expense of such litigation, and any surplus to be returned pro rata to subscribers.

Signed, Harriet Partridge, M. H. Walker, Joseph R. Walker, Estate of S. S. Walker, F. Auerbach & Bros., S. P. Tensdel, Pixton Estate, Cohn Bros., George Arbogast, John A. Groesbeck, John W. Donnellan, Kelsey & Gillespie and S. W. Sears.

THE TERRITORIAL FAIR.

Tomorrow at 12 o'clock, noon, the twentieth annual exhibit of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society of Utah will commence. The indications are that it will eclipse by far any and all of its predecessors. In every department there is promise of beautiful and successful showings. The exposition grounds and buildings were thrown open at an early hour this morning, and all day they have been the scene of the utmost activity. Exhibitors from a majority of the counties of the Territory were busily engaged in artistically arranging their displays in the space allotted to them. By tonight the most of the entries will have been made and all must be in before tomorrow at 10 o'clock a. m. The interior of the main building has been most beautifully decorated under the immediate supervision of Herman Bamberger. Thousands of yards of bunting and an untold amount of tissue and other kinds of paper of bright colors have been used in making an almost endless variety of novel and pleasing designs. From a magnificent centerpiece in the shape of a balloon, suspended from the highest point in the middle of the main apartment, red, white and blue streamers extend to all of the walls.

This ornament is numerously studded with incandescent lights, and when the full force of the electric current is turned on the spectacle will be one of dazzling splendor.

THE ART EXHIBIT.

The art exhibit is expected to maintain and even surpass the high order of excellence it has achieved in the past, and that means that it will be far in advance of any similar showing ever attempted in the West.

EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

The whole of the south wing will be devoted to the educational department, which is going to be one of the features of the fair.

MINERALS.

Owing to the lack of space the board of directors today set a large number of carpenters and other men to work erecting an additional wing in which to display Utah minerals. The force will be kept at work until tomorrow morning, at which time it is expected they will have completed the annex, after which the mineral will be moved in.

MANUFACTURES.

W. H. Rowe has charge of the manufacturers' department and an extensive and creditable display is expected to be made.

MACHINEERY AND IMPLEMENTS.

There will be an earnest but good-natured rivalry among the exhibitors of agricultural implements and machinery. The display will be the largest ever seen in Utah.

HORTICULTURE AND FLORICULTURE.
It is a little difficult to say just what kind of a showing will be made in these departments, but it is safe to expect a good one.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Agricultural products will be shown in great abundance and in numerous varieties. The exhibits will also be of excellent quality.

LIVE STOCK.

It is safe to say that the live stock department will be one of which Utah can be proud. Many fine breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and other animals are on the entry rolls and will be much admired by our visitors.

POULTRY AND BEES.

These departments will both be well represented and will attract much favorable comment, besides carrying off valuable prizes.

ADMISSION FEES.

By order of the board of directors, the admission fee will be fifty cents each for all adults.

Last Director's Meeting.

On Saturday night was the last meeting of the fair directors before the opening of the exhibition.

W. A. Corey was appointed assistant to Dr. Park. Mr. Stewart being ill. John Robinson was appointed assistant in the manufactures' department. The programme was decided upon as follows:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4TH.

Opening exercises 12 o'clock noon, as follows:

- 1.—Music by Logan Band.
- 2.—Prayer.
- 3.—Address by the Governor.
- 4.—Formal declaration of the opening of the fair by the President of the D. A. and M. Society, Mr. Curtis R. Mason.
- 5:30 p. m.—Grand exhibition of the Pompler Life Saving Crew.
- 6:30 p. m.—Repetition of life saving exhibition, with representation of conflagration and life saving drill. Master Hooker, son of the Drill Master, will appear in each performance.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5.

- School Day:
- 2 p. m.—Military drill contest.
- 3:30 p. m.—Grand balloon ascension. Prof. John Leonard, the famous aeronaut, will give a grand balloon ascension and parachute jump. After ascending to the greatest possible height, he will cut loose from the balloon and descend to the earth with his parachute.
- 4:30 p. m.—Calisthenic contest.
- 5 p. m.—Con petition of school choruses.
- 6:30 p. m.—Lecture atory contest.
- 7:45 p. m.—Fencing match.
- 9 p. m.—Spelling match.
- 9:30 p. m.—Mental arithmetic.

During the evening the exciting and difficult task of awarding the premium to the prettiest girl at the Fair will be performed and the result announced at 10 o'clock.

- Thursday, October 6th (Provo Day)—
- 2 p. m.—Sheep shearing contest.
- 2:30 p. m.—Grand colored quartette contest in which a number of quartettes will appear in competition singing "Old Virginia," "Massa's in the Gold Ground" and "My Old Kentucky Home."
- 4:30 p. m.—Pompler Life-Saving exhibition.
- Friday, October 7th (Ogden Day)—
- 2 p. m.—Grand public wedding.
- 3 p. m.—Grand concert in pavilion including "Comrades in Arms" chorus, by Professor Thomas; price chorus. The Union Glee Club and the Harmony boys will also appear.

- Saturday, October 8th (Logan Day)—
- 10 a. m.—Grand parade of all stock exhibits, and attaching of ribbons to prize animals.
- 2 p. m.—Fancy show for $50 in money prizes offered by the Society and other valuable articles contributed by merchants.
- Afternoon—Horse-pulling match for two prizes of $25 each.
- 8 p. m.—Grand promenade concert by Logan Band.

NUMBER OF ENTRIES.

Saturday the entries made were as follows:

Horses.....	369
Cattle.....	77
Sheep and swine.....	103
Poultry, bees, etc.....	48
Dogs.....	33
Agricultural products.....	92
Horticulture and floriculture.....	48
Agricultural implements.....	12

Manufactures.....	27
Minerals.....	10
Fine arts.....	102
Women's work.....	57
Educational.....	59
Miscellaneous.....	20

107

DEATH OF ELDER ADOLPH HAAG.

The following brief but expressive private cablegram was received today from Elder Don. C. Musser, of this city, now on a mission in Cadiz, Turkey: "Elder Adolph Haag is dead." The deceased resided at Payson, Utah County. He left home for a mission to Turkey on the 6th of February last. He was the brother of Professor Haag, teacher of foreign languages at the Latter-day Saints College, this city. The latter received a letter from him a few days ago. At the time of the writing he was in the best of health and there was much speculation as to the cause of his unexpected and sad demise. He leaves a wife and two children with whom the Saints will mourn. Elder Haag was an able man and his death will be a severe blow to the community in which he lived.

SANITARY INSPECTOR SHOWELL.

It will be a matter of great surprise and profound regret to many citizens of all local political parties and other organizations to learn that numerous inspections have been made against Sanitary Inspector Showell. It is alleged that he has been engaged for a long time in systematically robbing the city of a large amount of money every month. This has been freely talked of for sometime among those who were "on the inside." As stated in last evening's News, detectives were secretly engaged and put to work on the case. For weeks they worked day and night obtaining what is said to be conclusive evidence against Mr. Showell. Affidavits and documents of different kinds were secured and are in the hands of the officers who worked up the case, and copies have been placed in the hands of the mayor. The papers for the present are kept in close custody and will probably not be given to the public until after an investigation, which it is expected will be held on Friday night, as the City Council will hold an executive session on that date.

It was rumored that the affair was the result of spite work, and wholly in the interest of the Democratic members of the City Council. This, however, is incorrect if what is now officially stated be true. That is, that Mr. Beatty employed the detectives and promised to see that they were paid for their services at public expense. It is a well known fact that the city pays large amounts of money for the removal of its garbage, supposedly beyond the city limits. The charges are to the effect that the refuse has been dumped in convenient holes and low places near at hand, and the money, to the amount of $300 to $400 per month, appropriated by Mr. Showell for his own use.

Mr. Showell is further accused of using teams for private work when they were on the city pay roll.

These and other kindred cases of alleged crookedness have been preferred and will no doubt be thoroughly investigated. It is said that the entire transaction leaves the city $13,000 short.

Mr. Showell, when seen by a News reporter to-day, denied that he was guilty in any degree whatever, and said his books were open for inspection to anybody who wished to see them. He said further that when the proper time came he would be able to meet and successfully refute all the charges and show that he is the victim of personal spleen.

COLUMBUS DAY.

Governor Thomas issued the following proclamation:

In compliance with the act of Congress the President has issued his proclamation recommending that Friday, October 21, 1892, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of this "New World" by Christopher Columbus, be observed by the people of the United States as a public holiday.

The World's Congress auxiliary has also recommended that the public schools be made the centre of the celebration.

Now, therefore, I, Arthur L. Thomas, Governor of the Territory of Utah, do earnestly recommend to the people to appropriately observe the day, and that in the public schools the enlightened product of our free institutions, such exercises be held as will serve to impress on the minds of the young a just appreciation of the great event which the day recalls, and of the wonderful progress which has signalized American life and history during the four centuries now drawing to a close.

PRIMARY FAIR AT NEPHI.

Nephi, Oct. 2, 1892.—Friday and Saturday were lively days in Nephi, the result of a fair held by the two Primary Associations of the city in connection with the association at Levan.

I arrived late on Saturday and upon my visit to the Paxman building where the fair was held found that the articles placed on exhibition by the Levan ward had been removed. The display, however, had been a meritorious one and did credit to the association, whose presiding officers are Sisters Esther Gardner, Ann A. Rasmussen, and Dinah A. Holloway. Articles worthy of mention were a quilt made by members of the association, lovely rugs and fancy work.

Nephi contains two Primary associations in the North and South wards respectively. The presidency of the first consists of Sisters Celestia Hudson, Katie Sorenson and Elizabeth Grace, and of the South ward, Sisters Emeline Sutton, Elizabeth Linton and Lillie Ellison. Each ward has a harmonica and drum corps, that of the North ward numbering fourteen members, under the leadership of Ernest Winn, and the South ward band numbering twenty-two, with Master Hyrum Burton as captain. The little fellows make good music and keep themselves busy both days by parading the streets and "drumming up" patrons for the fair.

The large display made in the line of home productions would have shown to advantage in a building at least twice as large as the one occupied. Everything exhibited was a gem, and it would be difficult to select articles of special merit from among the great number of articles shown. In the mechanical line was a small loom, probably two feet square, and made so perfect that carpet was woven thereon in the fair building by Master Thomas Carver, the manufacturer, whose age is but thirteen. A rope basket stand by Lotta Bird, a wool rug by Francis Ellison, quilts made by Louie Chappell and Hattie Bird, both under fifteen years of age, a felt table scarf by Minnie Lunt, a table scarf made by the McCune sisters and a large variety of fancy work were the features of the South ward display, in which was also a needle work and painted picture representing a scriptural scene made by Sister Sarah Free in her eighty-seventh year. Sister Free is now nearly one hundred years of age and resides in the Twenty-first ward, Salt Lake City.

In the North Ward display was noticed an excellent quilt made and presented to the association by their president, Sister Hudson, a crazy patch work bed spread by Minnie Adams, age thirteen, and a beautiful scarf made by nearly a score of girls, the name of each being worked on the same. Here was also a large amount of fancy work of every description and a feature in the entire display was the clothing made by children from nine to thirteen years of age. A table of fruits, vegetables and cookery was complete in itself. The officers and members of the three associations deserve great credit for their untiring labors in making such a perfect success of the fair.

J. FRANK PICKERING.

THE CHOLERA.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—A hundred cases of cholera are reported at Portet, a suburb of Boulogne, the last ten days.

HAMBURG, Oct. 1.—The official cholera reports show an increase of fourteen in new cases and a decrease of ten in the number of deaths.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—The health department this morning gave notice to cease the issuance of bulletins on account of the absence of cholera.

BUDA PESTH, Oct. 2.—It is officially announced that this city is affected with cholera. The authorities state that the disease was introduced here through the medium of imported hides.

HAMBURG, Oct. 2.—Cholera statistics show forty-three fresh cases and twenty-one deaths yesterday.

PARIS, Oct. 2.—Many persons continue to be attacked daily by cholera in the city and suburbs. Yesterday there were thirty-five fresh cases and ten deaths.

EX-PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S resolution, as embodied in today's dispatches, to the effect that he will not touch any intoxicant during the present campaign, may or may not be calculated to make a difference in the temperance vote this fall.—President Harrison himself is not a man against whom that class of citizens can urge much objection. Apart from its political aspect, the incident suggests the thought that if Mr. Cleveland has become convinced he can get along without stimulants during the campaign he surely ought to be able to sustain himself without them for ever after.

SEARCHERS OF GENEALOGY.

As I have been gathering genealogical and historical data of my ancestors and in doing so have visited England, Wales and Ireland, and have been somewhat successful in getting considerable information, and believing that it might be of interest to many of the numerous readers of the DESERET NEWS, I cheerfully submit the following statement:

At the general registration office at Somerset House, London, I learned that the Daltons came over to England from Normandy and that Sir Walter D'Alton moved to Ireland and settled, calling the place Mont Dalton. This was in the twelfth century. From this house sprang the Daltons of Ireland. So I went over to Dublin, got an interview with the assistant register general at the Charlemont House, Rutland square, by the name of Robert E. Matheson, whom I found to be a very genial gentleman. I learned from him the rules of the office relative to searching the records for surnames of friends. A fee of £1 is exacted by the office for sixty-four hours' time or the fractional part thereof, the six hours being considered a day's work. As I expected to collect quite a number of names, and knowing that I would have to employ clerks to make extracts, I concluded to get as many as could work judiciously at one time. So contracted with five competent and experienced lady clerks agreeing to give them four shillings and sixpence each per day to extract me one hundred and twenty-five names each; and if they extracted more names than the number agreed upon, they should receive pay at the foregoing rate. My clerks averaged me 150 names each per day, which gave me 750, at an expense of £1 office fee and £1 7s. clerk hire, making a total expense per day of £2 7s., an average cost of but 1½ cents per name. I have a fixed underwriting with the office to get all my work and any of my friends' work done at the same figures. From the best information I can gain this is much cheaper than in the New England States, where the cost is about six cents per name. All principal surnames are on record in the register general's office found in Ireland. I procured a book treating of two thousand principal surnames which are spelled in different ways in different districts in Ireland. This book proves to be a good guide in hunting given names and locating them in their respective districts, assisting the searching parties to open up a correspondence where it is deemed necessary. Now, if I can be of any use in furnishing information to any friend on the foregoing subject I shall take great pleasure in so doing without money consideration.

About the year 1837 a law was enacted by the British parliament compelling parents to register births, marriages and deaths in their families at the register's office of the district where they reside under pains and penalties for neglecting to do so. Thus a harvest of names are garnered in the different depositories of the nation, the rule having been in full operation in Ireland since 1864. I was also advised that there was another office in Dublin Castle where the pedigrees of all persons owning estate in Ireland, with their coat of arms could be obtained, $20.00 being the fee exacted in my case. There are 799 register districts organized in the country, all of which have to report to the register general's office where the facts are again recorded; so it will be seen that a search in the principal office will save a person the trouble of traveling over the country.

I am of the opinion that similar arrangements could be made with the register general's office at Somerset House, London. M. W. DALTON. WILLARD, Box Elder Co., Utah.

P. S. Elders Edward Stevenson of Salt Lake City and T. W. Brewerton of this place have seen the forms of births, marriages and deaths filled up. They are much pleased with the order pursued and take much interest therein. M. W. D.

COURT PROCEEDINGS.

At the April term of the Third District Court the grand jury found an indictment against the Salt Lake Brewing Company for maintaining a nuisance at their brewery, situate at the corner of Tenth East and Fifth South streets. When the case was called up for trial the defendants pleaded guilty, but asked through their attorney (W. C. Hall) that judgment be suspended, to enable them to remedy the evil complained of. The request was granted.

This morning, upon the opening of court, Assistant District Attorney Stephens remarked that the case had been continued from time to time, and said he had notified the defendants' attorney that he would call it up this forenoon, with a view of having judgment pronounced. If his Honor desired to hear any further evidence he would call several witnesses. He could, however, if necessary, state briefly what they had to tell.

Requested by Judge Zane to make a statement, Mr. Stephens said the testimony of Dr. Beattie, the health officer, and other persons was to the effect that the condition of the pipes carrying the refuse from the brewery was just about the same now as before, though there was not such a stench as during last year. Whenever the pipes had broken since the case last came up the company had been more prompt in repairing them. The health officer had requested him to bring the present condition of things before the notice of the grand jury.

Mr. Moritz, the manager of the brewery, was present and said that during the last month the pipes had not broken at all.

Attorney Hall said these wooden pipes were put in by the City Council at the expense of the defendants, to the tune of about $2900. The company had now undertaken to put the pipes in such a condition that there should be no further annoyance to residents in the vicinity of the brewery. The fault was as much on the side of the Council in putting down defective pipes as on that of the defendants.

Judge Zane—Let the fine be placed at $100, and costs of the prosecution.

NO COMMITMENT MADE.

Assistant District Attorney Stephens said there was a prisoner in the penitentiary named Dan St. Clair, and his (counsel's) memorandum showed that he had been sentenced to a year's imprisonment. He believed the defendant answered before Judge Anderson last December, but it seemed that Warden Parsons held no commitment in the case. The warden was present and would state that St. Clair's conduct had been good during the time he had been confined in the penitentiary; and if the man had been committed to "the usual form," his term (less the deduction under the copper act) would very shortly expire.

Clerk McMillan said he could find no record on his books of the defendant's commitment.

Judge Zane (with surprise)—This man should not be held there without some authority.

Warden Parsons informed the Court that, to the best of his belief, St. Clair was arraigned on December 4th, 1891, and pleaded guilty. Sentence was set for December 7th, but on that day the defendant was suffering from brain fever and unable to appear, and for some two months he remained in the penitentiary hospital.

Judge Zane—But we have to depend on the record, not hearsay.

Clerk McMillan took another look over his records, but said he had no mention of St. Clair having been sentenced.

Assistant District Attorney Stephens—At all events I desire to ask that the defendant may now be discharged. I do not think, under the circumstances, he ought to be held any longer. Sentence of less than a year could not have been imposed, even on the defendant's plea of guilty.

After some further conversation Mr. Stephens asked that the matter be allowed to stand over until tomorrow morning. In the meantime he would look the facts up.

The Court so ordered.

ASSAULT AT BOUNTIFUL.

Murray Wilson, the seventeen-year-old boy who was convicted last week of a common assault upon a little girl at Bountiful (though he had been indicted on a more serious charge), came up for sentence.

His attorney Mr. C. B. Glenn said a few words in mitigation of punishment. He informed the court that the lad was of very respectable parentage, and up to this time had borne a good character. His parents had suffered a great deal of humiliation in consequence of his wrong act, and counsel hoped that the court would be merciful to the boy.

Judge Zane asked whether the defendant's father could pay a fine, and upon receiving an answer in the affirmative, imposed a fine of $200 and payment of costs of the prosecution.

WANTED FOR A PROBATIONING TRIP. Alonzo McMillan was placed on trial on a charge of grand larceny; Attorney Harris defended.

The defendant is a respectably attired young man, of diminutive build, about 23 years of age, and it was alleged that on November 1st, 1890, he went to Wm. R. Andrews, who resides in the Third ward, and hired from him a team and saddle horse, which he represented was wanted for a mining trip, and which, he said, would be required for three or four days. The next seen of the defendant by Mr. Andrews was about two weeks later, at Ogden, where he was arrested, having in the meantime, it is said, sold the property. The jury found the accused guilty. Mr. Harris entered a motion in arrest of judgment, which will be argued on Friday. The defendant's counsel was very indignant when the verdict was announced, and appeared quite surprised.

SHE ELOPED WITH ANOTHER.

Joseph Kent, a decent looking man of forty-five, withdrew his former plea of not guilty to a charge of shooting at Alonzo Henriicks with intent to murder, and plead guilty to common assault.

Assistant District Attorney Stephens said the prosecution were now able to produce only one witness, and he a police officer. The wounded man had taken flight. Counsel was disposed, under all the circumstances of this case, to accept the now tendered plea of guilty to a common assault. He had been informed by disinterested persons that the defendant was an honest, hard-working man. His wife had eloped with the man whom he was charged with wounding, leaving the father to do the best he could with their two-year-old boy.

Attorney Barlow Ferguson (with whom was Attorney John M. Cannon) spoke in the defendant's behalf, and told the Court quite a romantic story. He said the defendant married a young girl of eighteen and they lived together happily until the man whom Kent assaulted came upon the scene. Henriicks was a sewing machine canvasser, and after calling at the house one day and selling Mr. Kent a machine he paid her frequent visits during the husband's absence at work. She became somewhat attached to him, and then the defendant drove him away from the premises. Notwithstanding this she continued his visits, and one day the defendant found the man and his wife hugging each other. (Laughter.) Kent drove him away again; but the woman informed her husband that she did not want to live with him any longer, and that she was going away with Hendricks. Kent thought that if he could do something to prevent the other man leaving for a time his wife would probably cease to think so lovingly of him, and be content to remain at home. He became excited over the affair, however, and one day went up town and obtained a small pistol, his object being to prevent Hendricks escaping with his wife. He found Hendricks out and shot him in the arm, but without hurting him seriously. For this he was arrested. His wife still insisted that she would go away, and had since eloped with Hendricks, (it was believed they had quit the country), the wife leaving the little 2-year-old to the care of her husband. Counsel, after stating that the defendant was without means and pleading for clemency in Kent's behalf, said: "The man whom he shot did not get his deserts. There's no doubt about that." (Laughter.)

In reply to the Judge, defendant said his only reason for shooting at Hendricks was that stated by his counsel.

Judge Zane—When a man has to get a gun to prevent another man taking his wife from him, he had better let such a woman go her way. After pointing out the unlawful act of which Kent had been guilty he ordered him to pay a fine of $100 and the costs of the prosecution. "But," his Honor added, "I will make no order for your commitment now."

The defendant held the child in his arms while before the court. He appeared to be devotedly attached to the little fellow.

THE AUSTIN SHOOTING.

In the case of the People vs. James Austin, charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder, a motion for a continuance was made by Attorney C. B. Glenn and overruled.

TO COME UP FRIDAY.

On application of Assistant District Attorney Stephens, it was ordered by the Court that Isaac Sears and Gilbert Marchant, who had previously plead guilty to a charge of unlawful cohabitation, come up on Friday morning next for sentence.

DISMISSED.

The charge of fornication against George Etchel was dismissed on motion of Assistant District Attorney Stephens, who stated that the lady mixed up in the case had since "married another," and she did not want her name now brought up.

Court adjourned till 2 p.m.

CIVIL BUSINESS.

Judge Anderson this morning took up the law and motion calendar on peremptory call, but the proceedings up till noon were devoid of public interest. Among the spectators were Miss Emma Lee, "the lady lawyer," who occupied a seat at the attorneys' table and paid particular attention to what transpired.

The first case called up in Judge Zane's court this morning was that of William Darden, who stands indicted for sheep stealing. Prosecuting Attorney Stephens stated, however, that the defendant's counsel were not present, Judge Powers having gone to Nebraska to defend in the Irvine murder murder trial, and Attorney Ogden Hiles being engaged in the Cass Hile murder case at Provo. Under these circumstances Mr. Stephens consented to the matter going over for the term.

ALLEGED FALSE PRETENSES.

R. E. Moulton's name stood next on the criminal calendar for today. The defendant is charged with obtaining money by false pretenses, his alleged offense, as stated by Prosecuting Attorney Stephens, consisting of the alleged selling of a draft for $100 on the defunct Farmers and Mechanics' bank at Ogden. The affairs of the late bank are being now investigated, and pending that investigation counsel asked that the case, by request of the attorneys for the defense, be continued. The Court so ordered.

ANOTHER CONTINUANCE.

John Cramer is indicted for shooting at one Jerry Richardson with intent to murder, and he was to have had his trial today. It was explained, however, that the defendant is in Idaho (being out on bail) and had been living there ever since the hearing before the United States Commissioner. His attorneys had written him to come down, and he is expected to be here shortly. Prosecuting Attorney Stephens was therefore asked that the case be continued for the present. Counsel intimated that he would probably make another setting of criminal cases toward the latter part of the present term.

HERE'S ANOTHER.

William A. Morrow is indicted for selling liquor without a license; but upon the application of Judge M. Kay, who will defend, the case has been temporarily continued.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

The grand jury came into court and reported having found eight indictments under the Territorial laws and two under the laws of the United States. They ignored the charge of adultery against John Girard and that of assault with criminal intent against Alfred Roberts.

ADJOURNED.

The day's programme having been run through by 10:45, court adjourned until ten a. m. tomorrow.

JUDGE ANDERSON'S COURT.

Judge Anderson this morning went on with the law and motion calendar, and by noon quite a number of cases had been wiped off on short order. None of the matters which came before his Honor were of public interest.

COURT NOTES.

The case of James Austin, charged with shooting at his son with intent to murder, occupied the entire time of Judge Zane and a jury yesterday afternoon. The facts were briefly stated in Monday's NEWS. The accused, who appeared to feel his position acutely, was found guilty of assault with a deadly weapon. Sentence will be pronounced on October 17th.

Effie Smith, committed from the Third District Court on December 5th, 1891, for one year, for grand larceny, will be released from the penitentiary October 5th.

John Strilang, convicted in the Third District Court on December 10, 1891, (one year, for grand larceny), will also be let out on October 5th.

Robert Young, sent up from the First District Court at Ogden, June 25th, 1889, (five years, for burglary), will be free on October 25th.

Ed. S. Ford, sent up from the Third District Court on December 28th, 1891, (one year, for grand larceny), will be let out October 28th.

D. W. Reitch has filed a petition for a writ of review in the Third District Court to compel U. S. Commissioner Pratt and Andrew J. Burt, sheriff, to certify all proceedings in an action brought against the petitioner by one Peter F. Goss up to this court from said lower court. Judge Anderson has issued the writ according to the prayer of the petition, and made it returnable on October 8th.

Frank E. McGurrian and Elmer E. Darling have begun suit against C. E. Coffin, administrator, et al., in the Third District Court to collect $1348.45 on a promissory note secured by a mortgage. The usual decree is asked.

Prosecuting Attorney Stephens is today looking up the Dan St. Clair "non-commitment" case, mentioned in yesterday's NEWS. Meanwhile the unsentenced youth continues to languish at the penitentiary. That "someone has blundered" is clear; but nobody seems inclined to accept the responsibility.

Mr. Stephens "believes" the man was sentenced; Warden Parsons holds no order of commitment; Clerk McMillan says he has no record of the sentence, and rightly insists that it is no business of his to direct the accused's detention or release. In a word, he entirely wipes his hands of the business, leaving the Prosecuting Attorney and Warden Parsons to settle the matter between them.

So great is the noise caused by the tram cars and vehicles generally rattling past the Dooly building that it is often difficult to hear what judge, witnesses and counsel are saying. This is especially the case when the windows are open for purposes of ventilation; but there appears to be no remedy at hand just now.

The grand jury have adjourned over conference and the fair.

George Wilson, the alleged Grand Junction burglar, who was yesterday arrested by Deputy Sheriff Leason, was taken to Grand Junction last night by Sheriff Innes, of Mesa county, Colorado, the defendant having expressed his willingness to start on the journey at once, without waiting for the arrival of the extradition papers.

BLAZER HAS DEPARTED.

C. L. Blazer seems to be a rather slippery individual. He gave bonds a few days ago, his sureties being Captain Davis, of Westwater "lane," and Mrs. Anne Van Zogler, an Ogden lady. Davis, however, subsequently withdrew, and it seems that soon after this the defendant was missing. Some of his friends thought he may be searching for another surety, but the officials incline to the opinion that he has taken a longer step than that.

NEW SUITS FILED TODAY.

W. T. Ayland, Jr., and Samuel Roberts, Jr., this morning brought suit against S. S. Howard and John Parkins to recover $2,000 and costs.

The complaint alleges that the defendants, on August 30th, near South Bountiful, Davis county, by force imprisoned plaintiffs for a period of three and a half hours without probable cause or authority. They were thereby prevented from attending to their business during the time named, and their credit, they say, has been injured. C. G. Gardiner is the plaintiffs' attorney.

Rhoda Stoddard also brought suit today against Judson L. Stoddard and sixteen other defendants of the same surname in which she seeks to quiet title to a piece of real estate in Davis County, and also another lot located in Farmington. She alleges that the claim of the defendants thereto is without any legal right, and asks that they be debarred, by order of Court, from asserting such claim. Thomas Adams is the plaintiff's attorney.

At one period of its existence smoking was so common that it was actually practiced in church. Previous to the visit of James I to the University of Cambridge, in 1615, the Vice Chancellor issued a notice to the students, which enjoined that "No graduate, scholar or student of this university presume to take tobacco in Saint-Marie's church, upon pain of final ex, eiling the university."

WALKING ON THE WATER.

[Toledo Commercial.]

Walking on the water has been accomplished by at least two Englishmen—Captain Terry and Prof. C. W. Oldreive—both of whom use specially made floats. Captain Terry in 1899 walked on the Thames from Barnes to Mortlake, in England, at the rate of nearly four miles an hour, and intimated an intention of walking across the channel from Dover to Calais, but that walk has not yet come off. Prof. Oldreive, who is the champion water walker of the world, has made several successful exhibitions of his power both in Europe and in this country. He successfully breasted the Niagara rapids, walking on the rapids through Hunter Falls in the presence of more than 5000 spectators.

He also performed a daring and dangerous feat in Boston Bay on July 27, 1899. On that occasion he started on a trial trip across Hull Gut. Three or four harbor boats passed near him and he was obliged to take their wash, but notwithstanding this he accomplished the feat easily in fifteen minutes, the distance being about a quarter of a mile. Then the professor was taken into Mr. Cuniff's steam yacht, which steamed away with him for his next trip. He was lowered into the water and at once turned his face toward the mainland.

Serious was the sea that the breakers hid him from view nearly half the time. The yacht followed as closely as possible, her occupants momentarily expecting to see the professor disappear beneath the surface and never rise. After a plucky struggle a distance of five miles was successfully covered, and Prof. Oldreive made a successful landing at a point near Strawberry Hill.

The wooden floats on the professor's feet were square boxes of cedar 4 feet long, furnished at the top with recesses for the feet, and in the bottom with a series of collapsible paddles, hinged to swing horizontally and on the backward push present a flat surface like the membrane of a duck's foot.

DISCOVERIES BY DR. TALMAGE.

For scientific purposes only, Dr. James E. Talmage, accompanied by Captain D. L. Davis and Douglas Swan, of this city, a few days ago started upon a cruise on the waters of the Great Salt Lake. Learning of the Professor's return a News reporter called upon him this afternoon at his office in the Deseret Museum, to obtain the result of his voyage of investigation. In answer to questions by the News representative Dr. Talmage said: "The lake is simply teeming with animal life. So far I have discovered four distinct classes. They are the brine shrimp (artemia fertilis) which is by far the most abundant, a small goat or fly (epidura gracilis) and two types closely allied to beetles. The most important and prospectively valuable is the brine shrimp. It is found in great numbers in water containing twenty per cent. salt. I brought a good many of them home with me for experimental purposes and have since been endeavoring to get them to live in fresh water taken from City creek and am meeting with splendid success. I have gradually reduced the density of the water in which I keep the shrimps until it contains but 10 per cent. salt, and the little fellows are as lively as possible. I expect to have them living in absolutely fresh water before long. They are in excellent condition for propagation, and the females are simply burdened with eggs.

"The fear that scientists have expressed that fish will not live in the lake is entirely groundless. Of course they would necessarily have to be introduced gradually, but that can be successfully done. They can be acclimated by degrees. There is sufficient animal life in the lake to sustain all the fish it will hold. Plants, too, will live there, for it is an ordained law of nature that one will thrive where the other will.

"As to the shrimps, when about five miles from shore I cast a ten by ten foot net into the waters and in a few minutes I had captured about a quart. Then to the utter astonishment of my fellow voyagers I proceeded to wash and cook them. Later they were more surprised than ever when I commenced to eat them. I found them so delicate and palatable that it was not difficult to persuade Messrs. Davis and Swan to join with me in my experimental meal. These gentlemen, when once they had tasted, exhibited such signs of relish and voracity that our stock soon completely disappeared."

"Did you experience any ill effects after partaking of them?" asked the reporter.

"Not at all; on the contrary we found them delightfully nutritious."

"Men have been cast adrift upon the waters of the lake," continued the doctor, and have almost perished for want of food. This need occur no more, for life can be easily sustained on these small animals."

Dr. Talmage, while in Europe last year, took a number of shrimp specimens with him, taken from Salt Lake, and while in London delivered a lecture on their characteristics before the Royal Microscopical Society of that city. Dr. Talmage is an honorary member of this institution and has forwarded it as well as similar institutions in this country, strongly magnified photographs of this comparatively newly discovered and interesting little animal, and it is attracting a great deal of attention among scientific men.

COUNTY TEACHERS.

The Salt Lake County Teachers' Institute met in the university building Saturday afternoon.

After the usual opening preliminaries President D. R. Allen advised teachers and trustees to send in their orders for text books to be exchanged, to the dealers before collecting the old books, in order to make the exchange as soon as possible.

It was decided that books already purchased by trustees for supplementary reading might be used. The Sea Side and Way Side series might be introduced in third grade. Progressive exchange would be allowed on readers.

Professor Augsburg was introduced, who gave some very interesting remarks on teaching drawing. He said drawing was divided into three divisions: 1. Representative, or the ability to reproduce objects. This should be thoroughly taught in the common schools to grade from one to eight. 2. The constructive, and 3. The decorative, which should be taught in high schools in grades nine to twelve. The university, or grades thirteen to sixteen, should be taught.

Department work; such as architecture, painting, sculpture, engineering, etc.

First grade—Color work used in numbers, language, and for busy work.

Second grade—Parts I and II of elementary drawing simplified.

Third grade—Part III of elementary drawing simplified.

Fourth grade—Part IV of elementary drawing simplified.

Fifth grade—Part I of drawing simplified.

Sixth grade—Part II of drawing simplified.

Seventh grade—Part III of drawing simplified.

Eighth grade—Part IV of drawing simplified.

The professor said first grade teachers, required the greatest amount of knowledge in order to teach the subject successfully. Teachers, for their own study, should begin with drawing, simplified, and use elementary drawing simplified from which to prepare lessons for school.

Pupils should not use a text book during the first year. Any kind of papers would do. The most important thing is to get the idea, or thought. Drawing should be taught at least once a day in such a way as to train the mind of the child the same as in any other study. Draw before the class, as the observing powers of the child are the strongest and the child also sees how it is done. A teacher will be successful in teaching drawing in proportion to his success in mastering the matter presented in the first nineteen pages of the drawing simplified. The idea that a person cannot draw is erroneous; try to draw and persevere until you succeed. Recommended short lessons for primary children, longer lessons for pupils farther advanced.

In answer to the question, how could color be taught best, the professor stated that the color, its shades and tint should be used first. Use colored paper. Teach each of the primary color in this way.

Drawing should be taught as much as any other study, as we use it much more than any other branch of learning. Gave some excellent instruction on map drawing, as form work. Evincing a willingness to aid any of the teachers if they would call upon him. A vote of thanks was tendered the gentleman.

Superintendent D. R. Allen stated that the school law provided $100 for the benefit of the institute. Some discussion followed as to the best way of using this fund. A motion was adopted that the institute employ an instructor or instructors during the coming year, details to be discussed at the next meeting.

Professor Allen stated that a flag should be in every school house. The trustees should purchase one if possible.

The official programme for Columbus day was read and suggestions offered as to the observance of the day.

Advised the teachers to take some educational journal. All should take the Inter-Mountain Educator, as it is a good home journal.

Meeting adjourned for two weeks.
F. W. Bliss, Secretary.

WHAT A QUEEN CANNOT DO.

Queen Victoria is not allowed to handle a newspaper of any kind, or a magazine, or a letter from any person except from her own family, and no member of the royal family or household is allowed to speak to her of any piece of news in any publication. All the information the Queen is permitted to have must first be strained through the intellect of a man whose business is to cut from the papers each day what he thinks she would like to know. These scraps he fastens on a silk sheet with a gold fringe all about it and presents it to her unfortunate majesty. The silken sheet with gold fringe is imperative for all communications to the Queen.

Any one who wishes to send the Queen a personal poem or a communication of any kind (except a personal letter, which the poor lady is not allowed to have at all) must have it printed in gilt letters on one of those silken sheets with a gold fringe, just so many inches wide and no wider, all about it.

These gold trimmings will be returned to him in time, as they are expensive, and the Queen is kindly and thrifty, but for the Queen's presence they are imperative.

CATHOLICISM.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—Bishop Johnstone of Texas, Episcopalian, raised a cry of warning against Catholicism today on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of a new Episcopalian mission. His remarks were listened to by more than a dozen Episcopalian bishops from various sections of the country, over one hundred Episcopalian clergymen and over one thousand of the laity.

He spoke of the convention of German Catholics in Newark last week and said he denied that the church of Rome is in any sense, either an American church, or a church for Americans. It is distinctively a foreign church, ruled by a foreign autocrat, who is held to be infallible by his followers, who dictate the policy of the church to his partisans. He pulls the string in Rome and his puppets jump in America. This great convention in Newark assembled for what? To carry out the beliefs of a society of St. Raphael's which recently held a convention in Germany. Its purposes are:

First—To keep emigrants true to old world conditions and warn them against American traditions.

Second—To centralize solidly and isolate foreign Roman Catholics coming here and so secure them against American ideas.

Was this convention in Newark called for the purpose of free men? By no means. We are told that the subjects discussed were carefully selected beforehand, while the sentiments received the sanction of prominent ecclesiastical authorities before they were expressed. In other words, teachers prepared speeches and good little boys got up and delivered them. If conventions of this character are to continue I hope some day some bad boy like Luther, with American ideas of free speech, will get up and say something that will produce consternation among the pedagogues.

At a meeting of this St. Raphael society in Germany, the chancellor of the university at Washington vehemently denounced Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland; two patriotic Americans, for being loyal to their country and its institutions. This chancellor, and Bishop Johnson, taunted Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland, as being Liberal Catholics who have forgotten that the pope is pope in America as well as in Rome. His final taunt is that probably these American bishops intend applying a money doctrine to religion. Well, we are free to say that if things go on much further as they have been, that is just what will be done. Jesuitism has never failed to meddle in politics when it has been allowed to get a following. It has been expelled again and again, for what else can a self-respecting nation do with a set of officious foreign ecclesiastics who undertake to dictate not only what their own dupes must do but also how affairs of government must be run.

In conclusion Bishop Johnstone hoped that Americans might throw off the galling yoke of a foreign meddling bishop, bidding him mind his own business on the Tiber and first learn how to make its allies, Spain and South America, respectable and respected among nations, then he might with some grace come over here and tell us how to attend to our affairs.

THE FIRST UNIVERSITY.

[Westminster Review.]

The first university! In what age, upon what soil, and under whose influence did it arise? The "University" to which all the world might come and learn of the then existing knowledge! Its foundation dates from a period a little more than two thousand years ago; the soil is Egyptian; its name is Alexandria, and its founder Alexander the Great. For Alexandria was the first city to deserve the name. Athens might have won it, but when Athenian politics had become a thing of the past, and the field was open to other pursuits, Alexandria had already overtaken her. Hundreds of years anteior to the foundation of Alexandria, priestly schools existed at the ancient Egyptian cities of Thebes and Memphis, at the Assyrian city of Babylon, and at the Persian Persepolis; and anterior to these at the Turanian or early Chaldean cities of Ur and Agade, where the kings of Assyria sent their subjects to be instructed in the science and mysticism of the day. Still none of them deserved the title of "University"—i. e., as I have already said, "a place where all mankind might come and be instructed in all the learning then in existence."

Among the Greeks, Athens was never a "University." Her practical citizens were absorbed in politics; her philosophers in metaphysical speculation. The true Schools of Science—the Inductive Schools—never flourished at Athens; the observatories of the Greek astronomers were at Chios, on the south coast of Asia Minor, or at Cyclus, on the Hellespont; the School of Medicine was maintained by one illustrious family on the island of Cos. The Peripatetic school was as unscientific as the Platonic. Aristotle, though he lived at Athens, was never one of its citizens. He disliked it and left it, and was never able to command an audience at Athens for anything except metaphysics. Alexandria was the first school to deserve the title of a "University." On the site of the village of Rhacotis, Alexander founded, in the year 332 B. C., when he returned from Palestine into Egypt, that city which was to be the entrepot of the commerce of the East and the West, and where, in after years, the intellectual glory made manifest within her walls has given an all-enduring luster to her name.

Her long career of commercial and intellectual prosperity and her commanding position, as regards the material interests of the world, well justified the statesmanship of her founder.

The site was chosen, the ground plan drawn, and the mode of colonization directed. It is said, by Alexander himself. The building of the city, entrusted to Diocretes, the architect of the temple of Diana at Ephesus, was not, however, completed until many years afterwards. When completed it was divided into three districts—the Greek, the Jewish and the Egyptian; for Alexander was before everything cosmopolitan, and deliberately attempted on every occasion to break down the barriers of race and creed. The travels and exploits of Alexander had excited throughout the civilized races a new and burning desire to see and know more of each other and of the world, and Alexandria was the place where this curiosity could best be satisfied. On the death of Alexander and the breaking up of his empire in the year 323 B. C., Egypt, and in consequence the magnificent city of Alexandria, fell into the hands of Ptolemy, the son of Lagus.

Ptolemy was a man who had caught much of Alexander's own enthusiasm, and he it was who created the University of Alexandria, the importance of whose foundation—although it has been hitherto but little understood—admits of no exaggeration as far as the intellectual advancement of Europe is concerned. It gave, as a writer has observed, to the works of Aristotle their wonderful duration; it imparted to them not only a Grecian celebrity, but led to their translation into Syriac by the Nestorians in the fifth century, and from Syriac by the Arabs into their tongue. Four hundred years later they exercised a living influence over Christians and Mohammedans indifferently, from Spain to Mesopotamia. Demetrius Phalaris was commanded by Ptolemy to collect all the writings in the world, and so great was the success of his patient and laborious exertions that two great libraries were collected—the just pride and boast of antiquity.

The larger contained, in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus (about 280 B. C.), 400,000 rolls, representing about 90,000 distinct works; and there was another library in the Egyptian quarter, containing about 40,000 works. Both these were, in after years, greatly increased, and were always under the care of some distinguished scholar. Enjoying as this university did under the Ptolemies, for nearly two hundred years, a profound peace, both external and internal, it is no wonder, I think, that to this have every student resorted, and that to this same University of Alexandria we owe whatever is best in the science of antiquity. Mathematics, astronomy, medicine, geography, natural history, jurisprudence, criticism, were for nearly 1,000 years taught in her schools. It is said that at one time nearly 14,000 students were assembled there, thus surpassing, in point of numbers, all universities of more modern times.

FAMOUS OLD NOVELS.

[Chicago Evening Post.]

Some of the old novels are passing the limitation of their copyrights. This year the copyright expires on "The Scarlet Letter," "David Copperfield," "Pennyless," and "Alton Locke." "The Scarlet Letter" went out of copyright early in the present year, and two or three cheap editions promptly appeared on the American market.

In England, however, the event passed without notice, as the book had long since yielded the English pirate all the body that could be wrung from it. On the other hand, American publishers are not affected by the knowledge that copyright on "David Copperfield," "Pennyless" and "Alton Locke" ends with this year. Each of these volumes has been so freely appropriated in this country that the creation of the author's right in it will not influence its future price with us. But in England, where right has not been right in this matter, a keen competition is looked for among publishers, several of whom are understood to be prepared to flood the market, at the earliest moment allowed by law, with cheap editions of the popular books mentioned.

THE COUNTY coroner ought to pay an official visit to, and make it his early business to sit upon, some of the city sewer pipes;—not necessarily to determine the cause of the decomposition which has strongly set in, but to provide for the removal and decent interment of the remains.

"Such denials and vituperations prove nothing. We will let our report speak for itself."—Col. Robertson in Fort Wayne Gazette.

It would be some relief to know from their own lips, once for all, whether in letting their "report speak for itself," the Utah Commissioners are also willing to let it speak for them. The denials and vituperations [or denunciations] prove nothing," leads plainly to the belief that in bringing forth their document the overworked Commales have left themselves without a reserve thought or even a change of verbiage.

NOTES.

The strangest thing of this generation is the way of will-making is reported from Kentucky. One of the richest men in the state died a few days ago and cut his sons off with $100 each because of their liking for fast horses. His widow and daughter divide a fortune of $5,000,000. The typical Kentuckian would do exactly the reverse.

The funeral services over the remains of Elder Robert H. Thomas were held on Monday afternoon in the First ward meeting house at Provo. The speakers were Presidents Smoot and John, Bishop Johnson and members of the forty-five quorum of Seventies, of which Brother Thomas was a respected member. Deceased was 42 years of age. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his death.

Prosecuting Attorney Zane, in the Court at Provo yesterday afternoon, stated the case for the prosecution on the trial of Cass Hite, for the murder of Adolph F. Kohler, at Green River, Emery Co., on Sept. 9th, 1891. Ogden Hiles followed with a statement for the defense, after which Frank Drake went on the witness stand. He was still under examination when the Court adjourned till today.

A late scientific authority states that by saturating a bullet with vaseline it may be easily followed with the eye from the time it leaves the muzzle of the rifle until it strikes the target. The course of the flight is marked by a cascading ring of smoke, caused by the vaseline being ignited on leaving the muzzle of the gun. This smoke ring will remain suspended in the air for some little time after the bullet strikes if the day is not too windy.

It is proposed to furnish in the Louisiana state building at the World's Fair a room made and hung in the true Acadian style, with the time-honored Turkey red curtains and open rafters at the top, upon which will be hung the yarn, herbs, teas and skins of the typical Acadian furnishings. This room will also contain a loom, presided over by four native Acadian girls in their picturesque and characteristic costumes, weaving the celebrated Acadian cloth just as their great-grandmothers wove it a hundred years ago, and upon whose mode of weaving and instrument of manufacture their descendants have never discovered a single improvement.

The house and all the personal effects of Mr. John A. Richards of Pleasant Grove, were on Monday night, (October 3) consumed by flames. The circumstances are thus given in the Provo Enquirer: Mr. Richards was some distance from the house attending to some business on his farm. This being about 9 p.m., Mrs. Richards had put her two children to bed and had gone into the cellar to attend to some household affairs. She was startled by a scream from her children, and at once ran to learn the cause. On reaching the room she discovered that the children had upset the lamp in their play, and the fire was filling the room. By her presence of mind the children were rescued, which, however, are all that was saved.

The fastest cooking, authentically attested, was done not long ago by Prince Bismarck's former chef, who is now chief cook in a famous restaurant in Berlin. He had made a bet with a regular guest of the place of $25 that he could kill, dress, cook and serve a chicken in six minutes. The exploit was to be performed before invited spectators.

At 9 o'clock on the appointed evening the cook appeared with his gas cooking stove on a platform in sight of all in the room. He waded the chicken around his head as it cackled loudly. Decapitating the fowl with one blow of a glittering knife, this gastronomic expert within sixty seconds had removed every feather from it. The gas stove was already lighted, with a broiler upon it. The fowl was cut open and drawn in one other minute and placed upon the broiler; a hot dish garnished with watercress was at hand, and it lacked just a second of the six minutes when the chicken was served.

Wm. Thompson arrived from Sheep Mountain last week where he had been developing mining property, says the Idaho Democrat. He brought with him samples of silver ore from a ledge owned by himself and John Early that are the richest ever seen here. The ore is black sulphurets. The lowest assay that he has had went $147 in silver and $10 in gold. The highest $4,558.80 in silver. And he had one piece which he said would assay over $5,000. The ledge which carries this wealth is but two or three feet in width, while the richest vein is but a few inches. They have a tunnel run in on the ledge a considerable distance, but concluding not to ship any until next season, Mr. Thompson locked the door of his mine and returned to Boise. He says the party who stole the rich ore out there late last season is now known, and that it would be almost impossible for ore to be stolen and the thief got away with it without discovery. He and John Early have a fortune in that one claim alone.

The original of Scott's character in "The Heart of Midlothian" was Helen Walker. Charged at an early age with the duty of rearing and caring for her little sister, she experienced the great grief of bringing the latter to years of maturity, only to see her charged with child murder. At the trial Jeanie was subpoenaed to give evidence. She knew that her evidence, if truthfully given, would condemn her sister to death, and yet even in that emergency she declined to tell a falsehood, swore to the truth and saw her sister pronounced guilty and condemned to the gallows.

Immediately after the trial, as according to Scottish law six weeks must intervene between a capital sentence and its execution, Helen started on foot to London with a petition detailing the circumstances of the case and imploring pardon for her sister. She reached London, and after some trouble had an interview with the Duke of Argyll to whom she made known the facts, and upon their confirmation a pardon was extended to her sister. Helen Walker was buried in the churchyard of Iron Gray, six miles from Dublin, and on her tombstone was an inscription written at the request of some of her friends, by Walter Scott himself.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, September 25th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m. Counselor Charles W. Penrose presiding.

The choir sang the hymn commenting:

Come, dearest Lord, descend and dwell,
By faith and love in every breast.

Prayer was offered by Elder Solomon F. Kimball.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn:

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning!
The latter-day glory begins to come forth.

The Priesthood of the Eighth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

ELDER THOMAS E. TAYLOR

first addressed the congregation very briefly. He said he believed that God had constant knowledge of our actions and our thoughts, and it was pleasing in His sight when we sought earnestly to conform to His laws and the requirements which He had made for our government and well-being upon the earth. The closer we followed those requirements the more perfect would be our happiness while here below.

In the days of Moses the Lord directed the people as to what they should eat and what they should drink, and, generally, the command was observed. To quite an extent the children of Israel in our day also observed the laws given them for their guidance in temporal matters. The Prophet Joseph Smith received a revelation, given unto this people, directing us somewhat regarding what we should eat and what we should drink. This revelation was sometimes called the Word of Wisdom, and he believed that if we followed it more closely we should enjoy more of the Spirit of the Lord and immunity from the troubles and diseases which prevailed in the earth. Among other things the Prophet designated tobacco as not being good for man, and said that it was wisdom to leave it alone. In the days of the early settlement of this Territory it was quite an uncommon thing to see men using tobacco, which might have been mainly attributable to the teachings of the Elders among the people. These had reference to the use of strong drinks as well as tobacco, also mild drinks, such as tea and coffee. All these were included in the revelation from God. The speaker referred to the law of baptism, and then spoke of the great necessity of parents setting a proper example to their children, so that the latter might avoid and escape the evils which he had mentioned. When parents who professed to be Latter-day Saints did not set a good example to their children a bad effect was produced upon them.

As a people he feared we were becoming very negligent with respect to the Word of Wisdom in many respects, and he reminded his hearers, therefore, that we were to a certain extent responsible for the actions of others, inasmuch as they were indirectly the outcome of our own example. He who had a pure body was in a better condition to receive the Spirit of the Lord than he who was unclean. In conclusion Brother Taylor bore a strong testimony to the truth of the Gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints.

BISHOP ORSON F. WHITNEY

said he thought it was a good thing for all to bear in mind, when meeting together on occasions like the present, or undertaking to perform any duty required by our Maker, that what we did was as much for ourselves as for Him. We should not feel that we are doing the Almighty any great favor by keeping His commandments and conforming to His holy will. If we survived the subject aright we would come to another conclusion, namely, that all God required of us was designed for our benefit and eternal welfare. He sometimes thought when he observed the reluctance with which many engaged in the service of God and conformed to His requirements that they imagined they were doing it for Him as a special favor, and that it was not particularly calculated to benefit themselves. Should not the reflection come home to us that it might be for our good, for our salvation, that God says to us, Do this and so, and avoid doing thus or that?

Are we to suppose, for instance—since it has already been mentioned—that by abstaining from the use of tobacco, strong drinks, and those things which God has said are not good for man, it is simply to please Him, and render unto Him a favor? No. We may take the laws of God one by one, and analyze them so far as our finite knowledge can, and we will discover that all of them have been designed for our salvation, both in this world and in the worlds to come. God's commandments have a temporal and a spiritual significance. We hold in our hands the keys of our own lives, in a great measure, and if we pursue a certain course certain results will follow. There is a time for us to come, and a time for us to go; but it is according to our works, and the will of God.

There are two great promises given to those who observe the Word of Wisdom—who abstain from those things which corrupt the body and darken the mind. First is the promise of life upon the earth, of health, strength, and added years in mortality. "They shall run and not be weary," says the revelation; "they shall walk and not be faint;" and the destroying angel shall pass them by, even as he did the children of Israel. But when God makes a promise there are certain conditions to be observed in order to reap the benefit of that promise. When God's promises seem to fail we may rest assured that the fault is not His; let us not conclude, either, that every seeming failure is a failure. It is a great blessing to have the assurance that we will be preserved wherever we go—that we can go into the midst of disease and death and take no harm, that we can command the elements and they will obey us; for there are among the promises made unto the servants of the Lord who keep themselves clean and unspotted from the world. But there is no promise to us if we do not keep ourselves pure and clean—if we corrupt our blood by partaking of those things which have that effect upon our systems. At this time, when the shadow of a great scourge is hovering over the world and is beginning to darken our own land—and it may yet come among us here—it should set us thinking as to whether we are keeping the inside of the platter clean as well as the outside; whether we are pure in our persons and in our habits.

Another great promise is that those who keep the Word of Wisdom shall receive hidden treasures of knowledge—things which have been kept secret, perchance, from the foundation of the world, and which are greater than have ever been revealed or known among men. One of the great requirements that has always been made of those who stand as the teachers of mankind is that they shall keep their minds so clear and bright and their bodies so clean and pure that they will be impressionable and susceptible to the influences of the revealing Spirit of God. The mind of the man who corrupts himself is a bar, so far as spiritual things are concerned, and for the Spirit of God to act upon such a one is like the sunlight striving to struggle through a bank of clouds. To a man who is depraved and wicked in his ways, who keeps his mind unclean and his body impure, the Holy Ghost has no chance to reveal the will of God. Moses was taken up into "an exceedingly high mountain," and there God revealed to him the secrets pertaining to this earth, and also to other worlds that glitter in the heavens, and concerning which man knows nothing except that they shine and shine and never say a word. Rest assured, Moses was a man who kept the Word of Wisdom, a man of pure heart and clean hands and a conscience void of offense. It is unto such that God will reveal His secrets.

Another notable example—though many might be mentioned—is the Prophet Daniel, a man who lived near to God, and to whom He revealed great and mighty things pertaining to the history of this world, from the day in which he lived down to the present time. Trace this history and see how accurately this man Daniel, temperate, virtuous, and inspired of God, revealed to King Nebuchadnezzar the things which were coming to pass. The speaker drew a graphic picture of the destruction of Babylon in the reign of Belshazzar, and of the establishment of another empire upon its ruins—the Medo-Persian empire, founded by Cyrus, after it the Macedonian empire, founded by Alexander the Great, and then the Roman power; all according to the dream of Nebuchadnezzar concerning the great image, the meaning of which was explained by Daniel. Cyrus the Persian was a temperate man and so was Alexander at first, though he died a drunkard. Having conquered the world, he failed to conquer himself.

The Romans, who at first were a hardy, temperate and plain-living race, became so powerful that they beat in pieces all the nations of the earth. Palestine itself became a Roman province. There are many who believe it was at that time that God set up His kingdom, as Daniel predicted He would. Jesus was born, it is true, in the days of one of the Roman Emperors—Augustus—but a reference to history shows that God's latter-day kingdom was not to be set up until the Roman Empire had gone to pieces. Jesus did not come as a king and warrior; but as a "Man of sorrows, acquainted with grief." He came to test the faith of the world; to see whether it would receive Him as the Messiah, without the clang and clash of martial music and the implements of war. The Roman Empire was then in the zenith of its power, so that the argument falls to the ground that that was the day when God would set up a kingdom.

There are Daniels today to whom God can and will reveal His will, reveal the secrets of the universe, the future history of this world and of other worlds which glitter in the blue vault of heaven. The tree of God's knowledge is burdened with fruit, waiting to fall to our laps. We have only to shake the tree with our faith and the fruit will descend. But there is no promise to any people who will not observe the condition which God has laid down—no promise to a nation of Sabbath breakers, who think more of their own pleasure than of the service of God—no promise to a nation of pleasure-seekers who waste their time in dissipation, no promise to a people who will bow down and worship the golden calf, who allow their riches to canker their souls, who lift their arrogant heads above the poor and despise those who have less of this world's goods than themselves.

The Latter-day Saints are the pioneers of the greatest work that God ever commenced in the midst of mankind. We were not sent here to follow after Babylon and her ways, but to set the world an example. We are expected to keep holy the Sabbath, to gather in solemn assemblies and not race through the streets of our city on that day behind fast horses, seeking our pleasure instead of serving our God. He had heard it said, even by Latter-day Saints, that it was all right to go riding in their carriages between meetings on Sunday. He did not believe it; he did not believe it was right to seek pleasure at all on the Lord's day. The Lord Himself labored six days and rested upon the seventh; the earth has labored nearly six days—of a thousand years each—and it will rest upon the seventh, the millennium. If we desire to be worthy to inherit this earth when it shall be sanctified by the celestial law which it observes and becomes a celestial body, the abode of celestial beings, we must also observe the law, and remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

When Brigham Young and the pioneers planted their feet in this desert valley on the 24th of July, 1847, their leader laid down this law, in instructing his people, as Moses did his followers in the wilderness: Said he, "You must not hunt or fish on the Sabbath day, and there shall no man among us do any work on that day; you will lose five times as much as you will gain by it. You who do not want to keep this law can go wherever you please; but you cannot dwell among us." Those were his words to the founders of this Territory, the builders of this city. Yet what do we see today? What are the heavens gazing upon today? What is Brigham Young looking down upon today? Why, the children of the pioneers roaming over these mountains hunting the wild deer on the Sabbath; fishing in the streams which flow into this valley, seeking their pleasure instead of serving their God. If the whole people were like that—which, thank God, they are not—they would never build up Zion nor prepare the world for the coming of its Redeemer.

It behoves those who bear the Priesthood, Bishops, Teachers and Presidents, to set the young a good example and warn them against all evils. When God said rest upon the Sabbath day He did not mean go to the Tabernacle, and then between meetings do just what you please, unless it pleases us to serve Him. The speaker had heard that some parents in Zion said to their children "Go to meeting first and go riding afterwards if you like." He himself did not believe this was correct doctrine. Our animals had as much right to rest on the Sabbath as ourselves. All unnecessary labor on that day is sinful.

The day was coming, he said, when a higher law would have to be observed by this people in order to make them worthy to redeem Zion and prepare the world for the advent of the Redeemer. This is our great misdeed; this is what we are here for; but if we fail to do it, God will find a people who will. We have been promised that this work shall never be given to another people; but God can and will humble us till we are fit to perform His work.

He did not regard it as a sin to possess wealth, but riches were a curse when they cankered the soul and caused us to lift up our heads in pride and arrogance, to be narrow-minded and narrow-souled, and when we would not give unto God of the substance which He had given us.

He prayed God that the spirit of humility, of brotherly love and faith, the spirit to love our neighbor and glorify our Maker might rest upon this people with increasing power and intensity, that we might be prepared for the great changes that are nigh at hand; "and may peace and blessing abide with you and all Israel and all good men and women who are striving to do the will of God, in my desire in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen."

The choir sang the anthem: "By Babylon's Wave."

Benediction by Bishop Elias Morris.

Religious services were held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Oct. 2, 1892, commencing at 2 p. m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn commencing:

Redeemer of Israel,
Our only delight,
On whom for a blessing we call,
Prayer by Elder Nephi Pratt.
The choir sang the hymn:
Jesus once of humble birth,
Now in glory comes to earth.

The Priesthood of the Ninth Ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

PRESIDENT ANGUS M. CANNON

said inquiry had been made in regard to the observance of the fast day on Thursday next, the general conference commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. on that day. It had been suggested to have fast meetings in the wards on Wednesday instead of on Thursday. This is a matter that could be left to the discretion of the Bishops. If a ward concluded to hold a fast meeting on Wednesday, it would be all right. But where this was inconvenient, arrangements should be made for the gathering of the fast offerings for the benefit of the poor and needy among us.

The speaker also called the attention of the people to the fact that during previous conferences visitors had sometimes found it very difficult to obtain lodgings, even in the hotels because they were overcrowded. He hoped that the Saints during the coming conference would do all they could to accommodate their visiting brethren and sisters, and make them feel that they are welcome. In Lyons days, when the people were poor, there was room enough for all. It should certainly be as easy to show hospitality now as it was then. With our amply carpeted floors, rudely constructed couches can easily be made, and from the bakeries the people can obtain what they need to keep them from starving.

APOSTLE HEBER J. GRANT

then addressed the congregation. He said it was a source of pleasure to him to again meet the Saints, and he rejoiced in the testimony he had of the truth the Gospel. But he regretted to note the indifference that could be seen among the young to attend to their duties. Many of them devote their Sunday afternoon to pleasure instead of attending the meeting, and many show utter disregard of the Word of Wisdom. Many while, attending the meetings, allow in their houses things that are contrary to the will of God. This is to be exceedingly regretted, for those who are negligent in apparently small matters are apt to be negligent in those that are of more importance. If our own pleasure has to be preferred to our duties, it is but a question of time when we will be negligent of all duties devolving upon us. We cannot note the daily growth of a tree; yet there is a gradual development, which is noticeable as the years go by. So it is with the young people. Those who attend to their daily duties grow, they become strong in the faith, receive a testimony which is strengthened from time to time and can further the advancement of the interests of this kingdom. Those who neglect their duties, on the other hand, must die like a tree in dry soil. All life requires proper nourishment. The spiritual life is no exception to this rule. We must attend our meetings and do so with a prayer to be benefited by the words we hear it will develop spiritually.

It seems a very simple thing that we as Latter-day Saints should be able to abstain from things that are injurious to us. The speaker had recently read something about tea. The statement was made that much of the goods imported under that name was not tea at all, but some adulteration, often destructive of the health of those who partake of it. Men are ready to adulterate any kind of food for the gain of it, but if we were willing to carry out the word of God concerning such things, we would escape the consequences of such practices in many respects.

For behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward.

Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness;

For in all things, in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves, and inasmuch as men do good they shall in no wise lose their reward.

But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.

Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments?

Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled?

I command and a man obeys not, I revoke and they receive not the blessing;

For in all things, in them, here, this is not the work of the Lord, for his promises are not fulfilled. But we unto such, for their reward lurketh beneath, and not from above.

"Inasmuch as men do good they shall in no wise lose their reward." The speaker wished to impress upon his hearers the necessity of obeying the Word of Wisdom. Any temporary blessing promised would readily be accepted by all. But herein the Doctrine and Covenants the following promises are given: "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

Now, it is one of two things: Either the revelation here contained has come from God, or the religion we have espoused is a fraud. Either this book must be accepted or rejected. If we accept it, it seems to me that there is not one promise in the whole book that exceeds the one just read. And to obtain it we ought to be willing to work for ye re, if that were required of us. We are told that the intelligence we acquire here shall rise with us in the resurrection. Our wealth shall not go with us, but our treasures of knowledge we shall bring with us and have that much to start with in another life.

Further, we are promised that the destroying angel shall pass by us and our knowledge shall increase and this simply for doing what will benefit us bodily, as well as our family by leaving us more means to provide for them. It is a fact that more is consumed every year in the purchase of tobacco, for instance, than bread. And no one dares to stand up and say that this weed is good for man. It certainly makes a man indolent, careless and indifferent as well as unclean, and leads him onward on the path of immorality and crime. A smoker is no gentleman. A man who has the right to this title would not annoy anybody, but a smoker cares for nobody, not even the ladies, as long as he can get his smoke. The tobacco habit seems to beum, until a man the finer feelings of sensibility. It is poison. Soldiers wishing to escape service sometimes make themselves sick even by outward application of it in a certain way. How can a true Saint say he has not the strength of character to abstain from such a thing?

The speaker had observed that families raised by parents who keep the word of wisdom more often grow up (faithful to the truth; and God blesses such families. If God commands and we do not obey, He revokes His promises. But if we obey, we will be blessed both ourselves and in our families.

BISHOP WM. B. PRESTON

wished to bear his testimony to the remarks made by Elder Grant and add that it is not the hearer of the word that will be blessed, but the doer of it. If we do not practice what we hear, it will not profit us anything. We are laboring in a great cause, one which we have been gathered from the nations of the earth to accomplish—to establish on earth a kingdom of righteousness and to learn the will of God. Those who are willing scholars will be blessed by our heavenly Father. Those who will repent, be baptized for the remission of their sins and have the hands of the authorized servants of God laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost will be blessed by God. All promises given by the Lord will be fulfilled, if we will do what He requires of us. When He speaks to us, His children, through His servants, He expects us to obey just as much as we, as parents, do of our children.

We are living in a remarkable age. God is gathering His children, as many as will listen to His word, in order that His laws may be kept in this land. The Lord has been merciful unto us in many respects, and we must keep His laws in every particular as our part of the covenant.

In regard to the duties of the Lesser Priesthood, the speaker said the members of it could be of great help to the leaders of the Church, by setting a good example before their children, training them in the various duties of the Gospel. If they are well taught in the principles of the Gospel while young they will know how to walk when they are old.

The speaker wished that the word of God might be given heed to by all the people of God.

BISHOP ELIAS MORRIS

said he had been very much pleased in listening to the remarks made this afternoon, for he knew they were inspired by the Holy Spirit. The speaker knew, to some extent, how things were among the people. It had grieved him to see the indifference existing among our sons and daughters, born in the new and everlasting Gospel. Many of us who left other lands and came here, looked with fond anticipation upon the change we had in view. We left a world full of corruption, with hopes that made us glad, contemplating the privilege of living among a people blessed by the presence of Apostles and inspired men, who could teach us the mind and will of God. We rejoiced in the hope of seeing our children walk in the paths of God. The opposite experience grieves us and gives us pain.

The speaker referred to the scant attendance of the Saints in the evening meetings. He had felt some anxiety to know what the cause of this is. The responsibility of the salvation of the people rests to a large degree upon the Bishops and the teachers of the people. Referring to the labors of the Teachers, he said they should visit all and strengthen them and encourage them to work in the kingdom of God. Some families have to be labored with not only for minutes, but for hours. There are men in some of the wards that do not attend to their duties and do not desire to do so. At the same time, when affliction comes, even such are forced to call upon the servants of God for help and comfort. But when called to visit those whom we know to perform their duties we feel we can bless them in the name of God. How different when we go to other families of which we know that they take no interest in the work of God. It is a hard matter to bless those who hardly want any blessing, as evidenced by their living without regard to the commandments of God.

The teachers should visit every family in the wards and report in full, so that we might know how to deal with each one and revive the spirit of the Gospel in our midst.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH

was the next speaker. He said he had been very much pleased with the remarks of the previous speakers. He had been wondering, as he came to the meeting, whose boys were they whom he saw playing at marbles as he walked along the street. He had seen quite a number of them amusing themselves in that way. He wondered if perchance any of his boys were there. He felt grateful to say, however, that he did not discover any of them. Still, children are children. And if they are left to themselves, it does not matter to them on what day they play at any game. For they are thoughtless. It depends on the parents a great deal as to what the children are taught in regard to the Sabbath.

Then, the speaker said, he wondered if the children referred to were the children of Latter-day Saints, and he came to the conclusion that not all of them were the children of the Saints. For it would be truly sad if such numbers of the children of the Saints could be found on the Sabbath playing in the streets or doing anything else which does not become the Saints of God. Parents can only be responsible for their own children, and they should see that they honor the Sabbath and also their fathers and mothers.

Disobeying the Sabbath is not the only evil to be contended against. Some children do not honor their parents. There are some children of prominent men in the Church who do not show proper regard for the wishes of their parents. This is very much to be regretted. Disregard to the wishes of parents lies at the foundation of many evils such as referred to here today. It is true that the parents are responsible to a great extent for the conduct of their children. It seems that if the parents would draw the children up to them in kindness, reason with them, instruct them, and show them affection and love, and at the same time use proper restraint, the probability is they would be inclined to render obedience. A child that under such circumstances would do otherwise would be very ungrateful indeed. Most children will respect their parents if the parents will hold them in proper respect.

The speaker did not intend to cast any reflection on anybody in the audience by the remarks he had made concerning the children playing in the streets. Probably, he said, your children are at home, or in the meeting. But he would say to the congregation that it is necessary to teach children obedience, and if we attend to our duties as fathers and mothers, the children, as a rule, will obey us. If a child loves his parents, he will respect their wishes; but if left to gratify his own will, if allowed to do as he pleases on the Sabbath—to go pleasure seeking, and the parents pay no attention to these things, how can the child be expected to do otherwise? Children have no other knowledge than what they receive at home or at school or among people with whom they associate. The home circle is the best place in which to teach the children correct principles.

Brother Morris had referred to people in his ward who have no desire to do right. Here is a great sermon in itself—no desire to do right! That is a pitiable condition. You place good food before a person, or cast wealth at his feet, and he turns away from it and has no desire for it; what could you think of such an individual? Would he not be considered very foolish? And yet that is the condition of a person who has no desire to do right. God places before him the richest blessing, which is eternal life, but he turns away from it, and has no desire for it.

The speaker was thankful that he had a desire to do right, to be honest, to fulfill his obligations. He had a desire to worship God, to see his children grow up in the fear of the Lord and his family to live in unity. He desired to see the Saints grow in all that is good and to see the people prosper. He felt grateful for all this. He would not be without these desires for all the wealth the world could give, because he has faith in the Gospel. He believed that it had again been restored to the earth, and that the Latter-day Saints have come here to fulfill the commandments of the Lord. And all those who have these desires will delight in keeping the word of the Almighty.

How poor the man must be who has no desire in him for righteousness to be established among the children of men. Any man who has gathered out here for the Gospel's sake and came to the conclusion that there is nothing better than meat and drink and pasture, is poor indeed, though he be possessed of untold wealth. It is to be hoped that the day will come when no Bishop shall have occasion to say that there are any people in his ward who have no desire for that which is good, holy and righteous, no desire but for this world's goods.

The speaker had only pity and sorrow in his heart for professing Latter-day Saints who had no desire in their hearts except for worldly things. There is no excuse for it. They are under condemnation.

If you have a desire to know the truth, you will exert yourselves to learn it and will be gratified; and as the desire increases your faith will increase and become more and more perfect; and this will be shown not only in our own individual lives but in the Church. For as the members are, so is the Church. If individuals are righteous, the community will be righteous; if we do that which we should do, our children will also be taught their duties by example as well as precept.

It is the duty of all to look first after the welfare of those dependent on them. It is not possible, perhaps, to bring up all as we want them to be brought up, but if our children grow up in ignorance, because of our neglect to teach them, the responsibility will rest on us and not on them. God requires us to teach them the principles of the Gospel as plainly set forth in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and if the children are neglected and grow up without restraint, we will be held responsible and God will require their blood at our hands.

May God bless us to bring up our children in the way they should go.

The choir sang the anthem—

Unfold, ye portals everlasting.

Benediction by Counselor Charles W. Penrose.

DEATH OF OTTO CHIPMAN.

PHOENIX, an esteemed correspondent of the DESERET NEWS, writing from Palmerston North, New Zealand, under date of Sept. 6, has this to say of Elder Otto Chipman, whose death was referred to in yesterday's issue:

On Sept. 1st a telegram was received from President W. T. Stewart informing us of the sad death of Elder Otto Chipman, which occurred at Huntley, in the Waikato district, on the 31st of August. No particulars have been received of his sickness, and we can scarcely realize that he has been called away.

Elder Chipman left Salt Lake City on the first day of February, 1892, and landed in New Zealand on the 27th day of the same month. He was appointed to labor in the Waikato district and was present at the annual conference April 8th. During the voyage across the Pacific he endeared himself to his traveling companions by his amiable and quiet disposition. He was very studious and well qualified for his mission. He manifested a great desire to accomplish good and would, undoubtedly, have acquired the language in a short time, as he was making very rapid progress. The Elders who were present at the Hawkes Bay Conference drafted resolutions of condolence to be forwarded to the bereaved family and prayers were offered that the spirit of God might comfort the young widow and prepare her mind for the sad news of her husband's death.

Our beloved brother has been called to labor in a higher sphere and he will undoubtedly receive the blessings awaiting the faithful. May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved family and console them with the thought that "he is not lost but gone before."

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 2.—Smallpox has broken out in the general hospital here, the victims being two hospital nurses. The source of the disease is unknown.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular weekly session Sept. 27. It was 8:10 o'clock when President Loofbourow's gavel fell and order was called. The following members were in attendance: Rich, Folland Hardy, Karrick, Horn, Moran, Bell, Evans, Beardsley, Wantland, Lawson—11.

Absent—Simondl—1.
The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

J. B. Grow and 327 others protested against granting any more franchises to railway companies in the central part of the city.

Laid on the table to come up later.
Houshan, Morris & Griffith asked an extension of thirty days on their contract with the city to construct curb basins on Main street. Board of public works.

Mrs. O. Ostler complained of Mounted Policeman Heath taking forcible possession of two cows belonging to her and impounding them. Committee on police.

The Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company asked to be allowed to place poles at the intersection of Main and First and Second South streets.

Partello & Company and others asked that the city sealer of weights and measures be removed and a successor appointed. Laid over temporarily.

THE CITY CAN SELL.

The city attorney reported that the city could legally dispose of its gas stock. Received and filed.

SILVER SUCCEEDS RICHARDS.

The mayor sent in a communication appointing E. B. Silver to succeed Dr. Joseph S. Richards (resigned) as a member of the municipal board of health. Confirmed.

PAVEMENT REFUND.

The city engineer reported that the cost of constructing pavement on Richards street was $7,987.03. The Richards brothers had paid the city $590.50 in excess of the former amount. He recommended that the city refund the latter amount. Referred.

METES AND BOUNDS.

The city attorney reported that as per orders he had surveyed the Warm Springs property. Received and filed.

ANOTHER SAFE REPORTED.

The city engineer reported that an additional safe in his office was necessary. Committee on Improvements.

FOR SEWERAGE.

J. B. Thompson sent in a communication in which he announced that he would sell the perpetual right to six hundred and forty acres of ground for a sewage farm, eight miles due west of the Temple block. Special committee on sewage.

COUNCILMANIC SALARY QUESTION.

The committee on municipal laws recommended that the council instruct the city attorney to defend the bogus ex-councilmen, Hal, Wostenholme and Armstrong in the suit brought by Richard Young and other People's councilmen who were deprived of their seats.

The city attorney said that it was useless to instruct him thus as he had already given an opinion to the effect that the petitioners were personally responsible.

Horn spoke two or three times in favor of the adoption of the report of the committee. It was finally adopted and the city will have to bear the expenses of the contest.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS ORDERED.

The committee on improvements reported favorably on the petition for the establishment of electric lights at the intersections of Eleventh East and Fourth and Fifth South streets. Adopted.

EXTENSION OF WATERMAINS.

The committee on waterworks reported favorably on the petition of E. J. Jenkins for an extension of watermains on West Temple for three blocks beyond Ninth South street. Adopted.

TO SELL THE CITY GAS STOCK.

Folland offered a resolution authorizing the sale of the city gas stock for $100,000. The amount per share was $127.07.

Karrick wanted to know why the committee was willing to accept $127.07 per share when $135 per share could be obtained.

Beardsley did not think it was correct. The committee had investigated the question carefully.

Karrick said he knew that $160 per share was being offered by certain parties for a portion of the two-thirds of the property the city did not own. Horn moved to refer to a special committee.

Folland said intimations had been made that a better offer could be procured. If that could be done he was willing, but he believed it was rumor and surface talk.

Beardsley moved to amend by referring it to a special committee and the committee on ways and means associated.

Lawson moved as a substitute that the city recorder be instructed to advertise the stock for sale for a period of twenty days. Carried.

TO DRAIN OFF STAGNANT WATER.

Evaus offered a resolution instructing the watermaster to have the ditch on the north side of Second South, between Fifth and Sixth West streets, put in proper condition to carry off the water that now remains stagnant. Adopted.

AFTER THE PEDDLERS.

Beardsley introduced an ordinance prohibiting fruit peddlers from selling their products in the business part of the city. Committee on municipal laws.

SPECIAL MEETING.

Beardsley introduced a resolution providing that the Council hold a special meeting on Friday evening, September 30th, to discuss various sanitary measures. Adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were made:

Neder & Cleland.....	$3 90
Morrison & Merrill.....	35 54
Druehl & Franken.....	32 30
W. G. Pavey & Co.....	2 90
Kansas City Fire Department Supply company.....	3 6
Wostenholme & Morris.....	31 10
Kelly & Co.....	6 24
T. C. Armstrong.....	14 65
Chapin & Co.....	8 41
W. L. Pickard.....	7 35
A. W. Caine & Co.....	0 91
George A. Lowe.....	35 91

W. C. Reed.....	92 65
Rio Grande Western Railway company.....	24 48
E. C. Cadin Hardware company.....	36 35
Sierra Nevada Lumber company.....	56 33
Sullivan & McDonald.....	50 00
Consumers Trading company.....	16 48
Union Pacific Express company.....	146 00
George M. Scott & Co.....	170 59
W. C. Reed.....	6,460 00
Wostenholme & Morris.....	332 80
E. C. Cadin & Co.....	341 24
Sullivan & McDonald.....	130 43
Herald Publishing company.....	45 50
Pacific Faving company of Utah.....	15,608 00
C. E. Stanton.....	144 00
I. A. Benton.....	116 00
Triunfo Job company.....	78 00
Triunfo Publishing company.....	3 80
Herald Publishing company.....	8 15
William Harkins.....	90 00
W. C. Reed.....	247 95
A. J. Bart.....	152 02
G. M. Scott & Co.....	11 34
W. B. Cook.....	1 25
Morrill & Greenwood.....	2 35
Archerman Printing Co.....	8 50
Grocer Printing Co.....	58 15
Triunfo Job Printing Co.....	7 00
Salt Lake Building and Manufacturing Co.....	31 75
C. R. Savage.....	4 50
A. F. Doremus.....	11 95
Brown & Carter.....	4 50
Union Paint and Oil Co.....	2 00
Utah Building and Loan Co.....	90
Butt &ersen.....	16 00
Archerman Printing Co.....	6 35
Salt Lake City Gas Co.....	1 51

REVISION OF ORDINANCES.

Rich moved that the Council meet tonight to continue the work of revising the city ordinances. Carried.

The City Council held an adjourned session last night. Order was called by President Looibouraw at 8:05 o'clock. The members present were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Karrick, Horn, Lawson, Simons, Beardsley, Heles, Moran, Wantland—11.

Absent—Bell, Evans—2.
In the absence of Recorder Stanton, Deputy Ellsworth performed the duties of chief clerk.

The minutes of Tuesday night's session were read, amended and approved.

The Proceedings.

The chair stated that there were two matters to be considered by the Council. First, the proposed sanitary measures; second, the differences between the street car and Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone companies.

SANITARY MEASURES.

The following was then read by the assistant recorder:

We, the undersigned members of the board of health, respectfully recommend the passage of the following measure: The ordinances relating respectively to the regulation of well construction, privy vault and cesspool construction, the sale of unwholesome food and drink; also the appointment of a sanitary inspector for each precinct, whose duty it shall be to at once make a house to house inspection regarding the plan already presented and thereunto to be employed permanently as inspectors for the precinct. We appear before you this evening prepared to give reasons if called upon recommending the adoption of the above measures and trust they will meet with your approval.

E. B. BEATTY,
F. A. MACHAM,
E. V. SILVER.

ADDITIONAL SIGNATURES.

Dr. Beatty stated that Engineer C. P. Brooks, a member of the board of health, and Mayor Baskin intended to sign the above paper before its presentation to the Council, but that they could not be found in time to do so. He stated that they would attach their signatures to it today.

VAULTS AND CESSPOOLS.

An ordinance regulating the construction of privy vaults and cesspools within the garbage districts was taken up, amended and discussed at length. The measure was published in the DESERET NEWS on Thursday of this week.

DR. BEATTY SPEAKS.

Health Commissioner Beatty said that after reading ordinances prepared and in vogue in other cities he became more and more convinced that special conditions existed here and therefore required special action. The ordinance as presented, he believed, met every possible emergency. He was strongly in favor of its immediate passage.

Hardy stated that the measure conflicted with the sewer ordinance; one of the two must be amended.

The chair saw much in it that was faulty. It was passed it would work a hardship to residents in all parts of the city. It required the abandonment of all unlined cesspools. He did not think that cesspools were injurious to health providing they were not too close to surface wells.

Lawson took issue with the chair and said he knew where cesspools were not lined with cement they were detrimental to health and would greatly increase the mortality of the city.

On motion the ordinance was referred back to the board of health for revision.

TO PROTECT FOOD AND DRINK.

The following was read the first, second and third times without amendment:

A Bill for an ordinance prohibiting the keeping or sale of unwholesome food and drink, and regulating the sale of milk and other food products.

SECTION 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of Salt Lake City: That no meat, fish, birds, fowl or vegetables, not being then healthy, fresh, sound, wholesome and safe for human food, nor any meat or fish that died from disease or accident shall be brought within said city, or offered or held for sale in any public or private market as such food anywhere in said city.

Sec. 2. That no calf, pig or lamb, or the meat thereof shall be brought, held or offered for sale as such food in Salt Lake City, which at the date of its death being a calf less than four weeks old, or being a pig, was when killed less than five weeks old, or being a lamb was when killed less than eight weeks old.

Sec. 3. That no cattle shall be killed for human food while in an overheated, feverish or diseased condition, and all such diseased cattle in the City of Salt Lake and the place where found and their disease shall be at once reported to the commissioner of health by the owner or custodian thereof, that the proper order may be made relative thereto.

Sec. 4. That no person being the manager or keeper of any saloon, boarding house or lodging house, or being employed as a clerk, servant or agent thereat, shall therein or thereat offer or have for food or drink, or to be eaten or drunk, any deleterious or unwholesome substance, nor allow anything therein to be done prejudicial to health.

Sec. 5. That no cased, blown, plaited, stuffed, putrid, impure or unwholesome meat or fish, bird or fowl shall be held, bought for food or sold or offered for sale for human food, or held or kept in any market, public or private, or in any public place in Salt Lake city.

Sec. 6. That every person being the owner, lessee or occupant of any room, stall or place where any meat, fish or vegetables designed or held for human food shall be stored or kept, or shall be held or offered for sale shall put and keep such room, stall and place and its appurtenances in a clean and wholesome condition.

Sec. 7.—If any person shall expose for sale in any market, house or elsewhere in said city any emaciated, tainted or putrid meat or provisions, which from these or other causes may be deemed unwholesome, such person shall upon conviction be fined as provided in this ordinance, and it shall be the duty of the inspector or health officer to forthwith seize and confiscate all such meat and provisions.

Sec. 8. That no person shall have any place where milk, butter or cheese is kept for sale, nor shall at any place sell or deliver, or offer or have for sale, or keep for use, nor shall any person bring or send to said city any unwholesome, skimmed, watered or adulterated milk, or milk known as swill milk, or milk from cows or other animals, or milk from a part have been kept in stable, or have been fed on swill; or milk from sick or diseased cows or other animals, or any butter or cheese made from any such milk, nor any unwholesome butter or cheese.

Sec. 9. That no person shall allow to run or pass into any water pipe any animal, vegetable or mineral substance whatever, nor shall any person do or permit to be done, having the right or power to prevent the same, any act or thing that will impair or imperil the purity or wholesomeness of any water or other fluid to be used or designed as a drink in any part of said city.

Sec. 10. That no cattle shall be kept in any place of which the water, sanitation and food are not sufficient and wholesome for the preservation of their health and same condition and wholesome condition of food.

Sec. 11. That no cattle shall be placed or carried while bound or tied by their legs, or bound down by the necks, in any vehicles in this city, but shall be allowed freely to stand in such vehicle when transported and while being therein.

Sec. 12. That the keeping and slaughtering of all cattle, and the preparation and keeping of all meat and fish, birds and fowl shall be in that manner which is, or is generally reputed to be, the best adapted to secure and continue their safety and wholesomeness as food. The slaughtering of cattle shall not be permitted or conducted at any place in the city of Salt Lake, without a special permit from the City Council.

Sec. 13. No person shall bring or send into the city for sale or offer for sale, any milk without a permit to do so from the health department, such permit to be furnished gratuitously by the said department on condition that none but pure, undiluted milk is sold within the city limits, subject to the approval of the milk inspector or health officer.

Sec. 14. All milk offered for sale in this city, unless sold as an inferior article, and plainly marked as such, must be of the following parts. (Solid) fat, 3 per cent.; solids not fat, 9 per cent.; ash, .08 per cent., total solids, 12 per cent.

Sec. 15. All milk wagons shall have the name of the owner, the number of the permit and the location of the dairy printed thereon plainly, and legibly.

Sec. 16. Any person who violates, disobeys, omits, neglects or refuses to comply with any of the sections of this ordinance, or resists any of the officers employed in the enforcement of this ordinance shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum not less than five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars.

Rich—Well, I don't know how the other members feel about it, but I confirm that many of its provisions will not find their way into my head.

On the roll being called the ordinance passed on a strict party vote, the Democrats all voting in the negative and all the "Liberals in the affirmative."

CONSTRUCTION OF WELLS.

The following after being discussed for an hour was passed:

A bill for an ordinance regulating the use and construction of wells:

Sec. 1. All owners or agents of property abutting on, having access to, the city water system shall either connect with said water system within thirty days after the passage and approval of this ordinance, or shall within the same time construct a well in accordance with the rules and regulations of this ordinance.

Sec. 2. No person shall construct or have constructed a well within the city limits except the same be piped with iron and sunk below an impermeable stratum or formation, or otherwise is not less than 100 feet in depth. This does not apply to artesian wells.

Sec. 3. No well shall be constructed at less distance than twenty feet from any cesspool or privy vault, except it be that for some reason it is impossible to comply with this rule, in which case a special permit from the health department must be obtained.

Sec. 4. No person shall use or permit to be used, for drinking purposes, any water from any well within the limits of Salt Lake City except it be from a well that is constructed in accordance with the rules and regulations of this ordinance.

Sec. 5. No person shall construct or have constructed a well without first obtaining a permit from the health department, and said well must upon completion be inspected by an officer of the health department.

Sec. 6. Any person or persons who shall violate or who refuse to comply with any of the requirements of this ordinance shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not less than five ($5.00) dollars nor more than fifty ($50.00) dollars.

Sec. 7. The health officer shall once in three months make an analysis of the water furnished by the city through its pipe system and report the result to the City Council.

POSTPONED UNTIL NEXT FRIDAY.

The case of the street railway and telephone companies was continued until Friday next.

POLICEMEN APPOINTED.

The mayor sent in a communication appointing Geo. Sheets, J. J. Duke, Lewis S. Larson, James Sanders, Geo. C. Johnston, C. B. Blackburn, John J. Peck, as policemen, and asked their confirmation. Committee on police.

MORGAN ROAD VETO.

The mayor sent in the following communication, which was ordered to lay on the table until Tuesday night next:

To C. E. Stanton, City Recorder:

I am unable to approve the motion of the Council adopted September 23, 1892, and forwarded by you to me on the 27th of September, authorizing the construction of a public highway up City Creek canyon for the following reason:

The city has no legal authority to build such a road beyond the corporate limits, and the proposed road passes beyond such limits.

Among the greatest temporal blessings enjoyed by this community is the pure water drawn from the City Creek canyon; it is more precious than gold, and of much more importance to the city than any commercial advantage arising from the proposed road can possibly be. A highway along the course of this stream must necessarily be built on its present pure waters in a degree corresponding with the amount of travel, as time goes on and the population of Morgan City and vicinity increases there will be an increase of travel on said road, and with this increase the defilement of the stream will proportionately increase, so that while the evil effects of such a road upon the canyon stream at present would be great, in time this evil would be greatly augmented. The statute giving the mayor a qualified veto provides that any ordinance, resolution or contract appropriating or involving the expenditure of money shall be presented to the mayor for his approval. These are the usual modes by which money in the treasury of a city is appropriated and the ones contemplated by the Legislature. In the case under consideration, the building of the road, which involves the expenditure of money, was authorized to be done by verbal motion. As this is the usual mode by which more or less than a resolve of the council, it is necessary that it should be presented to the mayor for approval.

The council then adjourned.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

The regular monthly meeting of the Priesthood of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion convened in the Assembly Hall at 11 a. m., Saturday, October 1, 1892; President Angus M. Cannon presiding. Present also upon the stand, Counselor Joseph E. Taylor, President Elias Morris, High Counselor Edward Snodgrass, Patriarchs William J. Smith and A. H. Raleigh and other High Priests and Elders. All the wards of the Stake were properly represented excepting the Fifth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth wards of the city, and the Union, Sandy, Bluff Dale and Brighton wards of the county.

Ten quorums of Elders were represented by their presiding officers, viz: The first, second, fifth, seventh, tenth, fifteenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth and twenty-first.

The Stake Superintendent of the Sabbath Schools and Presidency of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Associations responded to the roll call.

The usual business having been dispatched, remarks were made as follows by the brethren named:

PRESIDENT A. M. CANNON

reminded the Bishops that the General Conference of the Church was at hand, and touched upon the subject of providing accommodation for visitors from other parts. There was a lack of interest and sympathy in this matter on the part of many, though doubtless others were unable, from the size of their own families and on account of visiting relatives at Conference time, to extend hospitality to more. A call was made for doorkeepers—one from each ward—to attend each service during the coming Conference.

Bishops George R. Macey of the Twentieth ward, and James C. Watson of the Sixth ward, also spoke upon the subject of visitors. Cover new. The brethren felt that something should be done to provide accommodation for them, and that the hands of the committee, having the matter especially in charge should be made by the people.

President Cannon mentioned the fact that certain theories and speculations relative to the coming of the Messiah to the Lamanites, etc., were being printed and circulated through the community, and he warned those present and through them the Saints at large to beware how they gave heed to things that unsettled their minds and might have the effect of diminishing their faith in the living oracles of God as well as in revelations already on record. He also touched upon the subject of the Sacrament, and its proper administration, and deprecated the practice of reading the Sacramental blessing from printed cards. It should be committed to memory or else read from the book.

COUNSELOR JOSEPH E. TAYLOR

dwelt upon the subject of prayer. Years ago, he said, it was a custom in our congregations for the people to respond aloud "Amen" to the remarks of the speaker. He would like to see this good old custom, which seemed to be dying out, revived. There should be a closer unity between the Bishops and the people of their wards. They should pray for each other and that would bring them nearer together. The Saints should also pray for the Presidency of the Stake and the High Council, as well as all the other authorities. The speaker referred to the heavy labors of the Bishops and their associates, and thought they needed the prayers of their flocks and the general sympathy of the people.

PRESIDENT CANNON

stated that there was some question among the people as to what constituted a decision in a Bishop's court. Some thought a Bishop alone had not the right to make a decision, and that it one of his counselors, or both, disagreed with him and refused to sustain him, there was no decision. The President believed that a Bishop had the right to give the decision, but that he had no right to sit in judgment and hear a case without counselors. A Bishop's decision could be appealed from to the High Council, and if it were not a righteous one, it could be set aside by the High Council, whether the Bishop alone had rendered it, or whether all three of the Bishopric had united upon the matter. A Bishop's decision would stand until it was set aside, and it took the High Council to set it aside. Was it reasonable to suppose that a Bishop's counselors could reverse his decision? It was certainly best for the three to be united in all such matters, and a lack of unity on their part constituted good ground for an appeal.

The meeting adjourned until the first Saturday in November.

Benediction.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city school board met in regular weekly session Thursday night, Vice-President Nelson in the chair. The trustees present were: Duke, Pike, Pratt, Newman, Aliff, Baldwin, Dooley.

NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.

After the usual preliminary business had been disposed of the committee on sites and buildings reported as follows on the letting of the contract for the erection of the new Third building:

That since the board adopted the Smead system of heating and ventilating, the committee found it necessary to ask the bidders on the revised plans, as reported by the committee on September 1, 1892, for a still farther revision of their bids on account of the system of plumbing originally designed for said building not now being needed in the installation of the Smead system; also that the size and location of the doors had to be changed, and in consequence your committee have to report the following bids opened at its meeting, Tuesday evening, September 27th:

Croxford Bros. & Bryon.....	$31,250
S. C. Sherrill.....	30,840
W. H. Jay.....	30,300
William Lester.....	30,600

Your committee recommend that the contract be awarded to William Lester for the erection of this building for the sum of $30,600. Mr. Lester offers as his bondsmen Messrs. A. Bixen, A. B. Gibson and Wendell Benson. The committee recommend that a contract be entered into with him for the erection of the building.

Baldwin did not consider the recommendation in favor of the lowest bidder.

Dooley said that the bid of W. H. Jay was lower than Mr. Lester's by $100. Mr. Jay was the contractor of the Bryant school and the board had been more or less troubled with garbiers in dealing with him. Mr. Lester had always been among the lowest bidders and the committee therefore awarded him the bid.

Mr. Jay was present and wished to speak in his own defense but was not allowed to do so.

FURNITURE ORDERED.

The committee on furniture and supplies reported that they had placed the order with the United States School Furniture company of Chicago for the following list of furniture:

50 No. 2 desks @ $2.45.....	$122 50
250 No. 1 desks, @ $2.45.....	$612 50
200 No. 4 desks, @ $2.45.....	$490 00
175 No. 5 desks, @ $2.45.....	$428 75
50 No. 3 new Triumph rears.....	105 00
50 No. 3 new Triumph rears.....	105 00
40 seats, No. 2, 3, 4, @ $2.45.....	$98 00
10 teachers' desks, "Andrews" 18".....	108 00
100 arm tables for rear seats.....	50 00
5 dozen ink well glasses.....

The furniture was to cost $2,089.25, ninety days, or 2 per cent discount for each thirty days after invoice; also freight not to exceed $540.25, which is subject to special rate if it can be secured.

ON SCHOOL WORK.

The committee on school work reported, recommending the new additional teachers to fill the positions which have already been recommended, unofficially, by members of the committee. Some of these positions have already been temporarily filled:

First—The room in the Fourteenth building, on the second floor, was vacated by the transfer of pupils to the third floor, after the departure of the High School to the new building. This room has been filled with pupils of the third and fourth grades, of whom thirty-five were transferred from the Seventh school. Miss Lou Murphy has been assigned to the room, at a salary of $60 per month. The committee recommended her for the position.

Second—The committee recommended Miss Annie L. Thompson to teach in one room of the Hooper building, at a salary of $65 per month.

Third—In the Tenth there is an enrollment of over four hundred, and only one teacher besides the principal, and the committee recommend the employment of another teacher there.

Fourth—Already the Nineteenth and First wards have been increased in their school accommodations by the rental of additional room in each ward. Another teacher is needed for each room.

Fifth—That the two rooms in the Eleventh ward meeting house be released as soon as the two new rooms on the first floor of the Bryant school are ready for occupancy, and that on the withdrawal of the teacher and pupils, now located in the Twenty-first ward meeting house, a new teacher be employed to occupy that room with pupils from the over-crowded rooms at the Twenty-first school.

The committee called attention to the occupancy of the Clayton building by the High School. The rooms are ample for all purposes, and already the good results are shown.

Attention was again called to the use of colored paper by beginning pupils to teach them form and colors, and their combinations. The cost for the year would be $44, or 4½ cents per pupil. The crowded condition of the schools causes the utility of such work to be apparent. The power of observation is one of the most useful forms of instruction.

The committee further recommended the purchase of fifty feet of hose for each floor in the High School building.

Adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The finance committee reported the following bills for approval:

Tribune Publishing Co., advertising.....	$ 58 75
Herald Publishing Co., advertising.....	3 00
Twenty-first Ward Ecclesiastical Com. pany, rent.....	30 00
T. C. Armstrong, rent.....	40 00
John A. Peterson, rent.....	12 00

Total.....$196 25

UNAUTHORIZED CHANGES.

Pratt said that when any radical change was made in erecting any school building the members of the board should be apprised of that fact. He had noticed that the first story of the Hamilton school building of the First ward was of buff brick. That was all right. The specifications called for buff brick. The next story was of red brick. He wanted to know why the change had been made.

Mr. Pinney, superintendent of construction, explained that the contractors had found it impossible to obtain buff brick with which to complete the building. He therefore secured red, the brick company promising to paint the entire building with three coats of paint.

Pratt submitted the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Chair to investigate and report why specifications in building contracts have been made to designate certain builders' material to the exclusion of all others, and why material of any make, provided it be equal to the requirements of the building, should not compete on equal terms.

The Chair appointed as the investigation committee Messrs. Pratt, Baldwin and Dooley.

Dooley submitted the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all the contracts hereinafter let, special preference for material be stricken out, where same can be done without prejudicing the interests of this board.

Pine Bluff, Ark., Oct. 2.—The Metropolitan Hotel burned early this morning. All of the guests were rescued. Some of them had narrow escapes. The loss on the hotel is $35,000.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder N. Brågeson, of Lewiston Cache county, returned from Europe yesterday. He left Utah for a mission to Scandinavia, October 7th, 1890. On his arrival in Copenhagen he was appointed to labor in Gottenberg conference, Sweden, where most of his time was spent. At least average success attended his labors. He enjoyed good health and excellent spirits and returns in that condition.

We had the pleasure of meeting, last evening, Elder Frederick Dieterle and wife who have just arrived from Haifa, Palestine. Brother Dieterle is well known by all the Elders who have visited the Holy Land during the last years, and they will be pleased to learn about his safe arrival in this country. Elder Dieterle accompanied Brother F. Simmons on a missionary tour to Asia Minor, and was with him at Aintab when he was released from his labors by death. He has always been a true friend to the traveling Elders in Palestine, aiding and assisting them in the difficult work in that country. He brings the news of the death of Mrs. Louise Rhyat, the first lady of Arab origin who ever joined the Church of the Saints. She died faithful notwithstanding persecution.

Elder P. H. Peters, of Three Mile Creek, Box Elder County, has returned from Indian Territory, where he has been laboring as a missionary. He has been absent about ten months. His return thus early was necessary in consequence of failing health, he having been affected for some time with malarial fever. He is still quite ill and greatly reduced. We hope he will soon recuperate in the purer and more bracing air of his mountain home. His sickness was so serious that he was confined to bed a sometime before starting for Utah. He reports the mission in good condition, and the Elders all well except one—Elder H. H. Allen—who is affected with chills and fever. There has been a great deal of sickness in Indian Territory during the past season, owing to the heavy rains, which left pools of water. These stagnant ponds have filled the air with disease-breeding malaria.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

MARICOPA.

The quarterly conference of the Maricopa Stake was held in Mesa, September 18th and 19th. The weather was delightful, and our spacious bower was filled to overflowing. We had no visiting brethren, but the Stake Presidency and local Elders spoke with freedom upon the true order of the Church of God, the divine calling of Joseph Smith, the necessity for an increase of faith and good works among the people, and the duties the Saints in general.

The reports of the bishops and presidents of the various quorums and associations showed that general health prevailed, crops were excellent and prospects favorable, still the sickness on the part of many was apparent.

President R. Brown strongly urged an awakening on the part of the slothful, and of those who stand in high places and fail to do their duty. He said they should reform or hand in their resignations, and let more worthy men fill their places.

The music of our choir was excellent, adding much to the enjoyment of the occasion. GEO. PASSEY, Clerk.

ST. JOSEPH.

The regular quarterly conference of the St. Joseph Stake was held at Pima on the 11th and 12th of September. President C. Layton being absent on business, Counselor William D. Johnson presided on Sunday. President Layton was present and presided on Monday. The most of the Bishops and High Councilors were present. Patriarch P. C. Merrill, President C. Layton and counselors, Wm. I. Packer, George Cluff, Henry Boyle and S. J. Simms, superintendent of Sunday schools, were among the speakers.

Among the subjects treated were Sunday schools, Church academy, titling and general education.

The general and local authorities were presented to the people and unanimously sustained.

The conference adjourned sine die, the time of convening to be set by the Apostles.

Benediction by Patriarch Merrill.
J. PERCIVAL LEE, Stake Clerk.
THATCHER, Graham county, A. T., Sept. 16, 1892.

FANGUITCH.

The quarterly conference met at Fangutch on August 25th. There was a large attendance, and a good spirit prevailed. Apostles F. M. Lyman and A. H. Lund spoke on sacramental discipline, prayer, forgiveness, Temple work and free will offerings.

The various bishops of the Stake reported their wards in a flourishing condition.

A priesthood meeting was held on Saturday evening, and Apostle Lyman spoke on the word of wisdom and duties of the Priesthood. Apostle Lund also spoke on the Priesthood, and showed the result of example.

On Monday, the 30th, Apostles Lyman and Lund, the Presidency of the Stake and the Bishopric of Fangutch ward went to Hatch's and organized a new ward, to be called Mammoth ward, with Aaron Assay as bishop, with Cornelius Workman and David Hatch as counselors.

GEORGE DODDS,
Stake Clerk.

PAROWAN.

The quarterly conference of this Stake was held in the Cedar City tabernacle September 18th and 19th, 1892. Present on the stand were Apostles F. Lyman and Anton H. Lund; Patriarch James Dailey, Presidents Uriah T. Jones, Morgan Richards, Jr., and Francis Webster, members of the High Council and Bishops from every ward in the Stake, also Elder Greenwood, of Millard Stake.

Conference opened at 10 a. m. on the 18th, President Uriah T. Jones presiding. After the customary opening exercises President Jones made some remarks and reported briefly the condition of the Stake.

Among those who addressed the conference, besides our visiting brethren and Stake Presidency, were Thomas J. Jones, Charles R. Lyman, John Middleton, John R. Williams, James Stapley, Jr., and John J. G. Webster, the four last named having just returned from missions to Great Britain. Many subjects were treated upon by the speakers, and much valuable instruction of a spiritual and temporal character was imparted.

The teachings and testimonies of Apostles Lyman and Lund were an interesting feature of our conference, and was greatly enjoyed by those in attendance.

The usual Priesthood meeting was held and business of the Stake transacted.

The general and local authorities were presented and unanimously sustained, as also the list of home missionaries. The meetings were well attended, and a good spirit prevailed.

Conference adjourned for three months, to meet in Parowan.

WM. H. HOLYOAK,
Stake Clerk.

EAST TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The East Tennessee Conference convened at the Reynolds school house, Madison County, North Carolina on the 17th and 18th of September. Among the Elders present were Alvin H. West, R. J. Cutler, Jr., Lewis Adams, Andrew Helm, John H. Koyle, J. Shumway, R. C. Young and T. A. Crowther; also President J. G. Kimball and Clerk M. W. Taylor.

There were four meetings, in which the principles of the Gospel were expounded by all the speakers. The congregations were small on account of other meetings in session close by, but strict attention was given and a good spirit prevailed.

There were several warm-hearted friends present. Among them was Dr. Reynolds, a venerable gentleman who has traveled through Utah and become acquainted with many of its people. Mr. Reynolds declares that the people of Utah are misrepresented in this country. He says he found them a kind, generous-hearted people, and that many of the accusations hurled against them are false. He has been a friend to the Elders ever since they came into this locality. We feel in our hearts to say, "God bless all those who administer to the wants of His servants." If it is no more than "a cup of cold water" they will in no wise lose their reward.

After conference the Elders were assigned their fields of labor for the next year. All enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord and always acknowledge His hand in their labors. There have been several added to the Church during the last year and we trust we may be permitted to show the truth to many more.

T. A. CROWTHER,
Clerk of Conference.
HOT SPRINGS, Madison County, N. C., Sept. 24th, 1892.

DEATHS.

BURBIDGE.—In this city, the Seventeenth ward, September 23, at 12:30 a. m., of apoplexy, James William Burbidge, aged 57 years.

STODDART.—At Spring City, after an illness of ten days, September 22nd 1892, William Stoddart, born in Winton, Cumberland, England, June 28, 1813; emigrated to Utah in 1856, crossed the plains in Captain Eli's worth's band cart company. He died as he lived, a faithful Latter-day Saint.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION.

ESTABLISHED TRUTH AND LIBERTY JUNE, 1850.

NO. 17. SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1892. VOL. XLV.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The sixty-third semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at 10 a. m., on Thursday, Oct. 6, 1892.

There were on the stand, of the First Presidency, Wilford Woodruff and Joseph F. Smith; of the Council of the Twelve Apostles: Lorenzo Snow, Franklin D. Richards, Moses Thatcher, Francis M. Lyman, John Henry Smith, Heber J. Grant, John W. Taylor, Marriner W. Merrill and Abraham H. Cannon; Patriarch John Smith; of the presiding Council of Seventies: Seymour B. Young, C. D. Fjelsted, B. H. Roberts and George Reynolds; of the Presiding Bishopric: Wm. B. Preston, Robert T. Burton and John R. Winder.

There were also many other leading officers of the Church from various parts of Utah and surrounding states and territories.

Conference was called to order by President Joseph F. Smith.

The choir and congregation sang:

Come let us anew our journey pursue
Roll round with the year
And never stand still till the Master appear.
His adorable will let us gladly fulfil.

Opening prayer by President Angus M. Cannon.

Singing by the choir:

Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning,
Joy to the lands that in darkness have lain.

PRESIDENT WILFORD WOODRUFF said that through the mercy and providence of God those present this morning had been preserved to again attend the semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Quite a number of our brethren and sisters had passed from this state of existence into the spirit world since we last met in Conference. In turn we should also pass away. While we had the privilege of meeting together in this capacity, he trusted that our hearts would be united in prayer before the Lord, that we might enjoy the inspiration of Almighty God, the gift of the Holy Ghost, the spirit of light and truth, so that we might edify one another in our teachings, counsels, testimonies and administrations. We needed this blessing day by day, that we might understand and comprehend the responsibilities which we were under to God our Heavenly Father.

When he reflected that this comparatively little band of men and women had been gathered into the valleys of these mountains, from all nations under heaven, by the proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for the purpose of carrying out the mind and will of God in the age and dispensation in which we lived, he realized indeed, as all the Saints must, that the responsibility resting upon us, as upon the Saints of God in every age of the world, was very great.

Like all other dispensations and generations of men, we were placed here on a mission. We lived in the spirit world before we came here; we dwelt in the presence of God; and it had been our fortune, or our destiny—call it which you please—to be born in the present generation when the God of Israel had set His hand for the last time to build up His kingdom upon the earth, to prepare His people for the great event which awaits us.

There had been no dispensation fraught with greater importance than this, and his desire while we were together in this Conference was that the Apostles and Elders who might address us should have the spirit of the Priesthood upon them.

He thanked God that he still lived—that his life had been spared until now. When he looked back upon the past, he realized that the majority of his former companions—those with whom he had been associated from the foundation of this Church—had gone into the spirit world; and he expected shortly to follow them there.

From the time we were first led into these mountain valleys by a prophet, seer and revelator, who was clothed with the spirit and power of God, until now, the hand of God had been manifested among the people, and that in fulfillment of the revelations and prophecies recorded in every book handed down to us as the word of God to the children of men.

He sincerely hoped that while we lived in the flesh we would fully realize all our responsibilities and the work which is required at our hands. He desired that the Saints would, as far as possible during this conference, lay aside all business cares, and pay strict attention to the work now before us—that we might be of one heart and mind, and be filled with light, truth and power to receive the teachings of our brethren.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG addressed the conference, in substance as follows: It was a great blessing to come together in general Conference, and to listen to our venerated President, who has been faithful for so many years. He rejoiced in having a standing with the people of God. The Saints had made progress since the organization of the Church, which had a small beginning. The Gospel had spread to nearly all the civilized nations of the globe. The Elders had been endowed with power and authority. They had gone into the world; the honest in heart had received their testimony, and the Spirit of God had given them ability to face the opposition of the world. Notwithstanding the forces that had been operated to impede the progress of the work of God, it had rolled on. The instructions that would be given in this general gathering would be carried to the uttermost bounds of the Church on the earth, and the same spirit present here would accompany them. Every person attending conference should pray that we might have a time of profit and instruction, that all might be edified. When prayer was offered here there should be a harmonious response from every heart, that the petition might be an aggregate one, and the Lord would be induced to pour out His blessing upon us. May God bless the speakers of this Conference and all the people.

APOSTLE LORENZO SNOW said in substance: President Woodruff, in his opening remarks, stated that the people in these valleys came from the various nations of the earth for an especial purpose. This idea is worthy of serious consideration. We came here because the Lord, through His servants, had told us that it was His will that we should here carry out certain purposes.

It is not the first time that the Lord has called out a people to come together from their various localities, to a certain place, for a certain purpose. He has done this because the circumstances surrounding the people in their various abiding places were such as to demand this call. It was so in reference to Abraham. The conditions that surrounded him and bore upon him were of that nature that he could not carry out the wishes of God under existing circumstances; and therefore he was called away.

When the children of Israel were in the Egyptian bondage their circumstances were such that in order that they might carry out the purpose of God they had to be moved from that bondage and go to another country, where they could fulfil His designs in reference to them. And so in regard to Lehi, as we read in the Book of Mormon. There was a necessity for his being called out and going to a land which the Lord proposed to show him. So it has been all along in the dispensation of God's people, in the different periods of the earth's history. It is strange as to man, with his small intelligence and intellectual power, how far he can succeed in receiving the blessings of the Almighty when he pursues the proper course which the Lord marks out for him. If people bring their passions into perfect subjection to the principles of wisdom, this will tend toward their exaltation and glory.

We should understand distinctly that we have planted our feet upon the true and sure foundation that cannot be shaken—a foundation of such a character that by pursuing a proper course we may secure to ourselves every advantage and every blessing that any man or woman has secured at any time in the various dispensations that God has given to the human family. This is a wonderful satisfaction, when we realize that we have started right in the narrow path that leads to exaltation and glory, and there is no power under the heavens that can turn us from that path if we are faithful.

When we started out on this course, when the Gospel reached us, when we received these ordinances, there was something attached to the receiving of these ordinances that should help us to move in this path, and resist the various things that might oppose us; and that was something that the world knows not of. Thousands of the Latter-day Saints have received this supernatural aid and power, which will enable them to advance from one degree of perfection to another.

The same question might be asked of the brethren and sisters before me as Paul asked of certain disciples, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" If that question is asked of the Latter-day Saints, they should be able to answer it with satisfaction to themselves. If we have not received it why have we not? Those to whom Paul spoke had not received the Holy Ghost because they had not received the ordinance of baptism from those having authority to administer it. Paul understood this and instructed them to be baptized by proper authority and they should receive the Holy Ghost. It is the Holy Ghost which gives revelations and knowledge unto us. It reveals to us the fact that those men who administered the ordinances unto us did so under the authority of the Son of God. The Holy Ghost will take of the things of God and manifest them clearly unto us, and when we are in doubt as to the way we should go, it will direct us. I believe many of us feel like shouting Hosanna to God and the Lamb for our redemption from the spiritual Babylon.

Many tests have been given us which have been hard to stand, but we have received strength to resist. In Kirtland, Missouri, Nauvoo, and even in these valleys, where we thought all would be peace, these tests have come to us. But any man or woman who has been progressing in intelligence, in increase of faith, and in knowledge, has been able to stand them and reap the reward following their faithfulness. The prospects before us are still bright, and though temptations are increasing around us, our reward for resisting them will increase in proportion. We are rapidly increasing in spiritual knowledge and faith, and in ability to make sacrifices for the advancement of the work of God.

May God bless all who are laboring for the advancement of the work of God, and may He bless the honest in heart wherever they may be, until the time comes when we shall go into the spirit world and there our spirits enter our glorified bodies, and we may jock back with satisfaction upon the labors we have performed, and regard our sacrifices as blessings.

ELDER B. H. ROBERTS

was the next speaker. He had no doubt that those present had been very much impressed with the instructions, the words of counsel, given by the preceding speakers. The work in which we are engaged, he said, and whose progress we watched with such great interest, was indeed a mighty one, and it would help us materially to keep pace with that work if we held in remembrance its character and the object of its inauguration in the earth—the purposes for which it had been established. One of the revelations of God very clearly stated the character of this work, known as the dispensation of the fulness of times. That revelation was given under peculiar circumstances, and the speaker read a portion of it, beginning with the words, "Hearken, O ye people of my Church, &c." This revelation, which is to be found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, was given November 31st, 1831. It states that the time would soon come when the Lord Jesus Christ would come to earth to judge the nations, that His judgments would be poured out upon the world and also upon the ungodly among the Saints. The Church is admonished to prepare for the future, and the Elders are commanded to go forth and invite all nations, first the Gentiles and then the Jews, to turn unto the Lord and take part in the work of redemption. Continuing, Elder Roberts said he thought he could discover in those paragraphs the great characteristic of the work in which we are engaged; and from those declarations of the Lord it was easy to conclude that this was a preparatory work. The revelation, in terms which could not be mistaken, set forth that the time of the coming of the Lord is at hand, when He would judge all the nations that forget God, even the ungodly among the Saints. This was in harmony with the visions and predictions of God's ancient servants. He desired to express the hope that the great body of this people—the Seventies in Israel—would prepare themselves by diligence, faith and study to perform their part in this great latter-day work, that they might go forth as witnesses to the world concerning those great principles which God had revealed from heaven.

It seemed to him that the summer clouds of prejudice and hatred which had for so long obscured the vision of the people of the United States were breaking somewhat and promised to drift aside; and he firmly believed that we would make of this an opportunity to proclaim the truth again unto the nation with even greater fulness and power than before.

Since people from all nations of the earth would be visiting this continent during next year, we should certainly take some steps to inform them respecting this work, that they might be made acquainted with its true character. There are now some 2500 volumes of the Book of Mormon printed in the French language. Copies of these should be shipped away and placed within the reach of the French people who were coming to this land. So with other languages. We could thus warn the nations, and invite them to take part in this work, if they would, and so escape the judgments of God which threatened the wicked.

ELDER GEORGE REYNOLDS

was the next speaker. He said he was pleased to have the privilege of testifying to the truth of the words spoken by his brethren. As a people we had gathered with the hope that God would be with us; that the instructions might be such as we most needed. The Lord would not permit us to go away unsatisfied. Without His inspiration we could not bring to pass all His glorious purposes. We were living in the most important dispensation of the Almighty to the earth, because all other dispensations were to flow into it and contribute to its greatness. The people of God were necessarily a temple-building community. His people have always been commended, in all ages, to engage in erecting holy structures of that character. That labor required an effort on our part. This was practically needful, that it might be completed by the time designed by the Almighty. As a people we should prepare for the future. He was assured that we must seek to live near unto God if we would stand unmoved against all the forces that should be brought against us.

The choir sang the anthem, "Glorious is Thy name."

Benediction by Patriarch John Smith.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Singing by the choir:

On the mountain's top appearing
Lo! the sacred herald stands!
Welcome news to Zion bearing,
Zion long in hostile lands.

Prayer by Bishop William B. Fretton.

The choir sang:

Praise ye the Lord! my heart shall join
In work so pleasant, so divine.

ELDER CHARLES W. PENROSE

Expressed the pleasure which it afforded him in having the privilege of meeting on this occasion with so many of his brethren and sisters. He rejoiced in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which our Father had revealed for our obedience and for the obedience of all mankind, and that he lived in a day when God had commenced the greatest work that He had ever undertaken to perform among the children of men. This was the last dispensation—the dispensation of the fulness of times. When that dispensation was opened up through the ministrations of the angel referred to this morning, and through the Prophet Joseph, it was opened up for the last time. This was the great crowning dispensation of all dispensations, in which the Lord had declared that he would gather together in one all things that are in Christ, both in heaven and on the earth. When this work was opened up it was with the idea of perpetuity.

We were here to build up the Church and Kingdom of God, to carry on the work which He had commenced, with the consolation in our hearts—that it would never be taken away from the earth again, and that the Priesthood which God had restored in the latter days was here to stay—to abide and prevail and not to be prevailed against.

Mormonism comprised all that was good, virtuous and praiseworthy—that would lift up mankind and exalt him, and prepare him for the presence of his Maker.

The speaker advocated marriage among the young people in Israel, remarking that the man was not perfect without the woman, and the woman was not perfect without the man; and in the celestial kingdom, where was the highest degree of glory, the sexes went together; the one was not without the other in the Lord. Elder Pratt encouraged the young men of Israel to strive to get homes of their own, each to take to himself a wife whom he should treat as his companion, placing her on an equality with himself. She should be regarded as a partner in life, and let them together strive towards helping to build up the Kingdom of God and establish the foundations of society upon the proper basis.

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON bore testimony to the presence of the Spirit of God in this Conference, and said he felt in his heart that the Lord had many blessings to bestow upon His children on this occasion. If the Saints ever needed the Holy Spirit to lead them in the path leading to celestial glory, it was at the present time. Even in the reading of the Bible and other Holy Scriptures we need that divine gift to enlighten our minds, to enable us to understand and comprehend what we were striving to learn. The Lord also desired us to preserve ourselves in the enjoyment of health and strength by observing certain rules He had given to His Saints for their observance. Then the Lord had promised prosperity to His Saints in a temporal point of view provided they would keep the law of tithing, and assist in a temporal way to build up the Kingdom of God. The promise was that those who were tithed should not be turned in the dreadful day of the Lord to come—that day which should come upon the wicked and disobedient. By observing the commandments which the Lord had given to His Saints, both spiritual and temporal blessings would be multiplied upon the Saints, and a brighter day would then be in store for Zion and her people, notwithstanding the dark forebodings and apprehensions entertained and expressed by some.

The speaker discouraged the spirit of faultfinding. Some of the people, he said, were in the habit of pointing out imperfections in the lives of the leaders of the Church, and particularly the local officers. This should not be. These men were entitled to the confidence, love and good will of the people, to whose interests they were devoting their strength and ability, and the people could rest assured that when a man became unworthy of the position he held in the Holy Priesthood, the Lord would remove him, and appoint another in his stead. The speaker bore testimony to the faithfulness and integrity of the First Presidency and the Apostles, whose hearts were all devoted to the work of the Lord, and whose whole souls were wrapped up in the welfare of Zion. Even some of the old veterans, who had spent their entire lives in the service of God, were sometimes attacked by those who were always looking for the weaknesses of mankind. This should not be. Elder Cannon closed by bearing a strong testimony to the truth of the work of God and its ultimate triumph over all opposition.

APOSTLE MARRINER W. MERRILL next addressed the congregation. He urged that during this Conference the Saints should lay aside their business cares and anxieties, come to meeting, and listen attentively to the counsels and instructions given by those called upon to speak to them. They should gather together in a spirit of unity. Many topics were dwelt upon on these occasions, and it was therefore a good plan for the leading Elders of the Church to bring a note book with them and jot down the chief points in the discourses for future reference and guidance. Some excellent advice was given which should not be forgotten. They came there to counsel together and to receive a refreshing from the Lord which would stimulate them in their daily life when Conference was over.

The speaker touched upon the opposition which this Church had encountered, but said he did not share the too gloomy apprehensions entertained by many of their number. This great latter-day work had so far prevailed, and would continue to prevail until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of God and His Christ. It is not a good thing to prophesy evil concerning Zion; let us rather look upon things hopefully and so encourage others in the same direction. The good Spirit of the Lord would then bring comfort and consolation to the people. Where are the men, asked the speaker, who rose up against the Prophet Joseph in his day? History told us, as it did of the men who had fought against this work from then until now. They had gone here, there and yonder; while others had turned away from the work of God because their souls were full of bitterness. Latter-day Saints could not afford to indulge in bitter feeling, which was among the evils which came from beneath.

Elder Merrill counseled the Saints to pay their tithes and offerings regularly, lamenting the indifference which existed in some quarters in regard to this ordinance. Those, however, who had discharged these obligations had been abundantly blessed of the Lord. The Lord required us to make sacrifices from time to time, and we should always be ready to respond to any call made upon us in His name.

The speaker dwelt upon the necessity of unity and harmony in the family circle, and counseled the Saints not to neglect family prayer. He touched upon the subject of our Church schools. These were institutions of profit to the people and ought to be encouraged in every possible way, because in them our children were taught principles of doctrine which could not be obtained in public schools.

PRESIDENT ANGUS M. CANNON

next spoke. He said that the Salt Lake Temple was nearing completion, and in this we had a great interest as the people of the Lord. The Prophet Joseph Smith made known unto us that without our fathers we could not be perfect and that neither could they be perfect without us. He showed unto us in his day the great necessity of building temples unto the Lord, where work could be done both for the living and the dead. The question was should we finish the temple here and have it dedicated on the 6th of April, next, according to the resolution passed at our former Conference, or let the matter rest entirely upon the shoulders of a few of our brethren upon whom the responsibility mainly rested for the accomplishment of the work? Upon us devolved the duty, however, of giving of our substance, and so strengthening their hands. It was an undertaking in which every one of us should engage. By united effort the building could be completed by the stipulated time, and free from debt. We would thereby give evidence that we loved our dead kindred as much as we loved ourselves.

May God help us to cultivate love of others within our hearts that we may prove ourselves deserving of the manifestation of God's divine love towards us.

PRESIDENT WILFORD WOODRUFF

advised all mothers attending Conference who brought their infants with them to remain seated near the doors in order that they might the more easily leave if necessary, and so avoid any inconvenience to the congregation.

The choir sang the anthem "From whence come all these people whom I see?"

Benediction by Bishop Elias Morris.

SECOND DAY.

MORNING SESSION.

The attendance at the opening session today was much larger than that of yesterday morning. Should the congregation continue to increase in dimensions the building will soon be insufficient to afford room for the people anxious to be present at the meetings, to enjoy the spirit of the occasion and obtain the full benefit of the instructions imparted by the speakers.

Conference was called to order by President George Q. Cannon, who was unable to be present yesterday, on account of his being absent from the Territory.

The choir and congregation sang:

We thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet,
To guide us in these latter days.
We thank Thee for sending the Gospel,
To lighten our minds with its rays.

Prayer by Elder Joseph E. Taylor.

Singing by the choir:

Lo! the mighty God appearing,
From on high Jehovah speaks!

APOSTLE JOHN W. TAYLOR

was the first speaker this morning. He said substantially that it was a great miracle to see so many Saints gathered together. It was a fulfillment of the predictions of the ancient prophets. They had prophesied that in the latter days the honest in heart should be gathered and be given pastors after God's own heart. There were probably sixteen or seventeen different nationalities represented in the congregation. We were in the position of the people on the day of Pentecost, so far as the representation of different nationalities was concerned. When the people heard the Apostles speak on that occasion by the Spirit of God, every man hearing the Gospel in his own tongue, they marvelled. They could not understand the manifestations of power they witnessed. Peter explained the subject to them and preached Christ and Him crucified. When asked by the people as to be saved he informed them that, by being baptized that Jesus was the Christ, they must repent of their sins, be baptized for the remission of the same and receive the Holy Ghost. These were principles and ordinances of the Gospel now as well as then. The plan of salvation was unchangeable. But many counterfeit systems had been invented, and the people had been deceived by them.

It was of great importance that people should know they were right and then go ahead. He said know advisedly, because the promise made by Christ to the obedient was that they should know the doctrine whether it was of God or of man. The Savior said: "We testify of that which we do know." There should be no doubt in the minds of the Saints as to the course they should pursue to be accepted of God. There were many faiths among the children of men; many are claiming to have the true way of salvation, yet their methods were all different. This shows that they were not imbued with one spirit. They had the counterfeit plans and not that system which was genuine. Paul said that those who preached any other Gospel than the real one, such should be accursed. Devout people might be mistaken but if they were honest they would embrace the true Gospel as soon as they heard it. Devotion and the possession of the truth do not always go together. The Spirit of God was the only true guide for the faithful and the testimony of Jesus was the spirit of prophecy. This holy influence was of more value than all the riches of the world. The speaker testified that the Gospel preached by Christ and His ancient Apostles had been restored in these days through the instrumentality of the prophet Joseph Smith.

Elder Taylor then dwelt upon the necessity of the Saints being honorable in all their dealings. Those who did not pay their honest debts when able to do so were unworthy a standing in the Church. It was the duty of men to support their families. The manifesto did not relieve them from this obligation, which was sacred. No judge nor jury would relieve them from it. A man who would seek to shirk such a responsibility was in an unenviable condition.

APOSTLE HEBER J. GRANT

next addressed the congregation, and spoke of the gratification which he felt in meeting with the Saints once again in general Conference. Without the light and inspiration of the Spirit of God it was impossible for any of the Elders of Israel to speak to the people to their profit and pleasure. Their object in coming together on these occasions was to take counsel together, and obtain such instructions as would enable them to go forward manfully in the battle of life.

We were constantly beset on every hand with daily cares and obligations, and it required great exertion and forbearance on our part to successfully carry out the duties resting upon us. It was a strange thing that we never looked to our own misdeeds and condemned them; but we were too prone to find fault with our neighbor. He had no objection to honest criticism; it behooved us, however, to search after our own failings before seeking for them in our brethren and sisters. Some persons were very fond of grumbling in regard to the expenditures of the Church and on the question of tithing. His experience on this head was that those who did the most complaining contributed the least.

Excuses were bad things; when they came too often. How many of the Saints had observed as they should the Word of Wisdom, for instance? Excuses were too frequently made for not seeking through the requirements of that revelation. Others again excused themselves from attending Conference on the most flimsy pretexts. Such plans were not legitimate, and should not be heard among true Latter-day Saints.

We had gathered to these mountains to keep the commandments of God, and our aim should always be to forget the things which perished, and lay up treasures in heaven. He had not a word to say against the public schools, but he did counsel parents, where they possessed the power and means, to send their children where they would receive a Gospel education and might learn of the plan of life and salvation.

APOSTLE F. M. LYMAN

Was the succeeding speaker. In these valleys, he said, we had in the gathering of the Saints a spectacle which was an object lesson throughout the world. It was not possible for a man to receive the Holy Ghost unless he knew that the doctrines which he had embraced were of God. When we became unfaithful to the Spirit of the Lord deserted us, and we were again on dangerous ground. No man could know God or the true principles of the Gospel except by the Holy Ghost. All that we lacked today in unity, as a people, was due to our negligence and carelessness of the requirements of the Gospel. It was a difficult thing to control the disposition of the human heart and subdue ourselves to the mind and will of God. This, however, was an undertaking binding upon the Latter-day Saints and it required a great deal of self-denial on our part to discharge the obligation. Prayer should not be neglected, and we should strive to discover the flaws in ourselves before we criticize too severely the faults of others.

The speaker was glad to observe the fidelity of the Saints, and that there were so few excommunications, and apostasies from the church today were quite rare. This was the more to be thankful for when we considered how the Church was spreading and increasing in numbers. When, however, any of our brethren should desire to turn away from the truth his heart was cut with sorrow. Everything was possible with Latter-day Saints who enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord. The true Gospel has taught us to endure the trial, tribulations and persecutions which had come upon us from time to time; it had made us one, and no power on earth could destroy this work, which had been revealed to us by God our Heavenly Father. This was the one plan of salvation, and here in these valleys were thousands who had received testimonies thereof. This was the Lord's work and kingdom and he would maintain it to the end.

The choir sang the anthem,

Praise ye the Father.

Benediction by Apostle Franklin D. Richards.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Singing by the choir and congregation:

Redeemer of Israel,

Our only Light;

On whom for a blessing we call;

Our shadow by day

And our pillar by night,

Our King, our Deliverer, our all.

Prayer by Elder John Nicholson.

The choir sang:

Softly beams the sacred dawning

Of the great millennial morn;

And to Saints gives welcome warning

That the day is hastening on.

APOSTLE MOSES THATCHER

Was the first speaker. He said he had listened with deep interest to the remarks made during this Conference, and rejoiced in the Spirit under which they had been spoken. He trusted that he would enjoy a portion of that same Spirit to guide in what he might now utter. Upon the subject of sacrifice, Brother Thatcher pointed out the great sacrifice which our Redeemer made for mankind in order to save us from our sins. During the speaker's missionary labors in the City of Mexico he was met by some young gentlemen who admitted that they had watched his movements closely; they had never seen him enter houses of ill-repute, saloons, and other places of evil resort, and while they honestly believed that the religion which he represented was the true one, yet they confessed they would rather pursue the path in which their feet were set, and go down to destruction rather than identify themselves with a cause which called for such great self-sacrifice as did the religion of the Latter-day Saints.

Elder Thatcher then made a statement of evidences of devotion exhibited by members of the Catholic church in Mexico. They underwent, in their religious fervor, all kinds of hardships, that they might exhibit the spirit of self-sacrifice, and by that means be accepted of God. This devout spirit was mostly manifested by the female portion of society. He brought up these things, he said, to show the hold that Romanism had upon the minds of the people of Mexico; and while he would not stand up here to criticize the religion of others, he desired to say that Catholicism in Mexico differed in many respects from Catholicism in Europe or the United States. It adapted itself to the conditions of the people, and much of it was shown, in order to enthrall the minds of the ignorant and the mixed races of that peculiar land. But when it came to sincerity and devotion, there could be no question but what it was largely found there.

The authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints were worthy of the confidence of the Saints. The latter should uphold and sustain them. Love begets love and confidence begets confidence, therefore we should love and trust each other. If wrongs existed in the Church they could not be corrected by the masses of the people, but by the proper tribunals established for the settlement of differences. Keep well cultivated the strong cord of affection and look up to those in authority with trust and confidence. He thanked God with his whole heart that he had with us this afternoon the Presidency of the Church. Today we were, as a people, in the enjoyment of liberty, which was near and dear to us, and he rejoiced in the society of these men to bless and comfort the Saints on this occasion.

He prayed that the blessings of the Lord might be in the midst of this people and that they might follow the light of inspiration.

APOSTLE F. D. RICHARDS

read from the 65th section of the book of Doctrine and Covenants on the subject of prayer, being a revelation given through the Prophet Joseph Smith in October, 1831, at Hiram, Portage County, Ohio. The coming of the Lord Jesus Christ was the great point at which this prayer seemed to be directed—the object of our work here upon the earth and endeavor continually to spread abroad the Kingdom of God here below. We were called upon to lay the foundation of a great and mighty work upon the earth, and to prepare the people of all nations for the second coming of the Lord.

This was the greatest of all dispensations; and the work which the Prophet Joseph Smith continued to unfold to our vision, as set forth in some of his last sermons on the immense responsibilities resting upon this people, it devolved upon us now to carry forward. Trials and persecutions had beset all the faithful sons and daughters of God from the days of our Savior, and this would be the lot of all true Christians as long as life lasted. Many of the Saints who embraced the Gospel in their native lands were sprung in consequence by their friends at home, but they were content to make any sacrifice for the Gospel's sake, and gathered with their brothers and sisters in these valleys. But in all our trials the Lord had been with us, and the greater the sacrifice the greater would be the blessing. The speaker cited some of the struggles through which the Saints passed in the early days of the Church, but showed how, through all, the Lord's hand had protected us. Falsehoods had been circulated broadcast concerning this people, but a change for the better seemed to be coming in this respect. The Lord has brought us here to make our light shine upon the nations of the earth as well as upon the people around us.

In regard to the Salt Lake Temple, the speaker expressed his confidence that the help required to complete it would be forthcoming, and that in six months from now the building would be dedicated to God. Then there would be four Temples in the Territory of Utah. Let us treat the strangers who come within our gates with Christian love, and he doubted not that here and there among the honest in heart would be found those who would embrace our faith.

After urging the importance of secret prayer, Brother Richards remarked upon the fact that the Book of Mormon has now been published in some ten different languages, most of which he enumerated, and advocated at the forthcoming World's Fair the establishment of a department where the Church works printed in the various languages might be obtained. Copies would thus find their way into foreign countries and so the truth would be spread abroad among the nations. The speaker directed the attention of the Seventies to this subject. It was a great work which devolved upon us to send forth the Gospel message to the human family, and he yet looked forward to the accomplishment of great things by the servants of God in this and other lands. This was the Lord's work, and, knowing it, we should go forward laboring unceasingly.

[The foregoing is necessarily only a brief synopsis of Elder Richards' excellent discourse.]

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON.

Following is a brief outline of his remarks: He had enjoyed these meetings today very much, and expressed his great regret that he could not be present on the opening day. This was a time when we could temporarily forget and lay aside the cares, perplexities, and annoyances of life, listen to words of counsel, and partake of that heavenly influence which always prevailed in these conferences. The Lord had wrought great things in our behalf. This latter-day work was a standing miracle in the eyes of all the nations of the earth; it was a continued testimony, an indestructible work. It was not the plan, wisdom, or device of man that had wrought out such wonderful results which we witnessed here on every hand; and the Lord would hold the inhabitants of the earth accountable for the knowledge they had concerning this work, but which they did not make a proper use of. Where could be found anything like it in the whole world? This Church was founded and had been carried on in the face of all the opposition that had been brought to bear against it. He rejoiced that the Saints could meet together in conference under such favorable circumstances as now prevailed, and that the heavens were still open to us. This was the only Church on the face of the earth, so far as he knew, that gave to every worthy male member thereof the Priesthood and the authority to officiate in the ordinances of the House of God. God intended to make of us a great and mighty people. He had revealed to us that we are His children; and what a glorious revelation this was!

This Gospel would bring us back into the presence of God and the Lamb if we only obeyed all its principles and remained faithful unto the end.

The anthem:

Let the mountains shout for joy, was sung by the choir, and the whole congregation joined in the Doxology.

Benediction by Elder L. John Nuttall.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

A meeting of the general Priesthood was held in the Tabernacle last night, April 7th, beginning at 7 o'clock. The first speaker was President Joseph F. Smith. He gave much practical instruction upon the subject of looking after the moral and religious welfare of the young, and seeing that they were not permitted to spend their time in idleness. He also spoke deprecatingly of the disregard paid by many to the commandment of God in relation to the observance of the Sabbath day. The concluding portion of his discourse was devoted to the evils growing out of going into debt without sufficient reason; the dangers of extravagance and class distinctions on the basis of wealth. He also exhorted his hearers to contribute generously to the funds needed to complete the Temple in this city.

President Woodruff followed by delivering a discourse upon the magnitude of the work of God and the responsibilities resting upon those who held the Priesthood.

President George Q. Cannon spoke upon the importance of those holding high office in the Church being careful as to how they used their authority, as they would be held to a strict accountability by the Lord for the manner in which they exercised their callings. None of the humblest of God's creatures could be wronged with impunity. He spoke also on the necessity of being charitable and of the evil results of backbiting; also upon the necessity of seeking to save our offspring, who, according to the everlasting covenant, were the children of promise. We ought to have great hopes of them, even when they went astray, exercising faith that they might be reclaimed.

THIRD DAY.

MORNING SESSION.

The choir and congregation sang:

Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear,
But with joy wend your way;
Though hard to you this journey may appear,
Grace shall be as your day.

Prayer by Elder Daniel McArthur.

The Spirit of God like a fire is burning!
The latter-day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning.
The angels are coming to visit the earth.

was sung by the choir, the congregation joining.

THE AUTHORITIES

of the Church were presented by President George Q. Cannon for the vote of the assembly, as follows:

Wilford Woodruff, as Prophet, Seer and Revelator and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in all the world.

George Q. Cannon as First Counselor in the First Presidency.

Joseph F. Smith as Second Counselor in the First Presidency.

Lorenzo Snow as President of the Twelve Apostles.

As members of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles—Lorenzo Snow, Franklin D. Richards, Brigham Young, Moses Thatcher, Francis M. Lyman, John H. Smith, George Treadwell, Heber J. Grant, John W. Taylor, Marriner W. Merrill, Anthon H. Lund, and Abraham H. Cannon.

The counselors in the First Presidency and the Twelve Apostles as Prophets, Seers and Revelators.

Patriarch to the Church—John Smith.

First Seven Presidents of the Seventies—Neymour B. Young, C. D. Fieldsted, John Morgan, B. H. Roberts, George Reynolds, and Jonathan G. Kimball.

William B. Preston as Presiding Bishop, with Robert T. Burton as his First and John R. Winder as his Second Counselor.

Franklin D. Richards as Church Historian and General Church Recorder, and John Jacques as his assistant.

Joseph Don Carlos Young as Church Architect.

John N. Chisolm as Clerk of the General Conference.

As the Church Board of Education; Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, George Q. Cannon, Karl G. Maeser, Willard Young, George W. Thatcher, Amos Howe, Anthon H. Lund, James Sharp.

As Trustee in Trust for the body of religious worshippers known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—Wilford Woodruff.

All the voting was unanimous.

REPORT OF PRIMARY ASSOCIATIONS.

(Five States not reported).
No. of associations, 297;
No. of officers, 1,244; No. of members, 19,390;
Total, 20,634.

Average attendance, 7,974; increase, 2,634;
Total of meetings of all descriptions, 9,731;
Donated to Temples, $38,750; charitable purposes, $17,675; emigration, $9,475.
Officers—Louie B. Felt, President; Lillie J. Freeze, First Counselor; Clara M. Cannon, Second Counselor; Minnie P. Cutler, Treasurer; Mary Anderson, Secretary.

REPORT OF RELIEF SOCIETIES.

Total No. of members, 18,811.
No. of branches, 304.
Meetings held, 3,195.

Average attendance, 6,103.
Disbursements during half year—Charitable purposes, $5,174.44; emigration, $5,640.00; temple, $18,655.00; Deseret Hospital, $17,720.00; Home Industries, $1,651.75; books, $189.19; buildings, $1,232.12.

On hand—Cash, $12,199.96; property, $17,923.87; real estate, $4,532.74; wheat cash, $8,433.85; wheat bushels, 39,874.

Officers—Zina D. H. Young, president; Jane S. Richards, First Counselor; Bathsheba W. Smith, Second Counselor; Sarah M. Kimball, Secretary; Romania B. Pratt, Assistant Secretary; E. B. Wells Corresponding Secretary; M. Isabelle Horn, Treasurer.

CHURCH SCHOOLS

Report of third academic year, 1891-2—Colleges, 3; academies, 25; seminaries, 9; total 37. In Utah, 21; Idaho, 6; Arizona, 4; Mexico, 1; total 37.

Students—Male, 3,567; females, 23,614; total 27,181.

In primary department 959, preparatory 1199, intermediate 2289, commercial 194, academic 199, normal 523.

Church membership of students—High Priests 5, Seventies 10, Elders 122, Priests 172, Teachers 215, Deacons 398, Members 3943, not baptized 17, non-members 110.

Number of faculty 129.
Largest school, Brigham Young Academy, at Provo, 659 students.

On motion, sustained by unanimous vote, the foregoing reports were accepted and placed on file with the records of the proceedings of the Conference.

APOSTLE JOHN HENRY SMITH

to the congregation. Following the close of his discourse: He had no doubt that the speakers thus far at this Conference had said many things to the interest, edification and well-being of the Saints. We needed, as a people, a great variety of instruction, and at no place could we better receive it than here, on these occasions, when the Saints gathered in such numbers from all parts of the Territory.

At last night's Priesthood meeting many important topics were dwelt upon, especial reference being made to a strict and proper observance of the Sabbath. In this regard, however, he feared we were not as careful as we ought to be, either in regard to ourselves or our families. There seemed to be a laxity of feeling among too many at the present time in reference to keeping the Sabbath day holy. This, too, had grown to an extent which was not at all commendable in a people who professed to possess in every sense of the word the Gospel of Christ in its fulness.

There were many other matters which should be prominently discussed at this Conference. Smoking was an evil habit greatly to be deplored, and it was no uncommon thing nowadays to see those of our brethren who had been expounders of the Word among the people of the world, and who had been looked to as exemplars among the Saints at home chewing tobacco. We also saw men who claimed to hold the Priesthood drifting within the confines of the drinking-house. He trusted that the voice of the servants of God would be raised, calling upon the Saints to continue in the good old way of propriety, wisdom and prudence, and withstand the temptations which hedged them in on every side. If men would seek the guidance of the Spirit of the living God they would obtain strength sufficient to support them in the hour of temptation and need.

Men were becoming unmindful of the responsibilities which they owed to the youth and to their fellow men everywhere. We had been set, as a people, upon a hill, as a light to the world. The spirit of temperance was one of the groundworks of the structure which we were seeking to build under the direction of Almighty God; and as he looked upon this problem he recognized the fact that we must set our faces firmly against the demon of intemperance, which stalked abroad and led men and women to deviate from the rules and regulations which God had given us. Those who used tobacco and strong drink could not be a pure and healthy people.

There were thousands of men walking idly in our communities today. For these work should be provided as far as possible, because if men's hands were kept busy there was less fear of their falling into the ways of temptation and wickedness.

He rejoiced in the Gospel of the Son of God, and his great desire was to see the Saints the most happy and prosperous of any people in the whole world.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH

hoped that the excellent instructions imparted during Conference would find ample lodgment in their hearts and minds, so that much good would result from their gathering together. All the subjects which had been treated upon thus far were most important to the Latter-day Saints.

In reference to home industries, it should not be said that any of our people were without employment in this Territory, and some efforts should, in his opinion, be made by the leading men in the various settlements whereby work could be given to those who needed it, that they might not remain unnecessarily idle. During his lifetime President Brigham Young was very anxious that home industries should be encouraged and established among the people. It would be a good thing for any community to branch out in every kind of industry that would give the people employment, and, as far as possible, produce what we needed for home consumption. In this way communities became self-sustaining and wealthy, and if the Latter-day Saints ever expected to become wealthy they must look to these things. He exhorted his hearers to support the institutions that had been established in our midst. If we needed flannels or blankets his advice was to purchase those which were manufactured at home, and never spend a dollar from this time forth for articles of foreign manufacture. If the same kind of goods were made and could be obtained at home, even if a little more had to be paid for them. Home industries not only found work for our people, but kept money within our own community which would otherwise go elsewhere. The speaker made reference to the Lehi sugar factory. Some of our brethren, he said, who were engaged in the promotion of that enterprise were groaning under the weight of responsibility, resting upon them in the establishment of the undertaking; and he trusted that it would receive henceforward the liberal support which it deserved. Reference was made to Z. C. M. I. as most flourishing home institution, which Brother Smith said had proved to be one of the greatest temporal blessings ever established in this place. It had prevented the making of "corners" and the people from being taken advantage of. Its author was President Brigham Young, whose idea was that the people themselves should do it and so become merchants as well as Elders. The advantages of co-operative institutions were pointed out. Today, the speaker said, Z. C. M. I. was one of the most substantial and reliable institutions in the land.

President Smith also advocated the establishment of creameries in our midst. That which he was preaching, he remarked, was the gospel of temporal salvation, the gospel of common sense and reason, the Gospel of truth; and it was a Gospel which the Latter-day Saints ought to observe and honor. We ought to have been converted to this years ago, and enjoyed the benefits which would have resulted from it, instead of, as we did today, sending our money out of the country, in a continuous stream, to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars for that which could be produced at home just as well as abroad.

The Saints were earnestly admonished to keep strictly the Word of Wisdom, and abstain from the use of tea, coffee, strong drinks, and avoid the use of tobacco.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON added a few closing words, bearing his testimony to the exemplary bearing of President Joseph F. Smith in the matter of observing the Word of Wisdom. The choir sang, "Light and Truth, the World is Waking."

Benediction by Bishop Elias Morris.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Singing by the choir and congregation:

Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation.

No longer as strangers on earth need we roam. Good tidings are sounding to us and each nation.

And shortly the hour of redemption will come.

Prayer by Elder Elias Blackburn.

How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in this excellent word, was sung by the choir and congregation.

APOSTLE LORENZO SNOW

said, in substance, that he had been very much edified and instructed by what had been spoken during this Conference. The Saints had received that kind of information and counsel which every Latter-day Saint needed, and which should be put into practice in our future daily life. The gathering of the Saints in these mountain valleys from the various nations of the world was truly a marvel, and we should be the most thankful people of any on the face of the globe, seeing the promises which God had made unto those who remained faithful in His cause. The clouds of spiritual darkness which hung over our heads before we embraced the true Gospel had disappeared through the outpourings of the Holy Spirit, and our reward would be according to our faithfulness. This Church and Kingdom, from the day it was organized sixty-two years ago, had moved forward and continued to progress in the face of the most serious obstacles and difficulties. He had no doubt or misgiving as to the future of this work, for it was the Lord's.

The Latter-day Saints might have been guilty of errors in the past, but if they were honest, as was Paul, they would be sustained in making their sacrifices. The Spirit of the Lord was with the Latter-day Saints to guide them aright, and would remain with them if they were humble and faithful as Latter-day Saints should be.

The speaker next adverted to the obligations resting upon parents in the training of their children, and urged them to set the young a good example in all things. Everything that was desirable for us in this life was secured by the plan of salvation which we as a people had received. Let us keep all the commandments which God had given unto us, no matter how great the sacrifice might be.

In conclusion Brother Snow touched upon the subject of temple building, and counseled the people to do their utmost towards helping to complete the Salt Lake Temple by April next. In that holy building, if we properly prepared ourselves to enter there, we should witness most extraordinary manifestations from God—such as had not been seen by any other people for many thousands of years. It would be a lasting shame, after the trials through which this people had passed during the last years, if we were not in a fit condition to receive those great manifestations of the goodness and power of God when the time should come.

BISHOP JOHN R. WINDER reminded the Latter-day Saints of their pledge made by resolution at the last April Conference to have the Salt Lake Temple finished a year from that date. The committee were making good progress with the building, and it would be ready for dedication on April 6th, 1895. Between 200 and 300 men were now employed upon it, and the money contributed by the Saints was being carefully expended. There were no better mechanics to be found, and certainly none more faithful in the discharge of their duties, than those to whom the work has been entrusted. Having made a careful estimate of the cost, he found that it would require $150,000 to complete the structure. The work now being done was of a costly character, but when finished it would be most beautiful for the Saints to look upon. He trusted that the hearts of this people would be opened and that they would respond liberally to the cause in hand.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

spoke next. Following is a brief outline of his remarks. He said that the report made by Bishop Winder regarding the progress made in completing the Temple in this city must be very gratifying to all Saints. The structure would not be entirely completed by the time named, but would be sufficiently advanced to admit of its being dedicated and work being done in it of the character for which it is designed. It would be further decorated and beautified subsequently. The amount named by Bishop Winder as being needed to complete the work to be done by the 6th of April next might seem large, but when divided out among a people such as we were it was comparatively small. Through faith much had already been accomplished, and by faith the work in the future could be carried forward to success. The building of the Temple at Kirtland, which the Lord condescended to grace with His presence, was a much greater undertaking than the work now being carried on by us, as the people in those days were comparatively few and destitute. A liberal man, we were told, devised liberal things, and no doubt we as Latter-day Saints were judged by our Father in heaven by the evidence of our faith. On the subject of faith the speaker intimated that displayed among the Elders when they went forth into distant lands without purse or scrip. The Lord had always been with them, and even when trials and difficulties had beset the Elders, He had raised up friends in their behalf.

The labor of completing this temple rested upon us as a people, and if we would only go to with willing hearts and hands, and with faith and determination to accomplish the object, success would crown our efforts. There was no sacrifice which was too great for us to make for our God, in order to show our appreciation of what He had done for us. Temple work for the salvation of the dead was a binding obligation upon this people. He then spoke on the doctrine of extending the principles of salvation to the dead as well as the living, and quoted from the scriptures in support of the position taken by the Latter-day Saints on this subject. He showed with great clearness that the plan of redemption was intended for all—not only those who heard and embraced it in this life, but that it was carried to the other side of the veil. The ordinances connected with it were administered in their behalf, by those representing the dead in this life, in sacred places. This was an important part of the work in which the Latter-day Saints were engaged. Brother Cannon went on to enlarge upon this point, giving many valuable thoughts and evidences of its beauty and efficacy.

Satan had determined to bring to naught the plan of salvation and to destroy this work of God if it were possible. Hence the trials and persecutions which the Saints had had to contend with it at every step taken from the beginning, and which had been the means of shedding some of the best blood of the present century. The trials we had passed through already would beset us in the future; but no earthly power could defeat the progress of this great latter-day work, for God had spoken concerning it.

Nothing happened to this people without God had foreordained it. He understood it and had a purpose in calling us to pass through tribulation, and the object would be made known unto us in His own due time. None of us were beyond His blessings, and His plan of salvation was so great that it embraced the whole universe. God had blessed this people with many and great favors, and who would exchange his or her lot for anything the world could afford?

In closing his remarks President Cannon besought the Saints to do all in their power to help towards completing the Salt Lake Temple, so that when the 6th of April, 1895, dawned no debts would remain to embarrass us, no further obligations to meet; then the building would be dedicated as it should be, and prove acceptable to God our Eternal Father. His Holy Spirit would assuredly rest down upon every one who took hold of or a part in this noble work.

[The foregoing synopsis is necessarily a meagre one, and only gives a faint idea of Brother Cannon's excellent and instructive discourse.]

The choir sang the anthem,

Jesus, I my cross have taken,

Benediction by Apostle Heber J. Grant.

FOURTH DAY.

OVERFLOW MEETING

Was held in the Assembly Hall at 10:30 a.m., President Lorenzo Snow presiding.

Elder George Goddard led the congregational singing of "Truth reflects upon our senses."

Prayer by Apostle M. W. Merrill.
The congregation then sang:

"We thank Thee, O God, for a prophet."

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON

feared the Saints generally did not appreciate the privilege they had of living upon the earth in the last days when the Gospel truths have been restored from heaven; like Nephil of old, who when his elder brethren got discouraged, stepped forward to perform the mission entrusted to him, so should the servants of God in these last days always be diligent in carrying out the behests of the Almighty. Joseph, the Prophet, who stood manfully in the midst of persecution, opposition and death, is another illustrious example of faithfulness and integrity. The carrying out of the plans of the Lord has always been connected with great difficulties and trials; in every country where the Gospel has been introduced in this dispensation the adversary has exerted his powers to hinder that work in its progress, but perseverance and faithfulness on the part of the Elders have invariably insured success. Men who debase themselves by becoming intoxicated, and who in other respects transgress, are unfit to bear the holy Priesthood; they not only imperil their own salvation but their influence for evil will be felt in the neighborhoods where they reside, and as far as their lives and conduct are known. In almost every instance where children stray away from the path of duty, there are influences at work somewhere which are the direct or indirect causes of their actions, and often some of more mature years is responsible for their rule. The Elders in Israel should ever be ready to lend a helping hand to the young and all with whom they associate; their examples should be consistent with their advice and counsel. Nor should a young and inexperienced Saint be cast away as something beyond redemption, even if guilty of some of the follies of youth, but he should be labored with patiently and perseverance he may repent sincerely and become a bright star in the midst of the people, like others who years ago were wayward and careless. The Saints should always feel charitable toward fallen mankind on general principles, even toward their enemies, but particularly toward the weak and erring in their own midst.

APOSTLE MARINKER W. MERRILL referred to his forty years' standing in the Church, and the hard-dealing of the Lord with him as an individual during that length of time. He related an incident when he, previous to his baptism, was tormented by evil spirits and came very near losing his life under their influence. He sought the Lord in childish but earnest prayer which brought him immediate and permanent relief. Soon after he heard the fullness of the Gospel preached for the first time, and was immediately convinced of its truth. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon him in great measure, and since that time he had never been deprived of the testimony of Jesus, nor had he ever doubted the divinity of the great latter-day work. The speaker sincerely believed that no one in the Church need be without a testimony for himself in regard to the truth of Mormonism. All who will ask of the Lord in a proper manner will receive that assurance of its divinity which will make them independent of all other mortals in this regard, and they will know for a surety whether the Gospel, as taught by the Latter-day Saints, be of God or of man. No member in the Church has a right to enlarge upon the faults and imperfections of their file leaders, as many have been guilty of doing in times past; the practice is so dangerous that it has led many to apostasy. On the other hand the Saints should seek unto their file leaders for counsel and advice, be united and on good terms with the Bishop and local officers in the respective wards where they reside, set their houses in order, forgive their brethren who may sin against them, and thus insure to themselves that divine forgiveness which they all need.

The speaker discouraged the contracting of unnecessary debts and the mortgaging of homes—practices which have brought so many a financial ruin, and a condition of despondency and despair. All Saints should be strictly honest in their dealings with all men, and no one has a right to take advantage of any provision in the law which may place his creditors in a condition that they cannot pursue legal procedure to enforce payment of honest debts. The speaker concluded by exhorting the Saints to faithfulness and to observe things which the Lord has commanded. After the singing of the Hymnology benediction was offered by Apostle Heber J. Grant.

Another overflow meeting was held at 2 p.m., Apostle Franklin D. Richards presiding.

The congregation sang,

Come, come, ye Saints, no toil nor labor fear.

Prayer by Elder George Goddard.

The congregation sang:

Arise, my soul, arise.

The officers of the Eleventh Ward administered the Sacrament.

APOSTLE JOHN W. TAYLOR

referred to the growth of the Church and the great labor and responsibility resting upon those whose duty it is to teach and instruct the people. He enlarged upon the evil results of contracting debts. The Saints should endeavor to live within their means and deny themselves things which they cannot afford to pay for. Last year the counsel was given to the Saints to engage in home manufacture, and particularly take stock in the Utah sugar factory, but only a few had done this, and those few, including several of the general authorities of the Church were forced to take much more stock than they really were able to carry. It would have been an easy task for the people at large to subscribe for the stock had the Saints generally responded to the counsel given. The Saints can never become a very prosperous people until they learn to be more self-sustaining than they are at the present time. They must encourage home industries, and learn to work in the interests of the whole people.

The speaker made an earnest appeal to the people to live temperate lives, keep the Word of Wisdom, attend to their prayer, and all other duties as Saints. In referring to the late persecutions of the Saints Elder Taylor was convinced that the hand of the Lord was in it. Among its other beneficial results was the location of other settlements by the Saints in Mexico, where there are several millions of the House of Israel to whom the Gospel should be preached. He discouraged the intermarriage of the Saints with those not of their faith and said it would bring sorrow and distress upon those who were guilty of these practices. The daughters of Zion should not be given in marriage to the Gentiles. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," was the injunction of Paul to the Corinthians, and the same counsel holds good today. In conclusion the speaker testified that those who would seek the Lord for aid and support would receive strength sufficient for their day and come through safely, though the Saints might continue to pass through tribulations and trials until Christ should come.

APOSTLE JOHN HENRY SMITH

complimented the people for their willingness in times past to pay their tithes and offerings and in other respects comply with the commandments of the Lord; still there was much room for improvement. The Saints, both young and old, should live strictly pure and chaste lives, and avoid the contaminating influences which those who are not of them are trying to introduce into their midst. It is indeed a source of the greatest grief when fathers and mothers are compelled to witness their sons and daughters depart from the rules of chastity and propriety. The Lord will have a pure and holy people, and it devolves upon the Saints to redeem the world from its present state of immorality, and preserve those true and life-giving principles which the Lord has given for the salvation of mankind.

APOSTLE MOSES THATCHER

advised the Saints to be careful in regard to making covenants with the Lord or with one another, for God was always displeased with covenant breakers. In reference to home industries, which the speaker had always sustained and fostered with his means, they should be entered into with prudence and forethought, and with a determination to make them a success. Men sometimes acted from the impulses of the moment, and were guilty of making hasty moves which afterwards might be regretted, but with wisdom and careful manipulation home industries would certainly prosper. A spirit of forgiveness and charity should be cultivated, and the faults of brethren reproved in kindness and under the influence of the Spirit of God. The Saints should learn to love one another with that divine love and affection which the Spirit of God engenders in the hearts of those who have repented of their sins and entered into His service.

APOSTLE FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS, in making some closing remarks regarding the completion of the Temple in Salt Lake City, said that in human experience in building houses men nearly always find the cost greater as they proceed than the first estimates.

So also in regard to the Temple, and consequently more means were wanted than was estimated six months ago. The speaker enjoined upon the Bishops and leading men of the Church to watch over their flocks and look into their condition, that they might educate and purify themselves so as to be worthy to enter into that holy building after its completion and contemplated dedication in April next.

Forty years ago the speaker, while laboring as a missionary in Europe, was engaged in gathering means for the erection of the Salt Lake Temple, and now that it is nearing completion the hearts of the Saints should not be narrow or contracted in responding to the last call in its behalf. They should bring forward the substance with which the Lord has blessed them so that the authorities of the Church and those who have been appointed to take immediate charge of the finishing work may have ample means wherewith to give the building that beautiful and tasteful finish which is contemplated for it. While thus aiding the work in a material way, the Saints should also prepare themselves to receive the blessings which the Lord has in store for the faithful and is anxious to bestow upon them and upon their friends and relatives who have gone behind the veil.

The time for closing the meeting having arrived, singing was omitted, and the benediction was offered by Apostle Franklin D. Richards.

AT THE TABERNACLE.

MORNING SESSION.

The choir and congregation sang:

Do what is right, the day-dawn is breaking,
Hailing a future of freedom and light.

Prayer by Elder L. W. Shurtliff.
The choir sang:

Home love.

PRESIDENT WILFORD WOODRUFF was the first speaker. The following is a brief synopsis of his discourse:

He commenced by stating, that he desired the faith and prayers of the Saints, because nobody could occupy the position he now had profitably by the hearers, without being guided by the Holy Spirit. There were a few thoughts on his mind which he would endeavor to lay before the Conference. In the first place he would bear his witness to the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed in these latter days, and he did so fully aware of the fact that he was responsible before the Almighty as to the testimony he gave. The Saints were witnesses before the world and accountable for what they said, but the world would be responsible if it rejected the testimony. The speaker knew that this work was of God and had been established through His power. During almost sixty years he had been connected with the Church and held the holy Priesthood and during that time he had traveled much abroad and at home laboring for the spread of the Gospel. He had seen numerous manifestations of the power of the Almighty. The gifts formerly possessed by the Saints he had seen exercised in this Church. The Holy Spirit was given to those who complied with the requirements of the Gospel. Hence the speaker knew that Joseph was a Prophet of God and that this Church was the work of God.

Concerning revelation, President Woodruff said the Saints were not without that divine gift. There were many men and women in these valleys who were filled with inspiration, and the Apostles, when they spoke to the people by the Holy Spirit, were revelators. The kingdom of God could not exist without revelations. We might, however, feel that we wanted more revelations than we had, to better understand our position and to accomplish the work we were called to perform. From the time of Adam to the present hour no one could be found who ever preached and administered in the ordinances of the Gospel without having the holy Priesthood. All that Moses and his successors did, and even the work done by our Savior, was done by the power of the Priesthood. This the speaker illustrated by reference to the life and death of our Savior.

Christ came in the meridian of time to the Jewish nation, but that people did not receive Him. He lived long enough to teach the gospel and organize His church. But after this work was done, He gave Himself up to death and was crucified by His enemies, for whom He prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He had previously chosen Twelve Apostles to be His witnesses. These were taken not from the prominent men of the nation but from the lowly and humble, who were willing to be taught by Him and to do His will. Something similar had taken place in our age. The Lord had established a dispensation. This was not for one nation only, but for both Gentiles and Jews.

The dispensation in which the first Apostles lived was not permanent. After the time of the Apostles the Priesthood was taken away, the Church was left into the wilderness, where she remained until the time of the restoration. But the last dispensation was different from the previous ones. It was established never to be overthrown, in fulfillment of prophecies given in previous dispensations. In the sacred Scriptures the history of our work is already written. There never was a more important or a greater dispensation.

Joseph Smith was an illiterate young man, but he was called upon to perform this great work, and he had revelations given to him that were greater than any we read of given to other prophets. The speaker had traveled with him for thousands of miles, and had been an eye witness to the mighty works he had performed, and he could therefore not doubt his divine mission. He had seen him, by the power of God, heal the sick and do other marvelous works, and the Spirit of God rested upon him until his martyrdom. The Church had therefore been organized by the power of God, with all the gifts and graces that belonged thereto. A great foundation had been laid. The Saints were here, gathered by the power of God. Our history was known to the world, and it was comforting to know that the work that we have to do had already been foreshadowed thousands of years ago by holy prophets. Even the place in which we now dwell was the one where God wanted us to be.

This is the place where the city and temple of God should be built. What God has foretold has come true.

Concerning the duties of the Saints, the speaker said it now was incumbent upon us to go forth and warn the inhabitants of the earth of the judgments to come. For this we were reserved in the spirit world and had now come forth upon the earth in these days. There was a great responsibility resting upon us in regard to this. The Prophets Joseph and Hyrum laid the foundation of this work and received the crown of martyrs. But on us the responsibility rested to continue the work and warn the world.

Speaking of the revelation relating to the redemption of the dead, President Woodruff said this was a most comforting doctrine. Through it we were taught how the principles of salvation could be extended beyond the veil and reach our progenitors. He wished that all the Saints might have their understandings opened to this great truth. It was a matter to be thankful for that we had already been able to build three temples in this Territory, and we should be diligent in completing the one now being erected in this city. Our dead did not look to the sectarian world but to us for the performance of the ordinances connected with their salvation. A vast host of enemies were arrayed against this work, but the Lord would sustain us and hold His hand over us until the work was done and all His plans and purposes accomplished.

The speaker then took up the subject of home industries, and said that he would endorse the remarks made on this subject during the Conference. The Saints were here to build up Zion.

With regard to the future, President Woodruff said, the rising generation would stand up and carry this work onward by the power of God. The right element was there. Our sons, as a general rule, would not forsake their God nor their fathers and mothers. Some of them might go astray, but there would be found among them those who could by the power of God carry out this work. In his early life the speaker had often read about Prophets and Apostles and other holy men and he had wished to live to see one, and when he read the Gospel he felt that his desire had been granted. He would therefore admonish the young to give themselves up to the work of God.

He felt to bless the Saints with all his heart. He would bless his brethren of the Apostles and say there was unity among them. He rejoiced in contemplating the work of God in these last days. It was such a work as was never heard of before.

The speaker closed his remarks by stating that he was glad that he was alive yet. He knew he was sustained by the prayers of tens of thousands of righteous men and women. He wished that the Saints might be faithful and true and kind to each other and that God's blessings might rest abundantly upon them.

APOSTLE F. M. LYMAN

felt grateful to God for the testimony of President Woodruff. The Latter-day Saints were essentially preachers of the Gospel, and no other religious body had so large a proportion of ministers as they. The Apostles, the High Priests, the Seventies, the Elders, all were given the duty of bearing testimony of the work of God to the people of the world.

God required His people to be a peculiar one, preaching the Gospel by precept and example. The Holy Ghost would give power to their testimony, and that Spirit could be enjoyed only through living according to the requirements of the Lord. An especial opportunity was given to us at present to show our willingness to obey the will of God by completing the Temple in this city before the sixth of next April. It was thought last April that $100,000 would be sufficient to pay for the completion of the work, but it was found that about $300,000 would be needed.

This would require some sacrifice at the hands of the Latter-day Saints. President Woodruff was beloved and preserved upon the earth to take part in the dedication of that Temple. Considering the blessings showered upon the Saints, they should be able and willing to put forth an extra effort to the end that it might be dedicated at the appointed time.

Great privileges would be enjoyed by the Saints who participated in the dedicatory services in the Temple. It had been decided that the dedicatory services should be conducted so that every Latter-day Saint worthy to enter the building might witness them. They would be continued from day to day until this privilege was given to everyone who was worthy. We would all feel better then if the Temple should be entirely free from debt and especially if individually we had contributed means toward its completion.

There was a necessity that we prepare ourselves for these exercises by casting out all evil from our minds and resolving to leave our sets of wrongfulness behind. Temperance should be so strictly observed by the Latter-day Saints that the people of the world might consider us most remarkable in that respect. Claiming, as we do, that we had the true Gospel, we ought to be temperate, sober, diligent and faithful in the work of God. Our houses of worship should be filled on the Sabbath, and all recreation eschewed on that day.

The speaker was grieved to state that carelessness and indifference were springing up among the people, especially with regard to prayer and partaking of the Sacrament.

The necessity of obtaining reliable information regarding the true status of all the people of Zion, was dwelt upon, and energetic labor of correction and counsel was advised. Great and careful labor would be required to redeem the people from the sins of the world. Hence the necessity that each man should hold the Priesthood, that he might be a savior to himself and a worker of righteousness. If each performs this work for himself, the will of God would be done, and all would be exemplars and teachers of righteousness among the people. This duty was not required of those high in authority, any more than of those holding a lower degree and office of the Priesthood. Each should make a record of righteousness for himself, and in this condition we should be when we entered the temple. All should feel well towards each other, that nothing might hinder the free flow of the Spirit of God in His temple at its dedication.

Let us reform for the next six months, freeing ourselves from sin and iniquity; not waiting until the day of dedication, but reforming every day from this time on. Let us live for the blessings of God, that we might have constant communication with heaven. God is anxious to bless us and we should live so as to increase His favors and His inspiration upon us. We should be careful toward our children, to imbue them with love for the work of God, that they might be a source of strength to Israel. May God bless His people with ability to complete that edifice and with worthiness to enter it at its dedication.

President George Q. Cannon read the following:

Abstract of general report of Y. L. M. I. A.
or the year ending August 1st, 1897.
Meetings held, 2953; number of members, 10,161; average attendance, 4769; books in library, 3574.

Cash on hand at last report..... $1507 00
Cash received..... 3971 16

Total..... $5478 25
Cash disbursed..... $3777 69
Cash on hand..... 1700 56
Property on hand at last report..... $2314 49
Property received..... 681 95

Total..... $2996 44
Property disbursed..... $3 33 11/2
Property on hand..... 2912 33
Total cash and property on hand..... $4212 89

General officers of Y. L. M. I. A. —

President, Kimball S. Taylor; first counselor, Melvin Y. Douglass; second counselor, Martha H. Tinger.

Aids—Lillie Freese, Adella W. Kordley, Sarah Edgington, Aggie S. Campbell, Minnie J. Snow, May Talmage.

Secretary an i Treasurer, Ann M. Cannon.

Corresponding secretary, Mae Taylor.

A motion to receive the above report and place it on file with the account of the proceedings of the Conference was passed by unanimous vote.

The choir sang the anthem:
The God of Israel.

Benediction by Elders Ira N. Hinckley.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The choir sang the anthem:
Unfold, ye portals, everlasting.

Prayer by Elder William Paxman.
Singing by the choir:

Jesus, once of humble birth,
Now in glory comes to earth;
Once He suffered grief and pain,
Now He comes on earth to reign.

The Sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered under the direction of the Priesthood of the Tenth Ward.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

delivered an elaborate and highly interesting discourse, an adequate idea of which could not be conveyed in a synopsis. It only remains therefore to name some of the leading features of his theme. After reading from the fifteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, beginning at the thirty-fifth verse, he dwelt upon some of the more distinctive characteristics, beliefs and principles of the religion of the Saints, showing it to be the most philosophical system in existence. It explained the relationship of man to God and men to each other, the relations of the sexes and parents to children. The pre-existence of man as a spiritual individuality before taking up his abode on earth in a physical body and his glorious destiny in the eternal world after the resurrection through the atonement of Jesus Christ was brought within human comprehension by the Gospel revealed anew through Joseph Smith, the Prophet. Brother Cannon explained the classification of intelligences, and the various degrees of glory to which they would be assigned after the resurrection, by the operation of the justice of God and the eternal fitness of things. He next treated upon the building of Temples, making special reference to the one nearing completion in Salt Lake City. He exhorted the people to exert themselves by making generous contributions to have the building last named completed by the time decided upon by resolution of the previous Conference. The object of such buildings and the glorious results flowing from their legitimate uses were explained by the speaker, particularly relating to the blessings of the perpetuation of the lives in eternity, after the nature of God's blessing upon Abraham regarding his posterity. The work done in those holy buildings would continue throughout the millennium until the human family as a whole should be connected in the family order up the genealogical stream until it reached to Father Adam. President Cannon concluded by directing attention of the Saints to the great things which God had already done for them, and inspiring them with hope by delineating the incomparable blessings yet in store for the faithful.

PRESIDENT WILFRED WOODRUFF, in the course of a four minutes' address, bore his testimony to the remarks of President Cannon on the important subject of temple building. He pointed to the fact that as the Apostles and disciples of God in former days were ever ready to lay down their lives for the Gospel's sake, so since the day of the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph this people had always been willing to make similar sacrifices in His holy name. There were but few in the world, he said, prepared to obey the fulness of the Gospel, and that was why the Latter-day Saints had been chosen and brought to these valleys from all nations of the earth. It was because the true Gospel had been offered to them and they had received it. We had been called to go upon missions, to warn the wicked of the judgments which were near at hand. The Priesthood belonged to the celestial law, both for time and eternity.

The Lord had made great promises to all His faithful Saints, from the beginning of this work, and if we remained steadfast to the end these would all be fulfilled; and no power on earth or in hell could take from us the blessings which were in store for the righteous. We had everything to encourage us in the good work which we had espoused; but the Lord required much at our hands, and if we united together and carried out faithfully that which He asked of us, we should reap our reward in due season.

PRESIDENT CANNON presented the following names of young men who had been called to take a three months' mission to visit different parts of the Territory in the interest of mutual improvement associations:

George B. Peay, Jun., Provo; Thaddeus H. Cluff, Provo; J. M. Dalton, Springville; Wm. C. Martell, Spanish Fork; John H. Jux, Spanish Fork; Joseph Markham, Spanish Fork; Joseph L. Boyack, Spanish Fork; Joseph Larsen, Pleasant Grove; George Fairbanks, Payson; Henry B. Haynes, of Tooele; Robert G. Shields, of Lake View.

The choir sang the anthem, "By Babylon's Wave."
Benediction by President Willard Woodruff.

Adjourned till the 6th of April, 1893.
JOHN NICHOLSON,
Clerk of Conference.

THE WANDERING JEW.

The legend of the Wandering Jew, of which everyone has heard but of which most persons know so little, is not found either in the apocryphal evangelists or in the Latin fathers of the church, says the Glasgow Mail. According to the best authorities, it originated at Constantinople. There are two versions—the oriental, in which the Jew is called Carthaphilus, and that of Europe, in which he is called Ahasuerus. In the Eastern version he is represented as a porter of Pontius Pilate; in the Western as a cobbler living on the slope of Mount Calvary, by whose door Christ passed bearing his cross to the place of crucifixion.

The oriental legend attributes to him a wife and five children, details omitted in that of the occident. The offense committed was the same in both cases—a brutal refusal to permit the Savior to enter into the residence of the porter or cobbler—a favor asked by himself of the Roman soldiers who were guarding him—accompanied with the suggestion that he had better walk on. With the greatest gentleness in manner, according to the legend, Christ informed the inhuman Jew that as a punishment of his unkindness it would be his fate to walk on till the day of judgment, a sentence he has since been and is believed by many to be still executing.

In the thirteenth century a knowledge of the wanderer began to be diffused by means of the bardic and popular ballads among the common people of Europe, but it was only some 200 or 300 years later that the extraordinary tale of his sufferings became universally known, and his person was made familiar to all by the accounts of those who had seen and conversed with him. No one appears to have met him until late in the sixteenth century, but after that date he was often seen by persons of rank and education in England, Scotland, France, Italy, Hungary, Sweden, Persia, Denmark and other countries. In 1575 two ambassadors met him at Madrid. In 1590 he was seen at Vienna and in 1601 at Lubeck. In 1616 many persons saw and talked with him in Livonia, Gracovia and at Moscow. The German cities were particularly favored with his flying visits, for he is heard of at Rostock, Weimar, Dantzic and Königsberg, at each of which places he was treated with all the hospitality the brief time at his disposal permitted.

His positively last appearance according to the Glasgow paper, was at Brussels in 1774. He would probably have passed by this city with his usual haste had not the burgesses, attracted by the great veneration of his appearance, asked him stop a moment. He at first replied that he could not stop, but, being urged, paused briefly. Being invited into an inn to partake of a pot of Flemish beer, he consented to drink the beer, but positively refused to sit down. However, he delayed long enough to tell of the entire history of his sin and its 1800 years of expiation. From his personal explanation it appears that he crossed seas, rivers, rivulets, deserts, mountains, hills, valleys and plains with the same facility. He passed through fire and water without harm. He had passed among warring hosts in Europe and Asia without deviation from his course, and witnessed many deaths in America and Africa. He had neither house nor land, nor any sort of personal property, and his only financial resources were five cents, which, when spent were constantly renewed in his pocket.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The meetings were held at Pilgrimage, Columbus Co., N. C., Oct. 1st and 2nd, 1892, President Henry S. Tanner presiding. The Priesthood meeting was held at Monroe Long's. Elder J. T. Tanner was chosen secretary of the conference. Reports by the following Elders were given: J. S. Lee, D. O. Willey, Richard Parker, Albert Berry, Henry Wallace, and Jas. Carlisle, all of which were satisfactory.

The general conference commenced at 10:30 a. m., the opening prayer being offered by Pres. J. G. Kimball.

Elder D. S. Darity was the first speaker; he showed very plainly the necessity of first seeking the Kingdom of God. Elder Albert Berry was then called upon and bore his testimony that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. Elder D. O. Willey followed, and explained the necessity of obeying the commandments of God, so that we as a people may receive the blessings promised to the believer. Elder H. S. Phelps declared that the principles taught by the Latter-day Saints were either true or false; if true, no person could get into the kingdom of God by rejecting them; if false, no person could follow them and gain an inheritance with God. Elder W. H. Allen explained that no one had the right to preach unless he had received the Holy Ghost by one having authority to confer it upon him. Elder Dan C. Loveland, a new Elder in the field, simply bore his testimony to the truth, and James Carlisle followed for a few moments, but owing to a spell of chills and fever which he had had he was unable to occupy much time.

In the afternoon Elder Richard Parker, President J. G. Kimball, Elders William Done, David Miles and H. Wallace were the speakers. They explained the fruits of a false, also the fruits of a true teacher, by which the people themselves could judge for themselves who were the true ones; the duty of the Elders, while honoring all men in their belief, striving to show them a better way, which if they rejected it left the Elders clear of responsibility; the persecution of the Elders and the fact that whenever the Gospel was on the earth it had been evilly spoken of; the principle of baptism, without which the Savior has told us it is impossible to get into the kingdom of heaven; and the necessity of the people knowing whether the one that initiates them in the Church is called of God or not.

A Priesthood meeting was held October 1st at 4:30 p. m., at which President J. G. Kimball gave the Elders pointed and valuable instructions as to their labors and duties, and brief reports from some of the branches were submitted and at another Priesthood meeting held October 2nd, at 7:45 p. m., owing to our President being released, Elder D. S. Darity was nominated to the office of President of the South Carolina conference and was heartily sustained. The Elders were then assigned to their different fields of labor.

The general conference continued on October 2nd, and was addressed by Elders J. S. Lee, Joseph Bohavanevald and D. Spencer Wallace in the morning, and by President H. S. Tanner in the afternoon. He delivered a strong address and made farewell remarks, which caused tears to flow from many eyes.

Conference adjourned at 3 p. m.
J. T. TANNER, Sec'y.

MURDEROUS APACHES.

Nothing further has been heard from the little band of Apaches that spread terror throughout the part of Mexico by the murder of the Tomson family at Cliff Ranch a week ago yesterday. The posse of men sent out from here last Tuesday to cut off their retreat through La Tenaja returned Saturday night without finding any definite track of Indians. However, several of the horses stolen have been found and the indications are that instead of leaving the country through the north into the United States they have turned southward again and are still lodged somewhere in the mountains. Yesterday another party left this place under charge of H. J. Judd with the intention of retaining in the mountains a month if necessary. An organization is being effected, with Miles P. Romney at its head, that will extend throughout all the colonies so that men will be prepared to start out at a moment's notice.

Later (Sept. 27, 7 a. m.)—Word has been received that the Indians have been tracked southward, and runners have been sent out for the settlements to be on the look out, and it is hoped they may yet be captured. The report that the Tomson boy was dead is not correct. He is improving nicely.

J. C. BENTLEY.
COLONIA JUAREZ, Mexico, Sept. 2nd, 1892.

It is figured out that if the silver bullion in the treasury at Washington were coined into dollars of the present weight and these placed edge to edge they would make a chain 10,800 miles long. Some of the good people of the East seem to think this a bad state of affairs; but how many nations are there that would not like to be able to say as much? Why not go on with the coining till somebody refuses to take a silver dollar.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, . . . $2.50
Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, . . . 1.50
IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, . . . October 15, 1892.

THE CONFERENCE.

The sixty-third semi-annual Conference of the Church which closed Sunday afternoon was in all respects an interesting, important and edifying occasion. The congregations during the four days were large and attentive, and from the opening hymn on Thursday to the benediction on Sunday, the Spirit of God rested mightily upon both speakers and hearers. Instead of there being a feeling of relaxation or weariness as the Conference drew to a close, a distinctly cumulative character was imparted to the interest felt by the Saints, and all would have been pleased had the meetings been further prolonged.

The remarks of the speakers breathed an earnest gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the blessings so signally manifested in behalf of His people, and were full of kindly encouragement to the Saints in living nearer to the Lord and putting away from them all folly and weaknesses. Nearly all the general authorities of the Church were in attendance, and almost every Stake and ward in Utah and the surrounding states was prominently represented. It will have been noticed from a comparison of the list of authorities as presented at the Saturday meeting and at the Conference last April that death had caused but one vacancy during the six months—President Jacob Gates having been called home to the other side. The chosen leaders of the people, far advanced in years though many of them are, seemed filled with unwonted vigor and energy. Particularly was this the case with President Woodruff, whose presence and instructions were a source of profound joy to the assembled thousands.

The importance of completing the Salt Lake Temple in time for the dedication next April was eloquently urged and the generous assistance of the Saints was presented as one of the duties and pleasures of the hour. Charity was inculcated as a virtue that all may exercise with profit, and fault-finders and backbiters were admonished to turn from their evil ways. The power given to the faithful to withstand the trials and temptations of mortality were forcibly dwelt upon, and all were encouraged to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, lest in the pursuit of worldly advantages they lose sight of the eternal life which ought to be the chief object of every human being. In a word, the counsels and instructions were in every instance timely and important, and being dictated and accompanied by the Spirit of God, we believe they fell upon willing ears. May they sink deep into the hearts of all who love the truth, and serve to unite more firmly and build up more rapidly all who have taken upon themselves the weighty name of Saints of the Most High God!

THE PEOPLE WILL CHOOSE.

Two of the political parties of the Territory—the only two in fact that have any excuse for existing and that have any chance for arousing enthusiasm or hope of achieving success—have now held their conventions, promulgated their platform and declaration of principles and named their candidates for Congress. Utah's political history affords no parallel to the good-natured but tumultuous scenes that characterized both these gatherings, nor to the universal interest which the campaign has already awakened.

For the first time in its history are the people of Utah arrayed in alignment with the national organizations for the purpose of electing a member of the national household; that they are equal to all the requirements of the case and will inform themselves as to all matters political wherein information is needed, goes without the saying. They have already had one general contest under such organizations, but for local officers or y; in that campaign they developed an aptness and sagacity in dealing with the new conditions that must have been a cause of profound admiration with all those who gave the subject such attention as the occasion demanded; and in the contest now at hand we have the fullest confidence that they will not merely equal their previous performance but surpass it. With judgment more nearly matured by reason of experience and with such added information as was needed regarding national and local affairs, who can doubt that a campaign of intelligence preceding a result wherein the best good for the greatest number shall find expression will be the record that shall be completed on the 8th of November?

Both the Democratic and Republican candidates for Congress are fully capable of representing our Territory with credit to themselves and satisfaction to the people. Each is well educated, well posted on the political situation, well informed as to the needs and wishes of the community, a zealous partisan and well equipped by nature with those qualities of mind and person that fit men for lofty stations. Each is comparatively young and both are in the fullest sense representatives of that much respected and altogether prominent element in the western world—Young Utah. Whichever shall be chosen the News will be satisfied with, and it believes it can assure its readers that those who may not be so when the votes are counted will be after the coming Congressman shall have an opportunity to make a record in the halls of national legislation.

It is said that Catholic church members have concluded to present the Pope with a throne of gold next year.

SALT LAKE SHIPPERS, TAKE COURAGE!

A NEW YORK despatch which appears on the first page of this issue under the caption, "A railroad company restrained from granting special rates," is fuller of information and interest than most readers are aware of, and possesses more importance indeed than the general run of newspapers, with all their wisdom, will at first thought give it credit for. A local controversy, now somewhat in abeyance, between the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce and the railroads, gives to the item alluded to a peculiarly lively and absorbing aspect.

According to the despatch an order has been granted restraining a certain railway from giving special rates to foreign shippers on goods to San Francisco, the complainants being New York and New England shippers who felt themselves injured in their business by the fact that the defendant company, in conjunction with other oceanic and railway transportation companies, so manipulated rates that foreign shippers were charged less than one-half as much for the whole distance from England to San Francisco as the complainants were charged from New York to the same destination. The suit was instituted, we are further informed, to confirm the order of the interstate commerce commission filed in 1891.

This latter order, which the decision of Judge Wallace in New York yesterday confirmed, was the result of a motion imported and stubbornly contested hearing before Commissioner Morrison, Schoomaker and Vasey, in June, 1890. The case was brought by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation company, the Philadelphia Board of Trade and the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, the former two against New York and Pennsylvania lines, and the latter against the Southern Pacific. Hon. John D. Korman represented New York, Reed and Pettit represented Philadelphia, and S. W. Sears, Esq., of this city, represented San Francisco. New York's claim was that goods were carried from London and Liverpool via Atlantic ports to San Francisco for about one-third of the rate the local shippers were charged upon similar goods to the same point. Philadelphia's claim was of the same general tenor. San Francisco claimed that tea was carried from Yokohama to all transcontinental common points through the Pacific port at 1½ cents per pound, while the rate from that port to the same points eastward was 3 cents per pound. The grievances of the three cities being nearly analogous, they were all considered at the one hearing.

With much patience and skill the case was fought and defended, and at length, on January 29, 1891, a decision was rendered, the provisions of which were to take effect May 5th following. By this decision the railroads were ordered to cease and desist from charging a higher rate to local shippers than their proportion of the through rates from foreign ports; that is to say, the roads were required not only to cease charging American shippers more than they did the foreigners, or even to charge both home and foreign shippers the same rate; they were even required to give the former the benefit of the pro rata reduction due to them as being nearer the point of destination. The importance of this decision will be manifest to every reader; to the tea-importers of San Francisco alone it meant a difference of about $150,000 per annum.

But the eastern roads, though fairly defeated, concluded to resist the proposed reduction; they ignored the decision, and awaited another contest when the case should be carried into the courts for confirmation. According to the dispatch today, they have been defeated again. Perhaps they will attempt further resistance; they may choose that valorous part which sometimes is worse than discretion, and prolong the contest by carrying the case on appeal to the court of last resort. Should that be done the shippers are still in the enjoyment of the victory they have won; for under the restraining order, the roads may not depart from the terms of the original decision pending whatsoever appeal or delay they may be able to secure. On the other hand they may, pending final acceptance of the adverse decision, resort to that most ready of railroad weapons when defeat seems certain—as a offer to compromise. This, in fact, is what the Southern Pacific actually did do immediately after the commission's order. It agreed to a reduction of one-third in favor of the San Francisco shippers that is, it made a rate of 2 cents instead of 3; a proposition which, while not meeting all that the latter were entitled to under the decision, was still acceptable to them for the time being.

Much might be written as to the conditions which have emboldened the transportation companies to discriminate so unjustly against their home patrons, and as to the dilemma in which this confirmed decision and order places them. Enough has been here cited, however, to show that justice can be obtained when properly sought and resolutely contended for; and to emphasize this fact, so important to local business men: After having once won your case you can compromise on your own terms and upon a basis from which the other parties dare not try to escape for fear of a worse fate.

THE LAST OF THE DALTONS.

AFTER a career of high-handed and widespread crime, the details of which read more like the contents of a lurid-backed novel than a plain recital of actual facts, the Dalton gang of desperadoes has been blotted out. There must have been something abnormal in the birth and conditions antecedent thereto of such men as those who yesterday met the death they have so long merited, and that too while engaged in one of those acts with which their names have become almost synonymous—bank robbery. The story of the one who was mortally wounded is of itself illustrative of the characteristics of the gang—they were "broke," and as the officers were pressing them hard they wanted to get out of the country. Of course with minds so warped with natural and cultivated malformation as theirs, the only plan for raising money that could suggest itself was robbery, and in its accomplishment they underwent the only reformation possible in such cases. It is a good and great thing that no more will peaceable, law-abiding communities live within the shadow of a constant fear because of the proximity of a den of scoundrels, and a very sad and sorrowful thing that several good citizens had to yield up their lives in order that so desirable a consummation might be reached.

DEATH OF TENNYSON.

AT half-past one o'clock this morning the spirit of the poet laureate of England took its flight.

Alfred Tennyson was born in the year 1810, at Somerby, Lincolnshire. The family from which he sprang was a large one, he being the third. The touch of the muse was manifested at a very early age, and in 1827 a little volume entitled "Poems of Two Brothers" made its appearance, bearing, as its name indicates, the joint production of himself and his brother Charles. It attracted but slight attention and soon became entirely obsolete. He went to Trinity College, Cambridge, to complete his education, and there, two years after the appearance of the ill-starred "Brothers," his merits as a poet received recognition through a composition entitled "Timbuctoo" for which he received the Chancellor's medal. This production contained all the characteristics of his peculiar style and was regarded at that time as the precursor of great things. From this point he proceeded on in his rhythmic career, and in 1842 his "Poems" in two volumes were received by the public in a manner bordering on the rapturous and the author was at once installed in the place which he has ever since held—partly by merit but principally by common consent—the laurel-crowned sonneter of the realm.

It were a superfluous task to discuss the merits or demerits of Tennyson's works; his name is made and his fame is secure. Like the great commander Wellington, the canonizing of whom in verse at the latter's death was one of the poet laureate's best efforts, he gained a place from which he could not and cannot be toppled, without reference to special merit and without taking providential intervention into account. It may, however, be said that all of his poetry was not the equal of some parts of it; that he gave birth to rhymes, couplets, quatrains and so on, descriptive of nothing, suggestive of nothing and accomplishing nothing, this in language which it would be the rarest charity to call quaint, so grossly at variance with any class of syntax, phraseology or permissive construction was it; but the next sentence might be one that glowed with a soulful fervor and accomplished in words and measure as graceful, pointed and exact as any that ever fell from the pen of a Macaulay, a Gibbon or the immortal Pope himself. He was truly a wonderful man and his departure from this sphere of action will not be chronicled as an event whose consequence will not be felt.

CARE AND RESOLUTION NEEDED.

REFERRING again to the decision of Judge Wallace in New York, alluded to in yesterday's issue, the public will note with pleasure that the tendency on the part of the courts is to circumscribe to some extent the powers of the railroads in the interest of the producing and consuming classes of the country. This of itself is a good sign; and a few decisions in the same direction will make the transportation lines more anxious to deal fairly with their patrons. Railroad managers where successful are among the brightest and keenest of business men; and they are too shrewd to persist in a course which would lead to litigation where the result is likely to be unfavorable to them. So that it may be accepted as a fact that if the courts generally throughout the country will co-operate with the Interstate Commerce Commission in the making and maintaining of just and equitable rates, the railroads will readily remove many of the causes of complaint which now exist, and there will be fewer instances of this vexatious litigation for the public tribunals to adjust.

These thoughts are timely, for there is to be a very important meeting of railway officials and the shippers of this city within a few days. The object of this meeting, on the part of our citizens at least, is to secure a reduction of rates on merchandise from the East and West coming to this city. The committee will in all probability have to meet with men on the railroad side who have studied all the points thoroughly, and whose business it will be to make the best bargain they can for the roads they represent. These men are experts in all that pertains to the transportation question. Their employment depends on their ability to look for points of advantage for the companies they represent. On the other hand, the members of the local committee have many cares of a business and personal nature to engross their attention, and cannot in the nature of things bring to the subject that thorough concentration which it would seem is necessary in a case of such intricacy and magnitude. The personnel of the committee is above reproach; the members are men of business experience, some of them are large shippers and all are of high character. But while this praise is freely yielded them, the fear remains, for the reasons above cited, that they are in danger of being over-matched in the approaching diplomatic contest. And it is no impugning of their motives or of the sincerity of their intentions to suggest that they have given the opposition, right in the very outset, a considerable advantage over them.

To understand the present status of the controversy between the local shippers and the railroads—including the existence of the committee itself—it is only necessary to recall the formation of the transportation bureau, the employment of a commissioner, and the hearty and zealous encouragement of the Chamber of commerce. The object was to secure certain rights believed to be belonging to, but not yet enjoyed by, the business men of this city; and in pursuance of this object the commissioner was to obtain the necessary facts and evidence upon which to base a complaint and win a favorable decision. How energetically this work has been followed need not be again told; it is known to all who have read the daily papers and is conceded by parties on both sides of the controversy. That the hearing has not yet been had is due to no tardiness or unwillingness of the bureau—the railroads have been the ones to ask the postponement. Now that the matter has reached the phase of a conference such as it is proposed to hold within the next few days, it almost looks as though the local committee, if they expected any practical and adequate results, had committed a serious mistake in asking the withdrawal of the two members through whose endeavors and aggressiveness the contest has been brought to a crisis, the two men whom diligent study and patient research have qualified to carry it still further.—Col. J. W. Donnellan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. B. W. Sears, commissioner of the transportation bureau of the Chamber. How positive the railroad people may have been in their unwillingness to treat with any committee of which these gentlemen were members, we do not know; in view of all that had been done and the preparations that had been made, we do not see that even if their unwillingness had been quite absolute it should have been necessary to meet it with such gracious consideration. The committee was chosen, as we understand it, to secure certain reductions for the shippers of this city and Territory, not to help the railroads out of any difficulties of theirs, real or threatened.

But it is the end, and not so much the means by which the end is reached, that the News, as the friend of this Territory's interests, is contending for. If a friendly conference between a committee of citizens and a committee of railroad men will bring about the desired result—well and good. We earnestly hope it may, for arbitration is preferable to litigation as a means of attaining any object. At the same time it is proper to remind the representatives of the citizens' interest that a strong case is believed to have been made out against the transportation companies, and that its success would have resulted in benefit to the Territory, aggregating, according to some estimates, one and a half to two millions of dollars annually. Bearing these things in mind, the committee ought to prepare themselves to resist any petty or trifling compromise. A great responsibility is laid upon them, a responsibility of which they will only be acquitted when they accept fair and equitable terms and clinch them with safeguards to insure their maintenance.

The News wishes to be the friend of the railroads as well as of the people. The roads have done much for this country, but the country has also done much for the roads. We want to see every unjust barrier to the development of Utah's resources removed, and expect to contend on that line to the end. Meanwhile we trust the Chamber of Commerce will continue its efforts. A new epoch in the history of transportation seems about to begin, and that organization will deserve much credit for hastening it.

WORK OF THE WINDS.

The residents of the north and east benches overlooking this city are sometimes treated to an aerial performance which they would much rather miss. The wind comes rumbling down the mountain sides like a great monster howling for prey and strikes the houses with a force that makes them quiver in every joint. This is not usually continuous, but it comes in gusts which become more and more frequent until they beat a regular tattoo on the sides of the more exposed houses, and when they "put in their best ticks," sleeping is cut of the question. Everything susceptible to high aerostatic pressure is either removed or severely shaken, and the experience is far from pleasant.

The origin of these blasts is something we are not entirely advised of. It is claimed in some quarters that they are brewed in the caverns and depressions of the neighboring mountains, acquiring the necessary rotary motion by emerging from a ravine and being caught up in a hollow, from whence they descend in cyclonic form to the lower level. This is, however, too abstruse a proposition to be discussed here. But it is noticeable that in nearly every case where one of these breezy incursions has been unusually violent we hear shortly afterwards of there having been a destructive windstorm somewhere east to the Rocky Mountains and generally near the Missouri river. Can these local demonstrations be all of such storms that were able to climb over the adjacent heights? If so, we are more fortunate in the physical characteristics of our mountain home than many of us are aware of; for, while the storms we have at times are quite severe and even alarming to the nervous, they amount to no more than a June zephyr in comparison with a full-grown, able-bodied cyclone.

BREVITY IS BEST.

In these days of ponderous political platforms and weighty letters of acceptance, it is refreshing to people who do not attach much importance to such documents anyway, since they consider them little more than a morose generalities and well-concocted declamations to turn to the directness and brevity of earlier times. The simplicity and bluntness of Abraham Lincoln did not detract from his greatness or his popularity, and instead of waiting two or three months after his nomination to the Presidency, his letter of acceptance had been composed and forwarded to the printer within the week after he was chosen. For terseness and as a model that can be followed with profit by future aspirants for high elective honors, the communication deserves to be perpetuated. Here it is:

SPRINGFIELD (Ill.), May 23, 1860.

The Hon. George Ashmun, President of the Republican National Convention: "Sir—I accept the nomination tendered me by the convention over which you presided, and of which I am formally apprised in the letter of yourself and others acting as a committee of the convention for that purpose."

"The declaration of principles and sentiments which accompanies your letter meets my approval, and it shall be my care not to violate or disregard it in any part."

"Imploping the assistance of divine Providence, and with due regard to the views and feelings of all who were represented in the convention, to the rights of all the states and territories and people of the nation, to the inviolability of the Constitution and the perpetual unity, harmony and prosperity of all, I am most happy to co-operate for the practical success of the principles declared by the convention. Your obliged friend and fellow-citizen, ABRAHAM LINCOLN."

PROPER BUT NOT PRACTICABLE.

A LITTLE paper emanating from Dayton, Ohio, under the title of the Young Catholic Messenger and an exponent of the religious views suggested by its name, presents an idea whose patriotic and sentimental purpose will fully make up for what may be wanting in a practical way. Starting out with the announcement that "we are not Americans, we are Columbians," it proceeds to address "the estimable and honorable body, the House of Representatives of the United States of America," stating that as a lasting feature of the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of our western continent by Christopher Columbus, "we suggest that the national Congressional body, the House of Representatives, conjointly with the honorable and estimable legislative bodies of our sister countries on our continent, inaugurate a movement and pass a bill to change the name of the new world from America to Columbia." It is proposed to call all the territory north of the Isthmus North Columbia and all the rest South Columbia, our country to be the "United States of North Columbia."

The Messenger is of the opinion that such change would rectify a "mistake that was born in ignorance and has lived in injustice;" that it would be following the Biblical injunction to render honor to those to whom it is due; that it would receive the thanks and approbation of the world, and that it would shed immortal glory on the Fifty-second Congress for its high sense of justice and truth.

So say we all. There is scarcely a schoolboy that has become familiar with the history of this country and the circumstances of its discovery who has not marveled at the departure from poetic justice performed in giving to Amerigo Vesputi, against all precedent and every instinct of sentiment and justice, the station in literature and history which rightly belonged to the daring navigator whose feet first pressed the soil of San Salvador. So keenly is this wrong felt in a general way that Poeey, the younger and gentler sister of History, has invoked the equities and effected so much of reparation as could be accomplished in song and among the modern classics—hence we have the more melodious, better rounded and more fitting designation, Columbia. But this appellation is confined to its source, and what is wanted to make the situation exact and fitting before the world is what is suggested by the paper quoted—an official change of name through the operation of law.

While all this is granted, it is not likely that anything of the kind will occur. After having worn a name for well-nigh four hundred years, it will be found a difficult if not impracticable task to get rid of it. The world, and more especially the newer portion of it, is not greatly addicted to sentiment for sentiment's sake, and so much of justice as men now accomplish or seek to accomplish is rather of the immediate and concrete than of the distant and abstract quality. Four centuries of a life amid the jostle and worrying and intermingling and strife of a race whose upward and onward tendency is intellectual, and whose advanced intellectuality does but make them more practical and more bent upon the accomplishment of merely temporal things, have well-nigh tempered us down to the condition of letting the dead, whether beautiful or not, rest as it is; at least, no further interruption is likely to occur than such as obtain among writers and songsters. We know more in this age than was ever dreamed of in the philosophy of Columbus or any of his contemporaries; and no better illustration of it can be given than the fact that such a discussion as that suggested by these lines is now going on. Had the nomenclature with which the North American continent was to be clothed been left to us, there would have been no such rank injustice done as was permitted in the era of discovery; we are practical, and master-of-fact, and sometimes sordid, and generally grasping; but we have too much regard for justice between man and man to lay the foundation for any such contention four hundred years hence as is now going on because of the wrong done Christopher Columbus.

TRYING TO OVERTHROW STANLEY.

A NEWSPAPER published in Transvaal thinks "it would be easy for President Kruger to name 1000 burghers who would have gone as far for half the price as did Mr. Stanley. There are, indeed, many Boers who have done as much as Mr. Stanley has done, and more, in the way of African exploration whose names are unknown, and who themselves think nothing of their different tricks. The extraordinary success of Mr. Stanley in obtaining world-wide renown is an excellent proof of what advertising can do." This reminds us of the remarks of two great American writers who are (or were) noted for diluting their philosophy with humor—Josh Billings and Mark Twain. The former said—"Whenever I hear a fellow tellin' about what he'd done if he'd a bin thar, it always occurs to me that that kind seldom git thar;" and the latter thus expressed himself—"I have often looked at Forrest playing 'Hamlet' and thought how much better I could do it myself."

Some people are so constituted that they can't hear another spoken well of without bringing up something derogatory; cannot listen to the recital of any achievement without having seen something more stupendous or praiseworthy, and belittling, or ridiculing everything that comes to their notice.

It is a most unhappy characteristic, one that yields the possessor no profit, but frequently contempt, and creates no good anywhere. Perhaps Stanley's exploits have been somewhat overrated by admirers and adulators; but he accomplished a great deal in the way of letting in light upon the dark continent, and very few there be who, under similar circumstances, would have made the leap into the shadows that he made and remained there till they were lifted. Let us give Stanley his due.

THE IDAHO INFAMY OBLITERATED.

JUSTICE is inherent in the human breast; so are truth and virtue and all the refining and ennobling qualities which go to make up, hold together and perpetuate the glorious right. Sometimes one or another of the qualities named, and occasionally all of them, are not seen, or heard, or felt, and it seems as if they were either dead or benumbed beyond the power of action. In nearly all cases of that kind, it is safe to say that perversion by reason of vicious conduct or bad associations has taken place, and dormancy, growing more profound as the victim gropes further and further into the darkness, is the natural result. We believe that humane instincts are ineradicable so long as reason remains; that those who are impervious to some influence are not to all, and that the soulful spark is in existence somewhere, obscured it may be, but still shining and only awaiting a needful call to blaze forth with all its pristine warmth and vigor.

There are no people anywhere who have had better or more frequent opportunities for realizing the applicability and force of the foregoing lines than have those who constitute the majority of Utah's population and their predecessors. Whether at home or abroad, they have been persistently and harshly, at times inhumanly, opposed because of some portions of their doctrine being at variance with the traditions and beliefs of the opposer. The only resistance that has been interposed as a rule has been that provided through the peaceful and proper channels of the law, and when this was availed not, the situation as it was, not as they may have thought it ought to be, has been accepted in good faith; wherever hardships resulted from such a course, patience and resort to moral suasion have been invoked, and very seldom, indeed, has it been the case that relief did not come sooner or later.

When, through political bigotry and social intolerance, a bill striking the ballot from 5000 hands in Idaho was permitted to pass the legislature and received executive approval, there was an outburst of indignation on the part of those affected and their friends elsewhere; but that was the only thing in the way of opposition of a popular character, all other contending movements being through the courts. It did seem for a time almost too outrageous to be borne, not merely because it inflicted a hardship on nearly one-half the entire population, and threw an intelligent, industrious and thrifty element, but because it was so plainly and squarely in conflict with the great charter of the country, with the unwritten law and the organic law itself.

It was class legislation, and therefore repugnant to the theory of our institutions; it prescribed a test the essence of which was an arraignment of the mere belief which one might entertain apart from his acts, and was therefore against the express terms of the National Constitution; it inaugurated a condition of taxation without representation, thus reviving and putting in force one of the obnoxious measures of George III which brought on the war of Independence. Surely the grounds of objection were numerous enough and sufficiently well founded to justify as much of a struggle against the so-called law as the people were able to make. The test of legal talent was invoked and the matter carried from point to point till it reached the court of last resort, the result being only disappointment in every instance. There was then nothing to do but submit, and either occupy their homes as proscribed subjects or give them up and expatriate themselves by seeking new abodes elsewhere. They chose the former course, and have patiently paid the taxes assessed against them and collected by men whom they had no voice or part in placing in office.

But so unjust a condition was not to last long; the inequalities of the situation were so glaring that they hastened their own extirpation; the sun of full-voiced citizenship is rising in Idaho, and it will soon shine for all classes instead of for a class alone.

Yesterday in Hailey, in the Fourth judicial district of Idaho, Judge Stocklager held the test oath law to be unconstitutional and void. This decision was reached upon an application of one of our people in Cassia county for a writ of mandamus to compel the registrar to enroll him, this the officer having of course refused to do. The Judge held that under existing circumstances the law abridges the right guaranteed by the Constitution; that it is retroactive, ex post facto and therefore a nullity. The man who made the application will therefore be enrolled, and if he so chooses will vote at the coming election. More than this: A similar case is to be brought before the state Supreme Court at once, and assurances are not wanting that Judge Stocklager's view of the case will be sustained, which means that all our people residing within the limits of the "Gem of the Mountains" and who are not otherwise disqualified will once more take upon themselves the robes of full citizenship and exercise the right so dear to every freeman of choosing, or at least participating in the choice of those whom he would have to serve him.

It is a great day for the disfranchised host in Idaho; not great in the sense that a victory has been achieved or a triumph gained over others, but great because their best property so unjustly taken and so long withheld is about to be restored. We congratulate them most heartily upon the exercise of that patience and moderation which, coupled with persistence and energy in a proper cause, are sure precursors of success.

THE BOSTON Herald observes that General Weaver has so far modified his views on the tariff as to be willing to raise the duty on eggs.

AN INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE.

RELIGIOUS bigotry allied with a goodly percentage of soubriety has been forced to a seat in the rear in the World's metropolis. The new Lord Mayor is a Catholic in religion, but before he was elected the question was asked of him if he would sacrifice his religious preferences for the sake of political success, and conform to the rules of the Church of England by attending the established services in the capacity of Lord Mayor. He did not even reflect upon the proposition, but without hesitation answered that he would not; he would, if chosen, appoint a locum tenens to discharge the official duty of attending church for him; at state banquets he was willing to forego his preferences by permitting grace to be said by a member of the Established church, but in his own household he would continue to conform to the customs and rites of his religion. It is to be inferred that this kind of talk and this independence of vocation did not sit very well with those who endeavored to influence the candidate; but he received the necessary number of suffrages just the same.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

It will be remembered that at Minneapolis last June Senator Platt declared President Harrison's renomination to mean the Republican loss of New York, and Senator Teller of Colorado and certain emphatic Californians insisted that "Harrison can't carry one side of the silver west;" also that at Chicago a few weeks later Governor Roswell P. Flower stated the nomination of ex-President Cleveland would imperil Democratic success in New York, and Governor Isaac P. Gray declared that Cleveland would be "beaten by 10,000 in Indiana." All these gentlemen are singing a different tune now. Senators Platt and Teller are working with might and main for President Harrison and say they haven't a doubt that New York, Colorado and the West will do their part toward his triumphant re-election; while Governors Flower and Gray are equally positive that the only element of doubt as to New York and Indiana is as to the size of the majority they will give to the Democratic candidate in November. This is perhaps natural enough; at any rate it is so common a proceeding that it excites no particular comment. Still, it would be a source of satisfaction to the rest of the nation to know just once for sure whether it was the portent of June or the confidence of October that was born of the spirit of accurate divination in these eminent political seersong lights.

GLADSTONE shares with Lord Palmerston the distinction of being prime minister of England when just 80 years of age. These two aged statesmen are the only premiers, at least during the last two hundred years, who were octogenarians in office, though England's list of prime ministers contains many who lived to reach that age.

FREIGHT DISCRIMINATIONS.

FOR twenty years there have been complaints about transportation rates into and out of this Territory. The railroads have been pitched into right merrily by shippers, and many are the murmurs which have been heard at different times, some of them with good reason, and some of them no doubt without any just basis at all. There being invariably two sides to every controversy—otherwise it would not be a controversy—no doubt the railroads have been accused of doing many things of which they were not guilty. When men invest their money in any enterprise it is only just and right that they should reap a fair reward for the investment; and where the enterprise is one of magnitude, no right-feeling person will object if the reward be handsome.

On the other hand there should be some means by which the public interests can be protected. Otherwise there is danger that extortion may be practiced and there be no redress.

Now there can be no doubt that this community is under the impression, the idea is firmly and honestly rooted in their minds, that the transportation companies have been for many years and still are discriminating against them. They believe that the progress of the country is very much retarded by this discrimination. They know that goods are taken from the Missouri river through this city and Territory to Pacific coast points for much less than is charged upon similar goods from the Missouri river to common points in this Territory; and on the other hand that goods are taken from San Francisco to eastern points, in some cases three times the distance, for a less sum than the shippers here are compelled to pay.

This statement of facts is not disputed by the transportation companies themselves. But they undertake to justify their line of action; and they do it upon the ground that water competition compels them to accept lower rates upon business where water routes are a controlling force; this class of business being done at a very small profit. This means, then, that they can make on competitive business any rates to get the traffic, while inland cities like ours must contribute heavily to make up for the business done at the low rates.

Owing to the boldness of the railroads a few years ago in carrying out this doctrine, Congress was compelled to take a hand in the matter, and the result was the Inter-State Commerce law. By the aid of this law some relief has been obtained for some sections of the country where the cases have been intelligently handled and pushed to a final issue. But the complainants are usually handicapped in their efforts by the fact that the railroads are thoroughly organized, their managers are men of more than ordinary shrewdness, and paid large salaries for mastering the whole situation, with the one object of maintaining or increasing the revenues of their respective companies; they are united, too; for while the representatives of the different roads may have a war of words in their association meetings and engage in occasional newspaper fights, they stand firmly together when it comes to deciding upon a tariff and are invariably in for "all the traffic will bear." On the other hand the shippers are not as a general thing organized. Each tries to fight his own battle and secure what personal advantages he can, which generally amounts to very little, and certainly does not extend what the railroads are disposed to yield either as a matter of policy or self-interest. In some aggressive and progressive communities it has been concluded that combination must be met by combination, and the result has been the forming of "traffic associations," "merchants' protective associations," "transportation bureaus," etc., whose object has been to secure the services of men competent to deal with freight matters, and to bring all needful study and skill and concentration upon the subject to insure relief. The effect has been good and the beneficial results will be likely to increase as the different organizations gain experience and confidence.

About a year ago Salt Lake City moved out in this direction by organizing a transportation bureau in connection with, and as a branch of, the Chamber of Commerce. At the outset it was no doubt partly experimental; but the results so far are certainly such as to fulfill the highest expectations of those who were the movers in the work. The Inter-State Commerce Commission has been officially advised of our grievances, has consented to hear the same, and at one time even did our city the honor to appoint the hearing here. That this matter is in the interest of the community is in order that a friendly conference may be held between the railroad officials and the committee appointed by the president of the Chamber of Commerce. The public interest which a short time ago centered in the transportation bureau is accordingly directed for the present to this committee, and to the gentlemen composing it the community now looks for the performance of their full duty. The large and important interests committed temporarily to their charge may not be lightly valued. They are asked to see if unjust discriminations against this city and in favor of the Pacific coast exist as charged, and if so to demand that they be removed; that rates on incoming merchandise be made reasonable; that the products of our mines be carried at fair and just rates; that the dealers of Salt Lake City and of Utah Territory be secured in such distributive rates that they can ship goods, especially our home manufactures, to distant points north and south. Personal animosities should not enter into this controversy, nor should personal favor, present or prospective, be permitted to weaken the general cause. We believe a good work has been inaugurated—one that is in the interest of the whole community. For this reason the committee may depend upon all the encouragement and support it is in the power of this paper to afford.

WHAT a splendid thing it would be for the post-election conclaves of some of the political prophets if all the doubtful states could manage on November 8th to give a majority for both parties!

THE TERRITORIAL FAIR.

No citizen who visited the Territorial Fair grounds yesterday or today (and there beheld the magnificent display that has been collected by the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society can have experienced other than a feeling of enthusiastic pride in the Territory whose products were on exhibition. The showing is by all odds the most pleasing and complete that Utah has ever had; and if this be not praise sufficient, we may quote the words of a discriminating stranger who declares that for general excellence it surpasses a great many and equals the very best he ever saw in the older and more wealthy and populous states of the Union.

Few persons have any idea of the labor and expense involved in collecting, classifying and displaying the various exhibits which when combined afford so much satisfaction to the spectator. The energies of the directors are put to the severest strain, and patience and executive ability in a high degree are constantly called for; while the amount of money required for expenses, prizes, etc., would astonish the frugal folk who most enjoy the spectacle. But the directors make no complaint of the labor imposed upon them, and no citizen begrudges the cash that the Territory has to supply. All is well employed, and few expenditures of a public nature are so abundantly productive of equivalent returns.

To the gentlemen who owe and all have labored so earnestly to make the Fair the success it is, the public owe a debt of gratitude. And we believe we are safe in saying for those gentlemen that in no way can the debt be more acceptably discharged than by the public's visit to and thorough enjoyment of the exhibition. The occasion is one for mutual compliment, gratification and benefit.

WHY NOT BE DECENT.

A LOCAL cotemporary, whose partisan bias too frequently runs away with its sense of propriety, publishes this morning a sub-editorial in which it gloats over what it calls "a merited rap" administered to an Apostle of the Church, and a respected member of the community. It appears that this gentleman, having become engaged in a political discussion with a fellow-passenger on the train between Ogden and Farmington, excused himself when approaching the latter point as he had an appointment to preach there, whereupon his opponent cried out: "All right, good bye; get off; you know a—sight more about preaching than you do about politics."

It is doubtful the superb logic and the graceful courtesy of this little speech which so highly commends it to the taste of our cotemporary referred to. Until reliably informed to the contrary, however, the NEWS must refuse to believe that any respectable citizen, be his politics or his religion what it may, will regard approvingly, or applaud as "a merited rap," a sling that is only effective because it is ungentlemanly and could have no force except as it is profane.

WE ARE PASSING ALONG.

THE onward march of mortality to the brink of eternity is a subject upon which most minds seldom dwell and a few never turn; it is when we look backward and consider that out of those who participated in some great event not so very long ago none or a very few are left, that the force of the situation is impressed upon us most strongly. A short time since the news reached us that the last of the German officers who fought at Waterloo had paid the debt of nature and joined the silent caravan beyond. There are a good many people still on this side of the line who were living when that memorable contest was fought, but of those who participated in it there are not perhaps a score left all told. Napoleon, the victim of the allied powers, has been sleeping in the tomb for the allotted life time of man and more—nearly seventy-one years; Wellington has been dead half a century, and the other notables who figured in that bloody drama have one by one taken their departure at different times, but all are gone. In the light of such reflections, what does it matter that the map of Europe is as it is, that either a few minutes, more delay on the part of Blucher or a little more haste by Grouchy and his force might have made it altogether different?

THE BUSINESS ON HAND.

As already intimated, a number of prominent railroad men are congregated in Salt Lake City at present, the occasion being a conference with the committee of the Chamber of Commerce to settle the differences, if possible, which exist between the shippers and the transportation companies. Whatever the ultimate result may be, the fact that there is to be a conference at all is a hopeful sign; and the fact is emphasized that effective organization is the method by which these or any other grievances on the part of powerful corporations must be investigated and corrected.

Every citizen will be pleased to note the friendly expressions of the railroad men. The public are willing to give them credit for the disposition to meet our business men in the spirit of fairness. Much is hoped from this meeting. Rates ought to be adjusted upon an equitable basis, and the cause for all litigation removed. If this is done the work of the Chamber of Commerce will be accomplished. The resort to law seemed to offer the only means of bringing relief for the people of the city and Territory. Yet when the railroad people asked for time for the purpose of a friendly conference it was perfectly right they should have it, for everybody is in favor of amicable settlements and compromises if they can make.

A broad and disinterested view should be taken of the local situation by all the parties concerned. Temporary self-interest ought not to stand in the way of the public good. Such remarks as that attributed to one shipper at a meeting where the appointment of this committee was being agitated, to the effect that his house didn't desire any big cut in freight for fear of depreciating the value of goods now carried in stock, is in direct antagonism to the object the committee was appointed to accomplish, and cannot be regarded as an expression of the general wish. It is to be hoped there are few who would take so narrow a view of the case; the desire of the community is that such a result shall be reached as will bring the greatest good to the greatest number.

The committee of shippers go into the conference with the utmost confidence of their fellow citizens. It will be their business to see that this confidence is not misplaced. In doing their full duty they may be sure of the heartiest support; in coming short of their full duty they will incur an enviable responsibility. Our railway friends, too, have a task that ought to be pleasant. In so far as they treat our demands with fairness and justice and give us adequate and permanent relief, they will merit and receive the gratitude and favor of one of the best natured communities under the sun.

HE ARISES TO EXPLAIN.

THE NEWS is in receipt of the following letter from O. W. Warner, of Muab, Grand county. It tells its own story, as the reader will observe:

I would like to lay my feelings before the public in regard to the Territorial Fair. It is a known fact that parties who wish to exhibit their produce have to pay for transportation thereof and at the same time pay for space, also to get to see the show; and what does a producer get in return? I know what I received the only time that I exhibited, I got $10 for the largest fruit, that was all. Should I have received anything more? A small piece of paper stating the facts would have been worth more to me, as I make fruit growing a business. Now, I exhibit in Colorado; I take my fruit to the depot in Utah, they pay the express charges, send me a complimentary ticket and give me free admission to the fair grounds. Do we see an army of officers at the fruit shows like we see in Utah, to swallow up all the money that is appropriated and that is received at the door? No; we find there a horticultural society, that manages that part of the fair. We are letting Colorado get the start of us, and why should we? We have the best fruit climate and the best soil. We did at one time have the name of raising fruit, but the people as a mass have quit and let their orchards grow up to weeds and grasses. A man need not expect any better returns from an orchard that has not been cultivated than he would from corn that is growing in weeds and grass. Now, Mr. Editor, if you would leave out of your columns some of the accounts of fights and horse races and fill the space with facts in regard to our fine climate and fruit land and how to produce the best, cultivated that he could grow good for the country. If you do not believe we have a fine fruit country, step over here and see the largest and finest and most to the tree that you ever saw; if not, I will pay your expenses for their trip. Now, let us have a horticultural society."

The greater part of our correspondent's mischievous deals with matters which come within the purview of the board of directors of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society, and it is for them to say and act regarding the complaints made and the suggestions offered. Doubtless they will find in his plain statements something to think of if not to act upon. They will use their own judgment as to that, and we are not presumptuous or arrogant enough to ask or desire that they either favor or oppose. We can offer them space for any reply they may choose to make, but for ourselves can only properly deal with that portion of the letter which reflects upon the business in which the NEWS is engaged.

Brother Warner objects to accounts of prize fighting, horse-racing and such like, and thinks the space should be filled with facts regarding fruit-raising. Perhaps he has never taken into consideration the amount of space which this paper devotes to the subjects objected to, or he would be likely to conclude that so little of it set apart for a matter to which he is so devoted would do him and his business too small an amount of good to be of practical value; if he would then scrutinize further, he might add to his stock of information the additional fact that this paper devotes more space to the subject he prefers than does any other general newspaper in this part of the country. Furthermore, our columns are always open to him or any others interested for suggestions, statements, statistics, complaints and grievances regarding the subject spoken of or any other, provided always such matters be of general interest. We are not personally in the fruit raising business except on a very small scale, nor is this an agricultural, horticultural, pomological, viticultural, arboricultural, stock raising, irrigation, scientific or sporting sheet; it deals with each and all of these in a proper time, and we hope in a proper way. If in the ordinary channels of information sufficient of one or more of such subjects do not appear to satisfy the reader who is interested in that particular direction, the offer is already made, and which will be a standing one—for him to step to the front and fill up any such gaps—ought to be satisfactory.

Besides, every reader should bear in mind that "what is one man's meat is another man's poison," this having as much reference to the mind as to the stomach. Some people would waste through mud ankle deep for half a mile and then pay a dollar for a paper containing an account of a great pugilistic encounter or an unusual horse race, if they couldn't get it on any better terms. Others read the political news first; others again prefer the editorial views; and still others give local happenings their first attention. It is only stating the case fairly to say that those who take an interest only in the material and useful things of life and leave all other subjects in their paper for later consideration if any, constitute a "hopeless minority," albeit a very respectable one. The reason for this is not at all difficult to state or understand—such things do not usually constitute news at all, but are more nearly in the line of lessons or homilies upon homelike subjects which have no reference to the bustle and jostle of the realm of current events.

It would doubtless be a grand achievement for the journalist to exclude from his columns all but what the most refined taste would accept and the most critical mind be unable to condemn, but it cannot be done; no matter how far in that direction we might personally be willing to go, we could not make up a fabric that would be otherwise than a representation of its materials. A newspaper is not of necessity what its editor would like to have it in all respects, but a reflex of the doings of the world on one side and the demands of the community on the other—not of a part of the community, observe you, but all of it. It does not follow that vile and utterly objectionable matter should be given space because there are some few so morbid or depraved in their tastes that they could enjoy it. Not at all; while conceding something for the sake of accommodating variegated demands, the paper which aims at usefulness as well as prosperity will never permit itself to go beyond a reasonable limit in the publication of anything.

The NEWS is not an upholder of prize fighting or any other form of rowdiness whether for money or not; it prints such intelligence when it is furnished because, in the first place, the business has become almost legalized by non-interference and it would have to be given if it were otherwise, the same as the record of any other criminal event; and secondly, as stated, because a certain class demand such news and will have it, and this class is not altogether composed of men of depraved tastes or grovelling occupations either. There are respectable readers who want to know all that is going on and who buy the NEWS to satisfy that want. For our own part we would give space much more cheerfully to items showing how an apple tree in our Moab friend's orchard had yielded fruit so large that it could not be sold by measure at all, or how his crop of potatoes had averaged a bushel to the vine; but we can't do these things because they don't happen, at least they are not reported to us if they do. That is the difference, and we hope he and others will be able to see and appreciate it.

FIRMNESS IS WANTED.

THE meager reports received from the conference now being held in this city between the Chamber of Commerce committee of business men and the representatives of the railroad all point to an amicable adjustment, on some basis or other, of the dispute between the parties as to the prevailing freight tariff. The only hesitation the NEWS feels about expressing full satisfaction with this prospect arises from uncertainty as to the basis referred to—an uncertainty in no way relieved by the air of secrecy in which the proceedings of the conference are shrouded.

Further advice and encouragement to the committee may be unnecessary, perhaps, indeed, unwelcome; if the latter, we may apologize, while asserting that we expect to continue right along; if the former, our vain labor must be set down as due to ignorance of what has been and what is going to be done by the committee. But we do feel, and think the committee ought to feel, that they are clothed with a public and representative character; that for the time being they should sink their own particular interests and if need be their individuality; that they should approach the subject under consideration from the standpoint of the general welfare of the Territory and this its chief city; that temporary makebills or benefits will not satisfy the community; that to the resolute stand taken by the Chamber of Commerce the present conference is due; that if adequate relief be not forthcoming as a result of this arbitration, the same resolute conduct will carry the case to a further and perhaps less harmonious conclusion.

Every member should feel impressed with the magnitude of the citizens' side of the issue and the amount of saving to the community that is directly and indirectly involved. It will not be enough that local distributive rates are made satisfactory; through rates from the great marts east and west must also be adjusted. Nor will it be sufficient that such an arrangement is effected that large shippers—those who are able to do business always on the carload principle—shall be benefited and the small dealers and the public be left in as bad a condition, or even a worse one, than they are today. If the demands our committee make are such as can be defended in justice and fairness, there should be no delicacy in pressing them with determination. The public have waited long and patiently for the present opportunity; and now that victory seems almost within their grasp they are in no mood to relinquish the substance for a shadow or to accept as a favor calling for special gratitude the half of what they believe they are entitled to as a matter of right.

GIVE HIM A BACK SEAT.

IN a brief paragraph in yesterday's NEWS it was noted how industrious and untiring a worker the idol-smasher is. He is truly insatiable, and his range of operations is without limit or bound so far as known. He is now after no less a person than Christopher Columbus, whose niche in the temple of fame has been considered so much lower than his achievements warranted that it was deemed impossible to dislodge him from it unless it was to place him higher. But the iconoclast will not have it that way; he does not work to elevate or advance but to drag down or demolish. We all recall how he has several times even tried his marauding hand on George Washington, with the gratifying effect, however, that so far the Father of his Country occupies the pedestal on which he was placed a century or more ago.

The question now asked by the professional underminer is whether or not Columbus on his third and fourth voyages actually set foot on American soil. It being conceded that he was not within hailing distance—not even in sight—of the western shores on the first and second voyages, of course if the question stated is answered negatively and correctly so, Christopher collapses and the romantic and reverential halo with which succeeding ages have crowned him disappears into thin air like the misty shadows of a dream—and then what?

It seems that the literary wood worms base their conclusions on Columbus on the following statement of (alleged) facts: The navigator went to the southern side of Costa Rica and there for the first time he heard of the great ocean ahead; this caused him to believe that he had reached a point beyond which was the Bay of Bengal, and he was looking for a passage way by which to effect an entrance into it. And upon this stupendous geographical error he rested his conclusion that the globe was not so large as supposed or that since the early estimates an awful shrinking had taken place. He thought he was but a few days' sail from the mouth of the Ganges, when in reality he was just that distance from the American mainland, and that he never got any further west.

Again we ask, oui bono? All such accounts must be more or less indistinct, imaginative and difficult to trace, investing them with a corresponding degree of incredibility. Where a doubt arises regarding the credit of discovery, why should it not, as in a case of law, be construed in favor of the one in possession? Is it not a little singular that some people will believe that an all but continuous chain of history, beginning with the earliest exploits of the man in question and coming on down with but slight interruptions to the present time, is less to be relied on than an adverse conclusion arrived at by some intellectual mischief-maker four centuries later?

It is now only ten days till bands will be playing, flags flying, buildings loaded with decorations, eloquence and general detonating effects rifting the circumambient air, the streets surrendered to gaudy pageants flanked by open-mouthed gamins who wonder what it all means; and it is with this last-named class that the iconoclast would have us—who know what it is for and why—train.

Let us respectfully decline. Let Columbus Day come and go without so much as an unpleasant thought or reflection to mar the general effect—without even a drop of that old fluid so much of which is alleged to have yawned between Columbus' last stopping place and the eastern shore of North America being thrown upon the proceedings. It will be so here in our Mountain Home where we recognize and appreciate the works and merits of pioneering skill and fortitude, and it ought to be so everywhere. Let the idol-wrecker take a back seat for that day at least!

TREASON AGAINST THE STATE.

The unusual spectacle of the chief justice of a commonwealth presiding over a court of oyer and terminer—literally a trial court—was beheld in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, yesterday. The occasion was the charging of the grand jury with reference to the crime of treason, having in special view of course the recent troubles at Homestead. It is held that as treason is the highest crime against the state, it is proper that the highest judicial functionary in the state should hold the court in which the proceedings are initiated and conducted, and hence the extraordinary procedure spoken of.

The announcement that proceedings of this character would be had against the strikers was received with general astonishment not only in Pennsylvania but everywhere else in the country, by nearly every one who was cognizant of the circumstances of that awful battle at Homestead in July last.

Looking at it from one point of view it was considered that indictments for murder and perhaps for arson and willful destruction of property would be inevitable; but that the full measure of the criminal scale was to be invoked was not even thought of. Of course the charge will rest upon the strikers' having usurped the functions of the state in resorting to armed resistance of the Pinkertons, in which case, we take it, the defense will be that the latter were themselves an unauthorized mob seeking by force of arms to overcome those who, until thus menaced, were acting within the pale of the law; in other words, that they were justified in meeting force with force and only employed so much of it on their own part as was necessary to repel the aggressors.

It is a most important case and its progress will be watched with the greatest interest. Such a proceeding has not taken place in our country for so long a time that this circumstance alone invests it with the utmost attractiveness. Whatever the outcome, of course there can be no greater penalty than that provided for murder, the next crime in degree—death.

THE CHOLERA IN A NEW LIGHT.

THE Review of Reviews sometimes takes a philosophical turn in looking over and summing up the situation of mankind; and then it falls in for such matter as yields the most comfort that the status of the case will admit of. In pursuing this usually good and praiseworthy work it has caught up with the idea that the lately threatened visitation of cholera is not only not an unmitigated evil but a positive benefit. It pronounces the Asiatic scourge the "great sanitary inspector of nature. He (so) may be regarded as the author of modern sanitation;" and it decides that the cholera goes "his" rounds, reviving the faith of mankind in measures of public health at times when the zeal of the sanitarian burns low. The claim is made that this dread disease saves more lives than it destroys; that there are few capitals in Europe which are not made cleaner, sweeter, more habitable and healthy because of the threatened visitation, and that we on this side are following suit with commendable celerity, or words to that effect.

The concluding portion of this unlooked-for development of optimism is as follows:

"The cholera is really one of the least deadly of diseases if deadliness is to be computed by the numbers slain. Half a dozen other maldies slay, year in and year out, ten men for one taken by the cholera; but they do it in a quiet, stealthy, strictly non-sensational fashion. Hence they kill, and kill, and kill, and it does no good. But when the cholera comes along it produces the maximum of sensation by the minimum expenditure of life, and does more good in its sensational tour of three months than all the other diseases do in as many years. It is no doubt due to their appreciation of this fact that the journalists exhaust their resources in striking headlines as if to get up a cholera panic. Otherwise their method of dealing with the cholera news would be murderously cruel."

Let us hope that the disposition to credit causes with effect, and uphold the destroyer because he scares us into making our homes less inviting to him, will not extend so far as to make us quit fighting him wherever and whenever he does come, especially when he comes in the form of yellow fever or diphtheria, for instance.

A LITERARY CHAMPION WANTED.

THE United States Investor, whose offices are at 19 Pearl St., Boston, 3-5 Broadway, New York, and 241 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, is out with an offer of $1000 in prizes for essays of not more than one column each respecting American cities and towns, to be received until December 31, 1892. The prizes will be subdivided as follows: For the best essay respecting any American city or town, $500; for the second best, $300; and for the third best, $200. Each essay is to deal with the merits of the city or town chosen as its subject, either as a desirable place of residence; as affording opportunities for investment; as a place of peculiar location; as a place of unusually rapid growth; as a place in which an unusually large amount of capital and labor is employed in any particular industry; as a place possessed of great undeveloped resources, such as water power, coal and iron, etc., which is peculiar because it has long escaped attention; as a place of great historical interest; or as possessing any other claim to unique interest and special distinction. The essay may cover either one or all of the above topics. In awarding the prizes, the judges—who are three distinguished Congressmen, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, Speaker Charles F. Crisp of Georgia and Hon. Julius C. Burrows of Michigan—will consider the literary merits of the essays, as well as the merits of the town or city described. They will not, however, go outside of the essay itself for evidence that the town or city possesses any special interest. Any claims which even a well known city may have to distinction within the intent upon which these prizes are offered must rest wholly upon what is said by the essayist within the space of the column allotted to him. This condition, together with the consideration of literary merit, will give the essayists an even chance.

We give the proposed contest this much publicity because of a conviction that Salt Lake—of all American cities—has the peculiar merits to entitle her essay to the first prize. It is well, too, to remind our panegyrist that this city has an enterprising neighbor on the north—Ogden—who may be depended on not to allow this opportunity for honorable and glowing self-advertisement to escape her.

Andrew Ainslie of Almy, Wyoming, put a loaded gun in his wagon and in passing behind the wagon the gun was discharged, inflicting a wound in the abdomen that proved fatal in a few hours.

RECTIFYING A WRONG.

It will be remembered by readers of current news that several months ago Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge, the eminent orator and member of Congress from Kentucky, was selected to make the oration on the occasion of the dedication of the World's Fair. The selection proved satisfactory all around, and the gentleman naturally considered the matter settled. Subsequently, however, when the question of appropriating $5,000,000 to the Fair was before the House of Representatives, Mr. Breckinridge voted against it, and justified himself in so doing to the satisfaction of his constituents and, as we believe, to that of the majority of his countrymen. However, a certain class of people and newspapers took up the cudgel and upbraided the orator in terms measured and unmeasured, demanding that, as a "matter of good taste," he ought to withdraw from the prominent part assigned to him at the opening ceremonies. Thinking no doubt such feeling was participated in by those nearest the enterprise, the gentleman recently voluntarily offered to withdraw from the programme, an offer which had the effect of bringing the Fair council of administration to a realization of the situation; and to their credit they insisted on the order of exercises remaining unchanged.

On this subject the Chicago News speaks as follows:

The offer to retire and its sequel are lessons in decency and courtesy to those newspapers that have cheerfully demanded Mr. Breckinridge's removal from the programme because he did not choose to vote as they would have had him vote on the question of an appropriation for the World's Fair. The demand was a violation of every canon of hospitality. The orator was invited, not to gain votes for Chicago, but to represent a large part of the nation in a national celebration. To abuse him for his vote on the appropriation question was to blackguard a guest for having the courage and the honesty to adhere to his convictions.

It is just as well for all concerned that Mr. Breckinridge took the course he did; to have done otherwise would have been to cause the shriekers to shriek on and thus his appearance at the dedication would have been under a cloud, while the soundness of his judgment and the correctness of his taste, to say nothing of his manhood, would have been subjects of animadversion. Now, however, the last excuse for carping criticism has been removed and the statesman need have no fear of annoyance from any source.

SEARCHERS OF GENEALOGY.

[The following matter was recently published in the News; but as there were then some errors in it and it is of great importance, it is republished corrected, by general request.]

Editor Deseret News:

As I have been gathering genealogical and historical data of my ancestors and in doing so have visited England, Wales and Ireland, and have been somewhat successful in getting considerable information, and believing that it might be of interest to many of the numerous readers of the Deseret News, I cheerfully submit the following statement:

At the general registration office at Somerset House, London, I learned that the Daltons came over to England from Normandy and that Sir Walter D'Alton moved to Ireland and settled, calling the place Mont Dalton. This was in the twelfth century. From this house sprang the Daltons of Ireland. So I went over to Dublin, got an interview with the assistant register general at the Charlemont House, Rutland square, by the name of Robert E. Matheson, whom I found to be a very genial gentleman. I learned from him the rules of the office relative to searching the records for surnames of friends. A fee of £1 is exacted by the office for six hours' time or the fractional part thereof, the six hours being considered a days' work. As I expected to collect quite a number of names, and knowing that I would have to employ clerks to make extracts, I concluded to get as many as could work judiciously at one time. So I contracted with five competent and experienced lady clerks, agreeing to give them four shillings and sixpence each per day to extract me one hundred and twenty-five names each; and if they extracted more names than the number agreed upon, they should receive pay at the foregoing rate. My clerks averaged me 150 names each per day, which gave me 750, at an expense of £1 office fee and £1 7s. clerk hire, making a total expense per day of £2 7s., an average cost of but 1½ cents per name. I have a fixed understanding with the office to get all my work and any of my friends' work done at the same figures. From the best information I can gain this is much cheaper than in the New England States, where the cost is about six cents per name. All principal surnames are on record in the register general's office found in Ireland. I procured a book treating of two thousand principal surnames which are spelled in different ways in different districts in Ireland. This book proves to be a good guide in hunting given names and locating them in their respective districts, assisting the searching parties to open up a correspondence where it is deemed necessary. Now, if I can be of any use in furnishing information to any friend on the foregoing subject I shall take great pleasure in so doing without money consideration.

About the year 1837 a law was enacted by the British parliament compelling parents to register births, marriages and deaths in their families at the register's office of the district where they reside, under pains and penalties for neglecting to do so. Thus a harvest of names are garnered in the different depositories of the nation, the rule having been in full operation in Ireland since 1864. I was also advised that there was another office in Dublin Castle where the pedigrees of all persons owning estate in Ireland, with their coat of arms, could be obtained, $20.00 being the fee exacted in my case. There are 799 register districts organized in the country, all of which have to report to the register general's office where the facts are again recorded; so it will be seen that a search in the principal office will save a person the trouble of traveling over the country.

I am of the opinion that similar arrangements could be made with the register general's office at Somerset House, London. M. W. DALTON.

WILLARD, Box Elder Co., Utah.
P. 8.—Elders Edward Stevenson of Salt Lake City and T. W. Brewerton of this place have seen the forms of births, marriages and deaths filled up. They are much pleased with the order pursued and take much interest therein. M. W. D.

TRIAL OF IRVINE.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 11.—[Special to the Deseret News.]—The trial of W. H. Irvine for killing Montgomery, May last, at Lincoln, commenced in the district court yesterday morning before Judge Hall. Most of the day was consumed in the matter of objection by the defense to G. M. Lamberton assisting in the prosecution, having been engaged by them in May. Lamberton claimed that no fee had been paid, but the court refused to allow him to enter the case. This is regarded as a victory for Irvine, Lamberton being acquainted with the line of defense proposed and a very able lawyer. Prosecutor Snell is assisted by J. E. McCullough, of Indianapolis. For the defense are Wheadon, Stearns and Strade, Abbot, Sellick and Lane and Billingsley, of Lincoln; Hiatt, Gregg and Critchlow, and Judge Powers, of Salt Lake.

Last night Lamberton applied to the Supreme Court for a mandamus requiring Judge Hall to abandon his position. The judge was served with a summons at 11:30. The case proceeds without Lamberton until the Supreme Court has rendered a decision. Twelve out of sixteen jurors passed for cause yesterday. The final examination was taken up this morning. Irvine was present, looking calm and well.

The defense will be temporary insanity. After the challenges this morning the regular panel was exhausted and the calling of a special sixty-seven panel was directed.

The court adjourned at 12 o'clock until 2 o'clock, when the selection of a jury was resumed. A jury will hardly be obtained today, but likely tomorrow.

THE MESSIAH.

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 10.—Dr. V. T. McGillivuddy of Rept City, S. D., well known as one of the best posted men in the country on Indian matters, is in Omaha, having just come from Pine Ridge agency. Talking today to a reporter, he said:

"I don't wish to pose as an alarmist, but the situation in Pine Ridge is not at all satisfactory just at present, and there is no immediate prospect of improvement. The Indians are sulky and in many ways show a resentful feeling, and, unless something is done to counteract it, there will be a serious danger next spring. The Messiah spirit is not dead, and the whites do not much depend on the statements that the Indians are no longer considering the promises made by Sitting Bull and other medicine men who led the trouble two years ago. While there is no open dancing, there is a quiet discussion of the subject, and the fact that the promise was that the Messiah would come after two springs (which would bring the time in the spring of 1898) is being carefully kept in mind by the Indians.

The government recently paid the Indians at Pine Ridge $85,000, and this was used as an argument that the Great Father feared his red sons, else why should he seek to buy them off? Then the return from Fort Sheridan of Short Bull and Kicking Bear added another disturbing element to the already deeply stirred state of affairs at Pine Ridge. The most significant thing is the fact that there have been communications between the various tribes of a secret nature during the summer. There is a line of communication well established and constantly used between Indian Territory and British America and Indians all along the line understand each other."

DESERET SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

Present on the stand of the general superintendency, George C. Cannon and George Goddard; of the Deseret Sunday School Union board, George Reynolds, Abraham H. Cannon, Thomas C. Griggs, Jos. W. Summerhays, Levi W. Richards, Francis M. Lyman and Heber J. Grant; Stake superintendents and other leading brethren.

Assistant General Superintendent George Goddard called the assembly to order and the choir and congregation sang from the new Deseret Sunday School Union song book "Beautiful Zion Built Above."

Prayer was offered by Elder Wm. Paxman, superintendent of the Juab Stake.

The choir and congregation sang "Sowing," from the new Union song book.

The secretary called the roll of Stakes, showing representatives from nearly all of them.

Assistant General Superintendent George Goddard was very pleased to meet again in the semi-annual conference of Sunday schools, and gratified at so large a congregation notwithstanding the inclement weather. Calling for those in the congregation who were Sunday school workers, the vast majority arose to their feet. This was certainly gratifying, when we think of the vast progress made in the few years past since the first Sunday school was organized. The great labor devolving upon the Deseret Sunday School Union board, the superintendents, teachers and officers, calls for the noblest and best action possible.

The board are continually working to advance the interests of this vast organization, and have lately published a new song book that should be placed in the hands of every school in Zion. It contains selections mostly from home talent and is filled with the principles of the Gospel. The board meet every Wednesday afternoon at 8:30 and transact business connected with the good of the schools of Zion. They are now contemplating the issuing of another Book of Mormon chart and cards and also lessons for the departments each Sunday in the year.

The selection last year of a few Sunday school missionaries to labor in the different Stakes of Zion was but the commencement of a great work, and this year a greater number has been called and will be set apart for that labor. The result of their labors last year in their statements and reports was commendable, and shows an increase in the growth of the work.

Whenever a call is made from the Deseret Sunday School Board it is generally responded to very promptly and when aid is solicited it comes back to the schools in the shape of new publications, etc., and we still desire that this may increase and grow until we shall have all our own publications and lessons for a highly graded system of schools.

Grading has been inaugurated and is progressing very satisfactorily, and where it has been tried for some time has been attended with the most gratifying results, and in the future students will graduate from one class to another by undergoing an examination. We shall be pleased to see all the schools in Zion graded as soon as possible and in such a way that it will be the best advancement of the several schools.

I shall be pleased to see the day and to live when the young of Israel will keep the Word of Wisdom, and when the word shall come from schools that every officer and student is living in harmony with its requirements. Then will be power, then will grow up living exemplars of the Gospel that shall carry with them mighty power with the heavens and wield an influence for good among their fellows.

Elder George Reynolds then gave an epitomized statement of the financial condition of the Union from the receipts of last year from the nickel donation and concert, and stated that the Union board have distributed to every school in all the world one of the Book of Mormon charts and a number of small cards, gratuitously, and should there be any who have not received them, if they will send to the general secretary, the Union will send them.

There are still a number of the charts now for sale by the Union and are of such a character that they would be useful in every family of the Saints.

The nickel fund for this year is coming in very slowly, and each Stake Superintendent should see that it is forthcoming from every school and forwarded to them, that they may take the 20 per cent. decided upon by the Union for Stake Sunday school purposes. There should not be one school in all Israel fail to send in its mite. It is expected that this will be an annual donation to assist the Union in publishing necessary works for the guidance and benefit of the schools. This is what the nickel day is set apart for; this is the object of the donation, to publish works that come back to the schools free of charge.

The choir and congregation sang: "Love at Home."

Elder Thomas C. Griggs said that the Sunday School Guide had been published for the benefit of the schools and to assist them in their work of grading. It suggests many excellent features and if followed would assist in grading schools to a high standard.

The Deseret Sunday School Union is the centre of the operations for Sunday school work, assisting the general superintendency in their great, responsible and important calling. It is continually laboring to devise means for the progress of the schools, but it is so little understood by many officers and workers. Elder Griggs felt to ask the blessings of the Lord on all interested in this great movement and trusted that the schools and officers would be prompt and labor to assist the general board.

Dr. Kari G. Maeser said in substance: My brethren and sisters and fellow laborers in the cause of the youth of Zion, I earnestly solicit an interest in your faith and prayers to assist me in the few remarks that I may make upon "Sunday School Government, Sunday School Management." This heading covers the whole work in the Sunday school, and cannot be disposed of in a few minutes, nor in a course of two or three lectures, and I shall have necessarily to be brief tonight.

It is a labor progressive in its nature among the youth in this great cause, and will require attention and faithful labor on our part. I can only mention a few leading items, that may be to the officers as land marks, as pointers, showing the way, guiding in the direction best to follow, in shaping a good course, that the labors may be more harmonious and more directly to the point. There is a great deal of lost time in the way that many schools are conducted at the present time; but I do not feel capable of laying plans that will meet the requirements of all.

The first requisite or feature commences with the superintendent himself. He cannot give what he does not possess. He should be a man filled with the Spirit of the Lord, for that Spirit leads to the great requisite of order, a most essential thing in schools. The Spirit of the Lord operates best under favorable conditions, and each superintendent should so strive that it will be unto him a continual stream of light and truth. The superintendent should consider the work that is to be performed in his school, the conditions by which he is surrounded, and the teachers at his disposal to assist in that work. These things the superintendent should constantly keep in view. He should mark out a certain course to follow; he should have a map of the whole work in his mind from the beginning to the end of the year; should know what movements to make for the good of the school. He should prepare for each grade, lessons—or course the teachers assisting in this most important labor—suited to the conditions and circumstances of the various grades in the school, so that the students can gradually pass from one grade to another until they reach the Theological department which should be the normal class in the school. It is not meant that a superintendent should necessarily be as experienced a worker as is required for a district school superintendent, but some certain understanding of the work before him is necessary, coupled with humility, the spirit of the Lord and a desire for the welfare of his school. Like the painter, builder, or mechanic, he must have some plan, some defined marks by which to go, but it has been the case that some have no plan at all in their labors in the schools and the result is no progression and a bad school. It is an excellent thing for the superintendent to meet with the teachers often and consult together, interchange ideas and talk over those things that will advance the school, and above all things to keep in harmony and full feeling with the teachers and always have their confidence. This draws inspiration for the school and has its effect. And the teachers and all should look to the superintendent as the leader, the head, and follow him in all things, for the keynote of success in life is to learn to do what we are told, and where this is neglected in the school by the students or teachers there is wanting power to do good.

There is another important thing that should not be neglected—never allow the children to sulk and do nothing; it is the worst thing that could possibly happen. Keep every one engaged in doing something.

There is a great deal depends upon having prompt teachers in the school, and no person should accept such a position unless he or she intends to fulfill the same diligently and always be in their places. He or she should be in their places in time and take proper charge of the class, and so conduct him or herself as to gain the love and confidence of the pupils and then they can do anything with the children. Never ask the children to do something they can not do, but teach them to do what you do ask them. Learn them obedience, the greatest lesson in this life. If the superintendent should call any from the Theological class to preside over other classes, no complaint should ever be heard from the lips of any scholar, but a willingness to respond should be encouraged.

When a teacher comes before his class in the morning he should always breathe a silent prayer to God for blessings and influence that day, that if some one is wayward he will know how to make the correction in such a way as to remedy the evil and still have the love of the pupil. Keep the confidence of the children, and you can accomplish very much indeed. Keep your promises with your pupils, and always do as you say, and when you say yes, let it indeed be yes, and so when you say nay. The children will learn to do the same and we will have growing up in our midst a host of spirits that will be powerful in exerting an influence for the reformation of the human family. If a man will not keep his covenants and promises with his brethren here, it is doubtful whether he will keep them with his Father in heaven.

Example is the great requisite for a good teacher. Its influence is far reaching, and more potent than all the promises and pledges ever made if unkept. Gentleness, kindness, promptness and example are requisites most necessary for the conducting of a good school. By these alone the wayward are brought back, the weak strengthened, and a love instilled into the hearts of the children that is life-lasting. When you have children determined to do wrong and evil, plead before the throne of grace for aid and wisdom to know what to do, and it will never be denied you. Many times I have done all I could to correct evil designing children, but it seemed when I was at a loss to know what to do and I had exerted all my wisdom, I have said: "Father, there goes Johnny, or Joseph, as the case may be. I have tried all my powers to get him to do better, and still he does wrong. Won't you enlighten my mind and teach me now to reach the responsive chord in his heart that will turn him to do right? Oh, Father, bless me with wisdom that I may influence him to turn unto Thee and that he may grow up to be a Giant of strength in Thy kingdom." And many are the testimonies I have received of the Lord answering me, and many are the times when those wayward boys have done better and turned to the Lord and become faithful men. So the Lord will assist you and every one who will take this course, and by so doing you will become saviors on Mount Zion.

I pray God that if I have said anything that will be of a blessing and aid to you that He will sanctify it to your good and the sons and daughters of Zion may become the brightest and purest children of our Father here upon the earth, for they have a mighty work to perform, and the purer and better they are the more powerful will be their influence among the children of men. It is not the homes of wealth or the ease and luxury, but the purity of life and the good we do that count. Paved streets and homes are but the frames, while purity of life and nobility of character are the picture itself."

Apostle F. M. Lyman added his testimony to the excellent remarks of Dr. Maeser, and stated that he desired to see the school thoroughly systematized that their work may be more effectual. He would like to see the day when the schools as a whole could repeat the Articles of Faith, either as individuals or in concert, and would be in favor of extending a prize to the first school that could do it. And in our jubilees there should be greater care in making them what they are intended for, reviews in very dæd, going over in an epitomized form the actual work of the past quarter. Every student in the schools should take part in these gatherings and make them profitable to all, that the review will be a succinct and condensed character of the past work of the quarter. And in all the reviews, songs, recitations and speeches should be from our own works. I am sorry the Union is behind, and trust that next year we will be ahead in finances that the necessary publications may be had for the benefit of the schools.

Apostles Heber J. Grant and Abraham H. Cannon bore testimony to the remarks made by previous speakers and invoked the blessings of the Lord upon the Sunday school cause.

The general secretary then presented the general authorities of the Sunday schools, who were unanimously sustained, as follows:

General Superintendency of Sunday Schools—George Q. Cannon, general superintendent; George Goddard, first assistant; John Morgan, second assistant.

General Officers Deseret Sunday

School Union Board—George Q. Cannon, George Goddard, John Morgan, George Reynolds, Abraham H. Cannon, Thomas C. Griggs, Joseph W. Summerhay, Levi W. Richards, Francis M. Lyman, and Heber J. Grant, as members of board; George Reynolds, general treasurer; John M. Whitaker, general secretary.

The names of the Sunday School Missionaries for the different Stakes of Zion were also presented and received the unanimous vote of the Conference.

Choir and congregation sang: "Our Mountain Home so Dear."

Benediction was pronounced by Apostle John W. Taylor.

JOHN M. WHITAKER,
General Secretary.

NOTES.

IT is amusing to learn from the diary of the late Christopher Columbus that on arising from his bunk on the morning of October 3rd, 1492, he became seriously alarmed lest he had sailed past the new world in the night without seeing it.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S slaghobbers, which have cost the taxpayers of Great Britain the modest little item of $60,000 a year, are to be abolished next spring. The Queen is a good woman as a woman, but as a ruler she comes pretty high at times.

THE newspaper organ of the Utah malcontents for the second time this fall shrieks: "To your tents, O Liberals!"

The warning is good, especially when supplemented: "When you get to your tents, O Liberals, be kind enough to stay there!"

To Elder John Nicholson, clerk of the Conference, the NEWS hereby expresses its thanks for the willing interest he has manifested in furnishing for each day's issue the full and accurate report of the Tabernacle services. The reports have been much appreciated by our readers, whose words of praise render all the more pleasant these acknowledgements to Bro. Nicholson.

THE sweetly alliterative and somewhat breezy name of Bliss Blast has been adopted for a young newspaper venture at Bliss, Logan County, Idaho. It plants itself upon the broad platform of "Independence in all things, neutrality in none; justice to all, malice toward none; goodwill to everybody;" and then it declares itself vehemently for Cleveland and Stevenson and John M. Burke.

THE city of Bremen has lately spent $7,500,000 in making the Weser navigable, and the biggest of steamers can now go right up to the city to discharge and take on cargoes, instead of having to do it at Bremerhaven as formerly. Some of those old-time cities have a deal of life and activity in them, which they draw on now and then without making as much fuss about it as the younger ones.

THE iconoclast is a most insatiable and tireless worker; he has no sooner upset one idol and smashed it that he peers with magnifying glasses into the realms of antiquity in quest of another victim. The fame with which the name of Hannibal has been aureoled because of his splitting Alpine rocks with vinegar and thus making a passage way, is displaced by the discovery that the Latin coccy does not mean vinegar as supposed, but pickaxe.

DEMOCRATIC sticklers for consistency and precedent claim that New York this year ought to go Democratic, as in each national election since 1864 it has alternated between the parties. In 1864 it went Republican, in 1868 Democratic, in 1872 Republican, in 1876 Democratic, in 1880 Republican, in 1884 Democratic and in 1888 Republican. They insist that it should go Democratic in 1892 and not break its record. But they must not overlook the fact that this is a record-breaking year, and that the realm of practical politics is revolutionary, especially where the Australian ballot law is in force. The victories of eight, sixteen and twenty-four years ago were won upon issues and by methods more influential than mere consistency and precedent.

ONE of the freaks eventually to be exhibited at the World's Fair is the "Siamese Twins," two girls named Radica and Duddica, natives, not of Siam, but of Orissa, India. The children, who are now three years old, are united by a bony attachment at the breast, which, however, is flexible to a certain extent, so much so as to allow one child when sleeping to rest on her back while the other lies on her side. A curious circumstance is that if food is given to one the other is satisfied, and both are affected by medicine taken by either. Often when one commences a sentence the other finishes it, indicating a psychical union as well as a physical one. The twins are described as uncommonly intelligent and are creating much interest among the medical profession.

THE IDAHO TEST OATH.

BOISE CITY, Ida., Oct. 7.—A special to the Statesman from Hailey says that Judge Stockslager of the Fourth District court has declared the Idaho test oath unconstitutional.

A case was brought by a Mormon whom a registrar in Cassia county refused to register because he refused to subscribe to the test oath. The constitution provides that no one belonging to an organization that teaches or encourages polygamy shall exercise the franchise. Under this clause the legislature at its last session provided a test oath, one of the features of which is that an elector must swear that he has not since January, 1893, belonged to an organization which teaches or encourages polygamy.

Since the Mormon Church renounced polygamy its members have been qualified to subscribe to constitutional provisions, but they cannot take the Legislative test oath. Judge Stockslager holds that this fact abridges the right guaranteed by the Constitution; that it is retro-active, ex post facto, and therefore void.

A similar case will be heard by the Supreme court next week. If that body rules as Stockslager has done, it will increase the vote some 2500 and introduce a new element into the election, the political complexion of which cannot be accurately determined.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

Utah and Juab Stakes—Saturday and Sunday, October 15th and 16th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, January 14th and 15th, 1893.

Weber Stakes—Sunday and Monday, October 16th and 17th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, January 15th and 16th, 1893.

Box Elder, Tooele and Oneida Stakes—Sunday and Monday, October 23rd and 24th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, January 22nd and 23rd, 1893.

Wasatch Stake—Saturday and Sunday, October 29th and 30th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, January 28th and 29th, 1893.

Cache Stake—Sunday and Monday, October 30th and 31st, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, January 29th and 30th, 1893.

Bear Lake and Summit Stakes—Saturday and Sunday, November 5th and 6th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, February 4th and 5th, 1893.

Emery and Uintah Stakes—Sunday and Monday, November 6th and 7th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, February 5th and 6th, 1893.

Sanpete and Star Valley Stakes—Saturday and Sunday, November 12th and 13th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, February 11th and 12th, 1893.

San Luis, Morgan and Bannock Stakes—Sunday and Monday, November 20th and 21st, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, February 12th and 13th, 1893.

San Juan Stake—Saturday and Sunday, November 19th and 20th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, February 18th and 19th, 1893.

Millard and Sevier Stakes—Sunday and Monday, November 20th and 21st, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, February 19th and 20th, 1893.

Panguitch and Snowflake Stakes—Sunday and Monday, November 27th and 28th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, February 26th and 27th, 1893.

Davis Stake—Saturday and Sunday, December 3rd and 4th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, March 4th and 5th, 1893.

Kanab and St. John Stakes—Sunday and Monday, December 4th and 5th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, March 5th and 6th, 1893.

St. George, Malad and St. Joseph Stakes—Sunday and Monday, December 11th and 12th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, March 12th and 13th, 1893.

Cassia, Párowan and Maricopa Stakes—Sunday and Monday, December 18th and 19th, 1892; and Sunday and Monday, March 19th and 20th, 1893.

Beaver Stake—Saturday and Sunday, December 24th and 25th, 1892; and Saturday and Sunday, March 25th and 26th, 1893.

F. D. RICHARDS,
JOS. F. SMITH.

Mrs. Laura de Force Gordon, a California lady lawyer, will locate at Cheyenne and there practice her profession. She will stump the state for the Democratic ticket, says an exchange.

CATCHING THE OCTOPUS.

"It is no trick to catch them. They are pulled out with hook and line from the deep waters of the sound, just like fish, and are found on the rocky bottoms of the fishing banks," said a Seattle fisherman. "Look at this," continued Nick, raising the slimy mass of legs and pointing to a perfect counterpart of a parrot's black beak. "That's his mouth. Just like a parrot's, only much larger and more powerful. When once those jaws fasten on the bait they never let go until landed on the deck of the boat. No, they seldom give us much trouble. That is part of a Greek fisherman's early education. Experience has taught the men how to handle them safely. The only care necessary is to prevent their fastening their suckers on the sides and bottom of the boat. If by accident of carelessness they succeed in doing so, the octopus is safe, for the suction of those cup-like disks is so great that nothing but the knife can dislodge them, and as they can't be reached they get away. The men know by the weight on the line and its action when an octopus is hooked. Then, by means of poles, the line is kept away from the boat, and, watching a favorable opportunity, with the assistance of boathooks, the fellow is suddenly yanked on board and left to thrash its life away on deck. Of course, the men have learned to keep carefully out of reach of its tentacles.

"On a clear day and in clear weather one can see an octopus at great depths. Their bodies usually lie hidden under shelving rocks, leaving only one or more of these long feelers visible, moving cautiously back and forth. By tying a hook with a white rag and dropping it close by it is fun to watch their movements. They pretend not to see the bait, believing it is living prey. They will advance their feelers inch by inch, and gradually their body, and retreat again, as if to draw on their intended victim. Playing the bait back and forth excites their cupidity, and when satisfied of the result the least makes a spring for the bait that for lightning-like speed beats anything on record. Of course it fastens its razor-like double-back-action beak into the rag and holds on like grim death, allowing itself to be pulled out of the water rather than let go.

USE FOR OLD PAPER.

There is no such thing as waste paper. Hardly a scrap of white paper is ever wasted. Every bit of it that is thrown away is carefully gathered up and finds its way eventually to the mill to be made over.

The note book in your hand may furnish material for the pages on which you will write a letter six months hence, and perhaps a year later you will unknowingly find it incorporated in a summer novel with yellow covers. Thus the stock of paper that supplies the world is used over and over again indefinitely through the medium of the scavengers, the dealers in junk and the factories, which are continually engaged in transforming the discarded material into fresh and clean sheets.

Brown paper, however, is different. Because it is composed of nothing more valuable than straw it is mostly thrown away and never used again. I would not pay you 25 cents for a ton of it. A few years ago old newspapers were worth 4 cents a pound, being made of rags. Now they are manufactured out of wood pulp and straw, and their market value is only a quarter of a cent a pound. Office paper, such as old bills and such scraps, are worth the same price as newspapers, while what we call "office sweepings," composed largely of envelope, are quoted at 15 cents a hundred weight.

HE SAVED WOLSELEY.

Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, who died lately in England, had the good fortune in the Crimean campaign to save the life of Lord Wolseley, at that time a subaltern in the Ninetieth regiment.

Riding back from the trenches to camp, Prince Victor passed a stretcher bearing the body of an officer. He lifted the handkerchief to see who it was, and recognized Wolseley's face. It was covered with blood from a deep wound in the cheek. Thinking he saw a twitch in the face he called a naval doctor (Irving by name) to look at him, much to the indignation of the army surgeon who had "passed" him as dead, and who shouted to him to "leave him dead alone."

Undisturbed by his remarks Prince Victor tried to extract a jagged piece of stone sticking in the wound, and the pain apparently brought Wolseley to, for after a little brandy had been poured down his throat, amid more assertions from the army doctor that he was dead, Wolseley sat up, exclaiming: "No more dead than you are, you fool!"

Strangely enough Dr. Irving was subsequently fleet surgeon to Lord Wolseley in the Ashantee campaign, and told him, remarks the writer of the article, the above facts, which had been till then unknown to him.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Wm. Mellor, Jr., tells the Rock Springs Independent that all the cattlemen in the territory south of that place, with the single exception of the "Two Bar" company, are getting rid of their cattle as fast as possible and buying sheep. Nearly everybody anticipates a hard winter coming, and none wish to be caught in it with cattle.

C. R. Moorehead, a west end brakeman, had a very narrow squeak for his life on Sunday at Green River, Wyoming. He was riding on the pilot of Jack Bliss' engine and in stepping off to turn a switch his heel caught and his foot in some way was twisted, throwing him on his face just off the track and tearing his shoe and stocking from his foot. He escaped with a sprained ankle.

Hank Freel, a notable character of Wyoming, is no more, says the "Frisco Examiner." A nephew has shot him, and, that no anticipatory anguish might befall Hank, was thoughtful enough to shoot him in the back. Then another Freel shot the nephew, and at this point, much to the discomfiture of citizens generally, fatalities ceased with some of the family surviving.

The cut-off which is being built by the Rock Island, connecting Lincoln, Neb., and Jansen, Neb., is rapidly approaching completion. It is forty-five miles long and reduces the distance between Denver and the Missouri river by fifteen miles. When the work is done the Rock Island trains will enter Lincoln over tracks owned by the company itself. At present the Union Pacific is utilized between Beatrice and Lincoln.

Commissioner Heacock, says the San Francisco Chronicle, has remanded a Chinese woman, Lee Sue, whose alders and abettors tried unusually hard to evade the exclusion law. Lee Sue arrived in San Francisco from China on September 18th last, but was denied a landing by the collector. The evidence adduced on her trial on habeas corpus shows how the wily Chinese manage things. She claimed to have left here in October, 1888, being then the wife of Chum Gim, a merchant. Lee Ong Dai, she said, returned with her, but the steamer records disprove that assertion. She had some knowledge of Chinatown and the vicinity of 823 Jackson street, where she claimed to have lived. Her knowledge came from careful schooling by a Chinese member of the steamer's crew. Inspector McKenna discovered her in the act of learning from a chart the locations of houses, factories, streets, people and even doors and windows. The chart was seized and was placed in evidence after having been translated by Rev. Mr. McMaisters. It was very complete with diagrams and names and an important special instruction upon the back. W. H. Makinson, a real estate dealer of 344 Kearney street, swore that he knew the woman and signed her certificate when she left in 1888. She said she lost the certificate. Had it not been for the chart which she was caught studying so carefully, Lee Sue would probably have beaten the law and stayed in the country.

Geo. W. Connors drove in from Pine Flat, Camp Wood district, yesterday, with W. R. Monroe, a young man recently from Colorado, who had a fight with three bears on Saturday last about 4 p. m., and was badly chewed and fractured up, says the Prescott Courier. The wounded man was carried to the office of the Plaza stables, where Dr. Davis dressed his wounds. The right arm was badly chewed and the doctor said "compound fracture of the ulner," as he dressed it. A long claw scratch extended across the stomach, near the short ribs; the right shoulder was badly lacerated, several stitches were taken in an ugly gash right behind in the left shoulder, there were two ugly tooth wounds in the right foot, which was swollen, and the left thigh was badly bitten. The bear had been seen in the vicinity several times. Monroe started out with a dog and a 40-82 Winchester rifle to hunt the bear. When three miles from home he looked up and saw a big cinnamon bear coming down the trail toward him, not thirty feet away. He fired and knocked the bear down. The bear sprang to her feet, when another bullet stretched her dead. Her cub next put in an appearance, and a shot laid it low. Then came a great bear, with savage growls and grinding teeth, rushing on the young hunter, and a shot knocked this bear over only a few feet away. The bear was on his feet in an instant, rushed on Monroe and downed him, and in the rough-and-tumble fight which followed broke Monroe's arm in his teeth and lacerated his shoulder. The gun was knocked from Monroe's hands as he fell. He had a pocket knife in one of his pockets, but could not get at it. The dog fled while the bear was chewing his master up. Monroe called the dog; the dog crept up and smelled the bear and the bear made a dash for the dog. Monroe ran for a tree, grabbed a limb with his unbroken arm, and was pulling himself up when the bear rushed on him again, bit him in the left thigh, grabbed his right foot, and, had not Monroe's shoe come off, the bear would have pulled him down. The bear walked off with the shoe in his mouth, looking back at the same time, laid down a few feet off, behind a pile of rocks and died. Monroe walked three miles over the rocks back to Connor's ranch.

In the Idaho penitentiary, at the present time, is immured, under life sentence, Frank Armstrong, a young man who in 1886, in Alturas county, took the life of Paul Klubert, a well known stockman. Armstrong was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he owes it to one man, who stood out all night against the other eleven jurors, that he was not found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death. Armstrong's is in many respects a remarkably sad case. He left his home in Waterloo, Iowa, in 1884, a mere boy, to seek his fortune in Idaho. He entered the service of Klubert, and in 1885 shot and killed his employer. At that time he was but 17 years of age. He admits the killing but asserts that he was not to blame. Ten days after the tragedy had been committed Armstrong was arrested, and his conviction speedily followed. He had influential relatives in Iowa but, with remarkable spirit, he did not appeal to them either before or after his conviction. It was not until after he had been in prison for three long years that his family learned of his plight, and then they centered their energies upon the work of securing a pardon for the unfortunate young man. About two weeks ago W. B. Robinson and Mrs. C. W. Wright, of Chicago, the uncle and the sister of Armstrong, arrived in Boise. They were provided with credentials from prominent citizens and officials of Iowa and Illinois; and they also had letters from four of the jurors who convicted Armstrong, supplanting with a large petition bearing the signatures of Wood River people, recommending that the young man be pardoned. They visited the penitentiary and the meeting between sister and brother—he in his sombre prison garb—was an affecting scene. But the appeal of Mr. Robinson and Miss Wright to the pardon board was a futile one. They were given little or no encouragement, and yesterday they decided to temporarily withdraw the application for clemency. During the afternoon they sadly called at the penitentiary to bid their unfortunate relative goodbye, and today they will depart for Portland. Three months hence they will again apply for a pardon for Armstrong.—Idaho Daily Statesman.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

PROVO, Utah, Oct. 5.

The Democratic hosts of Utah have conferred their strength in Provo today. The Garden City is the scene of the utmost activity. Delegations to the Democratic Territorial convention commenced arriving last night and continued to do so until 11 o'clock this forenoon. The Provo and other Utah county bands met the visitors at the railway depots and escorted them to headquarters. An immense procession of citizens fell into the ranks and marched with them. Flags were floating in the breeze in all parts of town, and business blocks and private residences were artistically decorated with national bunting, and pictures of Cleveland and Stevenson were observed on all sides.

The Salt Lake delegation was three hours in reaching Provo. A new and untried engine had been brought into use but died on the way. Immediately on their arrival they went into caucus and elected Waldemar Van Cott chairman and A. H. Snow secretary.

Shortly before 12 o'clock the delegations all assembled at the Opera House, the interior of which was beautifully decorated. The stage was simply a mass of flags, pictures and natural flowers. At 12:30 Territorial chairman C. C. Richards called the convention to order and made a stirring and characteristic speech which elicited round after round of applause. S. R. Thurman, of Provo, was chosen temporary chairman, and E. W. Exum, of Ogden, secretary. A committee consisting of one delegate from each county was appointed on permanent organization and order of business. A committee of eleven was appointed on credentials. A committee of seven consisting of C. W. Penrose, chairman, David Evans, W. H. Kling, J. W. Judd, W. K. Reid, J. H. Paul and George Bean was appointed on resolutions and platform.

A motion by Judge Norrell to the effect that all resolutions be referred to this committee without discussion, carried unanimously.

The Opera House, large as it is, was found entirely inadequate to accommodate the many visitors present, and the Democratic leaders were in a quandary as to how to proceed with the transaction of business, when a message was received from President A. O. Smoot, tendering them the use of the Stake Tabernacle for convention purposes. This courtesy was received with applause and the convention adjourned to meet at that place at 3:30.

During the recess, a corps of workmen were engaged in transferring the decorations from the Opera House to the Tabernacle. It is not believed that more than four names will be presented before the convention as nominee for candidate for Delegate to Congress. Notwithstanding the apparently positive declaration of Judge Henderson he is the favorite. The three other names suggested are John T. Caine, J. L. Rawlins and W. H. Kling. Most of the southern delegations, it is said, are pledged to support the latter, as long at least as there is any hope of his winning. It is expected that the convention will have completed its labors by midnight.

The afternoon session of the Democratic Territorial Convention was not called to order until after 4 o'clock and the committee not being ready to report B. H. Roberts was called for and made a lengthy and interesting speech. After he had finished, J. F. Talton of the committee on credentials reported a list of five hundred delegates entitled to seats in the convention. The report was unanimously adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The committee on permanent organization, through its chairman, Hon. John T. Caine, reported as follows:

First—Report of committee on credentials.

Second—Of committee on permanent organization and order of business.

Third—Selection of officers, consisting of a president, five vice presidents, secretary, two assistants, a chaplain and sergeant-at-arms.

Officers—Hon. F. S. Richards of Salt Lake county, president. Vice president—Hon. H. W. Smith of Weber, Hon. Ira N. Hinckley of Millard, Hon. George W. Whitmore of Juab, Hon. Sven Nielson of Sanpete, Hon. Thos. Judd of Washington. Secretary—Noble Warrum, Jr., of Cache. Assistants—Thomas H. Phillips of Davis, O. F. Lyons of Summit. Chaplain—Bishop Charles Adams of Iron. Sergeant-at-Arms—J. F. Collins of Weber.

Fourth—Prayer by the chaplain.

Fifth—Report of committee on resolutions.

Sixth—Nomination of commissioner to locate university lands.

Seventh—Nomination of delegates to Fifty-third Congress.

Eighth—In making nominations it is suggested that the counties be called in alphabetical order for the presentation of candidates, that balloting be made in the same order, and that a majority vote of all the votes cast be necessary for a choice.

Ninth—Miscellaneous.

Adopted unanimously.

PLATFORM AND RESOLUTIONS.

The committee on platform and resolutions, through its chairman Hon. C. W. Penrose, reported as follows:

The Democratic party of Utah in convention assembled hereby adopts the following platform and resolutions.

First—As a duly recognized portion of the great Democratic party of the United States, we accept and endorse the principles set forth in the platform of that party, adopted at the convention held in Chicago, June 21, 1892.

Second—We recognize the government of the United States as supreme in all national affairs, affirm anew our allegiance to its sovereignty, and pledge ourselves to its laws and authority as delegated to it from the people and defined in the national constitution.

Third—We hold that the principle of local self government is fundamental and essential to the system established by the founders of our nation, and therefore that each of the states is, and must be sovereign within its own sphere. We regard paternalism in government as opposed to the genius of our political institutions, and centralization as fatal to the rights of the states and the liberties of the people.

Fourth—We denounce all schemes, whether called "protection," or by any other misnomer, which tax the many for the enrichment of the few, which take from the poor man as much as they draw from the rich; which build up one class at the expense of the others; which foster trusts and feed monopolies, as legalized robbery, disguised fraud and virtual defiance of constitutional inhibitions.

Fifth—We regard home industries as essential to the welfare of the country and their maintenance as conducive to general prosperity. But we do not believe it is within the province of constitutional government to subsidize manufactures at public expense, nor to compel the great masses of agriculturists to pay high prices to a few manufacturers. To cripple commerce and prevent fair competition is to create monopolies and impoverish the majority of the people.

Sixth—We brand as deceptive and shameful the specious sophistry by which uninformed people are led to believe that a high tariff lowers the price of commodities, increases wages and benefits anybody but monopolists, speculators and moneyed corporations. We favor a tariff to provide needful revenue for the government, wise economy in public expenditures, local taxation limited to the necessities of the times and a strict accounting of all public funds.

Seventh—We execrate partisan attempts to control the will of the people, prevent its free expression at the polls or elsewhere, and confront ballots with bayonets. We pronounce them revolutionary and un-American and declare our determination to resist them legally to the very uttermost.

Eighth—We denounce the action of the Republican convention in this Territory in approving the exercise by the governor of the absolute power of veto. The subsequent withdrawal of that approval when its probable effect upon the citizens was appreciated was but a subterfuge too flimsy to cover the real sentiment of the party. (Applause.) Its action in reference to statehood was similar in spirit and a plain indication that Utah need not look to the Republican party for aid in speedy deliverance from territorial vassalage. (Applause.)

Ninth—We condemn the covert charge of the Utah commission, signed by all its members except that grand old veteran Democrat, General McClernand (applause), that polygamous marriages are still being contracted in Utah, and that a large number of people are living in polygamous cohabitation, as false and designed to deceive the American people and hinder the progress of the Territory to the grand position of statehood. While asserting that "it is believed" that this condition of affairs exists in Utah, the commission refrains from stating by whom it is believed, and has persistently refused to name the individuals alleged to have violated the law, or the persons said to have furnished the information. The records of the criminal courts, and the reports of grand juries form a standing refutation of this slander by the Utah commission. (Applause.) We demand the abolition of that body as an unnecessary, despotic and un-American institution. (Applause.)

Tenth—We regard the report of that commission as strictly in line with the whole course of the Republican party towards Utah. (Applause.) The Republican President has officially declared his doubts as to the sincerity of the Mormon people in their announced abandonment of polygamy. The reports of Republican congressional committeemen have emphasized these doubts. Their words have been echoed by the Republican press. The President has also withheld action on the petition for general amnesty presented by Mormon leaders, endorsed and signed by prominent officials and statesmen of both parties. And by voting against home rule, by introducing and then smothering a sham measure, having the appearance without the intention of preparing the way for statehood, and by the obstructive plank in its platform adopted at Minneapolis, the Republican party has exhibited the old-time and continued hostility to the people of this Territory and its determination to hinder as long as possible the attainment of their political rights and liberties. (Applause.)

Eleventh.—We announce our complete confidence in the sincerity of the Mormon people in their abandonment of polygamy, in submission to the laws of the land, and their devotion on party lines, and our full faith in the pledges of their Church leaders that the freedom of the members in political affairs shall not be interfered with by them in any particular. We view the attempts of individuals to make it appear that the Mormon Presidency secretly desire and work for the success of any party as a slander upon the Church officials and a disgrace to those engaged in such despicable trickery. (Applause.)

Twelfth.—We emphatically declare that Utah is fully prepared in every way for the honors and responsibilities of a sovereign state, and pledge ourselves to labor unceasingly until this proud position is achieved. (Applause.)

Thirteenth.—We are united with the great Democratic party in its unswerving friendship to organized labor, and denounce the policy of the Republican party in the interests of capital which results in the reduction of wages, the importation of cheap workmen, the employment of Pinkerton hirelings and the oppression of the laboring classes. (Great applause.)

Fourteenth.—We look upon the demonization of silver by the Republican in 1873 as a crime, (applause) and demand the restoration of the white metal to its proper position as a part of the national currency.

Fifteenth.—Such support as is possible for citizens of a territory to give we will exercise for the election of those stalwart champions of pure Democracy, Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson, as President and Vice-President of the United States; (Great and prolonged applause.) and will advocate and defend, promulgate and sustain the principles of Democratic government and the rights of man until they become triumphant throughout the land and establish justice, liberty and happiness in all the world.

On motion of Colonel S. A. Merritt the platform and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

UNIVERSITY LAND COMMISSIONERS. The roll was then called for the nominating of candidates for the position of commissioners to locate university lands.

Mr. Snow of Box Elder named Hon. William Lowe of that county.

Mr. Paul of Cache county named Thomas Griffith. Davis county named Thomas F. Roueche, which was seconded by Millard.

Rich county named Hon. Aquilla Nebeker.

Snappe county named Hon. William H. Seegmiller and Summit, San Juan and Sevier endorsed him.

Utah county named J. S. Peery.

On call of the counties the ballot stood: Nebeker 20, Roueche 105, Lowe 123, Griffith 344, Peery 374, Seegmiller 483, and the last three gentlemen were declared the nominees.

Shortly after 6 o'clock an ineffectual attempt was made to adjourn until 7:30.

Nominations for delegate to Congress were then declared in order.

H. W. Smith in a brief and well worded speech nominated Judge Henry P. Henderson. A storm of applause and round after round of cheers followed. When quiet was restored Judge Henderson took the floor and begged earnestly for the convention to consider him out of the race entirely. He would not and could not accept that responsible office.

It did not take long to ascertain that the Judge meant what he said and his name was withdrawn.

The roll of counties was then called and no nominations were made until Salt Lake County was reached, when Judge Judd took the platform and in a speech eulogistic and praiseworthy of his nominee named Joseph S. Rawlins of Salt Lake City. This was the occasion for another demonstration. When the call of counties had been completed, the rules were suspended and the nomination made by acclamation.

On motion of Wendell Benson of Salt Lake the chair appointed a committee of three consisting of Hon. John T. Caine, Wendell Benson and Hon. H. P. Henderson to notify Mr. Rawlins of his nomination and escort him to the hall.

On his arrival he was cheered to the echo and made a neat and feeling response.

EX-DELEGATE CAINE ENDORSED.

Hon. H. W. Smith of Weber presented the following resolution which was adopted with three cheers:

The Democratic party of Utah endorses the services of the Hon. John T. Caine in Congress, especially his efforts to procure home rule for the people of this Territory, and for which it extends to him its heartiest appreciation.

Hon. Moses Thatcher delivered an eloquent address on the political issues of the day, after which the convention adjourned sine die.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

On the 24th and 25th inst., the North Carolina Conference was again held. There were present Elder J. G. Kimball, president of the Southern States Mission; Elder P. M. Folkman, president of the North Carolina Conference and traveling Elders James C. Robinson, James Nelson, Wm. C. Winder, N. P. Lee, W. J. Bartholomew, Lemont Taylor, Solon Barber, Kepler Sessions and Willis Johnson. Saturday's meetings were held at Sumner, Guilford county, as were also our council meetings.

Though not large an appreciative audience was present, and strong testimonies were borne to the truth of the message we bear.

The Saints' tables were loaded with delicious viands, and I shall be pardoned for saying, the Elders made them look like a cyclone had struck them.

On Sunday, Saints, Elders and all repaired to the Hogart hall, in Greensboro, a city of nine thousand inhabitants, where another enjoyable day was spent preaching the Gospel to the "town folks." The Elders had held two meetings there previous to this, and had received notices to the effect that a coat of tar and feathers awaited them if they returned. But no such opposition was manifested. Everything went off peaceably and in quietness we returned to Sumner that night, and concluded our business.

Many good and valuable instructions were given, by President Kimball, and his encouraging remarks gave much satisfaction and comfort. The health of the Elders is excellent generally and their ambition to do good is equal to any emergency or hardship. They are enjoying their labors, and feel encouraged with the prospects before them to carry the glad news into new parts. Among the things which cheer them is the weekly arrival of the pioneer paper of the Rockies.

The following new appointments were made:

Elders Robinson and Barber to Pennsylvania and Halifax counties, Va.; Elders Nelson and Bartholomew to Rockingham, Person and Caswell counties, N. C.; Elders Lee and Taylor to Orange, Durham and Wake; Elders Winder and Sessions to Montgomery and Moore, and Elders Folkman and Johnson to Forsyth, Chatham and Randolph.

Mail addressed to any of the Elders at Colfax, Guilford Co., N. C., will be forwarded to them.

WM. C. WINDER,
Clerk of Conference.
COLFAX, GUILFORD CO., N. C., Sept. 30th, 1892.

THE TERRITORIAL FAIR.

The Territorial Fair is now attracting the attention of admiring throngs. Those who were in attendance, having been regaled by some excellent music from the Logan brass band, were called to order at 12:35 today by the President of the Desert Agricultural and Manufacturing Society, C. P. Mason. With a few introductory words he presented Rev. Lane, who offered an appropriate and feeling prayer, at the close of which Governor Thomas was introduced, who spoke as follows:

In accordance with the custom which has always existed in this Territory, I have been kindly invited by the president and board of directors of the Desert Agricultural and Manufacturing Society to say a few words to you at the opening of this fair.

They have this much to congratulate themselves upon at this time: That this is probably the best display ever made in the Territory. They ask you to go through this building and through the grounds and examine every exhibit which has been made. The grounds are not sufficient to hold the exhibits which could be made at this time. Hundreds of animals have had to be turned away on this occasion.

The exhibit made by the stock breeders is the best show which can be seen in the West. The board of directors ask you to go and examine everything, so that you may know how the Territory in which you live is growing and prospering.

The Fair takes the place of the schools. It is a place where you can see and learn, a place where you can see what can be done by labor and perseverance, a place where you can learn the lesson that everything is possible to those who try to accomplish good ends.

I believe this fair is going to be recommended as the best which has ever been held in this Territory. I believe it tells the story in better words than any person can tell it.

And now, in behalf of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society, I congratulate you on the exhibits made.

President Mason then said: In accordance with the custom, I now take pleasure in announcing to you the opening of the twentieth exhibition of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society. The board of directors extends its most hearty welcome to all visitors and exhibitors.

The Logan band played another selection.

More music followed, when Mr. Mason formally declared the Exposition open.

It would be an impossibility to give even an idea of the general appearance of the building and grounds, either as they are or will be. The exhibits were not all in their places at the opening. Everything, however, indicated that a great and beautiful exhibit of the Territory's resources in all departments is going to be recorded. In the mechanical and art departments workmen were quite busy getting things into shape and their labors may not be completed before late if at all this afternoon; while live stock was going in long after the opening. The probabilities are, however, that everything will be in place by this evening and that those who attend tomorrow will witness a grand exhibition.

The Fair's Second Day.

The attendance on the Exposition yesterday afternoon gradually increased, as did also the exhibits, until the show and those who visited were alike subjects of admiration and comment. The chief feature of the afternoon was the practical life-saving service. A tower five stories high had been erected on the grounds for the occasion. Captain W. P. Hooper, the drill master of the corps, put his men through all the evolutions in good style. The corps consists of Captain Vale, Captain Fooley, Mr. Morton, Fred. Fitzgerald, Ed. Fitzgerald, E. J. Randolph, Frank Butt and Master Hooper, the twelve-year-old son of the captain. The men were dressed in black woolen tights, similar to bathing costumes, and they crouched closely to the figures of the warriors. Some of the men ran up the poles gracefully, while others were a little shaky at times, and no wonder, for when a person gets up five stories and trusts himself to a pole fastened with a slender piece of bent iron and the lower end moves around with every shift of the centre of gravity and nothing but the bare ground below, it is enough to make anybody a little nervous.

The climbing from the ground to the top of the tower by singles and doubles and swinging from window to window was cleverly done, and the whole performance was quite satisfactory.

It was only ten o'clock this morning when people began to crowd into the Fair from every direction, and at eleven the grounds and building were so full that it seemed almost impossible for any more to get in, and people were coming thick and fast. This is children's day and the children are multitudinous.

The exhibits were largely increased during the latter part of yesterday, but there are a few who are still behind time. Everything will not be in running order until tomorrow morning.

There are many exhibits which are attracting attention from all visitors. One of the most conspicuous of these is one of our home industries, the product of the Provo Woolen mills. They have the finest display of all kinds of cloth, blankets and flannels, and every thing else in their line. The Deseret Woolen mills also have a very fine display of cloths and all kinds of woolen goods, their flannel department on the second floor being excellent. Buckle & Son, the tailors, have a good line of cloths and gents' suitings on exhibition.

Beth Jones & Co.'s Kayaville creamery is another very important feature of the Fair, and is attracting general attention. It has the finest display of butter that has ever been made in the Territory. L. O. Porter is another very fine exhibitor of butter.

J. I. Gallacher has a very nice display of trunks, valises and all kinds of satchels. Hulbert Bros. also have a fine exhibit in the same line.

H. Denhalter & Sons have an excellent exhibit of all kinds of effervescent waters. This company has been awarded the gold medal at two preceding fairs. Hewlett Bros. also have a splendid display in this line. They have over thirty-five varieties of soda water.

The James McDonald Candy Co. has a large and most attractive assortment of sweets and candies.

G. F. Culmer & Bros. have a fine display of show cases.

Wm. C. Louch & Co. have a most brilliant exhibit of shoes, which are placed in a very artistic manner. The $1000 piano which they propose to give to their patrons on Friday next at 4 p.m., is also on exhibition.

The Salt Lake Music Co. is well displayed with pianos and organs.

Callaway, Hoock & Co.'s exhibition of glassware is excellent.

The educational department is doubtless one of the best at the fair. It has a much larger space devoted to it than it had last year and is arranged better than ever before.

The horse and cattle show is one of the best and largest ever made and every exhibition in this department deserves credit.

The poultry show is large and excellent.

The dog department is particularly noticeable this year.

During the evening the task of awarding the premium to the prettiest girl at the fair will be performed, and the result announced at 10 o'clock.

The drilling contest took place at 2 p.m. The University boys were the only company that showed up. At the time appointed they were on hand and immediately began to drill. They went through a series of exercises which lasted about ten minutes. They really deserve the greatest credit for their performance, which was given in a beautiful manner and would doubtless have taken the prize if every other company in Utah had been there to contest.

At half-past three o'clock this afternoon the balloon ascension was made by Prof. John Leonard. It was a thrilling success and was witnessed by thousands of people who thronged the Fair at that time. When the professor got up about 1000 feet the air he let go of the balloon and descended in his parachute amidst tumultuous applause, indicating that the people were pleased.

The third day of the Territorial Fair proved one of the most interesting, many of the department which yesterday and on Tuesday were but partially filled, being now splendidly rounded out. The opening of Conference, of course, drew away many who would otherwise have been present, but before the hour of service and during the noon recess, the grounds were well filled and the display met with universal admiration.

The military company that appeared for the competitive drill yesterday was composed of thirty-nine men, professed to be from the battalion of the Utah University; captain, E. T. Hill; first lieutenant, R. C. Mayer; second lieutenant, F. F. Craft. The judges were Lieutenants Brown, Irvin and Sorley, of the Sixteenth Infantry, and they applauded the drill as a very excellent one. The prize was a diploma and $15 in cash.

The calisthenic drill competition turned out to be only an exhibition, the one entry being about a hundred little folks from the Provo public schools. The exhibition was a pleasing one and the judge awarded them the prize, a diploma and $15.

There were but two entries in the contest for the best school chorus, a chorus from the Provo public schools and a choir from the Latter-day Saints' College of this city. The little folks from Provo sang two selections, "The Mountain Home" and "The Farmer Boy." The college choir sang "Praise Ye the Father." There was some difference in the ages of the contestants, those of the Provo schools being much younger. This was taken into account by the judges in making their decision, and the prize and diploma were awarded to the Provo choir. Professors Stephens, Lewis and Reesley were the judges.

The singing contest for little girls was a most interesting feature yesterday afternoon. There were fifteen contestants, Misses Laura Harris, Hattie Whitney, Sybil Foote, Laura Brown, Maude Pendleton, Bessie Bowring, Beale Bean, Alice Bean, Florence Jenkinson, Mable Guthrie, Mable Foote, Edna Swenson, Katie Riddle, Ethel Connelly and Mina Jensen. The prize was a magnificent big doll presented by the Utah Book and Stationery Company, and was awarded to Laura Harris, daughter of Coroner Harris. The judges were Professors Stephens, Lewis and Bessley.

There was but one entry for the declamatory contest. J. S. Robinson recited Anthony's oration over the body of Julius Caesar, and was loudly applauded.

The pantomime contest was a good one. There were two entries, Joseph O. Crenshaw, "Courtship Under Difficulties" and Mr. Paul, "The Preacher and the Wasps." Both acted their parts well and received great applause.

The spelling contest was not decided. Those who contested were Fred Rossiter, Cecil Matthews, William W. Edmunds, F. A. Wegeland and J. F. Graves. Each one was compelled to write twenty-five words which were taken from Henderson's Test Words in Spelling. Prof. Whiting managed the affair; the winner of the prize will be announced later.

The mental arithmetic class followed the singing. There were five entries, and the questions given were pretty severe. The contest was worked the problems on paper, but did the figuring mentally. The papers were submitted to the judges.

Last night was the chance for the prettiest girl, and the attendance of the fair sex was quite large. Messrs. Mason, Bamberger, Empey, Rowe and Farr were appointed judges on this delicate occasion, and kept themselves busy all the evening searching for the belle. Shortly after 10 o'clock they came from the directors' room and announced that Miss May Preston, daughter of Bishop Preston, had been selected as the beauty of the Fair.

The attendance at the Fair last evening was very large and a count of the tickets sold showed that a little more than 6000 persons had been at the Exposition during the day.

The balloon ascension at 4:30 o'clock was an unqualified success. Professor Leonard has proven himself an excellent aeronaut, and for once the balloon ascension has been as advertised.

The Salt Lake colored quartette, composed of W. B. Gates, James Thompson, A. E. Shavers and Wm. Armstrong, gave a very pleasing performance. There was a special prize of $60 offered for the best colored quartette, but as there was only one quartette entered the performance was more in the nature of an exhibition than a competition. The following pieces were rendered: "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia," "Massa Is in the Cold, Cold Ground," "Old Kentucky," and as encores the pieces entitled, "The Jews Crucified Jesus," "Live Hallelujah," and a medley "Kate Was My Sweetheart."

The Pomper Life Saving Crew's exhibition of rescuing children from the apparently burning tower was very clever and elicited much applause.

The public wedding which took place this afternoon at 2:30 was the main feature of the day at the Territorial Fair and drew the largest crowd that has been in attendance since the opening. The whole building up stairs and down was a total jam.

Elof Nelson and Ellen Drake, both of West Jordan, were the contracting parties on the occasion. The ceremony was performed by Justice George E. Blair.

After the happy couple were united in the holy bonds of matrimony they, with their parents and near relatives, marched to music from the Logan brass band to the dining room and partook of an elegant lunch.

Following is a list of the presents given to the couple:

Bedroom set, by the D. A. and M. Society; pair of lady's shoes, Barnes & Lewis; half dozen lunch plates, Little & Roundy; pair of slippers, by Hirschman. Other gifts and the names of the donors could not be obtained in time for this issue.

Immediately after the public wedding the drawing of Spencer & Lynch took place. The person who holds a ticket 12,691 will be rewarded with a $1,000 plane from that company.

The grand attraction at the Fair this afternoon was the exhibition of "Utah's best crop," gleaned for the occasion of the baby show. For the prizes there were 120 entries. The rule was that the prettiest babies were to be picked out in the main building, but when the time came there were so many competing that it was decided to go to the grand stand; and even then there was hardly room to accommodate the rush. At four o'clock, when the reporter left the building, he had been unable to get the names of the winners, there being so many anxious mothers waiting to receive the news, each of course expecting to be the favored one. This naturally added to the responsibility of the judges, who, after looking themselves up for considering their position, decided it was not safer for them to announce publicly who had received the prizes. The latter are as follows:

Best looking babies between 6 and 12 months old, four prizes—$20, $15, $10 and $5.

Best looking baby under 6 months, gold medal.

Best looking baby under one year, baby buggy given by Sorenson & Nelson.

The twentieth annual exhibit by the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society of Utah closed on Saturday night. The directors labored long and hard to make it a success, and how well they succeeded the public can attest. The Fair was visited by 25,000 people and the receipts amount to $7700.

THE BABY SHOW

during the closing hours was indeed a beautiful one. There were 120 entries and every proud mother expected that her darling would win a prize. The judges, after looking carefully over this garden of infantile roses, finally selected thirty from among them. Then followed the awarding of prizes which resulted as follows:

The special prize of a fine baby carriage, presented by Sorenson & Nelson, was awarded to the 8-month-old girl baby of Mrs. Hauck, of Salt Lake City. The first prize of $20 to the 10-month-old girl baby of Mrs. J. J. Smith, of Ogden. The second prize of $15 was won by the girl baby of Mrs. M. E. Jones, of Salt Lake. The third prize of $10 by the boy baby of Mrs. R. F. Thornburg, of Salt Lake. The fourth prize of $5 was carried off by the 6-month-old baby boy of Mrs. W. M. Anderson, of Harville.

The special prize of a gold medal for the two finest babies under six months old was won by the twin babies, a boy and a girl, of Mrs. Syphus, of Salt Lake City. The prize for the best Indian baby was won by the baby boy of Matilda Graft, of Fort Douglas.

THE BALLOON ASCENSION which occurred at 9 o'clock was in every way successful. When hundreds of feet above terra firma Prof. Leonard performed a number of clever tricks which with the pyrotechnical display of fireworks from the balloon won the applause of the multitude.

LIFE SAVING PERFORMANCE.

The exhibition by the Pomper Life Saving crew like all which preceded it was interesting in the extreme.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday night, President Lombour in the chair. The members present were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Karriek, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Evans, Simondt, Beardsley, Wantland, Hele. The minutes of Friday night's session were read and approved, after which were read and referred as follows:

PETITIONS

H. J. Bacon and others recommended the appointment of F. J. Greece as meat inspector. Committee on sanitation.

W. S. Crismon and others asked that Current street be improved. Committee on streets.

H. J. Heath and others asked the city to either purchase or abandon the ground now used as a sewage farm. Committee on sewerage.

H. J. Meyer and others complained of the dangerous condition of Tenth South street where it was now crossed by the railroad. Committee on streets.

Charles Sansome asked that he be relieved from paying taxes on $2000 worth of mortgaged property. Committee on claims.

Lyman S. Crandall asked to be appointed inspector on the board of health. Committee on sanitation.

A. E. Hyde asked to be allowed to put a shingle roof on a two-story brick addition to his residence within the fire limits. Committee on municipal laws.

REVOCATION OF LIQUOR LICENSES.

The following from the mayor was read and referred to the committee on license:

Gentlemen—On Sept. 13, Louis Holbo, B. F. Whitmore and W. J. Shields were granted retail liquor licenses; each of these parties under their previous licenses habitually violated the ordinance of the city prohibiting the Sale of liquor on Sunday. For this reason I have withheld my approval of their bonds. I call the attention of the Council to the matter and request that in view of the facts in the premises, the Council reconsider their action in granting such licenses.

ANOTHER COLONIZATION SCHEME.

Superintendent of Waterworks Ryan recommended that a force of men be engaged at once to clean out the water courses in Parley's Canyon. Committee on waterworks.

MOBE MONEY FOR "GALLY."

Gallezz sent in his report for the month of September. His share of collections amounted to $335 which was appropriated to his credit.

THE KESLER CASE.

The city attorney reporting on the resolution of Councilman Heise calling for the removal of Fred Kesler as police justice and the appointment of W. W. Gee as his successor, stated that the measure was perfectly legal. The Council had the full right to remove without charges.

Moran moved that it be received and filed.

Karrick moved to amend by adopting the report.

Heise moved to lay on the table indefinitely. Lost.

On the motion of Rich the matter went over until the transaction of miscellaneous business should be reached.

NEW CITY PRISON.

The committee on prisons reported recommending the erection of a new city jail at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

Moran moved to receive the report and place it on file. He didn't want such a report adopted.

Horn thought that Moran insinuated that the committee had not done its duty.

Moran explained that he objected to the report simply because it gave the committee too much power.

Wantland said he was in favor of building a city jail but the report was indefinite.

Lawson said at least $50,000 would be required to erect a suitable structure.

Horn explained that the committee had consulted with a number of prominent architects and were assured that a modern building entirely adequate for a city of 100,000 inhabitants could be erected for $25,000. That included a hospital ward and cooking department.

PARK COMMISSIONERS.

The special committee on public parks reported recommending the appointment of a commission of five citizens to take charge of and improve the parks. The period of office recommended is four years.

The city attorney was instructed to draw up an ordinance covering the recommendations.

KESLER OFFICIALLY REMOVED.

The resolution of Mr. Heise in the Kesler case now came up again.

Moran moved that the name of W. W. Gee be stricken off the resolution and the name of C. E. Hall be inserted.

Heise declared that a resolution could not be amended. The chair held that it could.

Moran's motion was then defeated on a vote of 11 to 8.

Moran then sprang the point that the council was infringing on the prerogatives of the Mayor. He thought that the matter should be referred to that official. He was willing to abide by his decision.

Heise moved that the previous question be put. It carried on the following vote:

Ayes—Beardsley, Folland, Hardy, Heise, Karrick, Lawson, Looftbours, Rich, Simond, Wantland—10.

Noes—Bell, Evans, Moran—3.

Excused—Horn—1.

THE MORGAN ROAD PROPOSITION.

The Mayor's veto message on the Morgan resolution came up and caused a considerable amount of desultory discussion, after which it was defeated on the following vote:

Noes—Beardsley, Bell, Evans, Hardy, Heise, Horn, Karrick, Looftbours, Moran, Simond—10.

Ayes—Folland, Lawson, Rich, Wantland—4.

KELLY SUCCEEDS EWING.

Evans moved that the appointment of a successor to ex-Councilman Ewing from the Second precinct be proceeded with. Carried.

He nominated Albert H. Kelly. The gentleman was elected on the following vote:

Ayes—Beardsley, Bell, Evans, Folland, Heise, Horn, Lawson, Looftbours, Moran, Rich, Simond, Wantland—12.

Noes—Hardy—1.

Excused—Karrick—1.

THAT FIRE PROOF SCHEME.

Monheim, Bird & Proudfoot represented that the additional cost of making the city and county building fire proof would be as follows:

Basement, with brick floor, arches and iron beams.....	$11,895 00
Third floor, with brick arches and iron beams.....	14,106 00
Third floor, with terra cotta floor, arches, iron beams.....	19,096 00
The building, fireproof, complete with iron beams, brick floor, arches and terra cotta roof and ceiling construction.....	54,000 00
The building, fireproof, complete with terra cotta arches in the first, second and third floors, roof and ceiling; terra cotta construction; brick floor, arches in the basement, all iron beams.....	74,000 00

GREAT SALT LAKE AND HOT SPRINGS.

The resolution granting a franchise to the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs railway again came up. It was amended so as to allow the road to commence from the middle of Third West, between South Temple and North Temple, a single track to run to Fifth North and a double track from that point on to Ninth North street, together with two single tracks, switches or turnouts in the form of a "Y" easterly from said track across the sidewalk of said Third West street, to the premises described as the north one-half of lot 4 in block 84, plat A, Salt Lake City survey. Also a single or double track, beginning at the south boundary line of Oak street of Folsom's addition, at a point opposite an alley between lots 1 and 88 of block 17 of said addition; thence northerly across said Oak street and along the alleyway last aforesaid, and across Chestnut street, and along the alleyway running through block 16 of said addition to Cleveland avenue; thence northerly along Cleveland avenue and the County road 1320 feet to a point on the western boundary line of said County road.

Other minor amendments were made, when Le Grand Young addressed the council in behalf of the citizens who protested against the granting of the franchise. He represented between 300 and 400. He thought the council should listen to the demands of the people in that section of the city. He said the franchise would be fought in the courts if passed.

Replying, Mr. Bamberger made a brief statement, saying they had plenty of ground for depot buildings. They had a lot 10 by 10, another strip and an option on the entire Jeunings property.

The resolution then passed. Ayes—Beardsley, Heise, Horn, Karrick, Lawson, Looftbours, Moran, Simond, Wantland. Noes—Bell, Evans, Folland, Hardy, Rich. Folland then changed his vote to aye.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were then voted:

Mount & Griffin.....	$ 3,718 90
Houlahan & Griffith.....	48 96
H. M. Willard.....	79 03
J. H. Bowman.....	11,448 33
Monheim, Bird & Proudfoot.....	231 62
Wm. Harkins.....	14 53
C. M. Dall.....	9 50
Pacific Packing Co. of Utah.....	5,663 18
Petersen & Brown.....	3 90
Richards Bros.....	550 70
Samuel Gallezz.....	665 00
T. C. Armstrong.....	90 50
Utah & Montana Machinery Co.....	1 75
Wastch Bros.....	430 00
Wolstenholme & Morris.....	4 75
Wolstenholme & Morris.....	275 45
E. D. Hoge.....	26 40
E. D. Hoge.....	59 00
W. C. Parry & Co.....	11 45
Mountain Ice & Cold Storage Co.....	25 45
Intermountain Electric Co.....	1 60
F. W. Dennis.....	35 00
J. O. Murphy & Co.....	115 00
Tribeau Job Printing Co.....	19 50
Herald Publishing Co.....	86 80
Joseph Lippman.....	182 00
Total.....	$ 23,065 68

An adjourned session of the City (council) met in an adjourned session last night. The following members were present: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Karrick, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Simond, Beardsley, Wantland, Heise, Kelly, Moran, Evans—14.

Absent—None.

KELLY QUALIFIED.

A communication was read from the recorder announcing the qualification of Albert H. Kelly as councilman from the Second precinct, vice S. C. Ewing, resigned. Received and filed.

CORPORATION DIFFICULTIES.

President Looftbours announced that the meeting had been specially called to consider and if possible adjudicate the differences existing between the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone and the Street Car companies.

Representatives of all the companies were present attended by their legal advisers. They listened carefully to the reading of a number of lengthy documents by the recorder which had been presented to the City Council at different times during the last few months, and which have been referred to frequently in the accounts of the council proceedings as published in these columns.

On motion of Councilman Horn the representatives of the rival interests were allowed to speak.

Mr. Wallace of the Telephone company said his company had been amply represented before the council committee. All he now asked was for the council to sustain the report of that committee.

Attorney E. B. Britchlow, legal adviser for the Salt Lake street car company, said his company had not been heard before the committee, at least not in full. When the street car companies were given franchises over numerous streets it was a well known fact that the telephone company felt and complained that their field was being trespassed upon. The latter company's complaint was that its business was interfered with by the parallel lines of the street car companies at a loss of current which caused an alleged buzzing on the telephone wires. The Salt Lake company had a prior right. Its wires were laid long before the telephone company had come into the field. The telephone company had accepted a secondary right of way and should be the last to complain of any electrical or other disturbance.

Electrician Smith of the Salt Lake Street car company, said he had made several scientific tests of the alleged trouble. The street car company's Second East street feed wire was the one complained of. However, he did not believe the cause was with the street car companies. He believed that it originated with the telephone company's own lines which were unevenly balanced.

David Murray of the telephone company stated that their attorney was out of town and they would therefore have their side of the question in plain, simple facts without any attempt at oratory. He, too, made tests with his electrician when certain currents were cut off and in so doing demonstrated that from seventy-five to eighty per cent of the trouble was thus done away with. As to Second East street the Salt Lake Company was the trespasser. It now had four feed wires on that thoroughfare and the induction was so great as to very materially impair the telephone service.

Mr. Read denied this, and said that if the council on any part of it would join with him in making a thorough test it would be easily proven that Mr. Murray was mistaken.

Rich—Mr. Read, is there any reason why combination poles cannot be used on Second East street?

Mr. Read—Yes, sir; in case of heavy snow and sleet storms the telephone company's wires would be blown down and the service of both companies would be thus greatly injured.

Mr. Moran—Mr. Read, why do you not move your wires from Second East street?

Mr. Read—I do not see why we should. We have a priority and possessory right.

Councilman Horn—I believe both of the companies have rights there. The Council has nothing to do with the trouble. I move that the subject matter of this discussion be laid on the table. Lost.

Horn then moved to postpone action indefinitely. Lost.

The city attorney was called upon and said there was another side to the question. He took the broad ground that the street car company had no rights on Second East street.

Lawson inquired of the attorney if the telephone company had any franchise over that street.

The attorney evaded the interrogation by saying he did not have that proposition under consideration.

Moran then demanded that the question be answered by the attorney but that gentleman only replied by saying that he was not counsel for either company. As to the alleged right of way obtained by the Salt Lake Street Car Company it came from a resolution illegally passed. It had not been read three times. Neither had it been given the signature of the chief executive. The street was obstructed by the poles there now. The Council had given this bogus right for the benefit of private individuals.

Beardsley—Could not the company have been prevented from erecting poles if that resolution had not been passed?

Attorney Hoag—Well, that is not what I am now speaking of.

Beardsley—But I insist on an answer.

Attorney Hoag—Well, then, I say yes, and I will say further that it could also have done so afterwards. The legal proposition is this: That the resolution was not passed as an ordinance and therefore does not have binding force.

Lawson said the matter had been referred to the city attorney but that gentleman instead of going down into the merit of the question had brought in a one-sided report. He moved that the matter be referred back for investigation, and proper investigation too. The city employed and paid an attorney to do work for it. He wanted him to earn his money.

Folland—it is evident to me that this affair has no place in this Council. It is purely an individual fight, and should go back to the principal combatants for settlement between themselves. The first petition bearing on the matter that was presented to the Council was from the telephone people and entirely in their own interest.

Wantland moved that the matter go over until the next meeting of the Council.

Rich moved to deny the petition of the telephone company.

The chair ruled the motion out of order.

The original motion to postpone action indefinitely was then carried on a vote of 9 to 4.

COMBINATION POLES.

The matter of compelling the electric companies to use combination poles was taken up, and the objections thereto of the Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company was read by the recorder.

The telephone company was not opposed to the use of the combination pole, but the other companies were.

Some debate followed and the matter went over to allow more time to investigate the feasibility of the adoption of the plan.

The Council then adjourned and will meet tonight to continue the work of revising the ordinance.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city school board met last evening. Vice-President William Nelson occupied the chair. The members present were Dooly, Young, Pratt, Newman and Baldwin.

The following from County Registrar Allen was read and the petition denied:

Gentlemen—I herewith make application for the use of the following school-houses for the county and Territorial election, to be held in this city November 8, 1892: The Ninth, Thirteenth, Sixteenth and Eighteenth.

SCHOOL ROOMS.

The committee on sites and buildings reported that they had rented a building on Owen street at $20 per month until the completion of the Hamilton school and a building on Second West between Third and Fourth North at $20 per month. Adopted. The committee also reported that they had visited the Hamilton school and found that the two basement rooms were practically above the surface and would in case of necessity make good school rooms, and that the committee had ordered a toilet room built in the northeast corner of the basement of said school.

THE QUESTION OF MATERIAL.

The special committee consisting of Trustees Pratt, Baldwin and Dooly, appointed by the chair at a previous meeting of the board to investigate why "specifications in building contract had been made to designate certain builders' material, exclusive of all others; and why material of any make provided it be of equal requirements of the building should not compete on equal terms, reported that they had made a full, complete and careful investigation into the matter and had not found anything objectionable in the specification of certain material to the exclusion of others, except in the matter of brick. In this the committee had found that the Salt Lake Pressed Brick company's brick had been specified for a majority of the buildings, but not through any collusion between architects and contractors or material men. The committee further found that the architects who had specified the particular brick did so from proper motives and without suggestion from anyone. Some had done so because they understood that it was the policy of the board to buy none but home material and this was the only company at the time making the required quality of brick. The committee thought, in conclusion, that it was a mistake to specify any certain kind or make of material required, and suggested that no such specifications be made in the future. The report was adopted.

THE TWENTY-FIRST SCHOOL.

The committee on buildings and sites had prepared a report on the bids received for the erection of the Twenty-first ward school house, but it was not acted upon. The bids were as follows:

S. C. Sherrill.....	$27 00
Crosford Bros. & Bryan.....	$1,000
George Carley.....	$3,200
S. C. Watson.....	$0 80

The committee will recommend the letting of the contract to S. C. Sherrill, his bid being the lowest.

SOME annoyances we poor mortals must of necessity endure in the midst of our brightest joys. The hand-organ and the parachute jump are dull sensations that may not be foregone.

BOTH Republicans and Democrats having named their candidate for Delegate to Congress, it behooves the Liberals at their convention in Ogden next Wednesday to be careful how they try to press the button lest they by mistake take hold of a live wire.

ABOUT LIFE IN THE LAKE.

I have read with much interest the report of Prof. J. E. Talmage's researches in Salt Lake, one reason being that I myself predicted that life would be found there.

In the winter of 1889, my first season in this city, and before I had visited the Lake, I had several interesting conversations in regard to it with an intelligent girl of this city, who had often immersed herself in the brine pond. She insisted that no life could be found there. I insisted that "shrimps" might and probably would be found there. My deduction was based upon experiments made in Russia and reported by J. Y. Bergen in a volume on "The Development Theory." It may be interesting in this connection to reproduce what was said. It is as follows:

"In the summer of 1871, Schmankiewitsch, a Russian naturalist, noticed that Artemia arctica (a sort of brine shrimp) found in salt water pools, changed its form according to the greater or less saltness of the water. In summer, when the water was most salt, there was a retardation of growth, which was the more marked the higher the temperature, and the saltier the water became. When, near the end of summer, the heavy rains set in and the temperature decreased, the Artemia became larger and lost its red and gray color; so that the November and the July broods differed essentially in size and color. Schmankiewitsch then bred the brine shrimps artificially. In one vessel he gradually increased the saltness of the water to between four and five times that of ordinary sea-water; in another vessel he reduced the saltness considerably below that of sea-water; and in both of the series of solutions, each new generation lived in a solution of a strength or of a dilution such as the preceding generation could hardly have endured. The new broods of brine shrimp reared in solutions of varying strength differed greatly from each other, as well as from those in the original pool. Schmankiewitsch also noticed that in warm weather the females both in the stronger and in the weaker solutions reproduced without being fertilized. The females hatched from such unfertilized eggs themselves in turn produced a brood of females only. Males, only, occurred in water of medium strength. Then, in the spring, after the brine had become suddenly freshened by heavy rains, abnormal males were produced. But the two leading forms that Schmankiewitsch obtained have heretofore been known as two different genera—Artemia and Branchipus; so that here is a clear case of modifications sufficient to carry an animal from what naturalists rank as one genus into what they call another genus; all taking place by the increase or diminution of salt in the water, more or less aided by variations of temperature."

I regard this as a very interesting experiment in biology, and I want to add by way of verification of my prediction that life would be found in the Salt Lake that the lady referred to wrote to me in the summer of 1889, while I was in the East, that she had found in the water "a curious little thing that was alive" and wanted to know if I did not want a bottle of them sent East for examination.

As to raising fish in the Lake, I think Prof. Talmage's conservatism well founded. Such a thing could be done only by gradual adaptation to the environment, and as all ocean fish shrink under salt in death, so all live ocean fish would diminish in size as they became adapted to the water of our Salt Lake. It would require such a change as the Russian, with the horrible name quoted above, saw taking place in the shrimps upon which he experimented.

A question that comes in as to the possibility of raising fish in the Lake is their food. If my memory is straight, Prof. Talmage says there is abundance of animal food in the Lake for fish that like that diet. But the shad and some of our best food fish are vegetarians, and I presume they would fare badly in the Lake until they could be degraded to such a level that they could live on Jordan river swill from the Salt Lake sewer! The carp, however, is a dirty bird, so to speak, and if he has a salt water prototype he ought to get fat in the Lake, especially near the mouth of the Jordan, where he would be sure to find very soon.

But the fellow who reported Prof. Talmage in one of your contemporaries was a bump. He thought fish that was raised in salt water would be so thoroughly salted that it "wouldn't spoil in any climate," like boiled Milwaukee beer, while the fact is a fish from the ocean will "spoil" as quickly as one from Lake Superior. In fact a trout from the Neepigon river or a white-fish from "the Soo" rapidly will "keep" longer in summer than a mackerel, a shad, or a blue fish caught in the same latitude on the coast.

CHARLES ELLIS.

AMID ETERNAL ICE.

It seems impossible for a Polar expedition to remain any length of time amid the icy barriers without having some sort of mystery connected with its exploits, such mystery in almost every case involving human life. It is scarcely to be wondered at that men, plunged into a climate with which they can never assimilate and surrounded by conditions so greatly at variance with anything in their previous experience or even dreamed of, should now and then "lose their heads" and say and do strange, unusual things; yet this does not fully if at all account for some of the mysterious disappearances which have contributed to the terrors of the frozen zone, themselves surely ample enough for all purposes without such contribution.

The case of John M. Verhoef is one of the strangest in the annals of Arctic exploration. He went out without the Peary party last year and when the recent relief expedition reached the point where the party disembarked and were rescued, Verhoef was not with them. Inquiry resulted in nothing satisfactory, the only information given being that, relying on his ability to become homogeneous with the Esquimaux, he had wandered off with that object in view. Another account is that the traditional "woman in the case" figures, that he and Mrs. Peary could not get along together, and because of this he left the camp and started off on foot in quest of other quarters. But when the lost man's sister met Captain Peary on his return to Philadelphia, with tears in her eyes begging him to tell her where her brother had gone, how and why, the only reply was that he was a deserter and therefore neither the government nor the Academy of Sciences was under any obligations regarding him. There would seem in this an indifference bordering on heartlessness, and it only serves to render the situation more cloudy and complicated.

The last that was seen of Verhoef was on the 13th of last August at the head of McCormick's bay. At this point the ornithologist of the expedition, Langdon Gibson, was shooting birds for his collection, and the two met. Verhoef said he was going to an Esquimaux settlement some twenty miles distant. This Gibson tried to dissuade him from doing, telling him the settlement was deserted. But all to no purpose. The young man set out on his journey afoot and alone, having but three days' rations and being thinly clothed. Here it would seem was a trail which if the relief party had felt so disposed might have been successfully followed; but it was not, and the man has been left to whatever fate he may have encountered in that awfully sterile and forbidding land.

There is surely enough that is terrible in a trip to the frigid zone without adding the wilful sacrifice of life; yet terrible as it all is, there is little doubt that exploring parties followed in regular order by relief parties will continue with at least as much frequency and persistency as heretofore. Whenever a few hardy and venturesome men with a scientific turn of mind take a notion to essay an attack in force upon the forbidden circumpolar regions, the necessary money is always forthcoming, sometimes from governments, sometimes from individuals and not infrequently from both. The desire among the intellectual portion of mankind to break open the barred gates of the north and become familiar with the terra incognita behind them is so irresistible that when one class will undertake the task, another class is always ready with the means for carrying on the work, notwithstanding the fact that since the first expedition down to that of Lieut. Peary the same dreary tale of loss, suffering, death and failure has been borne back to the homes from whence they departed.

READ THE SCRIPTURES.

It is not a new thing to use as a telegraph code quotations from the Bible and other works that are universally distributed and widely known. The Good Book is so full of felicitous expressions suitable to any emergency or condition, that its pages are frequently resorted to by correspondents as supplying more briefly and in plainer language than they themselves are master of, clothing for the thoughts they wish to convey. An instance in point is cited by the Reverend Review.

"Recently the editor of the Christian Register, finding it would be too late to send a letter of congratulation to the London Inquirer in regard to its jubilee, sent a telegram by cable as follows: 'Third epistle of John, 12-14,' which, being interpreted, reads as follows: 'I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee; but I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.' Could any delayed congratulatory message be more briefly or more happily expressed than that?

ANOTHER WINE GLASS INCIDENT.

THE pretty little story of ex-President Cleveland and the wine glass reminds one, by reason of the contrast, of the story of Charles XII and his wine glass. The former refused to take the proffered glass and drink, while the great Swedish warrior and hero took the cup and saved his life. Charles was a fugitive, on his way from Bender to Stralsund, pursued by Russian spies who overtook him at an inn. They were just going to apprehend him, when he seized a decanter of liquor and filled some tumblers, inviting his pursuers to drink with him. Since everybody knew that the valiant king never touched a drop of anything stronger than water, the ruse threw his captors off the scent. The Russians supposed that they must have captured the wrong prisoner, and he soon found an opportunity to continue his hazardous journey unmolested. The royal hero was spared to fall from a bullet among the barren hills of Fredrikshald.

A PACIFIC CABLE WANTED.

THE erstwhile much-talked-of cable between San Francisco and Honolulu, to be followed by an extension to New Zealand and thus completing the circuit of the globe, seems to have fallen into complete "desuetude;" certainly it is seldom spoken of of late, and yet it is one of the most important commercial projects before the world of enterprise. With it completed, Puck's proposition to put a girdle round the world in forty minutes could be discounted several minutes in an emergency; and for all the enlightened notions, as well as some that are not enlightened, to be brought into instantaneous communication with each other would surely be an achievement worthy of occupying the proud place of rounding out this century of scientific development.

There are now 143,011 nautical miles of submarine cable, in 1168 sections. The greater part, in fact nearly all, of this vast stretch of electrical conductors is manufactured on the banks of the Thames, but France will soon have two cable works in operation and Italy already has one. Perhaps the United States may begin it as an "infant industry" in time to supply the North American and Australasian Telegraph Company with what materials it will require for the purpose of establishing communication with the great trans-Pacific empires. The name herein appearing is our own invention, but we cheerfully donate it without charge to the first organization obtaining a charter for the purpose spoke of, with the hope that it may not be permitted to go much longer without having something tangible to apply it to.

DEATH OF LUCY M. SMITH.

In the death of Sister Lucy M. Smith, which occurred this morning, after an illness of two weeks, at the home of Apostle John Henry Smith, in this city, the family lose a beloved associate, the community an honored member and the Church an early and most steadfast adherent.

Sister Smith was born February 9, 1817, at Bethel, Oxford county, Maine, and was the daughter of Lucy Bean and Josiah Smith. On August 12, 1837, she was by baptism received into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, of which she has always been an active member, abounding in faith and good works, cheerfully accepting her share of the trials of the people of God because, like the Saints of ancient times, she esteemed the reproach of the followers of the Gospel "greater riches than the treasures of Egypt."

Sister Smith came to Utah in 1849, her husband, the late President George A. Smith, having been with the Pioneer camp and returning to Winter Quarters, with the others, for their families.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder S. K. McMurdie, of Paradise, Cache County, Utah, called at the News office last night having recently returned from a mission to Great Britain for which part of the world he left his home September 3rd, 1890. He labored constantly in the Birmingham Conference, England, and enjoyed his ministerial duties very much. He returns in fair health and excellent spirits.

Elder Thomas F. Welch, of Morgan City, Morgan county, has just returned from a mission to England. He left home on October 8th, 1890, and has labored during the whole time in the London Conference. He visited the counties of Surrey, Sussex, Berkshire, Wiltshire and Hampshire, and met with moderate success. He was well received by those among whom he labored and comes back to Utah in excellent health, having had both a pleasant and profitable experience.

Elder Welch crossed the Atlantic on his return in the steamship "Weymouth," which was detained in quarantine in New York bay for a period of thirteen days, with five additional days on Fire Island.

Elder Thomas C. Stanford, of Alblon, Idaho, returned to this city on Sunday morning last, from a mission to New Zealand. He left home on Nov. 10th, 1889, and labored in the Waikato district during the entire period, with the exception of one month, which was passed in the Hauraki district. Elder Stanford was very kindly received by the natives, particularly in the Hauraki district, though they seemed to be very indifferent in regard to the Gospel. The prospects in the Waikato district are said not to be very encouraging at the present time, due chiefly to the influence of the Maori king, who has an intense hatred for all white people.

Elder Stanford has had quite a spell of sickness during the last six months, but has now quite recovered. He brought home with him the remains of Elder Otto Chipman, of American Fork, whose lamented death was recorded in these columns last week.

THE names of Russell, Carroll and Grinnell appear on the Democratic state ticket in Massachusetts. This would go to show that the "Q" box in that party's case is well filled.

THE largest book ever known is owned by Queen Victoria. It is eighteen inches thick and weighs sixty-three pounds, and contains the addresses of congratulation on the occasion of her jubilee. Rather a tidy volume for the royal matron to take in her lap for perusal to the doting grandchildren clustered at her knee.

DEATHS.

RIDING—At Panguitch, Garfield Co., Utah, Sept. 23, 1892, Affie May, daughter of Alfred H. and Mary E. Riding; born May 13th, 1881.

SKEWES—In this city, Oct. 9, 1892, after a lingering illness, William H., son of the late Wm. Skewes, aged 35 years.

FRECKLETON—At Eureka, October 6th, 1892, of brain fever, Jane Orr, daughter of John O. and Jessie Freckleton, aged 9 years and 3 months.

REINSMAN—In Salt Lake City, Oct. 16th, at 5 o'clock a.m., Allan, infant son of Nethe L. and John Reinsman, of inflammation of the bowels, born Oct. 14, 1891.

JOHNSEN—In this city, the Fourth ward, October 6th, 1892, after an illness of six months, Lars Johnsen. Deceased was born April 15th, 1833, at Christiansia, Norway.

BACON—William, born May 24th, 1824, at Birmingham, Derbyshire, England; died of paralysis at Salt Lake City, September 24th, 1892. He leaves three sons and three daughters to mourn his death.

PETERSON—October 7th, of heart failure, Andrew Peterson. He was born in Galmarslane, Sweden, December 23, 1831; baptized into the Church in the spring of 1856, and emigrated to Utah in 1864.

SCHUPPACH—At Park Valley, Box Elder county, Utah, October 2nd, 1892, of inflammation of the bowels, Rosa, daughter of John U. and Rosa Schuppach; aged 3 years and 6 months.

PAPWORTH—At No. 225 West Fifth North Street, Charles Elmo Papworth, after an illness of two years, died at 10 o'clock a.m., and was the son of Richard and Elizabeth Papworth.

WALKER—Of typhoid pneumonia, Olive May Walker, daughter and only child of Edwin A. and Lavine Walker, born in Deseret, Millard county, Sept. 4th, 1877; died at Riverfront, Salt Lake county, September 20th, 1892, at 5 o'clock a.m., aged 15 years and 16 days.

HUNTER—September 17th, at Heber, Apache county, Arizona, of paralytic stroke, Mary Hunter, widow of the late James Hunter of American Fork, Utah, and daughter of George and Janet Robertson. Born September 2nd, 1823, in Bannockburn, Stirlingshire, Scotland. She was a faithful Latter-day Saint.

MARTIN—Elizabeth McKendrick, wife of Robert G. Martin, died at Marion, Cassia county, Idaho, Oct. 4, 1892, of chest trouble. She was born at Tooele City, Utah, June 24, 1823. She leaves a husband and four small children and a host of friends. She was a kind wife and mother and a faithful Latter-day Saint.

SMITH—At Sandy, September 24, 1892, Anne Elvira, wife of Joseph Smith, after an illness of four days.

The deceased was the daughter of Lechona and Annie Hemmenway. She was born at Corn Creek, Millard county, Utah, Oct. 18, 1870. She leaves a husband and a young babe. She was a faithful Latter-day Saint during her life.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION

ESTABLISHED TRUTH AND LIBERTY JUNE 1850.

NO. 18.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1892.

VOL. XLV.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by President Wm. Woodruff, Sunday Morning, October 9th, 1892, at the Semi-Annual Conference, held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah.

I feel disposed to try to address this assembly of Latter-day Saints for awhile this morning; but I wish to say that I need not only the strict attention but the faith and prayers of the Saints of God, for no man can fill the place which I or these Apostles occupy, to fulfil the command of God and the requirements of the Latter-day Saints, except by the inspiration of Almighty God. This is a truth that has remained on the earth from the day of Father Adam to this hour.

I have some things upon my mind I would like to lay before this assembly if I can get sufficient of the spirit of inspiration to do it. To commence with, I want to bear my testimony to these Latter-day Saints and to the world that I am held responsible before God, the angels and the heavenly hosts for the testimony which I bear before you; and so is every man who bears record of the Son of God and of the work of God in this or any other generation. These Latter-day Saints bear record to the world, and have borne record for almost a generation past, that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God; that they know this work is of God, and that this is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They are held responsible for this, and if they bear a true testimony, the nations of the earth who hear that testimony will be held responsible for the use they make of it. Do you ask me how I know this is the work of God, and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God? I will tell you how I know. I know it by the revelations of Jesus Christ and by the inspiration of the Lord. If I may be allowed to refer to myself without being considered egotistical, I will tell you why I bear this testimony.

Eighty-five years have passed over my head since I first tabernacled in the flesh. Almost sixty years of that period I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. During that time I have borne some portion of the Holy Priesthood, and for fifty-three years I have occupied the position of the Apostleship, in connection with my brethren. I have also traveled abroad and at home. I have been taught from my childhood up by the revelations of God in the records of divine truth that have been given to us, that there is one God, and that there is one Jesus Christ, who is the Savior of the world, and the only Savior pertaining to this world and to the redemption thereof. I have been taught that there is one Priesthood, in its two divisions. I have been taught that there is one Holy Ghost, and that there is one Gospel and one set of ordinances for the salvation of the whole posterity of Adam, and only one. I have been taught that these ordinances are the same in every age of the world. Whoever reads the New Testament can see the testimony of the Apostles that there was but one Gospel in that day and generation; and that Gospel was taught by Adam himself to his posterity. The same Gospel was taught by Moses, and by all the patriarchs and prophets down to the days of Jesus Christ. There was but the one Gospel. But the promise was that whoever received that Gospel should receive the Holy Ghost and the gifts thereof, and these gifts were made manifest from generation to generation when the God of heaven had a people on the face of the earth.

In traveling during these sixty years that I have been in the Church, abroad and at home, I have been associated with the Elders of Israel in the administration of these ordinances to the human family. What has been the result? Remember now what I told you, that I am held responsible for my testimony. I have traveled, I may say, in the midst of visions, in the midst of the administration of angels, in the midst of the power of God. In connection with my brethren, I have laid hands upon the sick, and they have recovered. We have laid hands upon the blind, and they have seen; upon the deaf, and they have heard; upon the lame, and they have walked; upon those possessed with devils, and they were cast out; and even unto the resurrection of the dead. Those gifts and graces that have followed the servants of God in every age of the world have been associated with this Church from the day of its organization until this hour. These are truths in the sight of high heaven, and I will meet them there when I go to the other side of the veil. Therefore, if there are any strangers here, I bear testimony to these things, for I know they are true. The inspiration of the Holy Ghost deceives no man, and when any people receive this Gospel and this Priesthood, they know for themselves whether the work is of God or not. Yes, we lay hands upon the sick, and while we do so, the Spirit and power of God comes upon us, from the crown of our head to the soles of our feet. We lay hands upon men to ordain them to the Priesthood, and the power of God rests upon the men who administer. These thirty thousand Elders who dwell here in the mountains of Israel, when they go to the nations of the earth and get up and declare the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the world, the Holy Ghost is with them. They bear a testimony that rejoices the hearts of men, and men receive that testimony, and everything they promise them is fulfilled to the very letter.

This is the reason why I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and that this is the Church of God on the earth. And I wish many times that I had power to express to the Latter-day Saints what is in my heart, and what the vision of my mind opens unto me in those seasons when I am inspired with the Spirit and power of God to see what lies before this people and before this generation. Obeye Latter-day Saints, you talk about revelation, and wonder if there is any revelation. Why, bless your souls, say nothing about the Apostles and Elders around me, these mountains contain thousands upon thousands of devoted women, holy women, righteous women, virtuous women, who are filled with the inspiration of Almighty God. Yes, these women have brought forth an army of sons and daughters in these mountains by the power of God, and these sons and daughters partake of the inspiration of their mothers, as well as of their fathers. I will ask you, what are these Apostles doing when they rise up and preach to you? What are these Elders of Israel doing when they bear record here to the Latter-day Saints and to the world, if they have not inspiration and revelation? There is not a man on the footstool of God Almighty today who has power to preach the Gospel and testify to its truth, only by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Yes, we have revelation. The Church of God could not live twenty-four hours without revelation. We do not have as much as we ought to have; and when I look at the work that has been piled up for these Latter-day Saints to bear off in the world, I feel as though we need a good deal of more inspiration and revelation than we have. We want our souls to be wide open to the things of God, and to understand our position and destiny. I realize, Latter-day Saints require at my hands, as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, many things. They also require many things at the hands of my counselors and these Apostles. We can accomplish what is required of us if we have the faith and the assistance of the Latter-day Saints and the power of God; but without that we can do nothing.

I will say a few words with regard to another dispensation. The whole Christian world profess to believe in the Bible. You look through that book, and you will not find a single instance of a Prophet, or an Apostle, or an inspired man going forth to preach the Gospel except by the power of the holy and everlasting Priesthood. No man has had power to go forth and administer in the ordinances of salvation without that Priesthood, from Adam down. Father Adam was a great High Priest. So were his sons that were with him—Seth, Enos, Jared, Canaan, Mahalaleel, Enoch and Methuselah; and a great many others bore the holy Priesthood. All that Moses did was by the power of the holy Priesthood. All that Jesus Christ and the Apostles did was by the power of the Priesthood. Jesus Christ was our great High Priest, and He came into this world and laid down His life as a great sacrifice for the redemption of the world. It is that dispensation that I wish to say a few words about. It was rather a peculiar dispensation. The Savior came to the Jewish nation—to His own—through the loins of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and David. The Jewish nation rejected Him. He labored until they put Him to death. He lived only three years and a half after He entered the ministry. He lived long enough, however, to choose twelve Apostles, to organize a church, to warn that nation, and to declare unto them what would come upon their heads. Moses had also told the Jewish nation of these things in his day, by the inspiration of the Lord. Has one jot or tittle fallen unfulfilled? Not one. When the Savior suffered that ignominious death on the cross, and was about to give up the ghost, He said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Is not that a strange saying for a man who was being crucified and about to go into the spirit world? But Jesus saw everything that would befall the Jewish nation, and well might He make such a remark. He saw that one thousand eight hundred years after His death this yoke of bondage and trial and tribulation would rest upon the posterity of Judah, and he was ready to forgive them. No, they did not know what they did. They did not comprehend it. They did not understand that they were putting to death their Savior—the King of the Jews, their great Redeemer. They were too overwhelmed with darkness and iniquity to comprehend this. But, as I was saying, Jesus chose twelve Apostles. They were father, mother, weak and illiterate. But the Lord has always chosen the weak things of this world, instead of the great, and the learned, and the rich, and the powerful of the earth. Why has He done it? That He might have instruments that He could handle—men who would obey Him, who would take His counsel and carry out His commandments. In preparing this dispensation in which we live the Lord has known perfectly well what lay before us. He has known the mighty events that were to be heaped upon the heads of both Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner, Zion and the world; and He has prepared an element to do this work of His, which He has gathered here in the mountains of Israel. But in the days of the Savior it was a dispensation of sacrifice; and Jesus Christ and the Apostles only lived a little while after they were chosen, to warn the nation in which they dwelt and that generation. Jesus Christ was crucified, the Apostles were put to death, and at every man who bore the Priesthood was slain, excepting John the Revelator. The Lord had ordained him to live, and he did not die, but remains today upon the face of the earth, in fulfillment of the promises of God to him. But in that day they had not the privilege of building the Zion of God or the Kingdom of God. It was not a dispensation prepared for that. These men laid down their lives, and the judgments of God overtook the Jewish nation, in fulfillment of the predictions of the Savior and the Prophets. Moses told them in his day, "And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the siege, and in the straits, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee." All this came to pass, and the kingdom was taken from the earth, the holy Priesthood was taken up to God, who gave it, and the Church went into the wilderness, and there remained until the day set for its restoration to the world.

But I want to speak more particularly about this great and last dispensation in which the Lord has said, through the mouths of all the patriarchs and prophets, a mighty work should be performed. It is different, my brethren and sisters, from the days of the Savior. I do not believe there ever was a greater dispensation than the one in which you and I live, because in it is centered the fulfillment of all prophecy and all revelation that has been manifested looking to the final restoration of all things before the coming of the Son of Man. I want to speak of our condition today before the Lord. When the Savior died He went to preach to the spirits in prison. Most all the people from the days of Noah to that day had died without the Gospel, and Jesus went and preached to them. They had this work resting upon them in that day. In this day and generation we have in the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants the history of the Latter-day Saints and of the world. You are my witnesses today that these people are here in fulfillment of these revelations and prophecies. We have had a Prophet raised up in these last days, as great a Prophet as ever breathed the breath of life, save Jesus Christ, and He was raised up for the purpose of laying the foundation of this work. And how is this dispensation and this work to commence? I would like to have the Christian world read the revelations of St. John. There you have before you a picture of what awaits this generation. You have there proclaimed that in the commencement of this great and last work in the last days an angel of God would fly through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, "and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to Him, for the hour of His judgment is come." Yes, ye Latter-day Saints, the hour of God's judgment is come." The Lord raised a great Prophet unto us. He was a mighty man, although illiterate, in the sense of the word. The Lord called upon him to perform this work, and he not only received the visitation of angels, but even the voice of God. This is the only dispensation that I have ever read of in which the Father and Son both appeared to the man whom He had chosen to establish His Church. Joseph Smith received this great honor. He was a Prophet of God. I have traveled with him a good many miles, speaking of the gifts and graces manifested by the Elders of Israel. I have seen Joseph Smith in one day go forth among the sick and command those that were dying to arise and be made whole, and they have leaped from their beds, been clothed, and walked out in the street and followed the Prophet of God in his travels through the midst of the Saints of God. Can I doubt this work? Can you doubt it? I think not. No man that has had any experience in this work can doubt it. You remember Brother Fordham. He was breathing his last breath of life "when the Prophet took him by the hand and commanded him in the name of Jesus of Nazareth to arise and be made whole. He leaped from his bed, was clothed, and walked out into the house of Brother Joseph B. F. Noble, who is still living in these mountains. He was also lying at the point of death and was instantly healed by the power of God, through the voice of the Prophet of God. I name these things because I have had experience in them and have a right to mention them. The power of God was with the Prophet, from the time he was ordained to the Priesthood until he was murdered. He lived some fourteen years after he laid the foundation of this work. And when he organized this Church he organized it in its full power and glory, and every gift and grace, and every ordinance that belongs to the Church of God. Nothing was ever manifest in any age of the world but what was included in the organization of this Church. It was organized with Prophets, with Apostles, with Pastors, with Teachers, with helps and governments, with gifts and graces, and with the Melchizedek and Aaronic Priesthoods. Joseph Smith was true and faithful to death, and he was a mighty man of God, as may be seen by anyone who will read that code of revelations which he left to us—as sublime revelations as God ever gave to man.

Now, brethren and sisters, the foundation has been laid, and you are here in these mountains of Israel. Myself and others have preached to you in England, in Scotland, in Wales, in the islands of the sea and among the nations of the earth. We have declared unto you the Gospel of Jesus Christ. You have believed our testimony and have received it. You went forth and were baptized in water for the remission of your sins, and you received the Holy Ghost by the power of God, and by that power you are here today. We might have preached to you till we had been as old as Methuselah, but if our testimony had not been backed up by the power of God, you would have remained at home; you would not have been here in these mountains to fulfil the revelations of God. These things are true, and you know they are true. You know you received the testimony yourselves, and by this you have been gathered together. Upwards of sixty years have passed over our heads since the organization of this Church on the earth, and its history is before the world. It has been a little stone cut out of the mountains without hands. We have had a terrible warfare from the organization of this Church until today; but one thing is comforting and encouraging: the God of heaven inspired men thousands of years ago to tell exactly what these latter-day Saints would do. They were of the house of Israel, scattered among the nations of the earth, and the Lord would stretch out his hand and gather them together, and they would go to the place that the old Patriarch said should belong to Joseph:

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel.)

The blessings of thy fathers have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. (Gen. xlix, 22-26).

You are the descendants of this holy man of God. You have come here in fulfilment of these things.

I do not expect that I will be able to answer my mind in telling you how I feel with regard to these things, but I will do the best I can. You have been gathered in these mountains of Israel, led by a prophet, a seer, a revelator, and a mighty man. When we came here, we found a barren desert. Men said, "Go to California; you cannot do anything here." "No," President Young said, "we shall stay here; we shall build a temple here; we shall build a city here. This is what is ordained of God, and we shall accomplish it." Judge, brethren and sisters, whether he was inspired or not. We have made a beginning. We have made the desert to blossom as the rose, and laid the foundation for the great work of our God that is going to be fulfilled in these mountains of Israel, and you will stand in holy places while the judgments of God work in the earth. Yes, let the world read these judgments of God and that which lies before all nations under heaven. These things will come to pass to the very letter. Then what is our duty and our position here? The Lord told us through the Prophet Joseph in the beginning of this work that he was going to call Elders into the vineyard for the last time, to prune the vineyard. We have got to prepare it for the coming of the Son of Man. The wheat has got to be gathered into the garner before the chaff is burned. And the Elders of Israel have got to go forth and warn the inhabitants of the earth, as Joseph Smith told the Twelve Apostles the last time I saw him before his martyrdom, when he laid before us the work he was required to do. The Prophet said: "God has given to me every key, every power and principle of salvation belonging to this great last dispensation; and I have sealed upon your heads every key, principle and power which God has sealed upon me. Now, you Apostles, round up your shoulders and bear off this kingdom, or you will be damned, saith the Lord." I do not forget these things, and they are true. I believe I am the only man living in the flesh who was present on that occasion. This is our position, brethren and sisters, before the Lord. There is a tremendous responsibility upon these Latter-day Saints. We have the world to warn. We have to preach the Gospel, and attend to those things that God has committed to us. The Prophet Joseph and his brother Hyrum were martyred, and they will have a martyr's crown. They have gone to the other side of the veil, to mingle with the Gods and to plead for their brethren, and they are faithful and diligent in their duties. But some of us are left behind. Since that time this work has gone on, and it has got to continue, and we cannot avoid this. What the Lord requires at the hands of these Apostles and Elders and Latter-day Saints is to warn the world, to preach the Gospel, to build up Zion, to carry out the purposes of the Lord, and to prepare ourselves to stand in holy places while the judgments of God work in the earth.

Joseph Smith revealed unto us the principle of the redemption of the dead. There was no revelation I ever read that gave me more joy and consolation than that. Jesus Christ and the Apostles had to go to the spirits in prison and redeem those who had lived from the days of Noah down to their generation. Here we have one thousand and eight hundred years, during which millions and millions of the human family have died without the Gospel of Christ. They have gone into the spirit world, and the Lord expects these Latter-day Saints to go forth and redeem these dead, as they hold the keys of the salvation of their dead; so that when they go into the spirit world and meet their fathers and their mothers and their relatives, they shall not say to them, "You held the keys of my salvation, and you have not attended to this work, and I am left here in prison." We should not neglect this. It is not only our duty to preach the Gospel and to warn the world, that they may be left without excuse in the day of God's judgment, but it is our duty to redeem our dead. Joseph Smith, when he was martyred, went and opened the prison doors in the spirit world. So did these brethren that died in Zion's camp. Every Elder that has gone to the other side of the veil has a work to perform there, and those in the spirit world will receive their testimony. But they cannot be baptized there. Their sons and daughters who dwell in the flesh have to carry out this great and mighty work.

Brethren and sisters, these are some of the duties that are required of us. We should open our eyes, and our ears, and our hearts, to see, hear and understand the great and mighty responsibility that rests upon us. Thank God, we have had power in this barren desert to build three temples. Hundreds of thousands of the dead have been redeemed in these temples, and there are millions yet to be redeemed. Here is this Salt Lake Temple that President Young laid the foundation of. We want to finish that temple and dedicate it unto the Lord. This is some of the work that is required of us. The eyes of all the heavenly hosts are over these Latter-day Saints, and they are over these sons and daughters that dwell in the mountains of Israel. God Himself and His Son Jesus Christ, who is our advocate with the Father, look to us to do this work. The eyes of Joseph Smith and every Prophet and Saint of God who dwells in the spirit world are watching over us. They cannot come here and build that Temple. They are not ordained to that. But we are here in the flesh, and I ask, in the name of the Lord, and as a great favor of these Latter-day Saints, that we will unite together with our means and finish that Temple, that we may go into it and redeem our dead. Many of you have got thousands of relatives in the spirit world who are looking to you. They never heard the Gospel in life, but they will hear it, at the mouth of David Patten, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor, and these Apostles and Elders that have gone into the spirit world. But, as I said before, they cannot be baptized there. We can, and we must do it for them.

This is how I feel about our position. We are here by the power of God. It is a marvel to me that we are as well off as we are. It is a marvel to me that we have the power that we have. For there is a vast number of fallen spirits that are at war against God and His Christ, against this people and this Church, and against the redemption of the dead. Lucifer knows that if this Church prospers, his kingdom will fall. But God has sustained us, and will sustain us until we get through, if we do our duty. The hand of God is over us here, and Zion is a city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid. We are only small, and have only just begun the organization; but the Lord will hasten His work, and it will continue until all these promises of God will be fulfilled. There is where my faith rests and my consolation dwells. I know that God is true, and that the testimonies of all the Patriarchs and Prophets, have thus far been fulfilled to the very letter. There is not a city nor a generation but has felt the chastening hand of God when they have undertaken to overthrow the work of God.

I want to say some thing in relation to home industry. True, it is Sunday, but that matters not; for we are called to build up Zion temporarily as well as spiritually. All that has been said in our Conference with regard to home industry is good. We want to continue this, and as far as we possibly can we should, as President Young told us, open doors of work and labor among ourselves. These temporal matters are a part of the labors that we have to perform while we are here. Brethren, when we get on the other side of the veil and our eyes are opened, we will marvel over a great many things that we do not understand here; and a great many things will there be understood that cannot be here.

One subject more I want to name, and that is with regard to our future. I will tell you what the Lord has revealed to me. You talk of revelation. I have a good many revelations. We are not particularly required to write all the revelations given to us. Joseph Smith wrote revelations in his day, and we have them to read, and they will all be fulfilled to the very letter. There has been a good deal said about the rising generation of the Latter-day Saints. I will tell you what will come to pass. My sons, the sons of my Counselors, the sons of these Apostles, and the sons of this people, will rise up by the power of God, and they will take this Kingdom and bear it off. You need make no mistake about this matter. They are the element that God has ordained, the same as He ordained us, to do His work. Our posterity will not forsake the Lord, nor their fathers, nor their mothers, nor the work in which they are engaged. Too many of them, it is true, have been led astray; too many of them have been found where they should not be; but the bulk of the sons of this people will remain true and faithful to this work. There is no other element that the heavens look to but the rising generation of the Latter-day Saints, in connection with the Lamanites, and they will be true and faithful. The Spirit of God will be with them, and they will follow the footsteps of their fathers, as their fathers follow Christ; and they will in their day and time stand—yes, brethren and sisters, our sons will stand in the flesh in the midst of these judgments of Almighty God when it will require faith and power, even to commanding the elements to obey them, to live. These judgments are at the door.

Brethren and sisters, many of us forget at times that we are here on a mission. When I was but a boy I read the New Testament, under old Dr. Porter and others, and I read about Jesus Christ and His Apostles; that they had power to command the elements to obey them, power to command the sick and they were healed, and power to command the dead and they were raised to life. "Oh," said I, "may I live to see a Prophet; may I live to see an Apostle; may I live to see a man of God who will teach me these principles." The first sermon I heard preached by a servant of God I embraced the Gospel and was baptized. From that day to this I have not seen one moment when I have had any doubt with regard to the truth of this work. Whatever trials I have had, they have been of a different nature to that. I say to our young men in Zion, arise and obey the commands of God. Go before the Lord and get the Holy Ghost, and open your eyes to the work that lies before you. Your fathers are passing away and going to the other side of the veil, where we shall all go in our time.

But the kingdom will rise, and God will sustain it, and it will never fall from this time till it is prepared as the Bride, the Lamb's wife, for the coming of the Son of Man.

I feel to bless the Latter-day Saints. We have got a noble class of men and women in the mountains of Israel. No better men and women ever lived on the earth. Read the history of these Relief Societies, these Improvement Associations, these Primaries, and the labors of our sisters in Israel. They have been true and faithful all the way through, and they have been raised up, the same as the Elders of Israel have, to stand in the flesh and to magnify their callings in their day and time. They are doing a great work, and God will bless them, and I bless them with every sentiment of my heart. I feel also to bless my brethren who bear the Apostleship. Now, you talk about union. Can Apostles dwell with this work upon their shoulders without being united? They cannot do it. The same Spirit bears record to each of them. Here are my Counselors and the Apostles, we are of one heart and mind, and when we have the Spirit of God there is nothing but that we see alike in. Here is Brother Snow, an aged man as well as myself, and the President of the Twelve Apostles; he has got the spirit of his calling and office with him, and God is blessing him. He is full of revelation, full of the Spirit of the Lord. We have a mighty work upon us, and we want power in the midst of Israel to carry it out, and to do what the Lord requires of us; and we shall have power to do it. I tell you I rejoice when I let my mind rest upon these temples of our God in these mountains of Israel. Who ever heard of such a thing in any generation?—a class of men driven from the society of the Christian world into the wilderness have power to gather together and rear these temples unto the name of the Most High God, and go into these temples and to attend to the ordinances therein. We hold and will hold the keys of the salvation of our dead to the endless ages of eternity. As the Prophet said, the Lord has raised up saviors upon Mount Zion, while the kingdom is the Lord's in the latter days. The heavens are full of revelation. The earth is full of revelation. The Bible is full of revelation, as well as these other books that we have; and we have revelation, and should have day by day.

I thank God that I am alive, and that He has preserved me up to this hour. I have a good many times, and some of them lately, come pretty near going to the other side of the veil; but I know that I have tens of thousands of prayers of righteous men and women, which ascend into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth day by day; and when I say that of myself I say it of my Counselors, of these Apostles, and of the Elders of Israel. They have the prayers of the people. These prayers are heard and answered. The Lord has taken whom he would take, and has preserved in life whom he would preserve, according to the counsels of His own will. We are appointed a certain work, and when we get through our sons will take it and bear it off. Zion will arise, and the glory of God will rest upon her; she will have power in the earth, and the day is at hand when, as Joseph Smith said, thousands of the great men of the earth will come to Zion to behold the glory thereof.

God bless you, and pour out His Spirit upon you, and guide and direct you all. Remember your prayers. Be kind to one another. Do not find fault with one another. We ought to be careful in speaking evil of one another. Bear one another up. Brethren and sisters, the glory of the whole matter is, that when we get through we are going to have our families with us—our fathers and our mothers, our brothers and our sisters, our wives and our children—in the morning of the resurrection, in the family organization of the celestial world, to dwell forever and forever. This is worth all you or I can sacrifice the few years we have to spend here in the flesh. God bless you. Amen.

BLIZZARD IN WESTERN WYOMING.

This is the blizzard period in the Rocky Mountain region.

Owing to its more exalted altitude western Wyoming generally gets a "stemwinder" first and hardest, but we in Utah always get an installment and sometimes a heavy one of whatever the meteorological bureau has to dispense in the weather line.

The furies we had here early in the week were more pronounced across the line, where it seems the people had a pretty severe line.

The Laramie Boomerang announces that one of the worst blizzards that was ever experienced there at this season of the year began Tuesday night and raged all next day. It was not cold, but the wind and snow made it almost impossible for people to leave the house. There was scarcely a sidewalk in town free from drifts of irregular depths. Business has been stagnated, and many who could not use telephones for the transaction of business and ordering household supplies have allowed matters to stand or gone without the needed articles. There were not even paths about the city. Desultory tracks were seen up and down the middle of the streets and winding around snow banks, but every man was the architect of his own course.

No school was held at either university or the public schools.

The greatest difficulty, however, was experienced along the railroad. The snow, being wet, did not drift badly, but it broke the wires down. They fell early this morning at Granite Canon and were down from there to Hillsdale on the Nebraska division. This blocked the road entirely, although some trains were handled by dispatchers sent from here around over the Northern Pacific by way of Minneapolis and Helena, while others were reached around over the Denver and Rio Grande. The line being down for a long distance, and in some places a mile at a stretch, no effort was made to move any trains except passenger. Trains were held at Cheyenne, in Laramie and at Rawlins. The telegraph line to the west worked all right, but trains were not moved. Business has therefore been at a perfect standstill.

The storm has been quite general, but has been severe along the Union Pacific only from Wyoming, fifteen miles west of there, and about fifty miles east of Cheyenne. Laramie seems to be about the centre of the storm area. West of Wyoming the snow is melting about as fast as it falls, while on the east side of the hill the snow is not so heavy nor the wind so hard. The severity of the storm is centered in to an area of 150 miles square, although it has been storming throughout the entire state.

No. 1 and the fast mail were both over a hour late, on the date named. Engine 1433, which brought the mail over from Cheyenne, stuck in the snow in the yards at Laramie that morning and had to be shoveled out. Several cabooses were also off the track during the day.

It was expected that thirty-three car loads of cattle would be loaded here that day, but the storm made it impossible to do so. Monte Blevins and the Spalding outfit had 350 head of cattle on the plains just west of the city the night before, holding them to load the next morning, while a bunch of about as many more belonging to the Swift outfit were further out on the plains, expecting to get in and load. They had a terrible experience with the cattle during the night, and the animals could not be prevented from drifting and scattering. They will probably not be able to load for several days.

A crew was started out from Cheyenne Wednesday morning to put up the telegraph line.

The oldest residents cannot remember a worse storm at this season of the year, although there have been many hard ones during the colder weather. The railroad company has not been obliged to use snow plows. The cuts and grades on the road have been given such careful attention during recent years that it now takes an unusually heavy drifting snow to block the road.

School children and several ladies were down in the snow about the city during the day and in one or two instances it is said they would have perished had help not been near. Off the main thoroughfares the snow was waist deep in many places. The drifts could not be seen on account of the storm until one plunged into them.

MEETINGS IN ARIZONA.

Following is the report of a journey and labors of a company from Snowflake, Woodruff and St. Joseph under Pres. L. H. Hatch, to hold a ward conference at Tuba City, about two hundred miles west of Snowflake.

The company numbered twenty-nine souls. The first evening out from St. Joseph the following organization was effected: Captain, John Bushman; chaplain, John A. West; chorister, Mark E. Kartchner; secretary, A. L. Rogers. Prominent in the company were some of the officers of the Stake, as follows: Pres. L. H. Hatch; Superintendent of Sunday Schools, John A. West; his counselor, A. L. Rogers; president of the Elders, W. Ellis Stratton; and Reuben Parkinson, his counselor; Slater Phelan Kartchner, president of the Y. L. M. I. A.; Brother Mark E. Kartchner, one of the alternate members of the High Council and home missionary; Bishop John Bushman and wife, of St. Joseph; also Sisters W. J. West, Clara G. Rogers, Minnie Stratton, Addie Savage, the two daughters of President Hatch, besides young people and children to make up the company.

At Winslow a telegram was asked for from President J. N. Smith concerning the health of his daughter, whose sickness had prevented him from being one of the party. He replied that a favorable turn had taken place and there were hopes for her recovery.

The journey to Tuba City was made in four days from St. Joseph, and six from Snowflake.

The Songs of Zion were sung and prayers were offered faithfully for the success of the mission, for the welfare of those who remained at home and for the interest of Zion in every land. The evenings were spent around the campfire relating missionary experience, singing and reciting, which tended to make the journey enjoyable.

On arriving at Tuba City we were most hospitably entertained by Bishop Brinkerhoff and the members of his ward.

Five meetings were held at Tuba City and one at Moundsby. All the vacant offices in the ward were filled and a good spirit prevailed. Brother Orville E. Bates was appointed Presiding Elder of the Moundsby branch of the Tuba City ward.

All the people here are in the enjoyment of good health. We found no excitement about the Indians.

The people seemed to have a desire to serve God, as expressed by many of them that were called to speak during the meetings.

President Hatch and the brethren and sisters that spoke seemed to be full of the good spirit, good will, and blessings to the people of that far-off desert land, and it was abundantly returned by the people of the ward, who did all in their power to make us comfortable in the good things of the earth and in genuine brotherly love and kindness.

In the course of the remarks the people were exhorted to set good examples to the Indians, to cultivate a friendly relation with them, not gamble with them, nor do anything that would disgrace the name we bear. The truth of the Gospel was testified to in power; the people were warned against any who did not acknowledge Brigham Young as the man called of God as was Moses of old to lead this people to the mountains.

In cultivating the earth, work should be done in the time of it in order to secure the best result. Parents should seek to make the home attractive to their children. A lively interest should be taken by all in the Sunday School. In the quorum and society meetings.

At the meeting appointed to be held at Brother Bates' place on the evening of the 14th, nearly all the people of Tuba accompanied the party and were again fed with the word of God. President Hatch was especially endowed with great power upon this occasion, and blessed the people.

After the close of the services the multitude was loth to part and mutual visits and entertainment followed which lasted until a late hour. Some of the party visited the grave of Lot Smith, who was killed by Indians. It was in a lonely canyon; one part of the road was almost impassable to wagons. Brother Smith was one of the leaders of the Arizona mission. He established what might be called the Egypt of Arizona and hundreds were fed from the sunlit bins and tables and sent on their way rejoicing. He was shot near the place where young George A. Smith was killed.

On the return to St. Joseph, on the 18th, a ward conference was held.

The four meetings which were called on that day and evening were largely attended and the same spirit was made manifest as upon all former occasions. All vacancies were filled that were needful in the ward. With the earnest and cheering blessings again of President Hatch the meetings were closed. The traveling party was here broken up, a part remaining in St. Joseph, the rest returning as they wished to their homes, after an absence of two weeks. All felt well paid for their time and expense and the little sacrifice they had made, for they had blessed and comforted a good and pure people and in blessing they had been blessed.

MARY J. WEST.

SNOWFLAKE, A. T., September 1st, 1892.

DEATH OF THE REV. FATHER N. F. SCALLAN.

The Reverend Father N. F. Scallan of the Catholic Church in this city died at the Holy Cross Hospital at 1:30 Saturday, October 15th.

The publication of his death will be received with surprise even by the members of his own faith, for it was not generally known that he was seriously ill. He had, however, suffered a long time from an injured leg. Inflammation recently set in and it was found necessary to amputate one of his toes. Blood poisoning followed the operation by the surgeons and death was the result.

Father Scallan was well-known in this city and was much respected. To the members of the Catholic church he was united with endearing ties and they will sincerely mourn his death. He was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1844. Some years later the Scallan family came to America, settling at Mt. Mellary, Iowa. Here the deceased obtained his early education in a monastery of Trappist monks. Later he entered an ecclesiastical college under the charge of Archbishop Haenel, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. In this institution he was given his theological and classical training. He held important positions in his church in different parts of the United States and came to Utah in November, 1890, where he resided until his demise.

WREATHED in a serious grin, the information comes from Ogden that the Liberal central committee wish it announced that the parade and torchlight procession planned for tonight has been abandoned "on account of the weather." "Two degrees more of chilliness would cause them to wish it announced that the convention planned for today had also been abandoned on account of the weather. The melancholy days have come!"

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, $2.50
Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, . . . 1.50
IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, October 22, 1892.

AN IMPORTANT CASE BEFORE THE U. S. SUPREME COURT.

An important and interesting case is now engaging the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States, it being a test of the celebrated Miner electoral law of Michigan. A couple of years ago the Democratic party of the Wolverine State, finding itself for the first time since the war in possession of every department of the local government, cast about it to discover where political advantages might be had and utilized, and about the first thing that occurred to the leaders was the enactment of such a law as would render it impossible for the Republicans thereafter to have everything their own way as formerly. Armed with such a purpose, a legislator named Miner thrust his shining harpoon into the waters of inventive diplomacy and pulled forth a scheme to secure to the Democracy a proportion of the electoral vote of the state for President and Vice-President; this to be accomplished by having the electors chosen by Congressional districts instead of in bulk by the people of the whole state, the party receiving more votes than any other thus taking all the electors. The Democrats can nearly always, and generally do, carry a fair proportion of the districts, but carrying the state itself is a feat which, as previously set out, does not happen to them so frequently, say once in thirty years or thereabout. Michigan has eleven members of Congress and a corresponding number of electors, besides two more at large, corresponding with the state's representation in the Senate; these two the Miner bill proposed to also separate, having one part of the state, which was described, elect one and the rest of it the other. It is only stating the case fairly to say that the bill aimed at fairness in this, no matter whether its author so intended or not; for it had one of the sections as hopelessly Democratic as good judgment based upon past political experience could make it, and the Democracy being thus hurried together for election purposes in one of the grand districts, would of necessity make the other one just as hopelessly Republican. What could be more impartial than that? A perfectly equal division—who had any right to complain of so equitable an adjustment? The districts were to be fought for each by itself, and each would have to look out for itself; but if the Democrats held the ones they carried two years ago they would have nine of them and the Republicans two, making the electoral vote of the state stand ten for Cleveland and three for Harrison, instead of thirteen for the latter, as would undoubtedly be the case under the old plan. Now the mind that could devise so excellent an arrangement as that deserves something better than rebuff and harsh criticisms, but Mr. Miner is getting and has got from his friends the enemy an abundant quantity of both.

Well, the Republicans are so thoroughly dissatisfied with the "deal" that they have carried it, as suggested, to the highest tribunal in the land. They had previously tested it in the highest court of the state, and the case had gone against them, that body holding that the law was constitutional. It is perhaps proper to observe that while the law was passed purely for political advantage and in the interest of a political party, it has been and is being resisted on precisely the same grounds and with the same objects in view. In fact, Attorney General Miller, of counsel for the Republicans before the Supreme Court, admitted as much in his argument yesterday. Said he: "I am perfectly well aware that the people have been robbed by unjust apportionments by the party to which I belong as well as by the party to which I am opposed, and it is high time the courts should say to those whores that it is just as much larceny to steal political rights as to steal private property." Very true, Mr. Miller; the people of Utah would applaud you for that statement if you were near enough to hear them do it.

Viewed and considered simply as a question of law, we are unable to see how the United States Supreme Court can do otherwise than did the Michigan Supreme Court, by affirming the constitutionality of the law. In construing a case of this kind, of course all consideration of this, that or another party being favored or injured will be set aside and the adjudication had upon the broad ground of whether or not the enactment is or is not in consonance with the express terms of the great charter of the country. This instrument, it would seem, makes it a very plain case; it says the electors (President and Vice-President) in each state "shall be appointed in such manner as the legislature thereof shall direct." This places the whole matter within the control of the local law-making body, and it may properly direct that all the people elect all the electors or that the choice thereof be confined to districts, each electing its own. This is precisely what the Michigan legislature did, and if it did wrong the fault would seem to be with the Constitution and not with the power acting pursuant thereto. The only ground on which the national court could interfere, it would seem, would be where inequality or unfair tests in the matter of voting were pre-erred, and this does not seem to have been done in the Michigan case, even if the practical results aimed at were more favorable to one party than they previously were.

However, as an authority has it, "the Supreme Court is presumed to know something;" and before settling down to a conclusion on the subject, it would perhaps be as well to wait and see what this august tribunal has to say in the matter.

A new paper has sprung into existence at Richfield, published by the S. S. academy.

WITH INTENT TO DECEIVE.

The people in the railroad interests are giving it out that if shippers do not accept compromises it means endless litigation; that is, it will necessitate a lawsuit on every shipment to get the advantage of any decision that might be obtained from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The facts are the very opposite of this. If a case is tried before the commission and the suit is favorable, they will make a schedule of maximum rates; should the railroads ignore their decision, the Chamber of Commerce would then apply to a United States circuit court for a restraining order to prevent the railroads from collecting more than the rates set by the commission. It would be heard as a case of equity, and the findings of fact and the decision of the commission would be taken as prima facie evidence. The injunction would be granted and the railroad would then have to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Pending the appeal they would be compelled to accept the rates fixed by the commission.

ANOTHER FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

The horrors of the late Russian famine were no sooner dissipated by relief than from the same source come ominous forebodings of still further distress from the same cause. These portents have grown apace as to frequency and generalization, and it would seem as though the peasantry in some portions of the empire, like those of Ireland, were foredoomed to ceaseless hunger so long as they remain where they are. Whether it be through bad management, poor soil, overpopulation or what not, we do not know; the unwelcome condition itself is known and threatens to become even more familiar than hitherto.

A recent number of the Boston Herald, in an article discussing this important and distressing subject, gives a report of Major Law, commercial attaché of the British embassy at St. Petersburg. It throws some important light on the future of Russian tillage farming and points out what are claimed to be the reasons why the famine of last year is likely to be repeated in time to come. He bears abundant testimony to the excellent spirit in which the nation as a whole met the famine of last year, and commends the wealthier classes for the "magnificent self-sacrifice and devotion" displayed in relieving it, but the evils which threaten tillage farming in Russia are such that no amount of care in the near future can prevent the repetition of the famine. "The reasons for this are several," says the report; "one is that the land is held in common by each village community, and that the soil is periodically distributed among the villagers, usually for a term of three years. The holdings for so short a time that no villager expects to see d money or labor in improving his allotment, and the land constantly deteriorates in its productive power. Then the severance of the ties between the great landowners and their peasants has allowed the village usurper to come in and make exactions, while the natural gambling spirit of the native is aroused to induce him to pledge the profits of his grain crop in order to satisfy his love of taking risks. Still another reason is that the raising of stock is being rapidly abandoned so that the land is robbed of its natural fertilizer. Yet another reason is, that the great belts of forest that used to prevent the winds of the steppes from devastating the black soil country have been cut away, so that the wind often destroys the crops and mixes sand with the soil, so that a year's work goes for nothing." All these causes work against the Russian agriculturist, and there is, Major Law thinks, nothing to prevent the repetition of the Russian famine at any season.

The aid that is supplied to the Russians now and hereafter should, it would seem, be as much a draft upon science as upon material resources; of course so large and populous an area of country cannot remain continuously a dependency of the earth at large, and unless some better systems than these at present in vogue are discovered and applied, some such condition or widespread starvation are threatened, and the latter will not, as things stand, be very distant in the future either. Something should be done, but what to do and how to do it is the question; there is no lack of willingness, it would seem, anywhere.

DIFFERENCES THERE MUST NEEDS BE

The reasons advanced by some of the political writers and speakers in Utah and the adjacent states why all the Mormons ought to be Democrats might with equal propriety be urged in support of the proposition that all the American people ought to be Democrats. The only reasonable arguments cited in the one case would be just as potent and applicable in the other. The appeal to passion or prejudice or revenge is not worthy the name of argument in either case, and, in, and ought to be, left out of consideration altogether.

While the Democratic heart very naturally desires that every other heart in the whole broad land shall be Democratic also, and may think there are abundant reasons why it should be so, it happens that the Republican heart is quite as ardent in the wish that all other hearts should be Republican and believes it has just as good grounds for its desire. The result of these very proper yet quite antagonistic aspirations is that there are millions of Republicans and millions of Democrats, neither party claiming anything like universality in the nation, and each so conscious of the strength of the other that at every election the utmost efforts are put forth to obtain or retain the advantage in governmental concerns.

The zealous partisan on either side, no matter how positive his notion as to what ought to be, finds himself therefore confronted by the stern condition that his is only one side of the political controversy, the other being championed with such ability that it, too, has a host of defenders. This being the case in the country at large, why should it not be the case with the Mormons? Is it any less an insult to the intelligence of the Mormons to say they ought all to be Democrats than it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people to say they all ought to be Democrats also? Is there, indeed, anything less dogmatic in the claim that all Mormons should be Democrats than in the claim that they should all be Republicans?

Speaking to its readers as "Mormons," the News wishes to say that as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints their duty is to live their religion and keep the commandments of God. Politically they may have their preferences for this or the other party, and these they may entertain and follow without violating those commands. In the enjoyment of these and all other prerogatives of freemen they will of course be on their guard against the tricks of the demagogue and the sallow counsel of the sophist. In the line of political advice this is about all the News feels called upon to offer.

IRISH HOME RULE.

An exchange sententiously remarks that home rule for Ireland being now in the hands of the Irish themselves, it remains to be seen whether or not history will repeat itself. By this, we suppose, is meant an insinuation that the alleged Milesian characteristic of being unable to agree will operate to defeat the home rulers even when they have victory within their grasp; but it is ungenerous and illogical. Supposing the Irishmen in Parliament unite perfectly with their English and Scotch partisans and get a bill providing for an Irish legislature through the House of Commons, would that settle the matter? Not at all. The measure would then go to the House of Lords which is known to be hostile to any such plan as giving the Emerald Isle a separate law-making body, no matter in what form it might come before the Lords nor how unobjectionable in details. The bill being killed in the upper house, the blame for its failure would rest there of course, and not upon the sons of Erin in the lower chamber. We might as well be fair in dealing with this subject, and there is no fairness in saying that the people named have everything in their own hands.

IMPORTANT TO SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

J. B. Walden, Esq., of this city, very kindly places at the disposal of the News the following correspondence, which is self-explanatory and which is gladly published because of the importance of the subject to school trustees throughout the Territory:

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 3, 1892.
Hon. Judge Boreman, Ogden, Utah:

My dear Sir—For the purpose of ascertaining the authority that school boards in the different districts throughout the Territory of Utah have, in the issuance of bonds, I call your attention to Article XIV. of the laws passed by the Legislature of 1892. Under this act, is any school district authorized to issue $3000 of bonds, or are they restricted to a 2 per cent valuation upon the property in said district?

The law as it reads appears somewhat ambiguous, and those desiring to buy this class of bonds, are necessarily hampered in bidding for, and also in securing a legal issue. Section 92 and Section 93 seem somewhat conflicting. Was it the intent of the Legislature to allow any school district to build a $3,000 school house, and issue bonds accordingly, or was it their intent that each of them should be limited to a 2 per cent valuation?

Will you please give me a ruling upon this proposition, and if it does not come within your jurisdiction, kindly refer it to the proper source?

Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. B. WALDEN.

In answer to this query Judge Boreman, in his capacity of Territorial superintendent of district schools, writes as follows:

OGDEN, Utah, October 10, 1892.
J. B. Walden, Esq., Salt Lake City, Utah:
Dear Sir—Yours of the 3rd inst. was duly received, but I was called out of the Territory for a few days and thus answering was delayed.

Under the sections (92 and 93) of the school law referred to by you, no school district containing less than five hundred inhabitants can issue bonds to a greater amount than three thousand dollars for any one school house; but where the district contains more than five hundred inhabitants, a greater amount of bonds can be issued, but in no district shall the amount exceed two per centum of the assessed valuation of the district. Section 92 would seem to indicate that the two per centum of valuation was confined to districts having over five hundred inhabitants, but section 93 makes it apply to all districts, whether having more or less than five hundred inhabitants. It seems to be the intent of the law that in every case before bonds can be issued (Section 93) the sworn statement of the trustees must show "that the amount of the bonds proposed to be issued does not exceed two per centum," etc. This requirement is not confined to districts of more than five hundred inhabitants.

I am, very truly, yours,
JACOB S. BOREMAN.

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL COUNCIL.

The triennial council of the Protestant Episcopal Church of North America, now in session in Baltimore, is considered one of the most important held by that denomination in this country. The convention numbers five hundred members and is divided into the House of Bishops and House of Deputies. The former consists of sixty-seven members and the latter has four clergymen and four laymen from each diocese. According to the rules of the church any change in the laws must be made by a convention and then be published throughout the local branches and finally be adopted by a subsequent convention. Three points of great importance are before the present assembly: The revision of the ritual and the hymn book, and the discussion of church union.

AN EASTERN paper wants to see Bismarck at the World's Fair. It says if he will come over he will be given a reception that will keep the Emperor awake nights. That ought to be inducement enough, surely.

ASKING FOR TOO MUCH.

Now comes the New York Mail and Express with the suggestion that the railroad, during the World's Fair, enrich themselves while enriching mankind by putting the show within the reach of all possible visitors. The plan proposed is for the roads to fix a minimum rate for which a train of 500 passengers can be taken from Gotham to Chicago, and the paper quoted thinks this need not exceed one dollar per capita. It is urged that inasmuch as the proposed train would form a separate classification from any now existing, it would in no wise interfere with existing arrangements nor open the way for rate demoralization.

All of which is very fine, but the truly good editor of the M. and E. ought to know if he does not that railroads are neither built nor run that way; that their stockholders are not in the business for the sake of conferring boons upon mankind, but, as Colonel Ellerbe once expressed it, for the purpose of declaring dividends, and there would not be much of the latter in sight as the result of a dollar rate for a thousand mile ride. Of course, the roads will make a reduction, but it will only be to such extent as is likely to bring the receipts up to or above the normal through the increased patronage. Don't apply to railway corporations for public charities or any other kind, because you will not only lose your time and labor, but be burdened with the humiliation of refusal besides!

A good many people in this corner of the Republic would be awfully well pleased if they could get the corporate highways to be just, let alone charitable; this class is a very respectable one, embracing nearly every merchant or dealer of any kind in the country. They have petitioned, remonstrated, supplicated, everything but prostrated themselves, but the heavy weight of charges which amount in some cases to petit and in others to grand larceny (from a business point of view) is still upon them. Nobody here asks for a dollar or even a ten dollar rate to Chicago; what all do ask for and ought to have is a tariff schedule that will enable both the railways and themselves to realize something upon shipments; and if so modest a demand hangs fire so long, how much time will a request like that of Colonel Shepard be likely to consume in acquiring a propulsive movement!

BISMARCK'S PERTINACITY.

Prince Bismarck is one of those men who forget very slowly and who ever keep in mind the classical injunction, nulla vestigia retrogredi; that is, the exercise of the crab in proceeding backward is not one of their weaknesses. In his opposition to the Emperor, which was never more pronounced than now, he has of late been invoking the aid of the press, being determined that if possible the German people shall view the situation through the same kind of spectacles that he employs.

The ground most recently taken by the Chancellor, which the Boston Herald pronounces well calculated to efface any suggestions of personality, is that "the Roman Catholics of Germany are acquiring altogether too much political importance, and this in consequence of the fact that the Emperor, finding it necessary to secure a parliamentary majority, has granted concession after concession to them in consideration of their support of the various measures he has advanced." Prince Bismarck, says the authority quoted, affirms that the way to offset this is to have a parliamentary coalition formed among the representatives of the stalwart, right thinking German people, who, by commanding a majority in the Reichstag, can overthrow the Roman Catholic plots, and compel the Emperor to rule in accordance with parliamentary methods. If the ex-Chancellor were a man wedded to the notions of consistency, he would realize so keenly the personal change of front involved in his present pretensions that he would not have the face to put them forward; for he is now trying to undo and reverse the theories and practices of imperial control and parliamentary management for which he, more than anyone else, is responsible.

It should be remembered that it was Bismarck who made concessions to the Catholics for the same reason that many politicians nearer home do similar things—to get their votes, and the record further shows that he has repeatedly presented how impossible it was to maintain parliamentary government in Germany. The vacillating course of the once leading and controlling mind in the councils of the empire stands out in strong and strange contrast with the deportment of the young ruler, who, however much he may have rendered himself liable to criticism for alleged arrogance and self-sufficiency, has nevertheless under all trials preserved his equanimity and maintained his dignity throughout. To the impartial mind it looks very much as though Bismarck were gnawing a file and had so far outgrown his judgment as to be unconsciously of it.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

A brand new industry is about to be created in the most northwesterly corner of our public domain, and if Congress were in session it would be a good scheme to call its attention to the matter, to the end that those who engage in such business might be salaried officers of the government. There are not enough places to go around yet, and whenever so excellent an opportunity for creating a few more, and that, too, where they are likely to be needed, is developed, it should not be ignored.

A dispatch yesterday briefly announced the shipment of a herd of reindeer to Alaska for the use and sustenance of the aborigines there. As the latter never used the animals, and in most cases never even saw one, they will have to be taught and this necessitates teachers—"Teacher of reindeer utility to the Rij adams," by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, would do for one appointive position; and then he would have to have numerous assistants—"keeper of the national reindeer," "herder of Federal reindeer," and so on. While ameliorating the condition and cultivating the mentality of the dusky citizens of Oonalska, why not, in patriotic fashion, do something for ourselves at the same time?

SUICIDE CLUBS.

Occasionally the reading public is shocked by the announcement that some member of a suicide club has complied with the edict thereof by taking his own life. Such items are not so very frequent, but they come along with tolerable regularity, albeit they lose none of their grossness nor generally objectionable features to the well balanced mind by reason of that.

There are two or three of these repulsive organizations in this country, if report may be believed. One is at Bridgeport, Conn., one each in Philadelphia and Chicago, and perhaps one in New York, though there is no certainty regarding either of them excepting the first, the existence of which seems well authenticated.

A Boston paper thinks the talk about these clubs in our country "is to be accepted with several grains of allowance. The taking of one's own life is seldom done in a freak of eccentricity. Human nature is so constituted that nothing but insanity or the strongest dread of disgraceful exposure drives men to it. The idea of suicide finds refuge otherwise only in the weakest brains, and, fortunately, such brains are usually accompanied by a cowardly temperament which leads the victims of this tendency to fear to carry out self-murder." But it remains a notorious fact that there have been several victims of the clubs spoken of, men who, with a perverted sense of honor, have obeyed the behest of the clan and kept the compact made with it by destroying themselves in the manner agreed upon. Perhaps the reason committing magistrates, grand juries and officers of the law do not make an effort to reach the inner workings of these loathsome organizations and make a few examples, is for some such reason as that outlined in the extract—they are afraid of being laughed at or accused of imitating Sacco Panza by killing at a windmill; but organized murder under the auspices of the suicide club is a reality all the same.

EVERY DAY proves the wisdom of the choice which made terra cotta the prevailing color of the World's Fair buildings at Chicago. Even the drinking water harmonizes with the prevailing hue.

THE POPULATION of Jerusalem is said to have increased in six years from 30,000 to 80,000 inhabitants. The greater part of these are Jews who have taken refuge in the Holy City on account of the persecutions of their race in Russia and elsewhere.

REMOR SAYS that Tippu Tib, the celebrated Arabian merchant in Africa, known from H. M. Stanley's description of his travels in the interior of the Dark Continent, intends paying a visit to Europe. He wants to see England and Belgium particularly.

GOD'S WILL BE DONE.

No sweeter spirit ever left the realms of light to take on the clothing of mortality than that which this morning was released from its tabernacle of clay in far-off Germany;—we speak of the eternal part of David Hongland Cannon, who has died in the line of duty while preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ and bearing the glad message of salvation to the inhabitants of the earth.

Even as a little child this boy gave evidence of the nobleness that goes to make up the character of perfect manhood. A affectionate, unselfish, generous, even-tempered—he possessed all the graces that win the heart's love; quick, energetic, thorough, of the highest integrity, he compelled the honest admiration of every one who knew him. As he grew from childhood to youth, and then strode sturdily from youth to man's estate, he lost none of his tenderness and innocence—whoever loved him once, came to love him each day more and more. He was cherished as a glory and a pride in his father's house, and he was an honor to human kind. Unassuming but zealous, he brought to his missionary labors the same qualities that distinguished him always—he went into the work in hand with his whole soul. A bright and useful future seemed to be opening before him; he would have proven capable and worthy every where. That his Maker had other uses for him than a mission here on earth, we who mourn his loss must with resignation admit. And though the praise of man be never sought and now can never need, still may his brothers' burning hearts put forth this feeble tribute to his goodness, while they exclaim, God's will be done!

THE OWNERSHIP OF AEROLITES.

The supreme courts of the country are having a good deal that is important and interesting to pass upon nowadays; occasionally, also, they have to contend with a proposition that is novel. One of the most unforeseen problems that ever engaged the attention of any tribunal was recently adjudicated by the supreme court of Iowa, dealing as it did with matter not of the earth, the subject in controversy being nothing more or less than a meteor. The question as to the ownership of the visitor from other realms was in dispute, and the court held that a "bolt from heaven" which has become partly buried in a farmer's (or, we presume, anybody else's) land is placed there by nature and belongs to the land, ergo to the owner of the land. A stranger or outsider who may have seen the visitation first, have been the only one in attendance when it arrived, and who under ordinary circumstances would have some rights in the premises as the discoverer the court holds is not "in it" at all; he has no more right to the meteoric stone than he has to any other boulder on another man's ground.

As the question never arose in court before, so far as the records show, and is not likely to occur again, it may be considered as thoroughly settled; unless, indeed, the discoverer should choose to take his case to the United States Supreme Court on the ground that it is a subject involving a foreign country.

THE CRY OF STATEHOOD.

The resolutions adopted by the Liberals at their territorial convention at Ogden last Wednesday consist of little less than laudation of the aims and works of that party and condemnation of the aims, accomplishments and intentions of the other parties past and present in Utah. This being in a general way the purport of Liberal resolutions and platforms during "all the years," it comes this time without the charm of novelty, and is even devoid of the force that sometimes accompanies earnest repetition. For these reasons public interest in the resolutions did not warrant their reproduction in full, nor would it now justify extended comment upon them. Thrashing old straw is at best a healthful exercise, and only then to be resorted to when nothing else is on hand; it is always unprofitable and can never be made interesting.

The one point in the resolutions that is not open to the charge of utter senility is the bugaboo of statehood; and this, as is quite natural in the extremity to which their framers found themselves reduced, is made to do yeoman service. Thus we find that the Liberal party "recoils from the prospect of imminent statehood;" it views the conclusion as irresistible that "with the opportunity which would come with statehood this priesthood would again assume supreme control;" it is "unilaterally opposed to near statehood for Utah;" and "believing that the only organized opposition to the scheme for the admission of Utah into the Union must come from the Liberal party," it calls upon all who believe that near statehood would be fraught with disaster to vote for the Liberal nominee for Delegate to Congress. There may be a few more references to the subject scattered along here and there over the platform, but the foregoing will be sufficient to show that the case is really deemed serious and the resolutionists are in very great distress about it.

It would be almost too bad to ridicule the fears that are embodied in these sentences, and yet that is precisely what they deserve. We take it that they are based upon a presumed anxiety of "this Priesthood" and the Mormon people to secure statehood and their participation in "the scheme" to bring it about. Statehood in itself, or say in an abstract sense, is not, we suppose, so dreadful a condition, even to a party calling itself Liberal. If there were no Mormons to be benefitted by it, there is scarcely a single Liberal who would lose much sleep over it or do so much "recoiling" at its prospect. There is scarcely a citizen so unpatriotic, even among the Tuscaroras, as to deny that in all that constitutes material fitness, Utah is prepared for the sovereignty of a state; scarcely an American, by birth, adoption or inclination that disputes this fair Territory's qualifications for full admission to and an equal recognition in the grand national sisterhood. But there are Mormons here! Ah, that gives another phase to the whole matter!

Now, the News cannot speak for the Democratic and Republican parties in the Territory, nor assert how much or how little they may mean or how sincere or insincere they may be in their various declarations and their somewhat confusing elucidation of their respective attitudes on this question of statehood. In all candor we suspect that both of them are playing largely for effect—perhaps only for the alarming effect that seems to have been produced upon the Liberals. We can say, however, in all certainty that it is not their position upon this question that is winning them adherents among the Mormons. The promises of either party in this respect would make no difference in the political affiliations of a Mormon who inclined to the other side. Nor would the division of the Mormons on party lines be one particle less sincere if the whole question of statehood were eliminated altogether. If these assertions puncture the Liberal talloon and let the gas out of it, so much the worse for the balloon; its texture ought to be something that will not suffer from thrusts of fact—and these are facts.

For 42 years the people of Utah have existed under a territorial form of government and despite every opposing circumstance they have prospered. If they haven't learned to like that form during all these years, they have at least become used to it. Their taxes have been low, their communities kept out of debt; and since the expenses of government were only partially laid upon them, they felt that the condition of tutelage or wardship was not without compensating benefit. When conditions have been such that they felt themselves oppressed by the representatives of the general government they have asked the privilege of self-government; ordinarily they have taken the frugal view that so long as the general government insisted on paying the expenses of our officials the privilege might be left to them. And certainly the present harmonious and contented condition of the Territory—so different to others through which we have passed—is one to cause every resident to think twice before wishing to fly from present ills to others that we know not of.

No; the Liberal party has no ground or its alarm if it thinks the Mormons, either Priesthood or people, are in "a scheme" to secure "immediate statehood." The Mormons are so much better satisfied with their surroundings and circumstances today than with those which have preceded them that they are quite willing to leave well enough alone. They are not inviting any increased burdens these hard times when taxes are high enough already. They will not of course elect the responsibilities of statehood and its added expenses when they come, but they are contented to wait until everybody feels that they ought to come. Whenever move toward statehood is being made at present, if any such there really is, comes from other than Mormon sources. And when the boon so well-deserved is at last bestowed, it will be found that other than Mormon influences have been brought to bear to bring it about.

We say, therefore, gentlemen of the Liberal party, dismiss your fears upon this subject! We speak emphatically and advisedly when we say that the Mormon Church, its Priesthood or its members do not desire the admission of Utah as a state under present conditions and with present feelings; and we announce for them that until such conditions arise—as they undoubtedly will arise sooner or later—that the admission of Utah will be as desirable to non-Mormons generally as it is to the Mormon people, the Mormon people will not urge statehood, nor take steps to secure it.

THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S RELIEF SOCIETY.

Readers of the News and others interested in the Relief Society as it exists in the communities of the Saints, have doubtless noticed the announcement that the organization has recently assumed a corporate form and taken upon itself the name of the National Woman's Relief Society. There are good and sufficient reasons for this; it has not been taken hastily nor without due consideration; its wisdom will be conceded by all who give to the subject a little intelligent thought.

The Relief Society is an organization of fifty years' standing in the Church. During that long period, and especially since the re-organization in Utah, the members of the Society have collected and expended and accumulated a vast amount of means. No one questions the business methods which have prevailed in the past nor is unmindful of the inestimable benefits that the organization has conferred. Yet the time has now come when it seems not only proper but expedient and desirable that some arrangement should be made by which the Society can more securely hold the property, buildings and real estate which belong to it, and transact its other business in all respects in a legal and authorized way. The Society is really both national and international. It has stakes and branches in our communities in this country, as well as in foreign lands and upon the islands of the sea. This explains the adoption of the word "National" in the title. The other prefix, "Woman's," would seem to be quite appropriate; it is indeed necessary for an organization composed entirely of women. The Society, as is well known to its members, is connected with the National Council of Women and also with the International Council of Women, composed of great associations, societies and orders of women from all parts of the civilized world; and its president, by virtue of her office, is one of the vice-presidents of these councils and has a vote and voice in their executive sessions in the transaction of all business. The Society is also entitled to representation through delegates in all these vast assemblages of women; and in order to conform to their regulations some step of the kind just taken became necessary in the interest of the progress and advancement of the cause.

The Society can now securely hold its own property and can give a satisfactory answer to the question, in case of a legacy or gift bestowed or other possessions acquired, "how are your titles vested and what proof can you give that the means contributed to your organization will be used for the purposes claimed?" For this reason, so important in this practical age, and for the other reasons cited, the Relief Society has gone through the formality of incorporating according to law; and under its new title it proposes to continue and hopes to improve upon the beautiful mission its founders and members and friends have ever had in view concerning it.

AND STILL THEY COME.

One more victim to the iconoclastic juggernaut. That ride of General Sheridan to the battle of Winchester—a feat which has been immortalized in prose and poetry and been used (and abused in many cases) on the rostrum, in the schoolroom and on the stage—never took place in the manner and form set out at all, it seems. After decapitating poor old Barbara Frohlie and by so doing plucking a leaf from Stonewall Jackson's laurels, the idol-wreckers prepared us for almost anything, even to the extent of hearing that General Sherman's march to the sea was planned and carried out by a subordinate; but we haven't got to that yet. The thing in order now is putting to flight the glories of that famous ride, which is effectually accomplished if the following, from the St. Louis Globe Democrat, is to be relied on:

"I once had a talk with Gen. Phil Sheridan about his famous Winchester ride," said Judge O. S. Stoddard to the Reminiscence Club that was holding a seance at the Southern. "It was immediately after the appearance of the poem celebrating that thrilling event. I read it through to him, and he stood for a few moments, switching his boots with a sprig of hazel bush, then said slowly: 'I think if the versifier had seen that seed 'as blown in the seeds of night,' and knew how I had to spur and whip the old crow-bait to get it to go over the road, he would not have had the attack of hysteria of which that poem is the offspring. Once my famous charger stumbled, and I came near going over his head into a mud-puddle. Instead of his plunging with me into the thickest of the fray he played out completely, and I had to take the mount of an orderly. The rhymers are blessed with very vivid imaginations.'"

After this, all there is left for us to do is to lay back and wait for the next development. In view of recent events in this line, we shall certainly not have to wait very long.

AS TO SILVER.

These monometalists who impute to over-production the continued decline of silver, are (perhaps not without some knowledge of the fact) perpetrating a denials scheme. They profess an entire willingness to let the silver dollar circulate freely alongside the gold dollar, demanding that the only difference between them be in weight and appearance; that is, they must possess equal value. But if the quantity of silver on hand and that being taken out of the earth have been the means of reducing the value of the white metal, how is it to be placed on a parity with gold and kept there? According to the single standard people's professed idea, enough of silver valued at its market price in gold should be put into a dollar to make it fit company for the other, which of course means the market price at the present time; but, as is further professed, it is not the design to ruin or cripple the silver industry and this going ahead as now would soon further reduce the price as gauged by gold and then a few grains more would have to be added to the white dollar to keep up its respectability; then further increase in production would have to be met in the same way, and so on, the coin being enlarged in proportion to the enlarged quantity of silver obtained, until at last it would become so big and clumsy that it would not be used at all. Yet the monometalists aim at "stability" in our currency! And is furthermore willing to concede that silver is a royal metal, more useful for money than anything else, but it must be made and kept on an equality with gold—by constantly debasing its function and driving it at last into practical disuse!

Silver possesses most of the attributes of gold. It is enduring, malleable, ductile, flexible, incorruptible and really more beautiful to look upon than the other. That gold is more valuable argues nothing against silver, for the intrinsic qualities of either are the merest conventionalism—a fiction of mankind and nothing else. Qualities are all that make real value in men or the things used by men, and that being the case, there is no just reason for the continued degradation of silver; that it is obtained in more places and more plentifully as a rule should amount to nothing more than making it so much less in demand and less valuable only to a certain limit, or we might as well completely demote it at once as already shown. This would necessitate the establishment of a ratio which once fixed should remain, unless the unlikely should happen and a vast mountain of either gold or silver in its pure condition be discovered; this would of course render the metal so found a mere merchant-ble commodity like coal and iron, and it would then naturally enough be forced out of its position of royalty into one of servility.

As things are at present and promise to remain for a long time at least, there is no probability of more gold or silver being mined than can be assimilated as money by the human family. Nature has guarded her treasures very well and scattered and thinned them so that only so much can be obtained. A great deal of both metals goes into the arts and is consumed by the sciences, while a goodly quantity is constantly being lost in various ways—everything before and after discovery thus tending to equalization and a limited supply. What is wanted is a double standard, each metal having a fixed one for itself and not dependent on the other; they would thus become interchangeable at will and the vexed question would then disappear.

E. M. Allison seems to lead in the race as Republican candidate for mayor of Ogden.

THE OLD CONTINENTAL.

And now comes the announcement that the Continental Hotel in this city is to close its doors and go out of the business altogether. Probably it is a fact that of late the establishment has been conducted at an expense to its management, but as to this we cannot speak with certainty; it is enough to know that since the palmy days of the Continental the hotel business in Salt Lake has received a great impetus and assumed metropolitan proportions, thus not only dividing the old patronage but cutting seriously into the new, expenses not being curtailed proportionately meanwhile.

This city has half a dozen hotels that would be a credit to any place. This refers not only to their great capacity and their fine exteriors, but to their furnishings, accommodations and manner of doing things as well. By common consent the Continental was one of these so far as interior arrangements were concerned; but its style of architecture long since drifted out of the modern, and as the age run to newness and outward display, the home-like as well as homely attractiveness of the place lost its power and the patronage largely went the same way.

What a tale its old walls could tell! they could speak! How often have they echoed the revelry of parties from far and near on pleasure bent, while the mingling of happy voices and the patter of little feet have floated through its corridors like a cadence of home and the dear one! From its low-browed veranda the silver-tipped sarcasm, stately periods and dignified humor of Schuyler Colfax, Francis P. Blair, William T. Sherman, William H. Seward, George Francis Train, Benjamin F. Butler and, if we mistake not, James G. Blaine and Thomas A. Hendricks, have held the attention of vast throngs, while its register contains some names to mention which is to almost make one unconsciously take off his hat in very reverence—Ulysses S. Grant, Philip H. Sheridan and many more we cannot now recall. That was in the days when the Continental—or as it was then called, the Townsend House—was not only the "finest in the land," but the only hostelry hereabout occupying the first place or anywhere near it;—when it was considered big enough and good enough for anybody, and so indeed it was.

All the landmarks, like those who created them, are passing along. Soon will our part of the footstool be in possession of a wholly new aspect and an entirely different array of people from those we knew and mingled with when the Continental was erected. "Uncle Jimmy" Townsend, its builder and once proprietor, has long since been numbered with the silent hosts beyond, and his work is at last drooping in the realm of desuetude. It and all things and people cotemporaneous with it have well nigh had their day; the shadows reach out further and further to the East, antipating by only a little the time when they shall cease to be and shall become blended with the impenetrable shades of an endless night.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

The Peoria Journal, a staunch Republican paper, propounds a series of questions for certain Democrats to answer, this being one of them:

Can you name a single manufacturing city in free trade England where the best skilled mechanic owns the roof over his head?

We care nothing for the political aspect of the question, but viewing the matter from a strictly economic standpoint will make a few remarks regarding it.

To attribute the "homeless condition" of the people of England to free trade, which the question does by implication, is to mislead and misrepresent. The News is not a partisan for either free trade or protection, neither is it an apologist for or upholder of any political party as such; we present as a matter of history and statistics that the skilled English laborer is more prosperous of late years than formerly; that is, under a tariff schedule which is so very limited and light as to amount to nothing practically considered, his wages are higher and his general condition more improved than when custom houses were numerous and nearly every imported article was dutiable. The fact that few, if any, of the British mechanical workmen own their own homes is due neither to tariff nor the absence of it, but to a system which obtained in the feudal days and cannot be changed without a revolution. The lord of the manor, otherwise the landlord, is by hereditary the representative of one class, the "villain," "fief" or tenant the element making up the other by the same rule. It should also be remembered that while England has more than half the population that we have, any one of our larger states is equal or superior to England in area, and in many cases in productiveness also. We have land to give away here, and nothing short of improvidence or the hardest kind of luck can prevent a man from being a "lord" in his own right if he sees fit; whereas, in England there is no land to be had except at such rates as no laboring man can begin to meet. These points of explanation, we think, throw more light on the situation and its causes than any amount of political lecturing could do.

As a commercial and manufacturing rather than a productive nation, England must have open ports and open markets; as to whether or not such condition would be beneficial to or is desirable in this country, which by comparison is productive and manufacturing rather than commercial—that is another question altogether. It constitutes the sum and substance of the tariff controversy in the political arena and is a matter concerning which we have nothing to say.

While Deputy Sheriff Tom Casanage and Special Officer Charles Winston were attempting to arrest three drunken Yaqui Indians near Calabasas, Arizona, the latter opened fire on their pursuers, shooting Winston through the fleshy part of the left leg. The Indians escaped to the hills.

AN INTERESTING RELIC.

One would think that a railway car constructed for President Lincoln and which he occupied going to the front during the later operations of the army in Virginia, would be too sacred a relic to be cast off in an out-of-the-way place and left to be devoured by the elements; but so it is. The murdered President not only used the car spoken of while he lived, but it bore his body from Washington to Springfield for interment. Since that time the car has been used variously, but principally by the leading officials of the Union Pacific road as their private car, and while thus employed it had quarters specially erected for it in Omaha, where it was housed when not in actual service. When it became old and rickety, it was permanently side-tracked at North Platte, Nebraska, and used as a place to live in by the division superintendents. It is there now, battered, broken and bruised, of no use save as a reminder of that dark and dismal period the crowning and brightest event of which was the close of the war and the saddest feature the unprovoked assassination of the Chief Magistrate. Sentiment that has no money in it takes form and shape very slowly in this materialistic age.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION SUSTAINED.

The News is in receipt of the full text of the important ruling by Judge Wallace in the United States circuit court of the southern district of New York, which was previously but briefly spoken of in these columns. It appears that the case on hearing was that of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself vs. The Texas and Pacific Railway company; and it was brought upon a petition by the Commission for the enforcement of its order requiring the road to desist from carrying articles of imported traffic shipped from any foreign port upon through bills of lading to any place in this country at any other rates than are in vogue on the inland traffic of defendant for the shipment of similar traffic.

The defense of the company was in part that the Southern Pacific company was engaged in the same kind of traffic and had not been made a party to the action, concerning which baby-act the court held that "if the defendant is violating a proper order of the Commission it should be restrained from doing so and it cannot escape upon the objection that another wrong-doer is also violating it." It seems to us, at this distance, as though it was almost trifling with a court to require it to pass upon such a plea; but the average railway corporation perhaps looks upon courts as it does upon everything else it uses or is for a time an occupant or user of—they are to do whatever it wants done whether such things are customary and right or not. Once let the camel get his head into the window, and his body will soon follow.

The court further held that the law creating the Commission would be emasculated in its remedial agency, if not practically nullified, if a carrier can justify a discrimination in rates merely upon the ground that unless it is given the traffic of the kind and in the manner spoken of it would go to a competing carrier. This is about of a piece with the other. If it is unlawful to do such carrying, why not let the other company do it and thus have the latter subjected to the expense and annoyance of a "tussle" with the courts? Judge Wallace says on this point: "A shipper having a choice between competing carriers would only have to refuse to send his goods by one of them unless given exceptional rates to justify that one in making the discrimination in his favor on the ground of the necessity of the situation." He then granted the order prayed for by the Commission.

The government undertook a pretty heavy task when it vicariously essayed the regulation of railway traffic in this country, but it can scarcely be charged that it or its agents have used either their conferred or inherent powers harshly, arbitrarily or in such manner as to all at once overturn long-time conditions and thus precipitate disaster; the power that has been exercised has been in the line of reason and has aimed at securing equity for the roads and their patrons. We are still in need of some little regulation in Utah and the signs of the times point to securing it at no distant day; meantime, or at any time, we have no fight with or opposition to the railways. Let Caesar have all that is his and no more, is the proper arrangement.

A QUESTION OF CHRISTIANITY.

"Can a Chinaman become a Christian?" is the more curious than important question discussed by Rev. Frederick J. Masters in the Californian Magazine for October. The discussion is occasioned by an article which previously appeared in a journal of the Pacific coast, in which the author makes the following sweeping statements:

"The Chinese are irredeemably and irrevocably bad and vile, as a race, and all efforts to Christianize them only make them greater hypocrites than ever. . . . It is utterly folly to dream of the Chinese embracing the Christian religion, for it is alien to their disposition."

Mr. Masters admits that among the Chinese are to be found many totally depraved specimens of humanity and that the obstacles in the way of missionary labor among that people are formidable. Notwithstanding this, he claims that about 50,000 Chinamen have made open professions of Christianity and that not a few of these have been steadfast in the midst of persecutions and have even sealed their testimony with their lives. In addition to this, many Chinamen in this country, he says, have joined the churches and given evidence of sincerity. These facts he takes as indisputable proof that even the Chinamen can become Christians.

The question being purely theological can best be answered by reference to the Scriptures. An eminent Apostle declares that the Almighty made of one blood every nation of men, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitations that they should seek God, if perhaps they might feel after Him and find Him. And the commission given by the Founder of the Christian religion to His messengers was this, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; which does not appear to admit of a construction by which the Chinese are excepted. To the believers of the Scriptures, therefore, the question under consideration is uncalled for. If the Chinese belong to the great human family, they are capable of conversion and have some share in the benefits of the atoning work of our Lord. As living on the earth they are within the boundaries of the great sphere—extending in fact to both the heavens and the earth, both visible and invisible worlds—within which life and salvation are freely offered. They must therefore, as a matter of fact, be capable of accepting these benefits.

No one acquainted with the history of missions can very well deny that the efforts of missionaries have had some influence for good among the so-called "heathens." Only recently a missionary at Amoy, China, relates how old idols are gradually discarded in places where the doctrines of Christianity are proclaimed. As an instance of this, he mentions that during a conflagration which destroyed a temple, many images were consumed and nobody made an effort to save them. One remark was made at the time which expressed the sentiment of the multitude: "If these gods cannot help themselves, nor ask for assistance, they are less potent than rats, chickens and dogs." Incidents of this nature must be encouraging to those who labor for the overthrow of idolatry.

On the other hand, no one ought to dispute the fact that the success of the missionaries among the Chinese is hardly in proportion to the labor and means spent on the enterprise. The reasons for this are plain. In the first place, the Chinese are not a religious people. The stagnation which marks their civilization extends to religious ideas and sentiments. The educated classes profess Confucianism, which is hardly a religion at all, but a mere system of philosophy. Buddhism is more of a religious system, but it is evidently going to decay, its temples falling into ruins and its votaries held in contempt by the higher classes of the people. Taoism seems to have degenerated into a species of alchemy and spiritualism combined. And almost everywhere, utter indifference to religious subjects is noticeable. No one cares what religion his neighbor professes or what cultus he practices. And many are found who profess all the three creeds above referred to, while others reject all. No wonder that missionaries cannot make progress among a people who treat so lightly the subjects in which the missionaries are, or should be, chiefly interested.

In the next place, it is a question worthy of serious consideration whether Christianity, as it exists today in the world, can be expected to successfully cope with paganism in its various forms. Certain it is that in arguments with educated pagans the missionaries do not always appear to the best advantage.

When the Gospel of Christ first was proclaimed to the world its effect was to silence the most profound scholars among the opponents. It created enthusiasm among the converts. The pagan religious systems were shattered and the idols dethroned, while the multitudes turned to worship at the foot of the Crucified One. These effects were produced, not through the eloquence of the messengers, nor through their superior knowledge of the things in which the learned men of the age prided themselves, but by the power of the Divine Spirit with which they were filled, and by the uncompromising proclamation of truth. Similar results have followed the preaching of the Gospel of Christ in this age by His chosen messengers, and in consequence of the presence of the same Divine power. For after all, conversion is not the work of man—except as an instrument—but the work of the Almighty.

Now, the Christianity of today is not what it originally was. This is admitted by all, we believe. Its votaries do not believe in the presence of those gifts of the Divine power, which are its life and soul. Those gifts are disregarded. The form may partly be left, but without that Spirit it is dead. The Christianity of today is the work of man. It is reduced to a system, or to speak correctly, to many systems of semi-religious philosophy. It is artificial. It may have its use in the political and social structure of the world. But it is not identical with that which its Founder left as a sacred inheritance to His devoted followers. It is as different from the prototype as an electric lamp is from the glorious sun, and it is as powerless to promote a luxuriant vegetation as the former.

Christianity without inspired men; Christianity without the accompanying gifts; Christianity without prophecy, and—equally remarkable—Christianity without many of its fundamental doctrines—that is what the missionaries of today offer the heathen world. How can anybody be expected to accept it? It seems to be an invitation to feast on empty plates. No amount of decorative designs can compensate for the absence of real food.

This is the true condition of Christianity today. Hence its weakness and lack of progress both among the Chinese and other nations. Hence also the reason why it loses its hold among the masses in the civilized world, as well as among many of the most advanced of the age.

There is only one remedy for it and that is the return to the Gospel in its simplicity as restored to the world by revelation. There is some truth in the much contradicted statement of old Augustin, extra ecclesiam nulla salus; if rightly understood. The salvation of the human race is offered by the Almighty through the medium of His Church only. Any effort to truly Christianize the world by those who are not connected with the true Church are unauthorized and must be consequently ineffective.

It is claimed that in the death of George William Curtis and James G. Whitteer the female suffragists lost two of their ablest and most conspicuous champions. This does not seem to have been generally understood when those gentlemen were alive.

SALT LAKERS ABROAD.

John Drew, the actor, made his debut as a star in New York last week in the "Masked Ball." The gentleman is well known in this city, where he has appeared a great many times, always winning favor and that more commercial commodity which usually accompanies and always accelerates good work well done; but he is not so well known as are two members of his company—Auntie Adams and her daughter Maude, both of whom were born and raised right here in Salt Lake City. Speaking of the performance the World says:

Mr. Drew was the star, but not a predominant character of the play by any means. That excellent actor, Mr. Harwood, added another to his unbroken list of successes, and the climax of the second act—than which nothing finer has been seen on the local stage this season—was carried by an unexpected but strikingly infectious scene by Miss Maude Adams.

When we read such words we feel like thanking the critic very much, because it seems as though he was speaking well of a member of the family.

WHO SHALL SUCCEED TENNYSON?

The question of who shall wear the official mantle left by Alfred Tennyson is one that takes up a good deal of space in the newspapers of this country, and not a little of those on his side. The poet laureate is at any time a difficult one to fill satisfactorily because of the vast divergence of opinion as to worthiness, merit, etc.; but just at the present juncture we fancy that the task possesses additional features of difficulty. The selection is made by the national premier, and while no one can properly question the propriety of a choice made by a man with the patriotic purpose, knowledge of men and things and great intellectual attainments of Mr. Gladstone, still it is assured in advance that no matter upon whom the honor may fall, there will be greater discontent than when the premier announced his cabinet.

It is claimed in some quarters that there are no poets left in England who even approximate to the eminence of Tennyson, and those best known are not of the necessary bent by either instinct or training to undertake and successfully accomplish the trying task of singing praises of the royal family; also that some others who have the necessary temperament are not fit subjects for the appointment. A contemporary declares that it is high time, now that the place has been successfully filled by two of the greatest poets of the century, to allow it to pass out of existence, out of respect to those who have made it more famous than at any time since it was created; supplementing this suggestion with the somewhat pathetic conclusion—to which, however, the majority of readers will fully subscribe—that this is not a poetical age.

The poet laureate is an official member of the royal household, and hence, as previously suggested, must be in high standing socially and on good terms with the Queen and her numerous descendants and appendages. The office, under the name of "versemaker to the king," has been traced back as far as the reign of Henry VIII, over 600 years ago. It is also recorded of Henry that he kept minstrels, jesters and dwarfs, all of which places have long since given way to the pressure brought to bear by modern dignity, decorum and enlightenment, so that the versificator regis alone remains. The place has been held by some illustrious men, such as Spenser in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, old Ben Jonson, John Dryden and Wordsworth. The most promising candidates at the present time seem to be Buchanan and Swinburne, of whom it is said its bestowal would not make the former any greater as a poet nor the withholding of it from the latter any the less a poet; but the mention of either in close connection with the names previously given is apt to make the judicious grieve.

The office has evidently outlived its usefulness if it ever had any, and might as well go at a time when there are some other reasons for not filling it.

THE COAL SUPPLY.

Those who use coal, which means nearly everybody in our larger towns and cities, seldom reflect upon the fact that every shovelful placed upon the grate is a destruction for which there is no replenishment, that it is so much toward the complete exhaustion of that kind of fuel. Coal was not used at all in England till about or shortly after the discovery of America by Columbus, but the amount that has been consumed since that time is altogether incalculable, and the end, so far as Great Britain is concerned, cannot now be far off. The vast measures unearthed at Newcastle have been burrowed into and followed foot by foot till the nether earth in that region is one vast cavern, or series of caverns, from the sides and bottoms of which in places some considerable coal yet, but which grows less and less day by day, is still taken out.

In view of this condition and the possible condition when total exhaustion shall have taken place, a scientific writer, Mr. J. E. Taylor, F. L. S., has a reflective article in one of the current periodicals. His conclusions are not altogether exact, but suggest some interesting food for thought. He says it is clearly indicated that after or by the time the period since the discovery of coal has been doubled, or say 850 years hence, there will be witnessed a marvelous development of economic science. Coal, long before that, as a form of energy will be regarded as a somewhat antique and worked out material. The ebbing and flowing tides, the shifting winds, the waters running to the ocean, perhaps even volcanic and earthquake energy, will have taken its place. Indeed, a line of inquiry and research now going on may possibly affect the commercial interests of the whole world within the short space of the next five years. This relates to the use of petroleum, already being tried on steamers and locomotives of the Canadian sea and vicinity. The coal-fields of the world will certainly be worked out within a historically brief period, but a distinguished Russian chemist finds grounds for believing that petroleum is still being formed by the action of water on heated metallic deposits, and that the supply will be permanent.

While none of us or our immediate descendants will ever see the time previously spoken of, it is nevertheless not so far away. We utterly fail to realize it when we look around us and see mountains beneath whose rugged exterior are deposits of coal which have never yet been disclosed to the light of day or the eye of man; and when we know that of the discoveries made and work performed the quantity in sight is sufficient for home consumption for half a dozen generations to come, we are apt to dismiss the subject. If we in Utah would then extend our investigations into that area of country of which the eastern Sanpete mountains form the centre or nearly so, and would make a personal visit to some of the coal fields there, we or some of us would think ourselves very foolish for giving such forebodings any place in the mental workshop at all. There are several coal deposits adjacent to the principal towns of Sanpete, some of which have been worked enough to show that there is an abundance of coal, but most of the people are still burning wood. Further east, in Castle valley and neighborhood, are acres and acres of the needful article; it is stated as a fact that from the sides of some of the canyons and ravines, great chunks of pure coal of the finest quality, some of them as large as an ordinary house, jut out as though extending an invitation to the human family to come along and help themselves. This kind of thing creates a relief to the mind fully equal to the depression engendered by the preceding reflection; because, whatever may be the experience of our remote relatives who will climb along in our footsteps down the corridor of time, we and those around us are secure. The element of selfishness in all compositions thus finds expression, and why should it not? The "last man hovering over the last fire," if such an event should ever take place at all, is too utterly remote for us to even dimly appreciate it.

SENSATIONAL MURDER CASES.

The seasons may come and the seasons may go, but our sensational murder trial we have always. The one at Lincoln, Nebraska, in which our townsman, Hon. W. H. Irvine, is the central figure, is about over in this writing, and doubtless it will be followed in speedy succession by that of Little Borden, in Massachusetts, the alleged "murder of her father. This is a peculiar interesting case, because if guilty the girl is entitled to a place in history similar to that held by Lucretia Borgia, and if not, she is a victim to the most cruel combination of circumstances that ever hedged innocence around about.

A dispatch in the News a few days ago announced the unearthing by the Boston Globe of a nest of evidence bearing so strongly in the direction of guilt that any other conclusion than that the defendant committed the murder would seem to be a forced and unreasonable one; however, shortly after, comes a contradiction of the whole story and this one circumstance reveals how great as well as how desperate an interest is taken in the proceedings.

The "girl," as she is called, is thirty years of age, an active church member, fairly educated, and with a past life whose record, so far as known, contains nothing disgraceful, certainly nothing at all suggestive of a nature so fendish as the act with which she is now charged and of which she is soon to be adjudged guilty or innocent. She has many friends who are interesting themselves in her case and who will hear of nothing unfavorable to her. Altogether, however it may stand and whatever may be the outcome of the trial, it constitutes a chapter of horrors almost without parallel. It is said that Miss Borden exhibits no signs of distress, and this does but add to the prevailing complication; if guilty, it means callousness and a marvelous faculty of self-control; if innocent, it shows an ability to govern the feelings and a spirit of composure in the presence of the most cruel martyrdom such as are absolutely mystifying. What can it all mean?

RAILWAY DISASTERS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

There has been a marked falling off in the number of railway accidents in the United States the past year or two, especially in the western country. It is not so very long ago since "The Daily Disaster" was a headline common to most newspapers, and it had reference to the railways only, its appropriateness being unhappily exemplified most of the time by the occurrences themselves. It got to be so bad that a long railroad journey was looked upon by the one proposing to make it as taking his life in his hand, and so indeed it was. "One extreme follows another," they say, and it would seem to be so in this case.

In other countries the American has a reputation for being "fast and furious" for conceiving of great enterprises in a night and putting them through in a day, and the conclusion reached is that when so much haste and so little consideration are employed in the larger undertakings, there must of necessity be some portions at least of the work that are faulty and slipshod, while its operation after completion is characterized by the same alleged reckless haste, want of care and determination to crowd right through at whatever cost, hence the appalling array of casualties coming so close together. The writer heard an Englishman who had just returned from a visit to his native land comparing the railway system there with that of our country greatly to the latter's disadvantage; such a thing as rails spreading over there, he declared, was unknown, because the tracklayers made haste slowly, and when a rail was laid it was there to stay, while a collision was quite impossible—the trains moving on a system which is never departed from on any account.

Whether the hurry and carelessness

have shifted from one side of the Atlantic to the other, or whether railway accidents are at times inevitable no matter how much care is taken, of course cannot be stated because unknown; but certain it is that with only a fraction of our mileage and with the advantage of shorter runs and a more populous and even country to run through, our British cousins went sadly to the fore in the matter of serious casualties last year as well as the one before. The published reports of accidents in the United Kingdom in 1891 gives the number of persons reported to the Board of Trade as having been killed from all causes in the working of railways during the year as 1163, and injured 5060. Under the latter head all injuries are included, even those of a trivial nature. Of the number killed 103 were passengers and 549 servants, and the remainder "other persons"—i. e., trespassers, suicides, and persons who were passing over level crossings. Of the injured 1812 were passengers, 3161 servants, and 287 other persons. In addition, the companies have returned 79 persons killed and 6440 injured from accidents which occurred on their premises, but not connected with the movement of railways. The total number of passenger journeys, exclusive of journeys by season ticket holders, was 845,463,668, or 27,719,622 more than in the previous year. Calculated on these figures, the proportions of passengers killed and injured during the year, from all causes, were one in 8,208,385 killed and one in 524,481 injured. In 1890 the proportions were one in 6,940,034 killed, and one in 800,840 injured.

When differences in mileage and population are taken into account, the foregoing does not make our side of the case look quite so bad as it did in comparison with that of our friends across the water.

ELECTION OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

The following letter from Messrs. Ferguson and Cannon so completely answers a query on the same subject recently addressed to the NEWS that its publication in these columns will serve as a direct reply to our own correspondent:

Editor Deseret News:

We have been requested to answer the following questions:

First—What school trustees are to be elected at the coming November election?

Second—In precincts that have more than one school district where shall the election of the school trustees of each school district be held?

Answer to First—An school trustees except in cities of the first and second classes, shall be elected at the coming November election, and shall hold office from the first day of January, 1893, until the first day of January, 1894, and until their successors are elected and qualified.

Answer to Second—The trustees now in office shall give twenty days' notice of the time and place of holding the election for school trustees. The place should be within the school district electing the trustees.

Respectfully,

JOHN M. CANNON, and BARLOW FERGUSON.

The matter is of considerable importance and should receive the attention of such trustees as have imagined there was a conflict in the authorities on the subject. Judge Sutherland, whose opinion was also asked by the NEWS, promptly answered that there was no conflict—the trustees are to be elected.

AN UNWILLING WORLD.

Whether or not the experience of Elder Walter W. Williams, now laboring in the Durham and Newcastle conference of the British mission, may be quoted as that of the Elders generally, it is worthy of note as showing the indifference of the people on matters religious, in that particular region at least. On the occasion of a conference which was to be held on September 25th, himself and associates caused two thousand hand bills to be printed, giving the place and hour of the meetings, stating that all seats would be free and that there would be no collection, and cordially inviting "all lovers of truth to attend." These they judiciously distributed, some being enclosed in tracts left at residences and others being placed in the hands or houses of people of the vicinity. The appointed time for the meeting came; and as a result of their advertising they report the attendance of one stranger.

Elder Williams could not refrain from contrasting this showing with the condition as he remembered it is the same locality about a quarter of a century ago. There was no difficulty then in obtaining an audience, nor in finding, at every meeting, some inquiring minds whose search for truth led them to a further investigation of the principles the Elders presented.

Speaking generally, a similar comparison might be made with reference to every part of the British mission and indeed to every other locality where the Gospel has been preached twenty-five years ago. A day has been preached continuously ever since. It is natural that during such a length of time the field should have been pretty thoroughly gleaned. It is also true that tendency of the present generation is not towards, but away from, the principles of religion. It would be idle to expect, therefore, the same results that followed the first introduction of the Gospel among these communities; at least until by superior faith on the part of the Elders and the operation of the spirit of the Lord upon the people, there shall be an awakening from the apathy and unconcern in which the world is plunged.

Yet who is there with sufficient inspiration or sufficient boldness to declare that the work is all done, the blood of Israel all gathered out? While even one stranger can be induced to attend the meetings and listen to the testimony, is there not encouragement to continued exertion? We think so, and so think all the Elders who with patient zeal and uncomplaining fortitude leave home and friends to bear the message of salvation. It is over the one sinner reclaimed, the one lost sheep found and brought into the fold, that there is rejoicing among the Saints on earth and the angels in heaven. The Elders throughout all the missions of the Church, in this country and in foreign lands, need never be without the convation that the blessing comes to those who perform their duty faithfully and well; to a higher power may be left the matter of increase in the flock of Christ.

THE CAMPAIGN.

The campaign in the Territory is now fairly on; each of the three political parties has made its nomination for Delegate to Congress, and the county tickets are nearly all made up. Of these the Liberals fail to make a showing outside of Salt Lake, Weber and Summit, the organization elsewhere having gone to pieces and being held together in these three by the cohesiveness of the prospective losses and gains. Speculation is now rife as to what the respective votes will be for Delegate, and in this the News does not care to engage, being satisfied with the certainty that one of the three will have a plurality if not a majority.

So long as Utah occupies its present and all-along position in the national sisterhood, with no vote or votes in any part of the Federal household except on matters directly pertaining to herself, it behooves us to see that that voice be of one who is thoroughly identified with her interests and bent upon her moral and material progress. Probably any one of the gentlemen named would labor faithfully in the councils of the nation for the greatest good to the largest number in this Territory, as he construes such situation to be; would deport himself as becomes a man occupying so exalted and consequential a station, and would let no opportunity pass to insist upon the betterment, from his own standpoint, of things political, social and material hereabout. It is a certainty that either of them has the necessary education, demeanor and presence to enable him to be seen and heard and felt at Washington, and this is very fortunate, too, because we thus have something of an assurance in advance that the place will not fall into utterly unworthy hands.

In saying so much, we cannot forego the statement that two of the candidates stand for progress, peace and prosperity, while one of them, however well-qualified personally, is but the representative of a system which means retrogression, holding back, and shutting out from the gaze those fair visions of a condition in Utah in which all classes will be at peace and the only discord produced will be those of honorable and justifiable competition. It therefore remains, that while between the Republican, Democratic and Liberal candidates personally, we may express no choice, we and all good citizens should have a preference between those who represent the different conditions named, and it is to be hoped the choice will fall upon one or the other of those who prefer the present to the past order of things, and who intends to strive, with whatever measure of influence, meed of ability and force of circumstance he may have, to place the situation still further and further to the fore. The Liberal party does not want this, will not have it so long as by personal misrepresentation and political jugglery it can be averted; therefore, those who represent it in the campaign should be relegated to the rear and kept there until they are willing to live in the present and for the future, while letting the past take care of itself.

THE MINER LAW CONSTITUTIONAL.

The Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the constitutionality of the Miner electoral law of Michigan, an account of which appeared in these columns a few days ago. The Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court, the entire bench agreeing with him in the opinion that the law is in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. At that time the News announced that all the probabilities were in the direction of what has taken place, claiming that there was no other consistent position for the tribunal to take, and quoting the Constitution itself to show it. Still there was, in the light of history, especially the more modern chapters of it, no absolute certainty that this would be the case, for courts of last resort and sometimes some others read and construe the words of a statute or a charter differently from what people whose minds are not trained in and whose methods are not directed constantly by the law itself. Even allowing for this, though, it is difficult to see how the portion of the great instrument which the News copied could be construed otherwise than we construed it, even after applying all the refinements of legal philosophy and procedure.

It was observed that in the argument before the Supreme Court the attorneys for the law rested their case briefly upon the grounds already stated in this paper—the enactment itself and the section of the Constitution on which it depended; while counsel for the objectors addressed themselves more to the popular and equitable phase of the case. Their claim was that it was time the "booses," who thought themselves smart enough to take away from the people the necessity of the latter doing anything whatever for themselves, should be brought to a halt, or words implying as much; and while, in a general way, this is undoubtedly right, the "booses" whenever they get a hold treating the masses as though they owned them, still, this is not the law of the case, and being a matter with which the court could not deal, was irrelevant and immaterial.

The effect of the ruling is of course a gain for the Democrats, who think they can now confidently count on at least seven of the electoral votes of Michigan, which State under the old system would undoubtedly have given its entire vote to the Republicans.

"There is an amount of depravity in accents that is absolutely maddening. The two most delightful places in which I have spoken are the Mormon theatre at Salt Lake and the Philadelphia Academy of Music, both the result of accident!"—Kate Field.

What of the Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake? But perhaps Miss Field regards as an accident the fact that she didn't speak there!

WHAT ARE WE COMING TO IN FICTION?

A story paper published in the East has a serial which foreshadows such a blending of political economy with romantic "gush" that those who read such literature may be unconsciously acquiring information in the former while intent only upon the latter. One of the illustrations in the novel referred to represents a lot of girls employed at the Homestead works, each registering a vow that under no circumstances shall a Pinkerton man ever win her affections; another represents an encounter between a "union" worker and a Pinkerton, greatly to the former's advantage of course, who looks and acts the part of a manly fellow with homely clothes on and is the hero, while his rival is better dressed and more flashy but plainly a deceiver—the typical "villain" who is a necessary entity in all such productions. Commenting on this an eastern paper thinks it is "bad enough to have your newspaper all filled up with economic discussions, but think what it will be when tables of percentages lurk in poems and when the most striking episode of the novel you are reading, or trying to read, turns on the advisability of imposing a specific duty of two cents a pound on lute butts." It then imagines a "last terrible scene" in a story with a tooth-aching title as arranged with reference to cotemporary interest in political economy, as follows:

"The two men stood face to face on the brow of the cliff. Far below them moaned the sea; high above them shone the pale, passionless moon, forging through the clouds indifferent to the interests of men. Clarence Fitz Allan realized that the crisis of his fate had come. He glared at Reginald. 'Do you still assert that the tin plate made in Wales can be laid down in New York, duty paid, at 3% cents a pound?' he hissed between his blanching lips. Reginald looked him firmly in the eye. His breath came hot and quick. Life was very sweet then to Reginald, but with a supreme effort he said it so clearly that Fitz Allan felt it was a challenge. 'I told Clara De Vere that Swansea tin plate could be laid down, duty paid, at New York at 3% cents, subject to the trade discounts, ten days same as cash.' No other words passed; the two proud men, the two rivals for the hand of a De Vere, clung on the dizzy verge. There was a swaying of bodies as they wrestled for life; then a shout, and next a splash heard far below, and Clarence Fitz Allan stood alone. There was no remorse in his heart; there was moral triumph in his tone as he shouted rather than said: 'So perish all those who would poison a young girl's mind with deductions drawn from fraudulent statistics of tin-plate production prepared for campaign purposes.'"

This style of thing might not, however, as already suggested, be entirely destitute of advantages. We have reached a condition of things in which it behooves every citizen to be informed regarding the principal political issues of the day, but there are some who have all along refused and do still refuse to have anything to do with such questions. This class, we take it, is mainly composed of those who are greatly addicted to fiction, this being as nearly the exact opposite of the other as any sublimary thing we can think of. Well, a liberal admixture of tariff, facts and figures, force bill situations and the feasibility or impossibility of establishing native tin works in the United States, with hair-breadth escapes, vows of love and threats of vengeance, might be the means of making the unwilling swallow and even assimilate the one in order to get the other—that he would take his medicine with sugar coating. He might not like it, but no matter; it must be gotten into his midst by some means.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

The semi-annual conference of the Indiana conference of the Northern States mission was held in the Gold-man school house near Taswell, Indiana, on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 8th and 9th. A. C. Sorenson, president of the conference, presiding. President Charles W. Stayner and the following traveling Elders were present: M. L. Corbett, Francis M. Snell, Apollos B. Walker, Jesse M. Baker, Joseph H. Weeks, Christian Munk, T. H. Barlow, and on Saturday evening Benjamin F. Peel, of Arizona, arrived from Zion.

We held three meetings each day with good attendance on Sunday night and at each meeting held on Sunday. The first principles of the Gospel were taught in plainness to the people. A good spirit prevailed throughout.

After the services Sunday afternoon we held our Priesthood meeting in which the business of the conference was transacted. President Sorenson was released to return home, he having fulfilled an honorable mission. Elder Snell was released as clerk of the conference and appointed and set apart as conference president. Elder Baker was appointed conference clerk and the Elders were assigned to labor as follows: Francis M. Snell and Jesse M. Baker, in Ohio with headquarters at Columbus Grove, Putnam county, Ohio; A. B. Walker and M. L. Corbett in central Indiana, headquarters at Robison, Greene county, Indiana; Truman H. Barlow and Benj. F. Peel in southern Indiana, headquarters at Taswell, Crawford county, Indiana; Jos. H. Weeks and Christian Munk in Illinois, headquarters at Pulley's mills, Williamson county, Illinois. Persons desirous of corresponding with the Elders should address them as given above.

The Elders going to Illinois were authorized to organize a branch of the Church at Pulley's Mills, Williamson county, Ill., to ordain a local Elder and set him apart to preside over the branch.

The Elders all reported good health and good treatment, but find a spirit of indifference shown towards the Gospel. Since the conference four persons have been baptized.

Acting upon instructions from President Stayner, a branch was organized yesterday, October 11, in Crawford county, Ind.

The Elders are all well and feel encouraged in their labors.

FRANCIS M. SNELL, Clerk.
TASWELL, Indiana, Oct. 12, 1892.

There are several cases of diphtheria in Park City.

DAVID HOAGLAND CANNON.

A cablegram received this morning from President Schaeffer of the Swiss and German mission briefly conveys the terrible intelligence that Elder David Hoagland Cannon died this morning at 9 o'clock. The message gives no particulars, but as it mentions the news as having been received from Elder Hugh J. Cannon, it would indicate that the two brothers were together when the sorrowful event occurred. They have both been laboring as missionaries in the North German Conference, though only rarely being in each other's company. David was in an untrodden missionary field eastward from Berlin, while Hugh was assigned to duty in that city and more westerly points, Hamburg, Kiel, etc. A reply was at once sent to President Schaeffer, asking that if possible the body be sent home and that Hugh be permitted to accompany it.

The deceased was the son of President George Q. Cannon; his mother was the late Elizabeth Hoagland Cannon, whose death in January, 1882, occurred in this city while her husband was absent in Washington battling for the rights of his people, and her two eldest sons were abroad on foreign missions. David was her third son living, and he was then but a child. He grew up to be a young man of superior gifts and extraordinary promise. His age was 21 years, his birthday being the 14th of April, 1871. A little over five months ago—in the latter part of April—he set out upon the mission to which he had been called, and immediately began his labors in the northern part of the German Empire. From the very outset he evinced uncommon zeal; and as a result of a persistent striving for the spirit that aforesaid characterized the labors of the Elders, he resolved to travel without purse and scrip. Writing home, he declared that he felt he would be under condemnation if he did not thus place his trust in God; he doubted not the power of his Heavenly Father to supply his needs. After much prayer, and in spite of the discouraging advice given him by some of his associates, he resolutely entered upon this line of action,—this, too, before he had mastered or even had sufficient time to partially master the language. He gave to the poor all his clothes save those in which he stood, and to the same purpose devoted all his pocket money. Even with this he was not content. He wrote home requesting his father to cause that the money coming to him here be given in the same way and that the family, instead of sending means to him, expend it in the manner suggested. This much of explanation is necessary to an understanding of the last letter received from him, which we are permitted to publish. It was to his father, and was written, as will be seen, eighteen days before his death:

SEIFERSDORF, September 29, 1892.
My Dear Father and Brothers and Sisters:

I will address this letter to father but my feelings and desires you can all know, and this perhaps you will accept as an answer to your letters.

I cannot describe my feelings—I have had so much joy in my labors. In the last week the Lord has opened the hearts of five persons, and they have come to me and asked to be baptized, and the prospects are, if it is the will of the Lord, that at least that many more will be added to the branch in a short time. When angels could feel happier than I have felt at times, their joy must be very, very great, for it has seemed to me, once or twice, that I could scarcely remain on the earth. My heart is filled with love and gratitude to my Heavenly Father, and words cannot express to Him my thanksgiving; but He can read my heart and thoughts, and has shown me that I am in His hands.

My food comes to me day after day without asking. I have never yet asked for food, and a place to sleep in is always given to me. Because I have done so much traveling my shoes are worn so that I have walked the last week with a little corner of the bottom of my feet on the ground. But that mattered not; I could walk just as well and had no money to buy another pair. I asked the Lord in His own due time to give me another pair, and yesterday I was led into a shoe shop and measured for a pair of shoes, and I go today to get them; the person who took me there being responsible for the pay.

I could relate many instances where I have had direct answer to my prayers, and will mention one last week. I found myself, about dark, walking in the woods with my hat off, praising the Lord and thinking over His wonderful ways, and I felt that the very trees and grass could understand my feelings—they were all created by Him as was I. But darkness soon overtook me, and I had no place to sit or sleep, nor, more important than all, to speak. I knelt down and asked the Lord to open the way and give me what was necessary, and then proceeded on my way. Scarcely was I out of the woods when I met some women coming from the fields. I had met two before, and they were anxious to know my success. I was invited in the house to wait until the men came from work, as they had heard of me and wanted to know what I had to say. After eating supper, during which I was talking and explaining our doctrines, they invited the people to come together, and I spoke to about ten or twelve for some time. One man stood up and said he believed in nothing beyond this life and laughed and sneered at my words; but I told him his laughing and sneering words would stand against him and condemn him if he did not repent and seek forgiveness from the Lord, for all that occurred in our meeting, our speaking and thoughts, would be remembered when we stood before the judgment bar of God. I told him I trembled for him to hear him say that "the Lord, if there was such a Being, was unjust," for the time would come when all would acknowledge that His judgments were just, but to the wicked it would be to their eternal damnation. I told him the Lord had given him, as he had to me, a soul which we could not destroy; that He had given us the opportunity here on the earth to choose eternal life or eternal damnation, and that when we withdrew the opportunity here, it was gone never to return, but that it was our own thoughts, words and actions that would condemn us. I told him that people wished to live now, and feared death, but the time would come when the wicked would seek to destroy their souls, but could not do it; that the death of the righteous was as a sleep, and is something they do not dread, for by it they are freed from Satan; but the life and death of the wicked and unbelievers are bitter, for they do not understand the object the Lord had when He placed them on the earth—they are in darkness and imagine all others are like them; that when they die the servant of darkness they cannot expect to live through eternity with those whose souls are enlightened here on the earth with the spirit of the Lord. I said much more to him which it is not necessary to write, and it had a very good effect upon the listeners, and before I retired (for the people insisted on my remaining over night) the man of the house told me that he believed my words, and I had spoken the truth. He asked me what he should do. I answered him from the Bible, and again gave him my testimony that it (the Gospel) was on the earth again, and that a very short time would show that the Lord would punish all who would fight against His work, for great and terrible plagues would sweep over the earth.

I retired to bed, praising the Lord. The next morning my first thought on awaking was to thank the Lord for sweet sleep and health and strength. I turned over in bed and found by my bedside a glass of milk and sweet bread and butter. I could not restrain my tears. What could be nicer than this? Arising, I kneeled down and thanked Him who reigns on High, and who can put into the hearts of even my enemies to give me what I need. During my meal the Frau came in, with tears in her eyes thanked me for coming, and bade me goodby as she went to her necessary work.

I then visited a house where I had been before, and I learned to my joy that Brother Bahr and Hugh (the writer's brother) had been there to seek me, and had returned to another village seven miles distant to await me there. I fairly flew over the ground to where I again met my dear brother, and our meeting was truly joyful.

But there was not time to sit long, for I had made an appointment in another place the same evening, so we started out together—four of us—for with us went a young man whom I have since baptized, and of whom I spoke in my other letter. On the way we left Brother Bahr with a family who have been very kind to me, as he had promised to return to Berlin the next day. We three proceeded on our way, and spent the evening explaining to a few people who came to hear what the Lord has said. He would do in the last days. We arose the next morning and went from house to house, one taking one house and another another, until our companion Mr. Waltaw returned to his home, and Hugh and I proceeded further.

I need not say that we were very kindly treated, and had always food and a bed, and that Hugh was overjoyed at what he had seen and heard. It was wonderful that we could and did the whole time talk in German, while I have been here only four and a half months. We passed remarks about it several times, and when we would speak English we would soon again drift into German, as we could better express our thoughts.

Hugh helped me in the baptism and confirming of the five, and this morning we bade each other good-bye, he to return to Berlin and Hamburg. I have come with a very good family last night and this morning after bidding them good-bye, the man ran after us to learn if Hugh had money to buy his ticket, as he understood we traveled without money, and would willingly give it to us. What can I say? Should we doubt the Lord after His wonderful preserving care? I can not. I doubt my ability to keep His commandments and to do what He requires of me, but on Him and His work here on the earth I have no doubt. He is very, very merciful to me. Many times I feel under condemnation, yet will He show great mercy to me. He gives me His Spirit, friends, food, and places to sleep, and oh, how very little I do for Him! His mercy and goodness are great—beyond my comprehension or power of description, and I can only thank Him in a very weak way.

Now I hear that the pastors are seeking me. In one with whom I have spoken (or at least he will become a pastor) I found a very different spirit to what a servant of the Lord should have. He was very angry with me and would not allow me to come in his house. I hear today that one of the chief pastors visited the Young Men's Union last Sunday, hoping to find me there, and had asked where I lived. I go there next Sunday evening, if the Lord wishes it, and I will speak with him before his flock; if he can show me wherein I am wrong from the Bible, I will repent and do better, and I hope it will be same with him. I know, of course, what it means, and that is, persecution; but in this way the people will hear the warning in a way they will remember it, and whatever happens to me when I do my duty will be what the Lord wishes. You speak of the sick ones here, father, but I do not fear it in the least. The Lord can do with me as He wishes, and if it is to leave this earth, I have no desire to remain here.

Concerning this young man, father, he is full of faith—brave, and has a burning desire to warn this people from these approaching judgments. The Lord had already revealed to him concerning these plagues before I met him, and he had spoken with a number of families about them. He has had to doctor himself for years, and has gone through very much trouble, and has only regained his health through the strictest attention to the commandments written in the Bible, and has also found comfort only in talking with others about these things. Should he not hold the Priesthood, and that too, in view of the great work to be done here, very shortly?

I trust you are all enjoying good health. Concerning the money, father, that is due me, I trust it is used promptly, that nothing will remain to my credit. It appears that Brother Schaeffer, the president here, has paid $25 from what I had in Berne to the Temple, and if Abram has done the same there, $50 has been paid in. Of course, this makes no difference, only that I intended it to be paid from there, and therefore am overdrawn in Berne, as I have given out here our works, and have said I would be responsible for them. Can Abram pay $25, or $50 would be better, to Henry Reiser, in Salt Lake, to be placed to my credit here, to replace this $25 overdrawn, and something over, to stand for books people do not pay me for?

I would also like to ask, is it not right to speak a great deal about the Book of Mormon with people who believe the Bible, and endeavor to get these people to read it? People are anxious after reading our smaller books to read this, but some are against my giving it. I cannot agree with them in this.

With much love to all,

I am your affectionate son,
DAVID.

After the foregoing was in type, the following cablegram was received:

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 17, 1892.

President George G. Cannon, Salt Lake City:

Brother Schaeffer telegraphs David Cannon died this morning. No particulars. Have ordered the body embalmed. My deepest sympathy.

BRIGHTON YOUNG.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon no additional news had been received as to the cause of death.

UTAH STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Utah Stake of Zion adjourned on Sunday evening. The principal speaker was President B. H. Roberts. He spoke on the subject of conferences, showing that they were not man-made but appointed of God, and should be so considered by the Saints. He urged the importance of sustaining the authorities, listening to the reports of Bishops, which showed the progress of Zion, etc. In relation to the social and economic problems of the world he explained how they would be finally solved by the Gospel; and this would be the only means of their solution. Reference was likewise made to the labors of the Saints in building temples, tabernacles and schools, sending missionaries abroad, etc.

Presidents Smoot and John, and Karl G. Maeser and Benjamin Cluff also addressed the Conference. The burden of the remarks of the two former speakers was in relation to temple donations, completing the Tabernacle, and lifting the burden of debt from the academy. The remarks of Elders Maeser and Cluff were of an educational nature.

Apostle John Henry Smith was in attendance at Conference but could not speak on account of a severe cold.

THE TABERNACLE CHOIR.

Thinking it would be of interest and but a just consideration to the public, who have so kindly aided us, to receive a report of our doings for the two years of our existence as a reorganized choir, I have prepared a condensed but complete account of the same, trusting to the kindness of the press to give it publicity.

During the two years I have had charge of this musical organization, four hundred voices have been added to its membership, making a present roll of 550 names. The average attendance has been a little over 300 for the past year. In addition to the regular choir a juvenile choir numbering 1,000 voices has been organized, including a flute band of fifty boys, in charge of Mr. C. H. Barrell.

The adult choir has held about 150 rehearsals and sung at about 125 services or meetings. The juvenile choir have held about sixty rehearsals. The design of the latter is to train up members for the future adult choir, also to acknowledge substantially the services of the present members by giving their children, brothers or sisters a musical training free of expense to them, if possible.

We have taken part in nine concerts: one in aid of the Deseret Sunday School Union; one jointly with the ward choir; two with the juvenile choir; two with the Choral society and Gilmore's band; one with the Mendelssohn Quintette club and two by ourselves.

FINANCES.

Income:
Concerts.....	$2,844 00
Class tuition, new members.....	74 30
Interest.....	61 67
Total.....	$2,980 97
Expenditures:
New platform and seats.....	$ 830 00
Music, psalmodes, anthems, oratorios, choruses, etc.....	7 98 50
Stephens, for teaching reading class.....	300

members, two terms, ten weeks each, averaging 33 1/2 cents per pupil per term.....	300 00
Stephens, for teaching classes in voice culture, fifteen lessons, 75 members attending.....	75 00
Loss on concert, January 6th.....	38 00
Hall rent for classes.....	25 00
Sundries, copygraph, blackboard, etc.....	39 00
Excursion.....	25 00

Total.....$2,015 58
The balance on hand is.....$935 42

For items and particulars the choir account book is open to all interested and may be examined by those who request it.

THE JUVENILE CHOIR.

although appearing with great success artistically, failed to raise any funds until the last concert, when $542 was divided between the choir and the band. Owing to the financial failure of their Christmas concert we were obliged to ask for aid from the parents to pay expenses last season. But now after our indebtedness for uniforms, etc., is all settled we will have about $350 in the treasury. The music we have sung represents the following home and foreign composers:

Home Composers—E. Stephens, 25 numbers; Geo. Careless, 8 numbers; J. J. Daynes, 9 numbers; E. Beezley, 2 numbers; A. C. Smythe, 2 numbers; E. C. Griggs, 1 number; J. S. Lewis, 1 number; L. D. Edwards, 1 number; J. G. Foster, 1 number; J. Tullidge, 1 number; E. T. Parry, 1 number; H. H. Petersen, 1 number; Isaac, 1 number; total home productions, 54 hymns, anthems, glees, etc.

Foreign Authors—Gounod (French) 8 numbers; Spohr (German) 3 numbers; Verdi (Italian) 8 numbers; Rossini (Italian) 2 numbers; Mozart (German) 1 number; Bach (German) 1 number; Handel (English German) 1 number; Haydn (English German) 1 number; Mendelssohn (German Jew) 1 number; Farmer (English) 1 number; Balf (English) 4 numbers; Fauczatti (Italian) 2 numbers; Bellini (Italian) 1 number; S. L. Fish (American) 1 number; B. Richards (Welsh) 1 number; English, 2 numbers; Welsh, 1 number; unknown, 12 numbers; total foreign, 41 choruses, anthems, hymns, etc. Total of 95 numbers not counting music choruses, quartettes, trios, duets and solos, organ numbers, etc., used on various occasions.

OUR AIMS

may be gleaned from the above report. They are, first, to bring and keep together a large choir corresponding with the size of the building and congregations meetings therein. Second, to keep ourselves in a supply of funds that will enable this large body of singers to receive such training free of charge to them, as will make their artistic status equal to their numerical; also to supply them with the very best and most suitable music to be found, in fact to remove all obstacles in the way of improvement and perfect work. We are now in a condition to give fifteen hundred people free class training in the following branches, so important not only to our improvement as a choir, but as a community: Sight reading, effective chorus singing, voice culture, conducting, harmony and composition, and pipe organ playing. Each of these studies will be taught to all members who desire them, provided they are willing to devote sufficient time and energy to the studies, and, in the latter studies, show sufficient talent and adaptability for the special branches to justify their taking them, and give a pledge that the choir will have the benefit of their services in return whenever desired and within reason. These I believe are privileges which no body of singers have heretofore enjoyed, and is brought about without hardship to any one, without even placing any one under obligations to any one.

OUR FUTURE NECESSITIES

will be simply a continuation of past patronage.

Some important and much needed improvements made to our great organ, such as would replace the dumb sham pipes now surrounding the real organ, with speaking pipes, would be of some aid to the choir, and that would also make it fit for accompanying solo voices which is not the case at present. The keyboard should be brought to the front, and many modern improvements added that our much boasted of organ might be all it seems and should be, the finest in the land. A few more improvements are still necessary also to be added to the choir stand that a large chorus might not have to be separated into a half a dozen groups as at present.

The hearty support and practical encouragement I have received in the past assures me that all improvements necessary to our future growth and success within a reasonable time be provided. While the hearty, untiring labors of the great majority of choir members and our organist, Prof. J. J. Daynes, guarantees that all that may be done will not only be deserved, but will duly be taken advantage of to return to the public the full benefit, in more and more effective work as you enable us to reach greater perfection in our art.

With sincere thanks to all, but especially to the singers, for their hearty support, I am,

EVAN STEPHENS
Conductor Tabernacle Choir.
SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 17, 1892.

THE LIBERAL CONVENTION.

OGDEN, Oct. 12.—The Liberal Territorial convention was held in the Opera House in this city today, convening at 12 noon. C. E. Allen called the meeting to order and named A. B. Emery of Park City for temporary chairman.

A telegram from O. W. Powers at Lincoln was read announcing his regrets at not being able to be present, and advising the Liberals to stand for Utah, and as the old-time friends of the Territory work for the cause until Utah was worthy of statehood.

Committees on credentials, permanent organization and platform were appointed, C. C. Goodwin and C. E. Allen being appointed on the committee on resolutions from Salt Lake.

An adjournment was then taken till 3 p.m.

On reconvening the report of the committee on credentials was read and is still in progress at the present time —3:40.

A probable forecast of the nomination for delegate to Congress at this time shows the choice to be between Henry W. Lawrence of Salt Lake and Fred J. Kiesel, of Ogden. C. E. Allen says he is not in it, and Powers appears out of the race altogether.

Your committee on permanent organization and order of business respectfully report to this convention the following members of the convention as permanent officers thereof and respectfully recommend their appointment by this convention.

Permanent chairman, C. C. Goodwin, Salt Lake.

Vice-chairmen, William Farrell of Weber, A. L. Buckland of Davis, H. K. Ebert of Utah, S. H. Parley of Summit, Harry Halce of Salt Lake, A. G. Campbell of Tooele, W. H. Shock of Beaver, Mr. Williams of Morgan.

For permanent secretary, A. C. Emerson of Weber; assistant secretary, J. S. Daveler of Salt Lake.

For sergeant-at-arms, Edward W. Berry of Summit.

And we further report the following order of business for the consideration of the convention:

First—Report of committee on credentials.

Second—Report of committee on platform and resolutions.

Third—Nomination of candidate for delegate to Congress.

Fourth—Nomination of three commissioners to locate university lands.

Fifth—We recommend that the delegates of each county represented select the names of suitable persons from their respective counties to be named as members of the Territorial Liberal Central Committee to be approved by this convention. Respectfully submitted, J. R. ELLIOTT, Chairman.

Secretary.

ANCIENT EVAPORATION.

The report was adopted after which Mr. Goodwin was escorted to the platform and delivered one of his characteristic speeches.

ALSO ANCIENT.

"Statistician" Allen then read the platform drawn by himself, W. M. Ferry, C. C. Goodwin, C. M. Brough, Aaron F. Munn, O. C. Lockhart, and Newell Knight. It contains the oft-repeated reference to "an unyielding theocracy and imperium in imperio," expresses the fear "that with the opportunity which would come with statehood this priesthood would assume supreme control" of all political matters; thanks Governor Thomas for his use of the veto power at the session of the last Utah Legislature, and protests against the admission of Utah into the Union.

HIS NAME IS POWERS.

Printer Daveler read a resolution offered by A. G. Campbell in which it was said that Utah's people should have a boss for delegate to Congress. He nominated a man who fulfilled this requirement and whose name was Powers.

BOTH DECLINE.

Telegrams were read from Judge Powers and Henry W. Lawrence positively declining to accept the nomination.

SOFT SOAP.

The following was adopted:

Resolved, That this convention has heard with regret that Orlando W. Powers has refused to allow his name to be presented for its consideration as a nominee for Delegate to Congress. In view of this fact we desire to express our appreciation of the grand work he has done for the Liberal party through six successive campaigns and to express our unqualified admiration of his course as a staunch and consistent Liberal on every occasion, and that we hope his private affairs will not long deprive us of his wise counsel and matchless leadership in this campaign.

BY ACCLAMATION.

C. E. Allen of Salt Lake was then nominated for Delegate to Congress by acclamation. He was called for and in a short speech enlivened the Liberal party.

UNIVERSITY LAND COMMISSIONERS.

E. A. Watt, William Farrell and William Nelson were nominated as University land commissioners.

TERRITORIAL COMMITTEE.

The following Territorial committee was chosen:

Davis county—G. M. Knox.
Salt Lake county—O. W. Powers, J. K. Gillespie, Harry Haines.
Summit county—H. T. Townsend.
E. W. Berry, James Ivers.
Sevier county—Dr. W. H. Soboch.
Tooele county—Allen G. Campbell.
Utah county—John E. Hilla.
Weber county—R. C. Lundy, R. T. Pottlingill, William Harcombe.
Rich county—Isaac Smith.
Adjourned sine die.

The Liberal county convention met in the Salt Lake Theater at noon today. It was called for the purpose of making nominations for the following county offices: Recorder, clerk, assessor, collector, sheriff, attorney, treasurer, selectman, coroner, surveyor, superintendent of schools and for the election of a county commissioner.

The convention was to consist of two hundred and sixty-four delegates allotted to the various precincts of the city and county, but not nearly that number were present.

There were a number of flags and a profusion of old Liberal banners hung at various points on the interior of the building. In the rear and tacked to the railing of the upper circle hung the following: "Official Utah election returns for delegate, 1888:

County.	Liberal.	Mormon
Box Elder.....	139	424
Cache.....	132	1,415
Davis.....	75	651
Iron.....	15	285
Kane.....	15	182
Morgan.....	21	211
Rich.....	25	169
Sanpete.....	171	1,216
Wasatch.....	17	390
Washington.....	19	438
Utah.....	457	2,364

Are these conditions changed today?

The above figures were displayed on an immense canvas and were frequently glanced at by the delegates, who yelled vociferously as they looked upon them.

At 12:30 the convention was called to order by Chairman Gillespie, who instructed Secretary Meloy to read the call.

Mr. Gillespie named Ogden Hilla as temporary chairman and Elmer Ellsworth as temporary secretary.

Mr. Hille recommended that all Liberals should consecrate themselves anew to the Americanization of Utah. The rest of his talk was thanks for honors conferred, etc.

A committee on credentials, consisting of one member from each city precinct and four from the county at large, was appointed on motion of Reporter C. M. Jackson.

A similar committee on organization and order of business was appointed.

A committee on platform and resolutions was appointed as follows: Judge Loofbourn, Judge Hoge, C. E. Stanton, Allen G. Campbell, P. A. Dix, W. O. Corbes, William Nelson, Harry Haynes, B. A. Burgan, A. F. Doremus.

The convention then adjourned until 3 o'clock.

Afternoon Session.

The Denhalter brass band led the way to the Theatre shortly before 3, being attended and followed by straggling delegates and auditors; all of whom made themselves visible inside very slowly. It was several minutes after the appointed time when the chairman's gavel fell and the attendance even then was meagre. The band came in and gave something of an inspiring effect by playing a section at 3:15.

The chairman asked that the gentlemen present refrain from smoking. He then called for the report of the committee on credentials, which was presented and read by the secretary. It showed nearly all the delegates present, and substitutes were made and the report was adopted, but there was some lively sparring at times over errors and irregularities. The report of the committee on permanent organization was called for and read. It provided that Wm. Nelson be permanent chairman, Elmer A. Ellsworth secretary, A. T. Doremus first assistant secretary, and Warren Sumner second assistant secretary, with Ed. Kelley sergeant-at-arms.

Sam Jackson moved as an amendment to the report that a reading clerk be provided for and that John D. Ivler fill that position. Carried.

The order of business was then read, the report of the committee on resolutions to come next and nominations of candidates last in the following order: County recorder, clerk of the county court, county assessor, county collector, sheriff, prosecuting attorney, treasurer, selectmen, coroner, surveyor, superintendent of public schools, the county Liberal committee.

On motion of C. E. Allen, three tellers were appointed, as follows: John L. May, C. O. King, C. O. Perkins.

Messrs. Moritz, Bella and Pickard were appointed by the chair a committee to escort the permanent chairman to the platform. Mr. Nelson was received with applause and addressed the convention briefly.

Joseph L. Lippman had been nominated by acclamation for the office of recorder when the News report closed.

H. V. Meloy was nominated for county clerk, the ballot standing: Meloy 135, Charles Stebbins 98, C. W. Hall 27.

It was 12:35 a.m. when the Liberal county convention adjourned from the Salt Lake Theater to meet in the old Federal court room at 10:30 this forenoon. It was nearly noon, however, when the convention resumed its labors—most of the delegates coming in late and sleepy. The session at the Theater was a stormy one and threatened to last all night.

At the meeting this forenoon the same bolterousness that has characterized the convention from the beginning was continued.

Up to the time of adjournment last night a recorder, clerk, assessor, collector, attorney, sheriff, treasurer and one selectman had been decided.

THE TICKET.

Completed the ticket stands:
For Recorder—Joseph Lippman.
For Clerk—H. V. Meloy.
For Assessor—Will J. Lynch.
For Collector—Fred J. Leonard.
For Attorney—Walter Murphy.
For Sheriff—William McQueen.
For Treasurer—W. P. Lynn.
For Selectmen—John P. Cahoon, Herman Bamberger, S. R. Morris.
For Coroner—Mort G. Taylor.
For Surveyor—Edwin Haviland.
For Superintendent of Schools—E. M. Collins.

COUNTY COMMITTEE.

A county committee was chosen as follows: Chairman—J. K. Gillespie. Members—Joseph Bougard, C. F. Loofbourn, I. J. Starbuck, Harry T. Duke, C. M. Jacobson, William B. Vincent.

MORE LIBERAL WRONGDOINGS.

Liberal official life does not appear to be closely allied to honesty, to the strict observance of business-like methods or a regard for morality. On the contrary, it becomes more and more apparent each day that in many instances they are complete strangers to each other. With a rapidity and frequency that would have more than startled any other community than this, frauds of the most glaring kind have been unearthed in municipal circles and held up to the gaze of the public. Have the guilty parties ever been called upon to answer before the law for the commission of crimes? Never.

If exposure and fear do not prevent the placing of certain names that have been decided upon in the camp of the Tucsarora on the Liberal slate for county officers then dishonest, corrupt and immoral men will be nominated and the county perhaps be made to experience, in part at least, the humility and disgrace that have hung like a cloud of shame upon this fair city for more than two years.

Unless evidence of the strongest kind can be produced to offset the sworn statements now said to be on file in a newspaper office in this city, of several persons, at least one aspiring candidate, with flattering prospects for nomination to a responsible position on the Liberal ticket, may have a picture of his strange and disgraceful conduct presented to the public for their inspection. He has been regarded by his adherents as a sort of modern Demosthenes, and while at the National Democratic Convention at Chicago recently, it is said that no Tucsarora brave was more bolterous or defiant than he when himself and raging colleagues were denied admission to the great auditorium as regular delegates. His clarion voice has often been heard from the political rostrum in Salt Lake against conditions and principles he did not understand.

His Apollo like form, boasted knightly bearing and loquacity have made him popular among certain members of the fair sex.

The nature of his alleged wrongdoings he probably understands better than any one else, and it is to be sincerely hoped that he will be able to set himself right by a satisfactory explanation before the matter is brought to an issue by certain city officers who are reported as being engaged upon the case.

If what apparently well founded rumors say is correct, this gentleman is not the only one whose official reputation may be badly shaken in the near future.

WORLD'S FAIR SALT LAKE COUNTY ASSOCIATION OF WOMEN.

Knowing the interest the public feel in all that concerns the representation to be made at the Columbian Exposition in 1893, the following names of officers and board of directors, also the by-laws of the above association are presented that the public in general, and the ladies in particular, may be informed in regard to what is being done:

OFFICERS AND BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Mrs. E. B. Wells, president; Mrs. G. Y. Wallace, first vice-president; Mrs. Priscilla Jennings, second vice-president; Mrs. Margaret A. Calne, secretary; Miss Emma McCormick, assistant secretary; Mrs. Bertha Bamberger, treasurer.

EXECUTIVE BOARD.

Mrs. C. E. Allen, Mrs. Anna D. Groesbeck, Mrs. Sarah Boggs, Mrs. Kate Smith, Mrs. Amelia F. Young.

DIRECTORS.

Mrs. Amelia Folsom Young, Mrs. James B. Boggs, Mrs. E. C. Clawson, Mrs. J. C. Koyler, Mrs. Nettie Y. Snell, Mrs. A. K. Smith, Mrs. Ann D. Groesbeck, Mrs. Ferdinand Fabian, Mrs. Maria Holt, Mrs. C. W. Bennett, Mrs. Elizabeth Pixton, Mrs. W. W. Riter, Mrs. Wendell Benson, Mrs. H. P. Kendall, Mrs. Ida M. Bamberger, Mrs. Mary Rawlins, Mrs. Charles Read, Mrs. Julia Taylor, Mrs. Kate Smith.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

This association shall be known as the Salt Lake County World's Fair Association.

ARTICLE II.—OBJECT.

The object of this association shall be to collect an exhibit of the industries and interests of the women of this county, for the Exposition in 1893, and to authorize and encourage the organization of auxiliary associations, to be known as World's Fair clubs, in each town through this county under such rules and local management as may be deemed best.

ARTICLE III.—OFFICERS AND EXECUTIVE BOARD.

A board of directors shall be chosen by the president, consisting of twenty-five members, from which number shall be appointed by the president, two vice presidents, a secretary, assistant secretary, treasurer, and an executive board consisting of five members.

ARTICLE IV.—MEMBERSHIP.

Any woman residing in Salt Lake county may become a member of this association by paying a membership fee of one dollar and signing the by-laws. The membership fee and all other monies raised by whatever means shall be used for the expenses of the association, at the discretion of the executive board.

ARTICLE V.—MEETINGS.

Meetings shall be held every Thursday at 3 p. m. A quorum shall consist of eleven members.

ARTICLE VI.—REPORTS.

The secretary shall forward to the secretary of the territorial board on or about the 30th of each month, a report showing the work done during the preceding month. Questions requiring immediate attention, however, shall be at once forwarded to the territorial board.

ARTICLE VII.—AMENDMENTS.

These by-laws may be amended at any regular meeting of the association by a two-thirds majority vote of members present; notice having been given at a previous meeting.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

There was a very good attendance at the Sunday School Union meeting last evening. Nearly all the city schools were well represented, also those of Union, North Point and Farmers wards. St. Ke Superintendant T. C. Griggs presided.

After the opening exercises President Angus M. Cannon delivered an instructive address on the subject of "Duties of Parents to Children." The parents in Zion owe it to their children, he said, to set them a worthy example in keeping all the commandments of God; to observe the Word of Wisdom that their children may be preserved from the destroyer; to observe the Sabbath day as a day of rest, not only for themselves, but as a day of rest to their children and all their hired help; to fulfill the law of tithing in its true spirit; and to teach their children the principles of the Gospel, so that when they arrive at the age of accountability they will be prepared to receive the ordinances of the Gospel, and become useful members in the Church and Kingdom of God.

Superintendent Griggs stated that an Inter-Slake missionary work was soon to be inaugurated in all the States of Zion. Within a few weeks missionaries from other states would visit the various wards of this State, and hold special Sunday schools or Sunday school meetings and labor in the interest of the Sunday school work, and it was suggested that the superintendents make all the necessary arrangements in their wards for the reception and entertainment and the best use of their visiting missionaries.

A request was also made that the superintendents forward the "nickel collections" as early as possible.

Circular letters, often of importance, were frequently sent to the schools, and the superintendent suggested that if when they were received greater attention were paid to them, it would save a great deal of extra labor and avoid delay, and repeated requests for replies.

Benediction by Assistant Superintendent W. C. Burton.

Meeting adjourned for one month. The Thirteenth ward school will furnish the musical exercises at the next meeting.

JOS. HYRUM PARRY, Sec'y.

MILLARD COUNTY ITEMS.

MEADOW, Millard Co., Oct. 13.—Our county, like all others, is in a state of commotion and ferment over politics. We have had political "stumpers" of both parties to visit us, and try to convert us to their own views, while local politicians are airing their lungs and booming woo to an extent that would almost lead us to believe it was the only article left in the wide world worth thinking or talking about.

We have had a surfeit of sheep during the past few weeks for they have been herded on our one solitary creek, and made its water so foul that it has produced among the inhabitants of Meadow an amount of epidemic disease that has alarmed us. First we had diphtheria from which four deaths resulted; then malarial fever and diarrhoea, from which complaint many are now suffering.

No doubt the sheep industry is a most useful and profitable one to the community, but where the owners are so neglectful or so devoid of all feelings of humanity, so intensely selfish as to endanger the lives of their neighbors by persistently fouling our water, they become an unmitigated nuisance, and it is about time something was done to protect us from their cruelty. It is bad enough to have pigs, calves and other animals wallowing in our ditches, corals, hog pens, and chicken coops in close proximity to our homes, without our drinking water being fouled from its very source.

Filmore is making great preparation for receiving the Democratic candidate for Congress, Mr. Hawline, and those who may accompany him. They are expected next week, and as we have just had speakers on the Republican side, we are kept pretty busy getting up receptions. Cleveland and Harrison have given a somewhat picturesque air to our streets, and it is a novelty to see our sturdy citizens of all ages with tall, grey stovepipes on their heads. The political life is not only in great demand, but many wearers have also a portrait of the Presidential candidate stuck on the side of their ordinary head gear. All the other towns in the county are equally enthusiastic and earnest in striving to give a welcome to the speakers who come among us. The young especially are beginning to take an interest in politics, to read more, and make themselves acquainted with what is occurring outside their own immediate neighborhood. The present campaign has sent among us many able men, and will be a great educator, both politically and socially.

The fruit and potato crops are partial failures, but the grain harvest has been a bountiful one, and the people generally are cheerful and contented. There is considerable excitement over our local election, especially among those who are aspirants for office.

M. A. Y. G.

NO BETTER proof need be given of the fear and adoration in which Judge Powers is held by the Liberals than the fact that at their Territorial convention yesterday they didn't saddle upon him, with wily rilly, the nomination to glorious defeat that he has been in the habit of diffusing so generously among them.

ELDER ADOLF HAAG'S LETTER.

The many friends of Elder Adolf Haag, who recently died in Palestine, will be interested in the following extracts from a private letter dated Haifa, September 16th, only two weeks before his death. The letter is written in German:

"Dear Brother—I am almost too weak to write a letter, but since I have not written to you for over a month, I will endeavor to send you a few words. Two weeks ago, soon after my arrival, I became quite ill. I have a strong fever. Only last night I thought I was about to be consumed. My temperature is often 108 deg. Fahrenheit. My heart is also affected, and for some time I have been so sick that it seemed to be a contest between life and death. Oh, how tired I am! The climate does not seem to be suited to me. Brother Mueser has already written to President Young and it is probable that I shall again return to Switzerland. The heat is almost unbearable.

"I would like to relate something about my journey from Constantinople to this place, but I dare not tax my strength too much. I will however say something in order that you can form an idea of the great interest connected with our journey. We first stopped in Smyrna, the most celebrated and greatest silk factory of the world. From there we went to Greece, where we saw the beautiful Athens. That is something magnificent—ruins and temples of Jupiter, Diana and Minerva, the amphitheatre, etc. These ruins are in the hills, while the modern city in her beauty is situated lower. What a history is unfolded before you when you stand among these ruins!

From there we went to Alexandria in Egypt. There also it is beautiful. Our journey was continued to Cairo, and the three pyramids. In the desert we used camels. What we saw in the pyramids is indescribable. It is indeed more like an enigma.

From this place we went to Ismailia and further on a little canal boat on the Suez canal to Port Said, where we again embarked for Jaffa. Here I took the stage to Haifa and our next object is to reach Jerusalem.

"I must now close, I am so tired. During the last two weeks I have become so thin that you can have no idea of how I look. I can only hope for something better to come. Your ADOLF."

THE CYCLONE IN MAURITIUS.

On the 28th of April, 1892, Mauritius, the old Ile de France, still vied with the island of Ceylon for pride of place as the most beautiful and most fertile colony of the British Crown in the Eastern Hemisphere. Its cane crops had weathered the summer gales, which on February 12th, and again a fortnight after, had assumed very sinister aspects, and planters, who for years past had valiantly fought against low prices and beetroot competition, were silently revelling in the prospect that the hurricane season being over, the year 1892 was likely to mark a new era of prosperity. The garden of Rampicousness, which Mauritians were wont to consider, and with justice, the third botanical garden in the world, was resplendent with tropical vegetation; while that of Reduit, which had been nursed with love and pride by every successive governor for upwards of a hundred years, was looking its best in its luxuriant display of palms and flowers and gorgeously colored foliage.

At 8 p. m. on the 28th, all this was no more; the island had lost its beauty, the cane its promise, the planter his hopes, and the gardens their charms. A short twenty-four hours had sufficed to perpetrate this end, and fortunate had it been could the mischief have stopped there, for the soil's fertility cannot be affected by a storm, and the soil of Mauritius is preeminently fertile and recuperative; but 1100 people had been killed, 2000 had been wounded; one-third of the capital had been levelled to the ground; thirty out of fifty churches and chapels had been demolished or rendered useless; sugar-mills had been wrecked, crushing mercilessly men, women, and children who had sought refuge under their solid walls; every Indian hut had been blown away, whole villages swept from the place where they stood, and some 50,000 homeless people were left to seek for shelter and food, which a few hours before they were quietly enjoying, through their own exertion and labor.

Nothing could withstand in places the terrible force of the wind on that fatal day of the 28th of April. It will be for scientific men to explain how trees firmly planted more than a century back, and of eight and twelve feet diameter, were felled to the ground, how the iron-like teakwood branches were snapped and cut and broken as mere brushwood; how girders of iron eighteen inches thick were indented and twisted so as to become useless, as in the case of the great pulley-ladders of a sea-dredger; how, in fine, a column of stones, each weighing more than a ton and fast riveted with iron girders and with cement, was thrown down like a pack of cards; and it will be for meteorologists to explain how an island of thirty-three miles by thirty-one in extent, through which the center of a cyclone is passing, can escape at all from a wind so violent as the above-mentioned.

In the tables of observations, the velocity of the wind is set down at 121 miles at its maximum, which corresponds to a pressure of sixty-seven pounds to the square foot. It does seem as if this pressure, moved at double the rate of an express train, must render house habitation useless as a place of refuge in a storm; yet in my inspection of the island I have seen a house destroyed, the walls surrounding its yards crushed to atoms, and a pigeon-house on four miserable posts saved! Why? Everything was unexpected, singular, and unprecedented, in this calamitous stroke dealt by nature with a violence that savored of a woman's vengeance.

Gales in Mauritius have been known in May and even in June, notably in 1785, when the storm lasted twenty hours, but no hurricane; and though there have been three hurricanes in April since 1773, none were later than the 10th of that month, so that even as to date the hurricane of 1892 was exceptional, and will probably, on these accounts, modify many accepted principles of the students of the laws of storms, unless, indeed, the new interest in the spots on the sun's disc can explain, by their number and their degree of magnitude, the exceptional variations in the air currents which revolve about the earth in its whirlwind course around the sun.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Operations on the Josephine mine at Bingham, have been discontinued for the winter.

The trainmen's strike on the D. & R. G. railroad, in Colorado, is still going on, with no prospect of a settlement at present.

An attempt will be made at Price, Emery county, this evening (Monday), to organize a permanent literary and debating society.

Hunters report game of all kinds scarcer this year than ever before in the history of this portion of Wyoming, says the Sheridan Enterprise.

A mandolin, guitar, flute and violin club is about to be organized in Logan. The proposed membership is about twenty-five.

Samples of ore from the Palantic's property, near Leamington were received in Salt Lake yesterday. The ore is free gold. The shaft is down eighteen feet only.

The Live Stock Journal, published at Cheyenne, Wyoming, was seized yesterday on execution of a judgment for $1700 obtained by the St. Louis type foundry.

The new uniform for the Agricultural College cadets is very handsome, and a great improvement on the Chinese laundryman's livery they wore last year.—Logan Journal.

W. Mont Kerry left Park City on Saturday last for Golden, Col., to attend the Colorado State School of Mines during the winter term. He expects to return sometime in May.

J. Edgar Alden, a member of an aristocratic Boston family, told dead from heart disease in a Los Angeles saloon a few days ago. He had been drinking heavily for some time.

At Boise, Idaho, yesterday the judges of the state supreme court had a private meeting and consulted together in reference to the test case argued last week at Lewiston. Their decision is expected almost immediately.

A carload of copper bullion from the Dixie smelter, at St. George, owned and operated by Woolley, Lund and Judd, went east on Saturday over the Union Pacific, having been sold at a good price. The smaller and mines are now running at full blast.

James VanBuskirk came in today (Saturday, Oct. 15th) from Bull Mountain, where they have been getting out wood. He says the snow was very deep out there and that it took four teams to move a wagon and the horses were nearly out of sight in the snow.—Laramie Boomerang.

Yesterday news was received in Salt Lake to the effect that Arthur Slayner and other gentlemen of the city had purchased, for the sum of $110,000, the Star group of mines in Wood River district, Idaho. The property is said to be exceedingly rich, and that a vast quantity of gold ore has already been extracted there.

J. A. Van Pelt, who went out to inspect the strike in the Mohawk on Saturday, has returned. He says they are in the ore four feet, and have not yet encountered the hanging wall. The ore has not yet been assayed but he thinks it will pay to ship. The operators of the property feel greatly encouraged, and are confident that they will be richly repaid for their pluck and enterprise.

Within the last week two train loads of sheep and cattle have been shipped to eastern points and Salt Lake from the Brigham station. Every few days, from two to five carloads of fine beef cattle are shipped to the Salt Lake Slaughtering company. They have agents in these parts who are buying up hundreds of head of good beef cattle for the Salt Lake market.—Butler.

Challis Graphic: Custer county (Idaho) has a curiosity in the shape of a group of petrified trees, about fifteen miles from Challis, first found by Sheriff Horsford. These trees have been seen but by few persons and are said to be strange to look upon. Trunks from stumps to thirty feet in height bearing out from the naturalness of trees, and from two to fifteen feet in diameter.

Owing to the cave in the Mayflower mine, ore has not been coming up as lively as usual and the driver of the first team to the mine has been enabled to get through his day's work several hours sooner than those who came later, and there has been so much rivalry between Farrell's and Iver's teams that some of them have the trip to the mine as early as 2 o'clock in the morning.—Park City Record.

Justice Sullivan of the Idaho supreme court said yesterday that the case of Shepherd vs. Grinnell, instituted to test the validity of the Idaho test oath law, was on Monday last argued and submitted. A decision will be rendered some time next week, and then the Mormons of Idaho will know whether or not they may register immediately, and vote at the forthcoming general election.—Idaho Daily Statesman (October 15).

The Chalk Creek Mine company has now penetrated their coal vein and find it about eight feet thick and as clear of faults or foreign material as ever a vein of coal was. The coal is the hardest ever found in this basin. The company say that they will try transportation over the U. P. for a time, but if they attempt the freeze cut game with them that they shall see that another road goes through Coalville.—Coalville Chronicle.

Fish Commissioner Mills is having the State Fish Hatchery repaired throughout and getting it in shape for the fall take of spawn, says the Carson (Nev.) Appeal. The close of this season's work was the end of a most successful year, inasmuch as young trout had been successfully planted in almost inaccessible waters throughout the eastern part of the state. California anglers are rapidly getting on to the fact that Nevada can raise the hardest and gamest brook trout on earth.

The Pioneer Canal company have let the contract for the reconstruction of their large flume near the Boder-green ranch, twenty-five miles southwest of the city, to Victor Beaumier. Mr. Beaumier will commence the work at once. The flume is about 1,500 feet long and will be twenty feet wide and six feet high, being four feet wider than the present flume and two feet higher. The high line canal which has been surveyed by the land company may be constructed during the coming season. The contractors who are constructing the big ditch in Colorado, diverting the headwaters of the Laramie river, now have 200 men at work.—Laramie Boomerang.

Harry Shields was instantly killed in the Frisco mine a few days ago. He was head timberman in the mine. At the time of the accident Shields was engaged putting in timbers in an old drift on the second level. He had put in two sets and in preparing to put in the last set next to the face he found a rock projecting from above which had to be moved. He told his associates to wait a minute and, taking a hammer, struck the projecting rock a few blows. The drift was following the lead and the formation was no harder. A few blows loosened the rock, which seemed to be the keystone, and its fall was followed instantaneously by seven or eight tons of broken rock and ledge matter. The mass came down without warning, and Shields was crushed beneath it. The rock was removed as speedily as possible, but the unfortunate man showed no sign of life.—Wallace (Idaho) Miner.

A singular accident lost a valuable horse for Jim Westman of Buffalo, Wyoming, a few days ago. Westman and some others were on a hunt in the Big Horn mountains. They had packed one horse and started back to camp on the Ten Sleep. When a little below the big meadows the animal started down a steep bank leading to the creek. The earth was loose and treacherous, and the horse lost its footing and slid and fell into the water. When the hunters reached the animal's side they found it lying in a foot of water. It had fallen head first into the creek and forced its head beneath a huge rock, from beneath which the combined exertions of the men were unable to extract it, and the horse was drowned. So tightly had the animal's head been held by the rock that Westman was forced to cut the head from the trunk in order to secure the bridle. The horse was a great favorite with its owner, and was highly valued.

The Idaho state board of pardons has extended clemency to Henry Rice, sent to the penitentiary from this county in 1887, for ten years, for murder in the second degree. Rice is over 60 years of age. Many people have believed that he was not guilty of the crime for which he was punished. He was a fisherman living on an island in the Snake river near Payette. One night in October, 1887, he went into Stern & Miller's saloon, near the brewery in Payette, Idaho, where a large and disorderly crowd was assembled, and there he met a man named Henry Lorensen, who demanded a sum of money which he claimed Rice owed him. Rice refused to settle the claim in the saloon, whereupon Lorensen threw him upon the floor and gave him a severe beating. As soon as he could Rice arose and started to leave for home; but Lorensen pulled him into the saloon and again hammered him. Bystanders dragged Lorensen away from the old man, and Salmon Stern stepped between them. A moment later Lorensen was fatally stabbed, and it was claimed that Rice committed the bloody act. He was arrested and convicted, though many persons believed that the crime was saddled upon him in order to enrich him out of a valuable fishery which he held by squatter's right. Several of the men who served as jurors at the trial petitioned for Rice's pardon.

Prof. J. M. Navoni, the talented musician who came to Boise, Idaho, from Butte Montana, a few months ago, is wanted by many creditors. He cannot be found, however, and the people to whom he is indebted are grieving. Navoni, who is a remarkably accomplished violinist, was a bright and shining light in local musical circles, and he made considerable money during his stay in Boise. He organized a good orchestra and played regularly at the Natorium, and in other first class resorts. About a month ago he organized a concert company, with D. J. Williams as manager, and commenced a tour of the smaller towns of Ada and adjoining counties. The troupe was composed of Prof. Navoni, Nellie Weber, W. J. Fitzpatrick and W. S. Ungar, and their entertainments were unusually good, the box receipts were heavy. The company went over to Owyhee county during the week just ended, and met with a flattering reception. At Silver City the professor, flushed with success, commenced to gamble, the results being empty pockets. He left for greener fields as speedily as he could. The Navoni troupe traveled about in a rig hired from the City stables, and for the hire of the outfit the professor owes about $100 in cold cash. Besides this, the stableman had to pay for the feed the horses consumed in Silver City, and had to send a man to Nampa to drive the rig to Boise. The professor's debts will aggregate about $500.—Idaho Daily Statesman, Oct. 16th.

A new action has been begun by Eva E. Lewis against the estate of Elder Jason G. Miller, a well-known character of Lincoln, Nebraska, and the owner of a large amount of property. The real name of Eva E. Lewis, until she was three years of age, was Eliza Jane Covenger, and, as nearly as can be found out, she was born about December 14, 1864, in Illinois. At a very early age she was surrendered by her father to the Home for Friendless Children at Chicago. In April, 1870, Elder Miller visited the home and took a fancy to the little dark-eyed girl. He was childless and said he wished to adopt her, and on proper representations was allowed to take her. The Elder's desire was that when the girl grew up she should become a missionary. However, she met E. O. Lewis, loved him after the fashion of young girls, and when requested by Elder Miller to give him up and go to convert the heathen of the orient she did not feel that filial obedience required such a sacrifice and instead she married the man of her choice. Elder Miller died a year ago, leaving an estate valued at $250,000. He had made no provision for Mrs. Lewis. A suit was begun last spring but was withdrawn on representation that Miller had never adopted the foundation, though giving her his name and treating her in every way as his daughter. Detectives were put to work in Chicago, and the positive proof they are alleged to have secured from the home there, showing that Miller contracted to adopt Eliza Jane Covenger and give her the name of Eva E. Miller, is the cause for the filing of the new action.—Ex.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder Joseph B. Stark, of Payson, arrived in the city this afternoon, on his return from a mission to England. Brother Stark left home on April 17th, 1891, and for the first ten months labored in Kent county, for some two months afterwards in the southeastern part of London, and from that time until August 15th, when he obtained his release, he was located in the Channel islands—Jersey and Guernsey. The missionaries encountered a little opposition in London and Guernsey, but, on the whole, were treated well by the people.

Elder Stark's health has been very indifferent during a large portion of the time he has been absent; otherwise he says he has enjoyed his mission exceedingly.

Elder James Paxton, of Kanosh, Millard Co., returned with Elder Stark from England.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.

This conference convened in the People's Party Hall, Big Clifty, Grayson county, Kentucky, October 9th, 1892. There were present President J. G. Kimball, Jas. C. Farran, president of the conference, Elders Harry A. Bramwell, Jos. Seely, Charles H. Worthen, A. T. Merrill, John W. Sykes W. N. Spafford, Clifton T. Bunker, J. W. Seely and John T. Giles.

Two meetings were held at 10 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., respectively. About one hundred and fifty people attended.

The people treated us kindly and seemed well pleased with the preaching. We were promised the use of a fine church by the presiding elders, but the congregation assembled, and after discussing the matter, closed the doors against us by a majority of two votes.

Three council meetings were held during the conference. The Elders gave in their reports and received much valuable instruction from President Kimball, which was greatly appreciated.

JOHN T. GILES,
Clerk of Conference.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 17.—It is learned on good authority that the telegraphers of the Missouri Pacific road will strike this afternoon.

SEVENTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

At the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Seventh quorum of Elders, held in the Twenty-second ward meeting house, Salt Lake city, last (Friday) night, October 14th, Brother Arthur Winter was unanimously sustained as second counselor to President Joseph R. Mathews, and was set apart to labor in this capacity under the hands of President Angus M. Cannon, assisted by Counselor Joseph E. Taylor.

The appointment of Brother Winter was occasioned by the removal of Brother Samuel R. Brown, formerly second counselor, from the city.

TO BRING THE MOON CLOSE TO US.

London Daily Chronicle: M. Francois Deloncle, a French savant, and deputy for the Basses Alpes, has a marvelous project in hand, which he hopes to see completed in time to astonish mankind at the Paris exhibition of 1900. Though the moon is 240,000 miles distant from the earth, M. Deloncle thinks he can construct an apparatus which will enable us to examine that luminary at very close quarters.

The idea has been expounded by the author before a French scientific society, and M. Deloncle says, in substance, that the only obstacle to a close observation of celestial bodies is the relative imperfection of instruments, and that all that is required is an enlargement and improvement of the present instruments. Astronomers, says M. Deloncle, have reckoned that the image of the moon can be brought quite close to the earth by means of a crystal mirror eight meters in diameter, but which, owing to the thickness required, would weigh about eight tons. He has consulted various opticians in Paris and they are prepared to execute the work before the year 1900.

There remains, however, the question of the structure which would be required to hold this gigantic mirror, and upon this point M. Maurice Loewy, a distinguished French astronomer, says that while in principle M. Deloncle's scheme is possible, there are enormous difficulties in the way of its realization, the chief of which, so far as the exhibition is concerned, is that the apparatus must be erected on a mountain about two miles in height in order to secure the proper atmospheric conditions. If this and other difficulties are surmounted, says M. Loewy, there would be some very remarkable results, for it would be possible to clearly distinguish in the movement objects about the size of a four-story house.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—Fifteen dwellings and stores were burned and two women killed in Englewood in the southern part of the city this morning. The financial loss is $80,000. Mrs. W. K. Butler, though not really in danger, jumped from the third story window, striking on her head, and was instantly killed. John Howard, an employee in the bakery where the fire started, was burned to death. The women and children in one of the burned buildings are not accounted for.

NOTES.

IF MR. CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS were a candidate this week for any office within the gift of the American people, we are inclined to think he would get it.

WHEN EDWIN BOOTH heard that Corbett had also taken to the stage, he expressed his thankfulness that the "championship still remained in the profession."

THE PROMINENT Liberals at the Ogden convention yesterday appear to have given their undivided attention to the business of declining the nomination for delegate to Congress. In this particular they were delightfully unanimous.

WITH JOSEPH L. RAWLINS expounding the principles of Democracy and Frank J. Cannon doing the same for Republicanism, in their respective pleas for suffrages, it would be a little interesting to know just what Charles E. Allen is going to find to talk about in his particular plea for the same kind of favors.

NOW THAT Charlie Mitchell, paraded by sporting sentimentalists as the "gentleman pugilist," has been sentenced to imprisonment and the tread mill for brutally assaulting an old man, there can be nothing unjust in the emphatic and very dreadful decision that he is a disgrace even to the prize ring.

THE NEW railway between Jaffa and Jerusalem will soon be opened for traffic. A station is being built on the road between the latter place and Bethlehem. A month ago the first engine was seen at this place and hundreds of Arabs and Turks, Christians and Jews, fellahins and Bedouins had gathered to view the novel sight.

MURAT HALSTEAD has one of the buoyant, happy spirits that trifles do not depress, nor omens send into sulks. He calls Judge Cooley "a constitutional crank," Judge Gresham "a presidential crank" and Wayne MacVeagh "a professional crank." Each and every one is an old and cold chestnut, adds the vivacious marshal cheerily.

EDITOR CHARLES A. DANA, of the New York Sun, took the pains to follow the example of Mr. Blaine before leaving for Europe the other day; that is, he "paired off" for election purposes with a friend opposed to him in politics. Some people will perhaps be malicious enough to ask whether he paired with a Republican or a Democrat.

NEW YORK city is agitated because of a franchise recently granted an electric railway company. The discussion of whether or not the people will submit to the trolley system sounds strange enough out here, where it has not only been established but regarded as an indispensable, albeit unsightly and even dangerous commodity, for two or three years.

OLYBES HEUREAUX, president of San Domingo, is a thrifty soul, and possessed of so mean financial genius withal. Wishing to negotiate with the United States government lately a loan of $100,000, he serenely offered as collateral the real bones of Christopher Columbus. It is needless to say Uncle Sam declined the offer—he is not in the pawnbroker business.

It was quite an achievement for New York City to shut out the cholera and so effectually and suddenly obliterate the germs that were wafted ashore. A good deal of fault was found with the harshness to which some incoming passengers were subjected; but Governor Flower's little epithet and the results following atoned for all that.

EUROPEAN PAPERS contain notices of a peculiar case of nervous disease at a hospital in Leipzig. The patient sees light waves of different colors emanating from the foreheads of people who stand before him and concentrate their thoughts on an object. The question is, whether the perception of color is only a hallucination on the part of the patient or whether his nervous condition enables him to notice a fact which escapes the senses of persons in a normal condition. Who can tell?

TEN THOUSAND workmen are employed upon the World's Fair building in Chicago—a toiling, perspiring army which up to the close of September yielded over 3000 cases to the hospital staff. Through accident eighteen men have been instantly killed, and about 700 injured. Among the latter is not included a hardy Celt who fell sixty-six feet and alighted sitting bolt upright on a convenient sand-pile. The beholders expected to see his spine telescoped, but they didn't know their man. He sat on the sand-pile for a moment, regarding the height from which he had fallen, then arose, brushed the sand from his trousers and remarked with profane emphasis: "Umph! But that was a devil of a fall."

A NEW ENGLAND paper points out that while old style chronology makes the date of the discovery of America the 12th of October, and new style chronology makes it the 21st, which gives opportunity for a double celebration in New York and Chicago, there is no dispute whatever over the fact that it was 2 o'clock in the morning when the discovery was made. Yet only one place, so far as reported, celebrated the event promptly on the hour, and that was Smith College, Massachusetts, where the girls sat up for the occasion. They evidently had a lively appreciation to the fact that, while it was Columbus that discovered America, it was a woman that discovered Columbus.

HENRY WATTERSON will deliver the oration at the dedication of the World's Fair on Friday, Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge having finally declined to do so. As an editor we all feel a fraternal interest in the great director of the Courier-Journal and acknowledge his eminence; as an orator he has few superiors; as a statesman he has made his mark; as a politician who asks for nothing and gets it, he is a shining light; but as the paternal source of the "Star-eyed Goddess of Reform" he is known wider and more generally than in any other capacity. Those who hear Mr. Watterson's oration will hear something well worth listening to, notwithstanding the fact that his time for preparing anything has been altogether too limited.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, October 16th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir sang the hymn commencing:

Earth, with her ten thousand flowers,

Air, with all its beams and showers.

Prayer was offered by Bishop E. F. Sheets.

The choir sang the hymn:

Again we meet under the board

Of Jesus our redeeming Lord.

The Priesthood of the Twelfth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

COUNSELOR JOSEPH E. TAYLOR

was called to address the congregation. He said this people had been well instructed and are well informed upon the principles of our holy religion. No man could teach the Latter-day Saints the principles of the true Gospel, to their edification, unless inspired by the Holy Ghost. Our Elders went forth to preach the Word to the nations of the earth. They might spurn their testimonies and reject their words; but those who did so stood condemned of God for it. There was a great difference between a man speaking according to his own understanding and comprehension, and delivering his own opinions, as against the declarations which were made under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost.

He had no doubt that very strong impressions were made upon those who attended the recent Conference in this building and listened to the discourses delivered on that occasion by the First Presidency, the Apostles and other brethren, some of the subjects then dwelt upon being of paramount importance to the Latter-day Saints. He had never been able to see any consistency in the desire to get through with this earth and lay down our bodies at an early period of our lives. He had always believed that the spirit and body united could accomplish a far larger amount of good than when separated; and the spirits in the spirit world were there waiting for the redemption of the body in order that they might become possessed of greater power and be able to wield a greater degree of influence than they possibly could without the tabernacle.

There was more involved in the Word of Wisdom, the consequences were more vast than we imagined, and it required the inspiration of the Holy Ghost to enable us to comprehend what was fully designed by God in giving that word, through His servant the Prophet, unto the people. We were therein called upon to preserve our tabernacles and keep them pure. God designed that we should improve in the propagation of our species, that our offspring, physically, mentally and spiritually, might be in advance of the past generation.

The speaker said he knew of nothing today existing in the midst of the Latter-day Saints which produced such a lack of confidence between man and man as the vexed subject of debt, which was also referred to at the late Conference. He earnestly counseled the people not to mortgage their homes, and to be slow in making foolish speculations. There should be a more rigid economy among us than had been practiced for many years past. Some persons through a mistaken clinging to hope, and without making proper calculation beforehand, landed themselves into financial trouble and difficulties. They trusted too much to something turning up to enable them to meet their obligations. Having discovered the wrong we had done in making these foolish ventures, we should put the questions to ourselves—had we learned lessons of wisdom by the experience through which we had passed? While he deprecated the practice and felt at heart in contemplating the present condition in this regard of many men and many families, he would say to those to whom an obligation was due, "These are your brethren, and exercise mercy towards them; do not be too severe; do not be cruel; let your bowels be filled with compassion, long-suffering and charity. Give your brother a chance to redeem himself, and take no undue advantage of him." Let us stop today, and not involve ourselves further in indebtedness. That man was the more respected in a community who paid his one hundred cents on the dollar. He looked forward to the time in our history when we would all be able to live according to that law which must be observed by God's people—he referred to what was termed united order.

It was a mark of a serious lack of faith when a man did not pay an honest thing, and he who failed in this respect stood condemned before the Lord, even though he did not lose his fellowship among his brethren; moreover, he was not entitled to the same blessings as the man who recognized this as a law of God given for his salvation.

Speaking on the building of temples, Elder Taylor exhorted the Saints to heed the words of those who at the late Conference urged them to give freely of their substance towards the completion of the Salt Lake Temple by April next. He likewise dwelt upon the vast importance of temple work for the dead.

In the glorious future before the Latter-day Saints he saw naught but triumph both on the right hand and on the left, though at the present time the fight with the arch enemy might be a severe and continuous one. As a united people we had to do battle against the hosts of evil spirits here among mankind. It was our duty to resist with all earnestness the forces arrayed against us, and to teach our sons after us to fight for God, for freedom, for justice, and for truth, to bequeath that to them which was better than all riches.

In conclusion the speaker prayed that the blessings of God might rest upon this people.

The choir sang the anthem "God be merciful unto us and bless us."

Benediction by Bishop William B. Preston.

Charles H. Cave, a banker of Deming and Silver City, New Mexico, is in jail charged with numerous irregularities.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Salt Lake Democratic County Convention met in Wasatch Hall today. It was called for the purpose of nominating the following county officers: Recorder, clerk, treasurer, collector, assessor, sheriff, attorney, surveyor, coroner, and three selectmen.

The same great American flag covered the end of the hall as was there last night on the occasion of the big Republican ratification meeting, but the pictures of the Republican leaders had been removed for the standard bearers of Democracy. There was good attendance of delegates and all available space was occupied by spectators. There was good music and lots of it, furnished by Held's band.

Chairman M. F. Arnett called the convention to order at 11:30.

Owing to the absence of Chairman Sutherland it was moved that the reading of the resolutions be deferred until the nominations should have been made.

It was said that Judge Sutherland was attending a private meeting. On this representation Hadley Johnson took the floor and said that there was no excuse for the absence of the committee. They had no business to attend to private matters when the party demanded their time, talent and attention. (Applause).

Two motions in different forms to adjourn were voted down.

LeGrande Young took the floor and explained that the resolutions had been drawn up and would soon be presented.

The convention then adjourned until one o'clock and during the recess met in executive session.

During the executive session it is understood that a proposition from the Republican leaders tending towards fusion was considered and voted down with an overwhelming majority. At 1:45 the executive session adjourned. Immediately afterwards the convention was called to order but at once adjourned until 2:30 without transacting any business.

It was nearly 3 o'clock when Chairman Arnett's gavel fell. He announced that the first business before the meeting was the report of the committee on resolutions. Some time elapsed before it was ascertained that the committee on resolutions was again absent.

A. T. Schroeder moved that a committee of three be appointed to go out and hunt up the committee on resolutions.

At this juncture Le Grand Young, a member of the committee, entered the hall and said that at present all of the committee excepting himself and Judge Sutherland were absent from the city, but before their departure the following resolution was drawn up by them:

Resolved, That we cordially adopt the national Democratic platform, formulated at the late national Democratic convention at Chicago; and also the Territorial platform, adopted at the late Democratic convention at Provo. These platforms embrace all national topics involved in this campaign and speak in forcible language our views upon all local issues, leaving no room for any additional plank.

J. G. SUTHERLAND,
Chairman of Committee on Resolutions.

E. E. Rich with fine sarcasm moved that the committee be given a vote of thanks for their arduous labors in drawing up such an extensive platform.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Cushing, of the Federated Trades council, offered the following amendment, which also carried unanimously:

Resolved, That we sympathize with the aims and efforts of organized labor and to secure for themselves a just proportion of the product of their own labor. Resolved, That we condemn the Republican system of protection by high tariff while our ports are opened to pauper labor and criminals of the world.

NOMINATIONS.

Nominations were then declared in order.

Governor West took the platform and in a rousing speech nominated John H. Rumel, Jr., as county recorder. The nomination was made by acclamation.

FOR COUNTY CLERK.

Hon. John T. Caine placed Byron Groo, ex-editor of the Herald, in nomination as county clerk.

Mr. McNally nominated Gustave Bachman.

The vote resulted as follows:

Groo.....	141
Bachman.....	158
Total.....	299

The nomination of Mr. Bachman was made unanimous.

FOR TREASURER.

On motion of J. B. Walden, J. B. Toronto was nominated for county treasurer by acclamation.

ASSESSOR.

Judge Laney nominated G. W. Snow for the office of assessor.

Mr. Snow declined, saying that he was not a candidate for office and could not accept the nomination under any consideration.

Mr. Snow nominated Mr. D. C. Dunbar for that office. The nomination was made unanimous.

COLLECTOR.

W. H. Cassady said that the Democratic party owed Mr. Byron Groo a big debt and it should be paid. He moved that Mr. Groo be nominated by acclamation to the office of collector. Carried with three rousing cheers.

SHERIFF.

Waldemar Van Cott said that the coming sheriff of Salt Lake county must be a man whose character was above reproach. Such a man was A. G. Dyer and he placed that gentleman's name in nomination.

David Murdock nominated J. B. Cummock.

Mr. Ales of the First precinct nominated J. B. Timmony.

Fergus Coalter nominated Gilbert A. McLean.

Robert Wilson nominated W. C. A. Smoot, of Sugar House ward.

J. B. Walden nominated the present incumbent, Andrew J. Burt.

George W. Snow made a lengthy and eulogistic speech on the fitness of Ab. Dyer.

Mr. Arnett nominated A. L. Heaton, of Bingham.

J. B. Timmony took the floor and said he did not think any one would question his Democracy. He was not a candidate. He wanted the test put to every candidate. He wanted to see no sunshine Democrat nominated. He wanted to see a man nominated who had stood by the party in its darkest days. He would oppose tooth and toenail a man that had been a Tuscarora or had been wearing war paint and feathers for a year or so.

THE VOTE.

Nominations then closed and the convention proceeded to ballot. The vote resulted as follows:

Ab. G. Dyer.....	30
J. B. Cummock.....	24
J. B. Timmony.....	47
Gilbert A. McLean.....	29
W. C. A. Smoot.....	29
Andrew J. Burt.....	81
A. L. Heaton.....	59

Total.....	299
Necessary to a choice.....	150

A majority of the votes of the convention not being cast for any one delegate a second ballot was ordered.

In all three ballots were taken. They were:

	First Ballot.	Second Ballot.	Third Ballot.
Ab. Dyer.....	30	24	13
J. B. Cummock.....	24	2
J. B. Timmony.....	47	2	8
Gilbert A. McLean.....	29	2	5
W. C. A. Smoot.....	29	17
A. J. Burt.....	81	7	80
A. L. Heaton.....	59	11	188

Mr. Heaton was declared the unanimous choice of the convention. He said that he was not a speech maker but thanked the delegates for making him the next sheriff of Salt Lake county.

COUNTY ATTORNEY.

J. B. Timmony said he took pleasure in nominating for county attorney A. N. Cherry.

W. A. Hodge nominated S. A. Kenner as a man who had been a Democrat for forty years and a lawyer and a good citizen always.

John T. Caine seconded the nomination.

Waldemar Van Cott nominated Richard A. Cabbel.

J. A. Williams seconded the nomination.

Lawyer Condon seconded the nomination of Judge Cherry. In so doing he did not wish to reflect upon the ability or character of S. A. Kenner. The latter was a sterling Democrat, a manly and outspoken man and always a true friend and a gentleman.

Judge E. A. Smith seconded the nomination of Mr. Cabbel as did also Mr. McEenney.

THE VOTE.

Cherry.....	70
Kenner.....	57
Cabbel.....	119
Necessary to a choice.....	149

SECOND BALLOT.

Cherry.....	65
Kenner.....	67
Cabbel.....	160

Mr. Cabbel's nomination was made unanimous.

SURVEYOR.

Judge E. A. Smith nominated Gideon A. Gibbs for surveyor. His nomination was made unanimous.

CORONER.

W. H. Cassady nominated Jos. Wm. Taylor.

George E. Blair nominated John Burt.

J. B. Timmony nominated Dave Levy.

Tay. of 59
 Burt 81
 Levy 102
 Levy's nomination was made unanimous:

SELECTMEN.

H. S. Laney nominated J. M. Kennedy of Farmers Ward.

George W. Snow placed in nomination the name of C. E. Angell of Salt Lake.

George E. Blair nominated N. H. Halstrom of Sandy.

A. T. Schroeder named Wendell Benson.

Thomas Hall nominated Richard Howe of South Cottonwood.

J. B. Walden nominated M. B. Sowles of Salt Lake.

The name of John G. Labrum of South Cottonwood was placed in nomination.

D. O. Rideout, Jr., of Draper nominated Orin P. Miller of Riverton.

A. T. Schroeder nominated Wendell Benson.

A. E. Hyde suggested the name of Francis Armstrong.

The name of Magnus Olson of West Jordan was placed in nomination.

The ballot was taken and resulted as follows: Benson 218, Miller 210, Labrum 189, Halstrom 60, Angell 53, Howe 35, Kennedy 34, Sowles 32, Olsen 26, Armstrong 19.

Benson, Miller and Labrum having received a majority of all the votes cast were declared the regular nominees of the convention.

A PANTING PLEDGE.

J. C. McLaughlin introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

"Whereas, the election of Grover Cleveland is a foregone conclusion, and Utah is about to enjoy the boon of a Democratic governor, Democratic judges, Democratic United States marshals, Democratic postmasters and Democratic probate judges;

Resolved, That the delegates of this convention pledge themselves to resist, by all honorable means, the appointment of any person to a position of profit and trust under the federal government during the four years of Democratic administration, who does not vote the ticket at whose head shall stand the name of J. L. Rawlins and give his active support to the Democratic county ticket.

The convention then adjourned sine die.

THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET

for Salt Lake County stands:

For Recorder..... John H. Rummel, Jr.
 For Clerk..... Gustave S. Bachman.
 For Assessor..... D. C. Dunbar.
 For collector..... Byron Groo.
 For Sheriff..... A. Heaton.
 For Treasurer..... Joseph B. Toronto.
 For Attorney..... Richard H. Cabell.
 For Surveyor..... Gideon A. Gibbs.
 For Coroner..... David L. Levy.
 For Selectmen, Wendell Benson, O. P. Miller, J. G. Labrum.

THE PROFITS of literature of the strictly French type are well illustrated in the royalties paid to Zola; these, in twenty years, are computed at a quarter of a million dollars. The dramatization of L'Assommoir alone yielded $60,000 of that income.

THE STATEMENT is given publicity that King Leopold of Belgium is a most inveterate gambler. This sort of thing ought to possess especial interest for the taxpayers over there who furnish him with the funds to do it with.

THE HOMESTEAD TROUBLE AGAIN.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 11.—Chief Justice Paxson of the supreme court of the state and Judge Kennedy of the county court occupied the bench when the jury entered the courtroom. The bills against Hugh O'Donnell and others for treason include thirty-one defendants, Hugh O'Donnell, John McLuckie, David Lynch, Thomas Crawford, Harry Bayne, Elmer E. Bail, Henry Bayard, J. W. Brown, George Champeno, Isaac Critchlow, Miller Colgan, John Coyle, Jack Clifford, Dennis M. Cuth, Wm. M. Connehy, Mike Cummings, Wm. Combe, John Dietkin, Patrick Eagan, M. H. Gachez, Matthew Harris, Ried Kennedy, John Miller, O. C. Searight, John Murray, W. H. Thompson, Martin Murray, Hugh Ross, W. T. Roberts, George Rylands and George W. Sarver.

The indictments for murder are for the killing of George W. Rutter, John E. Morris, Joseph Soake and Elias Wain, all strikers, and include H. C. Frick, chairman of the company; F. T. Lovejoy, secretary; J. A. Potter, superintendent; Nevin McConnell and James Dovey, mill bosses; Robert Pinkerton, William Pinkerton, C. W. Biddell, W. H. Burt, John Cooper and A. D. F. Whilde of the Pinkerton detective agency.

The bills for conspiracy embrace all those charged with murder, with the addition of George Lander, H. McCurry, Otto Childs, L. C. Phillips of the steel company and Fred W. Primo, a detective.

Those charged with aggravated riot are H. C. Frick, H. McCurry, J. G. Lelsman, F. T. Lovejoy, L. C. Phillips, J. S. Dovey, Nevin McConnell, John Cooper, C. W. Biddell, Fred Primo, Fred Burt and F. W. Prind.

The true bill in the treason case sets forth at great length that the defendants and other persons, names unknown, to the number of one thousand and upwards, armed and arrayed in war-like manner, did "voluntarily and traitorously join, and assembly themselves together, and then and there did dispose themselves against the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and did ordain, prepare and levy war against said commonwealth of Pennsylvania to the end that the constitution, laws and authority might be, and were, defied, resisted and subverted by the said defendants, and their armed allies contrary to the duty and fidelity of said defendants, to the evil example of all others in like cases, offending contrary to the form of the act of the general assembly in such case made and provided, against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

The indictment against the Carnegie officials for murder reads as in the case of Elias Wain, "That the defendants on the 6th day of July, 1892, with force and arms did make an assault on Elias Wain and feloniously, maliciously and with malice aforethought, did kill and murder him against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

The indictment against Frick and his associates for conspiracy sets forth among other things that "Said defendants did unlawfully, falsely and maliciously conspire, combine, federate and agree together to depress, lower, lessen and diminish wages, price and compensation of labor of divers persons employed by the Carnegie Steel company (Limited), to then and there close up the steel manufacturing and cease work and operations therein and thereupon sent two hundred and upwards of armed men with guns, etc., to overawe, intimidate and frighten divers persons in said township of Mifflin who were there lately before employed by said Carnegie Steel company, to invade said township of Mifflin, and to attack and to shoot off and discharge said deadly weapons against said persons lately employed by said Carnegie Steel company (Limited)."

In regard to the fight on the morning of July 8th the bill says the defendants "did counsel and advise the shooting."

The grand jury's action did not cause much excitement among the public generally, and the defendants themselves took it quite coolly. The Carnegie officials, however, declined to be interviewed on the subject of the charge.

THE IRVINE TRIAL.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 11.—Yesterday afternoon's session of the Irvine trial in this city was a continuation of the examination of jurors. Up to the time of adjournment, fifty-three jurors had been examined and challenged or excused, with eleven in the box subject to peremptory challenge. The state had used three of the six; the defense six of the sixteen peremptory allowed.

In the Lambertson mandamus proceedings, General Lambertson's counsel made a strong personal plea before the supreme court for his client, the court having refused to allow the filing of Lambertson's transcript. The court finally agreed to look over the papers, but gave little encouragement to the relator, saying that it was not their practice to interfere in such matters, and especially in this case. This effectively prevents Lambertson from assisting the prosecution after being engaged by the defense.

This is the third day of the trial. Up to the noon adjournment it has been consumed in examining jurors. So far twenty-five men have been examined today, making a total of seventy-eight altogether. The courtroom attendance is small, but great interest is manifested in the case, on the outside. Counsel on both sides are unusually strict in the examination of each juror. So far opinions agree that the defense is gaining most points.

Irvine is well, and all the attorneys are in good condition. There was nothing worthy of particular mention during the morning. A jury will be secured this afternoon without doubt, the state having but one and the defense four challenges left. Up to noon today no jury had been selected in the Irvine case, but the prospects are favorable to obtaining a satisfactory panel this afternoon. There have been 58 men examined, fifty-two of whom have been discharged from serving for cause, having expressed and still entertaining fixed opinions.

Of the total number incapacitated to serve, fifty were seen by the reporter who would have given a favorable verdict for the defense had they been permitted to sit on the jury. The others thought that some punishment should be inflicted, but none were severer than a very brief term. This is fairly indicative of the sentiment in Lincoln, formed from the few facts published at the time of the tragedy.

The defense has testimony which will startle the community, but desperate efforts will be made by the prosecution to resist the introduction of the same.

Mr. Irvine is standing the strain as well as could be expected, and his Salt Lake friends are ever at his side to offer their support and comfort.

Very close examinations of the jurors on their family relations are being made and it is safe to predict that it will finally be composed of married men exclusively.

Up to noon the defense has exercised twelve of their sixteen peremptory challenges and the prosecution five of their six. The prosecution has twenty-one witnesses. The defense have not decided yet just how many they will put on the stand, but if they use expert testimony a hypothetical question will be asked requiring nearly an hour to put it.

It is generally understood that the theory of temporary insanity will be set up by the defense, and when the terrible ordeal through which Mr. Irvine was compelled to go for nearly a week prior to the culmination of the tragedy is known, it is generally believed here in Lincoln that the community will have but one thought—that of his exoneration.

LINCOLN, Oct. 12.—At 8:15 this afternoon, after the examination of the ninety-third jurymen, both the general and special panels were exhausted. The court ordered another panel of fifty citizens and adjourned till 10:30 tomorrow morning. The state has but one, the defense three peremptories left.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday night. President Loofbourrow in the chair. The councilmen in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Karkick, Moran, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Kelly, Evans, Wantland, Halse, Beardsley, Simond.

Absent—None.

City Attorney Hoge not being present his assistant, Edward F. Coad acted as legal adviser for the municipal fathers.

PETITIONS

were read and referred as follows:

W. A. Needham and others asked for an extension of watermain. Committee on waterworks.

A communication from the Salt Lake Street Car company regarding the use of combination poles was referred to the city engineer.

Frederick Heath and others asked that certain streets be repaired. Committee on streets.

L. P. Kelly and others asked that a grade be established on certain streets for building purposes. City engineer.

Captain Greenman and others asked that G. D. Amos be appointed to the position of meat inspector. Committee on markets.

C. C. Wilson asked to be allowed to erect a fruit stand at the corner of second South and Main streets. The petition was denied.

H. F. Taylor asked for an electric light at the intersection of Fourth South and Seventh West streets. Committee on improvements.

ANOTHER EXECUTIVE VETO MESSAGE.

The following from the mayor was read:

C. E. Stanton, City Recorder:

Dear Sir—I hereby return disapproved the resolution granting a franchise to the Great Salt Lake and Hot Springs Railway company, passed by the City Council October 4, 1892, for the following reasons:

Section 3 recites that "In consideration of this grant and franchise, said grantee shall within four months after the date of the passage of this resolution (unless granted further time by the City Council) begin the actual construction of a broad-gauge railway to the west from Salt Lake City."

The consideration thus stated is in point of fact no consideration at all. How far to the west or from what point a broad-gauge railway shall be constructed is not stated; whether it is to be extended west one inch or to Deep Creek is a matter of conjecture. Certainly it is not a matter of conjecture that the grading by the grade of a few feet of broad-gauge railway rounded within four months from any point to the west would fully meet the requirements of said section, and be a full performance of the consideration stated.

Franchises which injuriously effect the value and tenure of property in the vicinity should be granted only when the interests of the public imperatively require this to be done.

For speculative purposes they should in no case be granted. In cases when the granting of a franchise would be proper such conditions and requirements as are calculated to insure good faith should always be incorporated in the grant.

In the case under consideration this has not been done, and after the grantee shall have made a commencement, however slight, within four months, nothing further can be required towards constructing a road of utility to the city.

The grantee should have been required to do something the performance of which would show good faith and that the franchise was not for speculative purposes merely.

Section 2 provides that "If the grantee, its successors and assigns shall fail to perform all the stipulations of this resolution, the council, after sixty days' notice, may declare the privileges herein granted forfeited."

It was intended by this provision that a failure to perform any one of the stipulations of the resolution should work a forfeiture of the grant at the election of the City Council, the language selected, to say the least, was not well chosen.

The language should be so explicit as to admit of but one construction. I, therefore, suggest the insertion of the words "any one or" between the words "perform" and "all" in the third line of section 2. As thus amended, there can be no question as to what is meant. Again, no point at which the construction west shall commence is fixed, the language of the resolution on this subject being that the grantee shall "begin the active construction of a broad-gauge railway to the west from Salt Lake City." This, by implication, gives the grantee the right to begin at any point it may select, and to construct west beyond the city limits.

A franchise so vague, indefinite and yet so broad and sweeping as the one in question, in my opinion, should not be granted.

A BRIEF TEMPEST.

Horn—This is not the first time that this Council has been chastised or reproved by this man Baskin. Now I want to ask the question, Are we fifteen authorized councilmen or are we fifteen dummies? It seems that we cannot pass a single resolution or ordinance but what this man returns it vetoed with insulting language. I am in favor of passing the ordinance over his head and with fifteen votes at that.

Moran—I call the gentleman to order.

The chair—State your point of order.

Moran—I object to any such a declaration.

The chair—The point is not well taken.

Rich—I can tell the gentleman how long this thing will last. It will be just as long as the present city attorney is allowed to draw up our ordinances.

Lawson—Mr. Horn is right. The actions of our mayor are becoming unbearable. For one I do not propose to allow everything he mixes up for us. I am a man who is not afraid to speak his sentiments. If a man is in the wrong I will tell him so; I don't care who he is. This autocrat is going a little too far.

Moran—O, you never mind, I am able to take care of myself.

Lawson (hotly)—Well, may be you can, but so can I, and—

The chair (striking the table with his gavel fiercely)—Come, come, gentlemen, this thing must cease. You must not indulge in this personality.

A vote to pass the measure of the mayor's veto was lost as follows:

Noes—Beardsley, Bell, Folland, Hardy, Loofbourrow, Moran, Rich, Simond, Wantland—9

Ayes—Halse, Horn, Karkick, Kelly, Lawson—5.

Moran—I now move that we take up the franchise and amend it in accordance with the recommendations of the mayor.

The motion prevailed, another wrangle followed. After half an hour had been spent in a display of useless but entirely characteristic oratory, Hardy moved that further action be postponed until Tuesday night next. He gave as his reasons for so doing that he wished to consult with the members as to the advisability of taking the preliminary steps towards compelling all the railroads to come into and leave the city on one street. That was done in other large cities and must sooner or later be adopted here. Lost.

The ordinance was not only amended as recommended by the mayor but several minor amendments were made.

The mayor did not return the ordinance with his veto as called for by law, and it was read from a copy and passed on a vote of twelve to three, notwithstanding that Hardy sprung the point that the proceeding was irregular.

SEWER PIPE.

A communication was received from the mayor submitting the following bids received for two miles of sewer pipe for the action of the council.

Kansas City Sewer Pipe Co.	2,575 68
Freeman Fire Clay Co.	3,390 00
San Francisco Sewer Pipe Co.	2,700 00
Hon.	2,700 00
California Pottery and Terra Cotta Co.	2,800 00

Denver Sewer Pipe Co.....	2,424 40
Blackmar & Pelt.....	3,094 40
Laclede Fire Brick Co.....	2,714 40
Evans & Howard.....	2,939 40

Hardy—I cannot understand why this pipe has been ordered. I am a member of the sewer committee and have never been consulted on the proposition. I want to know what it means. When the ordinances were passed excluding sewer districts it was with the distinct understanding there would be no more pipe laid until we were able to take care of the sewage we now have.

The bid of the Denver Sewerpipe company was accepted and the mayor authorized to make the purchase.

THE PAVING CONTRACT.

The board of public works sent in a communication reporting that they had entered into a contract with the Culmer-Jennings company to pave First and Second South streets, between State and West Temple, and Main, between South Temple and Third South streets.

PROTESTS.

Thomas W. Jennings and others and Mulloy & Paul and others protested against the giving of the contract to the Culmer-Jennings company, saying that the material they proposed to use was not thoroughly tested.

Horn moved to defer action saying that there was no hurry now inasmuch as the season was so far advanced towards winter that it was absolutely impossible to do the work before snow storms and frost would set in.

Rich, Wantland and Lawson said something should be done at once.

Horn maintained that the present was the time to urge delay and not haste.

Moran was opposed to postponement. He thought there was something wrong, however, with the board of public works. Formerly that body was very much in favor of giving the contract to the Barber company. It must have had a revelation.

The contract was confirmed.

SURETIES.

The bondsmen of the Culmer, Jennings company are P. W. Madsen, David James, Andrew Gebhardt and Alexander Rogers. Jointly the bonds are $36,000.

The contract calls for the completion of the work by June 30th, 1893.

PARK COMMISSIONERS.

Lawson moved to take up the ordinance relating to the creation of a public park commission.

Moran opposed the motion saying that there were many more important matters than the park ordinance.

Lawson's motion was lost after which he moved to adjourn. Also lost.

ANOTHER DRAUGHTSMAN.

City Engineer Doremus applied for an additional draughtsman to be employed in his office for a period of not less than two months at a salary of $100 per month. His request was granted.

VACATION MONEY.

Chief of Police Paul sent in a communication stating that Officers Al Wright, Matthews and Sherman claimed fourteen days' pay each while they accompanied the Tuscarora tribe to the Democratic convention at Chicago.

Karrick said he did not believe the Council had a right to pay men for attending their own private business.

There was a considerable amount of bombastic talk on the matter, after which it was finally referred to the committee on police and city attorney associated.

AUDITOR'S REPORT.

The auditor submitted the following financial statement for the month of September.

RECEIPTS.

Liquor licenses.....	$11,850 00
City tax.....	6,790 00
Sprinkling tax.....	4,177 59
General license.....	3,966 00
Sewer main extension tax.....	3,471 71
Land.....	3,380 00
Sidewalk tax.....	2,109 46
Tax sales.....	1,497 08
Fines.....	1,433 00
Parley conduit.....	1,043 00
Dog tax.....	650 00
Poll tax.....	484 00
Water rates.....	304 73
Main street paving.....	337 63
Engineering department.....	292 75
Interest.....	253 34
Water rates.....	220 20
Waterworks.....	157 10
Rent.....	100 00
State street paving.....	84 81
Surplus canal.....	30 73
Sewerage.....	13 00
Liberty Park.....	0 00

Total.....$42,524 61

DISBURSEMENTS.

Waterworks.....	$18,507 55
State street paving.....	12,062 80
Street Department.....	11,962 89
City and county building.....	10,729 13
Salary.....	5,679 97
Police Department.....	4,472 30
Street sprinkling.....	4,119 12
Engineering department.....	3,981 33
Fire department.....	3,179 16
Street lighting.....	3,977 80
Health Department.....	2,613 88
Parley conduit.....	1,780 81
Watermaster.....	1,707 10
Cemetery.....	1,47 07
Expenses.....	1,267 71
Jordan & Salt Lake Canal.....	1,220 98
Prison department.....	779 40
Sidewalks.....	774 86
Sewerage.....	760 17
Liberty Park.....	439 78
Dog tax.....	422 00
Health Department.....	405 60
Printing and advertising.....	210 00
Assessor and collector's office.....	143 80
Hospital.....	119 13
Gas.....	91 00
Donation.....	83 33
Mayor's contingent fund.....	79 58
Furniture and fixtures.....	67 50
Rent.....	30 60
Watermain extension tax.....	15 00
Fines.....	0 00

Total.....$91,515 14

SUMMARY.

Balance in treasury September 1st.....	$24,925 23
Add receipts.....	42,524 61
.....	$9-3,499 86
Deduct disbursements.....	61,933 14

Balance in treasury September 30th.....$191,954 72

TELEPHONE COMPANY'S RIGHT.

City Attorney Hoge reported on the right of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone to occupy the streets of the city. He referred to the franchise as found on the city statute books, and also to two decisions by Judge Zaue, in which he held that the telephone company occupied the streets of the city according to law. Referred to the committee on municipal laws.

APPOINTMENTS CONFIRMED.

The police committee recommended the confirmation of the following policemen: George Sheets, J. S. Duke, George C. Johnson, C. S. Blackmar, J. S. Peck, L. S. Larsen and James Saunders. Adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS.

W. C. Read.....	$ 40 50
-----------------	----------

Utah & Montana Machinery Co.....	1 84
R. M. Jones.....	8 00
Salt Lake Rapid Transit Co.....	337 50
Mrs. William Gilbert.....	208 35
A. J. Burr.....	88 35
W. C. Read.....	41 70
W. C. Read.....	159 50
W. C. Read.....	41 70
G. A. Lowe.....	1 35
Neider & Cleland.....	30 00
E. Sells & Co.....	1 80
G. M. Scott & Co.....	9 95
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heat Co.....	2 16
A. W. Gamie & Co.....	00 00
W. C. Read.....	1 95
Wolstenholme & Morris.....	15 50
Cummingham & Co.....	84 14
Eagle Foundry and Machine Co.....	5 9 97
W. L. Pickard & Co.....	2 50
E. Fernando.....	33 00
Tribune Job Printing Co.....	2 40
Tribune Publishing Co.....	12 50
Bernal Publishing Co.....	13 40
Frank Harrison.....	1068 12
O. H. Hardy.....	53 10

Total.....$3481 70

DEPUTY WATERMASTER HUGHES' SHORTAGE.

Here is another sensation for the public. Irregularities have been discovered in one more of the city departments and honest people and respectable citizens are wondering when and where they will end. Defalcations, deficits and shortages under Liberal misrule have been numerous in fact, but it has been fondly hoped that there would be a cessation of these methods so peculiar to the present administration. But, like Tennyson's brook, they threaten to run on forever, or at least until the public urge are exhausted or the party dies the ignominious death that surely awaits it.

For months damaging insinuations and rumors have been going the rounds in municipal circles as to the manner of conducting business in the various departments. Among others the watermaster's department has been prominently mentioned. Some time ago Councilman Rich introduced a resolution into the City Council calling for an investigation of Mr. Harvey's pay roll.

The matter was referred to the committee on Jordan canal and irrigation with instructions to report their findings to the city council. The delay that is proverbial in such cases followed and for a time it seemed that the matter had been shelved into everlasting slumber. Finally the Democratic councilmen succeeded in bringing the disgraceful affair to an issue. A majority and minority report have been presented to the council. The former is signed by Messrs. Evans, Karrick and Beardsley and the latter by Mr. Hardy. The majority report sets forth:

We, your committee on Jordan canal and irrigation, to whom was referred the matter of investigating the payrolls of the watermaster's department on August 23rd last, beg leave to report as follows:

We have carefully examined the payrolls of June, July and August, and, in connection therewith, have had before the committee at various times a number of the employees, whose statements, bearing on the matter in question, were required to writing. The watermaster and Deputy Watermaster Charles E. Hughes also appeared before your committee and were sworn and examined.

The first irregularity discovered was in the payroll of August 12th, when two of the men were instructed by the deputy to sign the payroll for more money than was due them, and hand over the excess to him, which they did.

In explanation of this the deputy states that the amounts drawn on August 12th were to cover amounts due to other men whose names had been omitted on the payroll of July 29th. Affidavits were made showing where such work was done and offered as proof by the men who received the money. The watermaster was not informed of this transaction by his deputy until after this investigation was ordered.

In further examining the payrolls and interrogating the men we discovered two instances where men were on the payrolls in other than their own names and signed the rolls in such names.

One of these makes affidavit having worked and was entitled to the amount overdrawn by another on August 12th. The same man has drawn his pay in July under another name.

The pay roll of July 29th shows full time of twelve days at $2 per day for one man who makes affidavit that he did not work at all during that time, the amount, $24, being paid to the deputy watermaster on an order purporting to be from the man whose name is signed to the pay roll by the deputy per himself.

All pay rolls are certified by the watermaster as correct.

We further learned that the deputy was not in the habit of using proper time books and could produce none of any kind before your committee, such names and amounts due being given the watermaster to make up his pay-roll from such memoranda as he alone can explain.

Your committee has spent much time and incurred considerable expense in prosecuting this investigation, and has held several meetings in order to get the necessary information, and which has prevented us from making this report earlier.

We have instructed the watermaster to dismiss the deputy and withhold all pay until the further order of the council.

In view of the foregoing facts, your committee would recommend that any employee issuing an order on the paymaster for wages due shall be requested to satisfy the paymaster as to his identity before such order is paid.

We further submit the following resolution and recommend that it be adopted.

Resolved, That the finance committee be and they are hereby authorized to examine into the present system of keeping time in all the departments, and that they submit to the Council such recommendations as will in their judgment prevent the possibility of irregularities in making up payrolls, and to report to the Council what books, records, etc., should be required to be kept in the watermaster's office.

The minority report from Mr. Harvey reads:

I cannot fully agree with the majority report of the committee appointed to investigate the alleged dishonest conduct of Deputy Watermaster Hughes. The evidence obtained shows that Hughes induced workmen employed under him to obtain money from the city for work which was never done by them. The money thus obtained was handed over and pocketed by Hughes.

While there is much to palliate the conduct of the men used as tools by the said Hughes, this is not so in his case. He has committed a grave crime, and it is due to the people that he be prosecuted. If men who commit such offenses are allowed to escape the operation of the law it will encourage others to pursue a similar course.

I recommend that in the interests of law and official honesty an example be made of this case by the proper steps being taken for the prosecution of Hughes.

As to the watermaster's department and the manner of conducting the same, there is a lack of business shown in the loose manner of conducting the same. No records are kept for water rights acquired by the city and the different rights citizens have against the city; also, the loose manner in which the different watermasters' payrolls are presented. The watermaster does not know how many men are hired in the different precincts, and is unable to tell until the payroll is presented at the end of every week or two weeks, as the case may be, and evidently does not know whether they are employees of the city or not, as the evidence in the Hughes case proves.

It was near midnight last night when the above reports were read by the recorder in the council meeting. The spectators who had relapsed into a somnambulist state were more than aroused from their drowsiness by the discussion that followed.

Karrick moved the adoption of the majority report.

Rich immediately afterwards took the floor and moved the adoption of the minority report.

Hardy spoke earnestly in favor of the adoption of his report. He declared that the loose and questionable way of doing business that characterized Mr. Harvey's office was a disgrace and a crime and should be stopped. Harvey, the alleged watermaster, excused himself on the ground that he didn't know of the irregularities which existed in his department, especially as to the actions of this man Hughes. That was the trouble. The city had a watermaster that didn't know anything—when he didn't want to and when it was not to his advantage. He was simply a squire in office, and a very expensive one at that, and the sooner the city discovered that fact the better it would be off.

Karrick, in his quiet and unassuming way, took up the cudgel of defense for Mr. Harvey and declared that it was absolutely true that the watermaster knew nothing of the conduct of his deputies. "Why," he said, "Mr. Harvey was more surprised than any other man when it was learned that tricks and crooked work were being indulged in." The censure that had been given Mr. Harvey was premature and uncalled for. When Mr. Harvey had learned of the true nature of things he discharged Hughes.

Beardsley stated that he had signed the majority report, but that he also favored the minority report. The statements contained therein were correct. He believed that Mr. Harvey knew nothing of the dishonest work of Hughes, but there was no denying the fact that Mr. Harvey conducted the affairs of his office in a very careless manner.

Mr. Evans concurred with what Mr. Beardsley had said.

Rich asked Mr. Evans, chairman of the committee on irrigation, if it were not a fact that affidavits had been drawn up in Mr. Harvey's and City Attorney Hoge's handwriting exonerating Hughes; also if it were not true that Mr. Harvey kept no books or records in his office and that the only memoranda he kept of the many minute affairs of his office was what he carried under his hat.

Mr. Evans admitted that this deplorable state of affairs was correct.

Rich also wanted to know if it were not true that Mr. Harvey did not know who were employed in his office and the only way that he could tell was by referring to the city pay rolls.

A painful and ominous flash of silence intimated that this also was correct. As to the insulting letter recently sent into the Council by Watermaster Harvey, Rich declared he knew whereof he spoke when he stated Mr. Harvey had said that the councilmen were getting entirely too fresh and that he and other heads of departments would soon take occasion to call them down. Many things in that department were carried on in a strange manner. The deputy watermaster of the Third precinct had not been in the Territory long enough to register and vote without violating the law and running chances of prosecution. Two months ago the Council had passed a resolution authorizing the watermaster to clean out City Creek from Sixth to Eighth West streets. For four weeks the resolution was in the hands of the watermaster, but he failed to act. It was then turned over to the street department, but Mr. Harvey showed his stubbornness by refusing to turn the water out of the creek so that the work could be done. That kind of business must be stopped. Rich concluded his remarks by saying that he could call the matter up at the next meeting of the Council.

Folland stated that Hughes was an all around rogue, entirely without the sense of honesty or manhood. He was not in favor of prosecution without just and sufficient cause, but there was a man that had proven himself a fraud and a forger and should be dealt with accordingly.

Lawson said there was every evidence that the wrongs of Hughes had been winked at by officials whose duty it was to ferret out crime and prevent its commission.

More discussion followed and the majority report was adopted.

THE AFFIDAVIT

referred to do not seem to be calculated by those who have them in possession to be made public. They were made by employees and ex-employees of the city before the committee on irrigation, and show that a general system of forgery has been carried on.

A News reporter asked to be allowed to see them today but was informed that Mr. Hardy had them. The rumor was incorrect as they seem to have been turned over to Mr. Evans. That gentleman when called upon stated that he had given them to the mayor and he did not see what good could be accomplished in making their contents public.

It is reported that a warrant will probably be issued for Hughes' arrest tomorrow and that he will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Said several councilmen today, "he is guilty beyond a shadow of doubt and must be dealt with."

A LONDON writer, who, it is fair to state in advance, was one of the staff of Truth, thus inventories the articles left on the sidewalk by a lady who lifted her train to avoid a puddle: Two cigar ends, nine cigarette ends, a portion of a pork pie, four toothpicks, two hairpins, one stem of a clay pipe, three fragments of orange peel, one slice of cat's meat, half the sole of a boot, one plug of tobacco (chewed), straw, mud, scraps of paper and miscellaneous street refuse ad lib.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city school board met last evening. Vice-President Nelson in the chair. Trustees Alf. Young, Pike, Newman, Baldwin, Dooley and Raybold were present.

WANT A NEW SCHOOL.

A number of citizens west of the Jordan presented a petition asking that a school be established on the corner of Eleventh South and Redwood road. Committee on sites and buildings.

TREASURER'S STATEMENT.

The treasurer's statement was presented for the month of September as follows:

RECEIPTS.
Balance first of month.....	$19,777 57
Received from F. J. Leonard.....	33 34
Total.....	$19,811 25
DISBURSEMENTS.
Warrants paid.....	$ 52,306 78
Balance Sent 29.....	$128,404 47

Adopted.

THE WASATCH SCHOOL.

The committee of sites and buildings reported the following bid for an eight room school building in the Twenty-first ward near Darlington place:

S. C. Sherrill.....	$21,900
Crofton Bros. & Bryan.....	21,500
George Turley.....	22,300
U. S. Watson.....	20,900

Sherrill offered as his bondsmen, S. W. Morrison, E. C. Coffin and A. B. Gibson. The contract was awarded to Mr. Sherrill, the lowest bidder.

On motion of Mr. Young it was agreed to name the school the "Wasatch."

SALARY RAISED.

The committee on teachers recommended that the salary of Miss A. E. Buchanan, of the high school, be increased from $90 to $100 per month, and stated that the lady was doing excellent work. Adopted.

BILLS ALLOWED.

The committee on finance recommended that the bill of A. Stiefel for $15.63 for freight be paid. Adopted.

SANITARY HEATING AND VENTILATING.

The committee on sites and buildings reported that in the case of the Jackson school the surface water is within six inches of the surface, and that the system of toilet rooms if connected with a cesspool only, would be totally useless, and recommended that the building be heated and ventilated by the fan system, and that the same system of dry sanitary cremating closets be substituted for water closets. This would save the board $119. Laid over for one week.

THE JACKSON SCHOOL FOUNDATION.

The committee on sites and buildings reported, recommending that the contract drawn up by the attorney of the board for the extra foundation required for the Jackson school amounting to $8000 be entered into. Adopted.

ACTION DEFERRED.

The same committee further reported, recommending that the bid of the Hendly & Meyer Engineering company of $3200 for ventilating and heating the Jackson school be accepted, and that an extra $25 be allowed that company for making necessary changes, and also that their offer to supply a steam engine for $300 be accepted, making a total of $3815. Laid over for one week.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Young moved that in the matter of the compensation to the Salt Lake Building and Manufacturing company, for stone furnished to the Washington school, be referred to the committee on sites and buildings and the finance committee, with power to order the issue of the warrant upon the proper execution of vouchers and such other papers as may be necessary. Adopted.

Baldwin moved that the teachers' pay rolls submitted by the superintendent and approved by a majority of the committee on finance be paid after the teachers have signed a contract with the board, which contract shall first be approved by the committee on teachers. Adopted.

The matter of making a new room in the high school building, to be used as a drawing room, was referred to the committee on sites and buildings, with power to act.

THE ESCAPE INSTINCT.

In a review of an interesting work by Prof. Weismann, on "Hereditarily Man and Beast," in the Sunday Times of July 31, it is remarked that the author believes the escape instinct has been lost in domesticated animals by their long domestication, the absence of enemies during many generations having had the effect of extinguishing this natural fear of the human race, and consequently they evince no desire to escape from the closest acquaintance with persons.

My long experience as a breeder of all kinds of farm stock, including dogs and cats and other small animals, convinces me that this belief is not founded on fact, says a correspondent of the New York Times, but that this natural fear is as active in young domestic animals as it is in wild animals, with the exception that in imitation of the parents the fear disappears. This is true of the horse, mule calf, lamb, turkey, chicken, dog, cat and rabbit, in all of which this natural desire to escape from a person is as strong for a few days, and until acquaintance has eliminated the natural fear, as in the wild animals of the same races.

The hiding of the young animal by the dam is an example of this instinctive fear, even on the part of the parent who is evidently loath to expose her progeny to risk. This is clearly instinctive, for I have known one of the gentlest bellers, when she had a calf, to make a sudden attack upon the person who had reared her and fed her, and exhibit the most violent ferocity when persons previously entirely acceptable approached her.

All kinds of domestic animals will conceal their young at birth, and the young animals will flee with evident fear when the owner comes upon their hiding place. And although this natural repugnance will soon disappear, it is only through the introduction, as it were, of the parent, who at the same time anxiously regards the owner as the possible enemy to the foal or calf. I have known a two-days-old calf, when its hiding place was discovered, to run four miles in its effort to escape, and resist capture with all the energy of a wild deer, and when it afterward escaped plunged into a pond and swam several hundred feet and got away on the other side.

Pigs born in the woods become as wild and ferocious the first generation as the true wild boar, and there are thousands of such pigs at large in the Southern woods that resemble in their disposition in every respect the wild boars of the Black forest of Germany. The natural habit of the mule to kick is an attribute of this instinct. A young mule will kick its owner quite fiercely when it is first able to stand upon its legs, and will hide behind the mare and even bite when it is approached too closely. The lambs of a flock at large on a range are equally averse to the shepherd, and will escape from close acquaintance until use has helped to wear off the instinctive fear.

The sole difficulty in rearing young turkeys is this same instinctive disposition to escape and hide. Even in the yard the young brood will squat as closely as a wild brood on a covert of young partridges or quail. And if the observer remains still they will creep away as stealthily through the grass or leaves—and in a moment will disappear as though the ground had swallowed them.

I have some young cats, the kittens of a cat left at my home six years ago, but which, on my return a few weeks ago, came up voluntarily, and after a close reconnaissance recognized me and came up and rubbed against my legs and purled loudly. She was so friendly that the next morning, on my way to the train for the city, she tried to follow until ordered to return. She remembered her old habit, which was to accompany me to the turn of the road, and there wait until I was out of sight. If domestication had the effect of removing the natural effort to escape, one would think that this cat's kittens would be the tamest and least desirous to avoid a person with whom the mother cat was friendly. But quite otherwise. These kittens are the wildest I have ever known, and now, two months old, they are as prone to escape in the thickest of the shrubbery as the wild rabbits when they are approached too closely.

Even the young chickens evince this same instinct, especially those of the more active and least sociable breeds, as Leghorns and other flighty kinds. The hens conceal their nests with all the instinctive adroitness of the wild birds, the young chickens run away or hide, as those from the hidden nests are by far the wildest.

Why is all this? It is not the instinct of fear that still overcomes all the centuries of domestication and proves the fact that the escape instinct prevails over the influence of domestication, which is an education slowly gained and which has not yet had time to become an inherited instinct? And this, as the question, do domestication and education ever overcome instinct, but is not natural instinct always prevalent in an animal, appearing at birth and only slowly overcome by training, in some animals more slowly or more easily than in other?

FORESTS AND RAINFALL.

A correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin from the foot-hills of Butte county advances the proposition that in the Sierra, where the original timber has been cleared off, a second growth has sprung up which has more than twice the retaining capacity for moisture of the first growth. From this he deduces that the alarm about the denudation of our mountain forests is unfounded. In fact, says the Bulletin, he will shut this theory mainly to the influence of the railroad company, which aims to get government rangers to watch its timbered grant lands.

Any one familiar with the methods of the railroad companies will accept the general suggestion that it would be prompt to avail itself of any plan for shifting its burdens upon the government or the public. Possibly there may be something in this idea, although it may look a little far-fetched. Yet it is understood that often it is necessary to scrutinize byways as well as highways to get at railroad schemes. Government rangers might not take it directly upon themselves to protect railroad timber, but indirectly their supervision of adjacent sections would tend to that result.

Aside from this, however, it may be admitted that our correspondent's views are partly right and partly wrong. The result would depend much upon local conditions. No doubt in many portions of northern California, where the rainfall, especially in the mountains, is abundant, a second growth would soon cover the ground after the clearing of the original forest. A like fact may often be observed in the redwood forests along the coast. There, where the annual precipitation is profuse and the climate and soil are naturally damp, the redwood tends to reproduce itself. In other localities the contrary appears. In the Contra Costa range, for instance, where the natural redwoods are less, the clearing of the redwoods is not followed to any great extent by the appearance of a second growth.

The same will be found true in a greater or less measure of the forests of the Sierra and of other mountain ranges. Where any tendency to aridity exists it will undoubtedly prove true that the wholesale destruction of forests will not be followed by renewal, but by permanent denudation and climatic changes. It might be safer to destroy the original mountain forests in northern than in southern California. In the ranges of the interior states and territories, where aridity is more pronounced, it would be a most dangerous experiment. In such cases only a judicious thinning of the larger growth should be permitted on any conditions.

Even in moister regions it would be better economy to confine cutting to the larger timber, giving the smaller opportunity to mature. Instead of that the past policy has been to cut indiscriminately for lumber or fuel purposes and complete the destruction by fire, browsing and flies. It is time for a definite and intelligent system of forestry. It may be both preservative and reproductive in scope. In many portions of France forestry now includes not only the preservation of the natural growth, but replanting on a large scale. In the latter work due attention is given to the species used. Medicinal and aromatic plants are included, and become commercially important. This may be somewhat in advance of present needs on this coast, but it indicates the tendency in countries where necessity has put the problem of forestry more forcibly before the people. We can afford to take lessons from the larger experiences of these European countries. By avoiding their past errors we may also avoid some of their present no-castles.

SOME ROYAL BON-VIVANTS.

The czar of all the Russias has a gigantic appetite, or rather the appetite of a giant. He commences the day by breakfasting at seven o'clock with tea, ham, eggs and cold roast beef; at 11 o'clock lunch, consisting of eggs beaten up in broth, mutton chops, cold game, chicken, fish, vegetables, sweets, all washed down with several cups of strong coffee. The czar is very fond of fish, and generally likes to eat the fish he himself has caught, and has it served at every meal. At 2 o'clock he will eat a plain rice pudding. It is needless to say his dinner is splendid and succulent, which does not prevent him taking tea with biscuits and cakes before going to rest, says the London Banner.

The queen of Sweden adores the meat pie made in Nice, with olive oil and hard-boiled eggs, and is very fond of the Swedish national dish—salmon preserved in the ground.

His imperial majesty of Germany is very dilligent; but, having often been in England in his youth has a decided taste for ham and eggs and muffins, which, on dit, he gets direct from London to eat with his tea in the morning, and prefers English to German cooking. His majesty's favorite drinks are beer and champagne, but it must be said that in this latter he is most abstemious.

Prince Bismarck, like the Czar, is an enormous eater, but eats little in the morning, reserving himself for dinner at 7 o'clock in the evening, when he devours, like an ostrich, meat, fish, vegetables, sweets, fruit, etc.; he also drinks like a fish. Uno avulso, non defecit alter.

The Empress of Austria occupies herself personally with her menu, and to be practical she has invented a spit where 100 fowls can be roasted at once. Both she and the emperor eat little, but the table is the best served in Europe; and it is said her majesty makes all the jams for her husband's eating.

Louise Philippe, king of the French, was not a great eater, but his son, the Duc d'Angoulême, is abstemious itself, even at Chantilly, where Louis XIV's family chef committed suicide.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte was a great gourmand, while Napoleon III was the worst table in France, but the best cigars, of which he was very proud. Gambetta made his best speeches after a good dinner. President Carnot has the best table in France, the stomach of an ostrich, and consequently, must have a clear conscience and good teeth.

The king of the Belgians is a noted gourmand, that being reckoned among his other vices.

The king of the Hellenes likes Danish cooking, Queen Olga likes Russian, and as these do not please everybody, French cookery is added for their Russian.

King Humbert of Italy eats but little, contrary to his father, the regent, who was a born vivier in every sense of the word; Queen Margherita is the only royal gourmand the fair sex can boast of; she is said to have a plate of strawberries served her every day during the year.

SWEET MILK.

[Transcript.]

In the sultry days, when every housekeeper's soul is more or less tried by the tendency of the milk to "turn," the department of agriculture at Washington comes very opportunely to the front with a "bulletin" on milk fermentations. No other article of food, probably, bears so close a relation as does milk to the health of the community, especially when we consider that it forms the principal part of the sustenance of that large fraction of the population—the young children. The importance, therefore, of keeping the supply not only pure, but in good normal condition, will be denied by none. Some of the results of the very careful investigations of the department, though made primarily in the interest of farmers and dairymen, are of universal interest.

Milk, which is composed of eighty-seven per cent. of water and thirteen per cent. of solids, is found to be one of the best of mediums for the propagation of various low forms of plant life known under the general name of bacteria. Many of these forms are so well spread and numerous that it is hopeless to try to keep them out; they may all, however, be kept within limits, while those producing abnormal fermentations in milk may be altogether prevented by proper care. Milk fermentations are of many kinds, the most common one being known as "sour milk;" others, such as bitter milk, slimy fermentation, alkaline fermentation, etc., are not of as frequent occurrence. Souring, once regarded as a characteristic of milk itself, is now generally admitted to be a fermentative process produced by organisms which get in after the milking is done.

One of the singular results of investigation is the fact that the special forms of bacterial activity producing lactic acid (and thereby "sour milk,") become common around dairies, but are not elsewhere in nature. Later, following up the researches of Pasteur, found that sterilized milk exposed to the air in different places—in his laboratory, in a barn, in the open air, etc.—would ferment after a while, but not sour, and that souring was rare except in milk direct from a dairy. All organisms producing fermentation in milk are of exterior origin—from the air, the milker's hands, the hair or udder of the cow, or the vessels used. This makes plain the prime necessity of cleanliness in all the operations of the dairy; "fore should make as careful a toilet," says a dairyman, "for the milking yard as for the supper table." In the support of this the statement is made that if the udder of the cow be carefully cleaned, and the milk drawn into a glass tube made free from germs by heat, and which can be closed so as to keep all unfiltered air from the milk, it is easy to get milk so free from bacteria that it will remain unaffected for two weeks, even though kept in a warm oven.

In ordinary usage, however, bacteria will be always present to some degree. Care in handling and especially in cooling the milk immediately after milking, and in keeping it cool, will reduce the increase to a minimum. Some milk which was allowed to stand four days in a cold place was then examined, and the quantity of bacteria per quart carefully estimated. Placed then for seven hours in a warm room, the organisms were found to have increased a hundred fold. Concerning the action of thunderstorms upon milk it has not been found that electricity is of itself capable of souring milk. Bacteria, however, certainly grow most rapidly in the warm, sultry conditions which usually precede a thunderstorm, so that the storm and the souring occur together. Dairymen find no difficulty in keeping milk which is cooled as soon as drawn from the cows, and kept cool. Milk submerged in cool water is not affected by thunder.

PAUPERISM IN CALCUTTA.

[London Times.]

In April, last year, a committee was appointed by the government of Bengal to consider the nature and extent of the poverty and destitution prevailing in Calcutta among Europeans and Eurasians. The report which has now been issued is confined to the domiciled European community of Calcutta and to Eurasians of all degrees of mixed blood, the expression "Indo-European" being employed to include both these classes. The total Indo-European population of Calcutta and Howrah is put down at 21,000, and it is said that of these 3500 persons, excluding children, are in receipt of relief.

About 8 per cent of the Europeans, and 22 per cent of the Eurasians are destitute. To explain this large amount of pauperism, the report points to the peculiar fitness of the native Bengalees for office work, which makes them dangerous competitors for the poorer classes of Indo-Europeans, especially as the former can work at lower salaries. Menial labor, owing to its scanty remuneration, is out of the question for them; pride of race in those of English and Portuguese blood stands in the way of successful competition, while imprudence in marriage and improvidence swell the tide of destitution. Charity is abundant in Calcutta, but is not subjected to the scrutiny of poor relief in England, and hence indiscriminate benevolence has tended to the pauperization of those whom it is intended to benefit. One main cause of the destitution is said to be due to the deficiency of character among Indo-Europeans.

The committee are of the opinion that the government is bound, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, to meet this poverty, and the remedies suggested are the organization of charitable relief, education directed to correct the prevalent deficiencies of Indo-Europeans, and the securing of "an honorable subsistence for all Indo-Europeans who are fit for work, but are unable to obtain anything better, so that no able-bodied males may be driven into the ranks of pauperism by inability to earn their bread." As to this latter, the committee propose military employment for Indo-European youths, as they leave orphanages and charitable schools.

CARE OF THE HAIR.

[Kansas City Times.]

Vigorous brushing of the hair with a stiff brush will accomplish wonders with the most unruly and most obstinate of locks. To be successful such treatment must be persisted in. A good-sized brush with stiff unbleached bristles should be chosen for this purpose. All snarls should be taken out of the hair gently with a comb. Every part of the hair should then be brushed vigorously and long enough so that each portion shall receive at least thirty strokes of the brush. If such treatment as this is continued for five or six weeks the result will convince the most incredulous of the value of the treatment.

The hair and the scalp should be washed as often as once a month, but not often unless the hair is oily. No alkali like borax or strong stimulant like bay rum should be used in washing the hair but simple castile soap and lukewarm water. After washing the hair all soap should be thoroughly rinsed out with separate waters. The hair should then be dried, strand by strand, with abundance of warm towels. Where the hair falls out a simple preparation of ordinary tea, or if this does not prove efficacious, of sage tea, applied to the root of the hair with a sponge, will usually prove an effectual cure and, moreover, will tend to prevent the accumulation of scaly dandruff which accompanies this trouble of the scalp.

If the hair is naturally inclined to be dry a little vaseline applied to the scalp near the roots will stimulate it to a healthy condition. If, on the contrary, it is too oily it should be washed every two weeks instead of once a month. It is wise to avoid all lotions for the hair which you know nothing about, as many of these contain injurious ingredients and stimulate it to an unhealthy condition and eventually cause it to fall out.

EDUCATION OF GIRLS.

Louisa M. Alcott, the well-known author of "Little Women," wrote these sensible words about the best kind of an education for young girls: "I can only hope that with the new and freer ideas now coming up, some of the good old ways may also be restored. The respect shown to the aged, modest women, simple dress, home-keeping daughters learning from good mothers the domestic arts, so much better than the too early frivolity and freedom so many enjoy. The little daughter sent me by my dying sister has given me renewed interest in the education of girls, and a fresh anxiety concerning the sort of society she is to enter by and by. Health comes first, and an early knowledge of truth, obedience and self-control. Then such necessary lessons as all must learn, and later such accomplishments as taste and talent lead her to desire. A profession or trade to fall back upon in time of need, that she may not be dependent or too proud to work for her bread. Experience is the best teacher, and with good health, good principles and a good education any girl can make her own way in the world, and be brave and better for the exertion and discipline. No late hours, unwholesome pleasures and dress, no mixing of school and flirtation, but simple amusements, daily duties, and a purpose in life to keep them girls at heart, even while preparing for the work and happiness of women."

DEATH OF JOHN S. SMITH.

Elder John S. Smith died at his residence in Sugar House ward of general debility, at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon (October 13), in the 75th year of his age. The deceased was born in Loanhead, Parish of Lamswade, Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 14th of April, 1818; was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on the 25th day of October, 1846, in Hunterfield, Midlothian, Scotland. He left his native land for Utah on the 28th day of May, 1864, and arrived in Salt Lake City on the 25th day of November of the same year.

Brother Smith was a faithful member in the Church and a hard worker for the cause of truth. He has much Temple work to his credit, having complied with the Church ordinances pertaining to a proxy work for his progenitors and deceased friends.

Services will be held at the Sugar House ward meeting house, commencing at 11 o'clock a. m. Sunday, 16th. All friends are kindly invited to attend.

THE UNCONTRADICTED news that ex-President Cleveland has contributed $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund suggests the recollection that his contribution of this same amount four years ago was not a profitable investment.

DEATHS.

MAXWELL.—In Peoa, Summit county, Utah, at 1 a. m. Oct. 12, 1892, Agnes Maxwell, aged 25 years, 3 months and 10 days. She has been a sufferer for six weeks, but passed quietly away. She has been for years president of the Young Ladies' association and died as she had lived in full faith of the everlasting Gospel. She was an estimable young lady and was beloved by all who knew her. A large circle of friends as well as her brother and sisters will greatly miss her.—[Com.]

BAOULEY.—At Union, Salt Lake County, Sept. 4th, 1892, Grace Baguley, of paralysis. She was the wife of Thomas Baguley and the mother of nine children, five of whom have preceded her to the spirit world, and four remain to mourn her loss. Deceased was born at Westington, near Alfreton, Derbyshire, May, 1824. She kept the conference house at Nottingham, England, for some years prior to her departure for America. She was a consistent Latter-day Saint.—[Com.]

THACKERAY.—At his residence in Echo, September 26th, Thomas Thackeray, son of George and Helen Thackeray, of Crofton, departed this life after an illness of twenty-six days, from an abscess on the liver. Deceased was born in Salt Lake City March 1st, 1884. He was manager of the firm of Hopkin & Thackeray and was widely known. He leaves a wife, a number of relatives and a multitude of friends to mourn his departure.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION

ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION.

ESTABLISHED

TRUTH AND LIBERTY

JUNE, 1850.

NO. 19.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1892.

VOL. XLV.

COLUMBUS DAY.

Very shortly after 8:30 this morning the pupils of the various public schools of this city began to assemble in their respective district buildings preparatory to taking part in the great parade in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. At 9:30 all the children formed in procession and marched two by two to Main, between North and South Temple, where the general gathering was completed just before ten o'clock. The Seventh, Tenth, Eleventh, Fourteenth and Nineteenth district schools and that of Hunter were attended by their respective drum corps. There were three bands—the Denhalter Rifle, the Liberal Drum Corps, and that of the Tabernacle juvenile choir, and these took turn in playing a selection of lively airs while the arrangements for the day's doings were receiving the finishing touches.

The marshal of the movements was Principal McCoy, of the Nineteenth District school, and he found in the following gentlemen a valuable corps of aids: Principals Martin, of the Seventh district school; Jamison, of the Eleventh; McKay, of the Tenth, and Barton, of Hunter. In addition to these Prof. J. F. Millsbaugh, city superintendent of schools, took a very active share in the work both during parade and in the Tabernacle exercises.

Long before 10 o'clock, the hour at which the procession was announced to start, Main street for a couple of blocks down, as well as the immediate place of assembly were lined on either side with spectators. It was quite 10:30, however, when the first move was made, the processionists being arranged in the order named:

First came the Liberal drum corps band, followed by about fifty members of the G. A. R., under the direction of Commander Harry Halner, assisted by Acting Adjutant Greenman. The posts represented were the George R. Maxwell (No. 5,) and the J. B. McKean (No. 1.) William Gilbert, officiated as flag bearer.

The Denhalter Rifle band marched next, and then came the children of the various public schools. The primaries, 1st and 2nd grade, took the lead; they were followed by the 3rd and 4th grades, next in successive order being the 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th, the high school bringing up the rear. The Tabernacle juvenile band occupied a position towards the end of the procession. It is computed that there were fully 8000 in line, and in the course of the march the band played alternately.

The route taken was down Main for a couple of blocks, thence along west Second South, up West Temple, then turning upon First South along Richards avenue to the Tabernacle.

A large platform, the front of which was draped with the national colors, had been erected at the junction of Richards avenue and w. South Temple streets, and from which point the procession was reviewed by members of the City Council and Board of Education, and a number of prominent citizens. Among those on the stand were Mayor Baekin, Colonel Sells, Rev. Dr. McNeeloe, Rev. David Utter, Mr. J. E. Dooly, and Territorial Auditor Pratt, also several ladies. As the scholars passed the structure they all saluted the company, which was graciously acknowledged by the gentlemen repeatedly raising their hats.

In the Tabernacle.

The procession slowly wended its way from this point across to the Tabernacle, and by the time the little ones—for whom the entire body of the huge building had been reserved—had arrived there, the galleries as well as all other available places, had been filled. The members of the G. A. R. posts and representatives of local bodies were accommodated with seats in the choir division. Presidents Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, and other prominent members of the Church were among the interested spectators occupying places near the choir.

The Republican drum corps made its appearance while the preliminaries were going forward and were provided with chairs on the floor, to the left of the speakers' stand. The Tabernacle juvenile choir band and that of the Liberal drum corps treated the audience to several pieces of music, and at 11:45 the bugle call to order was sounded.

At 11:50 City Superintendent of Schools J. F. Millsbaugh called upon Professor M. R. Malone, of the High school, to read the President's proclamation setting forth Columbus day as a day of general holiday and thanksgiving.

Miss Alice Rowe, of the Third school, then by request read the proclamation of Governor Thomas to a similar effect, calling for a suitable observance of the day by the schools of this Territory.

As Miss Rowe retired from the stand the ceremony of raising the flag was performed by the veterans of the G. A. R. The flag was placed just in front of the organ, and was run up by a cord, from which it remained suspended. The Tabernacle juvenile choir band struck up the air "America." As the flag reached the top of the "staff" the rolling drum was heard, and the veterans led the entire assemblage in "three cheers for old glory." The salute to the flag was then given upstanding, and the sight was one that will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Hurrahs went forth from thousands of throats, and the youngsters waved their handkerchiefs with wild delight and enthusiasm. Such a scene has not been beheld within the walls of the Tabernacle since the memorable occasion on which the impressive ceremonies in connection with the laying of the Temple capstone took place, at the last April conference.

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing.

was next sung by the children, under the leadership of Mr. George C. Young, professor of music in the public schools. It was rendered in a most admirable manner, and was followed by a round of applause from the throng of spectators who occupied the galleries from one end to the other.

The Rev. Dr. Utter (Unitarian minister) having offered a prayer in acknowledgment to God, the pupils and audience joined together in singing a song for Columbus Day, composed for the National School Celebration of Columbus Day by Theron Brown. The music is exceedingly pretty, and the effect of the rendition of the piece by such a multitude was grand.

The words of the song are as follow:
Columbia, my land! all hail the glad day
When first to thy strand Hope pointed the way:
Hail him who thro' darkness first followed the Flame
That led where the Mayflower of Liberty came.

Dear Country, the star of the valiant and free!
Thy exiles afar are dreaming of thee.
No fields of the earth so enchantingly shine,
No air breathes such incense, such music as thine.

Humanity's home! thy sheltering breast
Gives welcome and room to strangers on pressed.

Pale children of Hunger and Hatred and Wrong
Find life in thy freedom and joy in thy song.

Thy fairest estate the lowly may hold,
Thy poor may grow great, thy feeble grow bold;
For worth is the watchword to noble degree,
And manhood is mighty where manhood is free

O, Union of States, and union of souls!
Thy promise awaits, thy future unfolds,
And earth from her twilight is hailing the sun
That rises where people and rulers are one.

Next on the programme came a declamation by Herbert Hills, of the High School, the subject of which was "The Meaning of Four Centuries." It was a historical narrative peculiarly appropriate to the present time, but unfortunately, owing to the general restlessness of the children and the shuffling and pattering of so many little feet, the greater part of the address was delivered in a sort of dumb show. Mr. Hills was deservedly applauded by those who were near enough to hear him.

The ode "Columbia's Banner" proved to be a decidedly successful elocutionary effort on the part of Misses Hetta Watson, Josie Morrie, Florence Simpson and Lizzie Smith. One of the quartette was a little miss over whose fair head not more than thirteen summers have passed, and her gestures and articulation were remarkable for one so young. The performers were liberally showered with plaudits by the audience at the termination of their performance.

"The Bark of Faith" was the subject of a recitation by Master George Bywater, a young gentleman of about thirteen years. It was very nicely rendered, without the slightest halt or hesitation.

Recitations were in order, for there now came one by Miss Ethel Deane, entitled "Columbus." Miss Deane (for whom Prof. Millsbaugh bespoke an especially quiet hearing) is not more than eight or nine years old, but the way in which she acquitted herself in the task allotted to her would have won golden opinions for a person many years her senior.

The following song, "Columbus," was then given with much spirit:

Who was it that first waved a flag on this soil?
Who was it that cared not how painful the toil?
Columbus, Columbus, with soul great and true,
The heart of our nation beats strongly for you.

Who was it that pointed with faith to the west,
With no ray of light, ever hoped for the best?
Columbus, Columbus, to thee does belong
The glorified name which inspired our song.

This nation, so free, is indebted to you,
The greatest discoverer the world ever knew;
Columbus, Columbus, we honor thy name;
Oh, blessed thy mission, immortal thy fame.

Judge J. M. Bowman, a member of the G. A. R., had promised to deliver an address, but in consequence of sickness he was unable to be present.

Mr. E. W. Tatlock, who is also a G. A. R. man, was therefore called upon to speak in his stead. He said, in substance, that more than thirty years ago he learned faithfully and to the best of his ability to obey the commands of a superior officer. The children of the public schools of this city were now, in the peaceful walks of life, learning the same lessons which the members of the G. A. R., more than thirty years ago, learned in military warfare. Never before, it seemed to him, had these old comrades of his ever witnessed a more impressive sight than that upon which their eyes rested today—such a gathering together in any city of the United States as that which had now taken place in the most renowned building in the world. It appeared to them that this was the beginning of a new era. A better feeling, a closer unity of old and young were the beginning of a new education to patriotism. As the national flag floated over them in that place each one became a more educated patriot; for on the education and patriotism of the young folks of our country depended the future stability and the perpetuity of this great nation. More than seven thousand pupils were now present participating in the exercises to commemorate the discovery of this great country. They were there celebrating with their elders the victories of 1861 to 1865—the time when some of them marched behind the flag, marched with it into Vicksburg. There were those present who commanded large bodies of soldiers at that past period, and he could safely say for them that they were delighted to take part in the memorable event of today. They were glad that from every public schoolhouse in this city there now floated the flag of our country, which had been endeared to them by the blood of fallen comrades, by the sentiments of friends at home and abroad. On behalf of the Grand Army men present he thanked all these children from the bottom of his heart for participating in this interesting ceremony.

Mayor Baskin referred to the memorable occasion which had brought such a vast concourse of young people together that morning, and said that such a sight was calculated to fill every heart with emotion. Their presence in such numbers showed that we had a duty to perform that was both grave and important. Our ancestors prepared us for the great battle of life; it now devolved on us, in our turn, to do the same thing for our children. The speaker dwelt upon the advantages of education, and pointed to the rapid strides which it had made in this Territory of late years; but there was still room for a further advance in this direction. Education began with the cradle and ended with the grave. It did not consist alone of the lessons taught in our schools; there were many lessons outside, and in the home circle, which were of equal importance.

We should look to the health as well as the education of the rising generation, to the sanitary conditions affecting them in our public schools. He believed that in the future this matter would receive greater attention, and that if it became necessary to raise the school tax in order the better to carry out the cause of education, even should this be felt a little oppressive, there would be no complaint. In conclusion the mayor said he, for one, thanked President Harrison for having called upon the people of the nation to celebrate this day.

This concluded the programme of exercises.

President Wilford Woodruff having pronounced the benediction, the vast audience slowly made its way out of the building.

By actual count the procession occupied just forty-two minutes in passing a given point.

The Concerts.

The attendance at the concert in the Tabernacle this afternoon was very meagre. This was greatly to be regretted, as the programme was an excellent one and each item was rendered in good style. The choruses were especially meritorious.

Tonight there will be another concert in the same building, and the musical bill of fare should prove a big attraction. Judge Zane will deliver an address, and Bishop Orson F. Whitney will read an original historical poem, "Columbus," his own production.

Exercises at the Latter-day Saints' College.

Students and many friends of the College met in their building promptly at 10:30 a.m. The assembly room was artistically decorated with the national colors, and a fine display of branches clothed with autumn leaves was a special feature.

To begin the exercises the students sang "America," after which prayer was offered by Mr. Thos. L. Woodbury.

The principal, Prof. Willard Dune, made some opening remarks upon the object of these commemorative exercises, and explained the corrections of former calendars which led us to speak of the 21st instead of 12th of October as the day upon which the exercises should be held.

The song "I Dare not Love Thee," was rendered by Miss Della Daynes.

"Columbia's Banner" was read by Miss Alice Clawson.

An essay, "The Life of Columbus," was read by Miss Maria James.

A selection entitled "Perhaps" was sung by Miss Ruby Clawson.

An address, "The Character of Columbus," was made by Mr. Edward M. West, who observed that much that is told us of his character has been told by those who have been jealous of his greatness. In his youth he was very industrious and throughout his life he exhibited great strength of mind. He was ever kind, a lover of his friends and a devoted lover of God.

"God of the Nations" was sung by the students.

A declamation, "The Meaning of the Four Centuries," was rendered by Mr. Ezra Robinson. This was followed by an organ solo by Miss Gwendoline Lewis.

"Columbus as a Servant of God" was the title of an oration delivered by Mr. Edwin C. Dibble expressive of the views of the Latter-day Saints on the importance of the Western Continent and its inspired revelation to the civilized world.

A duet, "Whispering Hope," was sung by Miss Eva Musser and Miss Mabel Cooper.

Elder Joseph E. Taylor said he had been greatly edified by what he had heard. With great reason the Prophets had spoken of this land as a "land choice above all other lands;" on a portion of it Adam and Eve dwelt and communed with God; and its past inhabitants had been many times highly blessed of the Lord. Upon it Adam prophesied of his children to the latest generation and upon it he would again stand to judge all nations. For a long time the children of the covenant had been under the ban of the Almighty, and in the year 1492 a child of Japheth who held not the holy Priesthood was inspired of God to discover the land of Joseph. Japheth would yet "leave the tents of Shem" and deliver the title of this land to Israel.

The anthem—"Praise ye the Father" was rendered by the students, when the benediction was pronounced by Elder R. K. Thomas.

At the Utah University.

The exercises began at 10 o'clock with the song "Columbus," rendered by the school class.

The address was delivered by W. D. Riter, one of the students, who in a graceful manner traced the history of Columbus from his birth to his death, and described eloquently the trials that he had had to withstand both before starting upon and during his voyage and at the close of his life when honors should have been heaped upon him. The advancement in civilization of the whole world since the discovery of America made an appropriate termination to the very excellent effort of the speaker.

A piano solo was ably rendered by Miss Cora Smith.

Hon. C. S. Zane was then introduced to the assembly, and at the outset spoke of the satisfaction it gave him to address the students of the institution on such a grand occasion as the return of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus—an event so great in view of its effects on mankind. The purpose for which the navigator had planned his voyage and the knowledge and intelligence that he had given to the world by his discovery were described in glowing language, and the history and progress of the European nations during their thousand years of civilization as compared with that of the United States during four hundred years was eloquently portrayed. "Ours," said the speaker, "is the greatest advancement that has ever been made in the annals of all time." The address was masterly and was listened to with close attention. A vote of thanks was tendered those who had participated, and the exercises then came to a close.

At Sugar House Ward.

At 9 o'clock the children and parents began to assemble on the school grounds. At 10 o'clock the trustees raised the national emblem over the tower of the new school building and it was saluted by the school children. Entering the house, which had been gaily decorated, pictures of Columbus and Washington being displayed amid the bunting, the throng soon completely filled it, the audience listened to a lengthy and interesting programme, comprising eighteen numbers. It was well rendered, the several participants acquitting themselves with great honor. At its close brief and timely remarks were made by several of the visitors present, after which the "Star Spangled Banner" was again sung, followed by the benediction.

The audience then retired from the building while the students marched to the music of the ward band to the grounds, where three cheers for Columbus, George Washington, and others were given in a hearty manner.

Before the crowd dispersed it was announced that at 5 p.m. the children of the ward would engage in a party, and that at 8 p.m. one would be given for the older portion of the community.

Between 3000 and 4000 persons attended the Columbian concert in the Tabernacle Friday night. From a musical point of view the success was unqualified, and those who were present enjoyed themselves immensely. The choruses and professors—Evan Stephens, Thomas Radcliffe and H. E. Gilles may justly feel proud of the results of their combined labors at the head of the undertaking. After the singing of the patriotic song, the "Star Spangled Banner," by a united chorus—Salt Lake Tabernacle choir, Choral society and Utah County Choral union, with a stirring flag tableau.

Chief Justice Zane delivered an appropriate address. He referred to Columbus, his humble occupation and his achievements, and Isabella and her superiority over other women of her age. Columbus had been criticized for taking possession of a country that did not belong to him, but, said he, if a civilized nation can improve and add to the happiness of a barbarous people by taking possession, it should have that right. The Spanish did little for civilization compared to the English. The Pilgrims came for freedom of thought, religion, and yet they were sometimes tyrannical. This example of a free government has shed its rays and benefited the whole civilized world. The speaker closed by saying he trusted the flag would for ages wave over a happy, contented and united people.

Then followed the national anthem—"America," by combined choruses and entire audience with a waving of flags. Soprano solo—"O Salutaris Hostia"—H. G. Ganes, Mrs. Anne Colburn Plummer, violin obligato, Prof. Anton Pedersen. Chorus—"The Heavens Are Telling"—Salt Lake City Tabernacle choir.

Bishop Orson F. Whitney next delivered the following exquisite historical poem on Columbus. It was his own composition, and was splendidly recited:

COLUMBUS.

So long as lofty peaks o'er lowly plains
Catch first the glimpes of the glorious light
That limes this dark world; so long shall men

Or souls that seem far more than men, be found

To loom above it a level of their kind
The crest the earliest rays of rising truth.

What though the shallow world shall scoff and scorn,
Not seeing what their mystic sight beholds;

But groping, groveling and denying all
Save what their sties or antique times have known;

Content to lie at ease in Lethe's vales
And bailing those who soar to higher things.

These walk and talk with God on mountain tops,
On sacred hills of solemn thought, and thence,
Like Moses from the blazing Mount, descend,
To kindle wisdom's beacons for mankind.

Of such a one I sing; the Genoese,
World-blinder, bridge of the boundless seas,
The conqueror and colonizer of the waves,
Who stood on meditation's airy height,
Above the clouds that caupied the age,
And looked upon the earth and said, "Thy land is mine!"

As later quoth Copernicus, "It moves!"
Still later, Galileo, he who groined
In fetters for a like trait reaffirmed.
Three times a like, uncourtiered and uncrowned;

Not theirs the purple robe and diadem;
Whom science crowns fall off doth misery close;

Chains were their sceptres, dungeon cells their thrones;

And these thy portion proud, O sailor sage!
The meed of all thy waiving, wandering toil,
No marvel; thou wert God's, not man's elect,
And thou didst seek Eternity, not Time.

Of tyrant kings and priests—earth's recreant powers—

Who governed but to goad and gall mankind,
The groaning world was weary; and the hour,
The fatal hour when Freedom's prostrate form,

Barring the shackles of long centuries—
As Samson, rousing, rent Philistian bonds—
Erect should stand in might and majesty,
And shake her locks in anger at her foes,
Drew on apace. 'Twas meet that ere that hour

Of rising thrones and trembling dynasties,
That day of reckoning and red revenge
On crowned and mired heads and reeking hands,

On grinding greed and trampling tyranny,
A haven from the universal storm,
That France saw fiercely burst—yet only saw
The faint beginning, not the furious end—
Should hearken prepare. A land of liberty,
A home of peace and human brotherhood,
Where men should equal stand, a sovereign host,

Nor owe to bawdry birth their high degree;
Where merit's star o'er mammon's might ascend;

Where brain and brawn should blood and birth outweigh,
Where law should liberty and life defend,
And tyranny be traitor to the realm;

Where right, not might, should monarch rise and reign,
O'er all that breathed or blossomed 'neath the sun;

Where, linked in chain of loving unity—
The only chain that freedom's land could bind—
A sternhold of empire, hand in hand,
Might time their steps to Truth's triumphant tread,
And march to music of Millennial strains
O'er harrowing of our great redemption—
The welding of the nations—world wide chain—
With Freedom's ensign waving over all.

The brave task thine, bold warrior with the mail,
Europe's pilgrim, Neptune's prouder!

Tossed not alone on wild Atlantic's crest,
By angry trident of the ocean god,
But on a sea of troubles fiercer still—
The untried and untried of the world—
Whose waves of cold contempt and clouds of scorn

And wrathful winds had well nigh overwhelmed

The bark of thy adventurous enterprise,
Ere glorious Isabella's friendship beamed,
And falow saw thy slow-descending sail.

The brave task thine, then Titan of thy time—
Albeit thy lot to better build than know—
To plow a way for Freedom through the waves,
And plant her standard on a stranger shore—
The banner of the cross, whose law divine
Is love of right and human liberty;

To pioneer a path for Freedom's own,
To pave the way for her great redemption—
A mightier 'em than thou—whose patriot arm
Enveloped with thunders of omnipotence,
Wielding the lightnings of a righteous cause,
Should cleave the clanking chain of tyranny,
Which bound, as captive to the chariot wheel
Of Britain's power, Columbia's bleeding form.

And then—oh, glorious conqueror, grander far
Than furnished steel and battling hosts might win,
To turn from all he was or might have been,
To wait the all but proffered kingly crown,
And seek the sweet accession of repose

Sufficed to reign—where kings too rarely reign—
Without a rival in his country's love.

Yet thou the glory of that deed shalt share,
Which gave to half the world—thy benighted globe—

What all must have and hold ere Time expire;
Since truth proclaims, had no Columbus been
Our land had never known a Washington.

What though proud Spain withheld thy gear deon grand

Viceroyalty of realms by thee unveiled,
Vast revenues no offer e'er contained—
Pledged recompense of pain and patient toil!
Could aught by man bestowed thy boon repay—
Thy gift to glory and a groaning race?
Wouldst with the great debt cancelled? Gaze again—
Behold what Time hath wrought—the mighty tree
That shelters 'neath its broad and bonetous shade
From fierce oppression's rain or fiery rays,
And feeds with hope's rare fruit the refugees
Of Freedom's cause in every land and clime!

That tree was of thy planting—thine and his,
Who wrought by thee Divinity's design;
Though thou didst never live to pluck the fruit
Which gladens now a grateful universe.

Nor lived to see—oh mockery of fate!
What then had made thee weep, hadst thou been less Than thy great self—thy rightful claim ignored—

Another's name upon the monument

Eternal destiny designed for thee.
But lived to eat the bread of penny;
And moist its bitter crust with burning tears;
To wear the chains which envious power had forged.

In fires of ceaseless hate; and then to pass
Unpitied to the tomb, unwept, unpraised,
And unrequited. 'E'en as some brave baron,
Giant which to war all angry winds conspire,
After by tempest's fury lashed and driven,
Diamond-ed, shattered, wrecked, on rocky reef
Goes down in raging sea—so sank thy soul.
Thy stalwart soul beneath life's stormy way?
Thy greatness lost in man's ingratitude.

Lost but to man's, not to thy Maker's gaze,
That ship sails on, and it shall sail for aye.
Thy fame, Columbus, sank with Europe's sun,
To rise upon the world thy valor won,
Whose teeming myriads now their homage yield.

What glorious walls and glittering towers appear?
For whom doth honor rear these radiant domes?

These "villages of nations," where the waves
Of Gehenna's shore of need are?
Why through these multitudes that eager wend
From every clime beyond the watery way?
From Aela's ancient strand—far-famed Oalay.

Where sage King Fu-tse shone and Yao reigned;

Or was Gassama's home, the Hindu land,
For which thy prowess pierced ocean's mystery,
Pacific's coral isles and palmy groves
Send forth their dusky-hued ambassadors.
O'er accidental seas their course inclines,
Along the bottom of Balboa's wave.

Anon from Europe's coast, whence greatness springs

To countless to praise or c'en to name;
Land of illustrious lives and deathless dead,
Whose deeds, like laurel blossoms, crown her head.

From Africa's burning waste, Atlantic's isles, Swift o'er his billows breast their vessels bound.

Flowing anew the path, cleft by the keel
That bore Columbus to Columbia's shore.

These walls and towers are thine, and thine
the fane,

Upward to science, art and industry,
Whose shining fingers point thy place of rest;
These multitudes, thy pilgrim votaries,
Who hither hie to kneel and pour their praise.
Look down, O sainted soul, upon the world,
A world that now divines what thou didst know.

And more than thou didst deem the world might know;

A world that praises where it once profaned, Adores where then it scoffed, and lauds where blamed.

The mystic wheel hath turned; the last is first,
And first is last—Columbus—Ferdinand—
Which is the king, and which the vassal now?
If fame be wealth, what fabled wealth is thine!
If love be empire, where thy realm's confound?
Behold all nations bending at the shrine,
Columbia, loyal to thy name and pour their praise!
And thus the present for the past atones,
And more than Spain once promised, Earth now pays.

At the conclusion of his recitation Bishop Whitney was vociferously applauded.

The remaining items on the programme were: Organ march and chorus—
"Twine Ye the Garlands," Prof. Thomas Radcliffe and Salt Lake Choral society; soprano solo and chorus—
"Land of the Trumpet and Spear,"
Miss Lillian Roberts and Utah County
Choral union (H. E. Glies, conductor); final—"Hallelujah Chorus," combined choruses, conducted by Prof.
Evan Stephens.

The children from Provo (some 200 in number) were in charge of Mr.
Wallace Billings, Miss Mary C. Nuttall, Miss Emma Thatcher, Miss Josephine Brimhall and Miss Jennie Collins. They took part in the Columbus ceremonies at Provo yesterday morning until 12 o'clock, boarded the train at 12:30 arrived at Salt Lake City at 2:15 p. m. and performed their part on the programme in the Tabernacle exercises in the afternoon under the direction of Prof. H. E.
Glies, also again in the evening.
The party returned to Provo on the 11:05 p. m. train.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To the Hon. the President and City Council of Salt Lake City:

Gentlemen—The ordinance drafted by your health officer in relation to cesspools, if adopted, would work great hardship to the taxpayers of this city, not alone financially, but would, in my opinion, not be conducive to the health of the people.

A water-tight vessel for a sewer receptacle constructed according to specifications and to meet the requirements of a family of eight or ten persons would need have a capacity of about two thousand gallons. The sewage and drainage from a dwelling accommodating a family of this size would amount to at least fifty gallons per day, and at the end of thirty days 1500 gallons, and said ordinance would compel the emptying of this when the receptacle was three parts full. The cesspool could not be constructed according to specifications for less than $300, and although the doctor says nothing about a vent pipe, this would be a necessity, and to give any practical ventilation would require a pipe twelve inches in diameter joined into the cover of this air-tight fifth jug, and should extend upwards at least twenty feet, as to discharge its contents or gases above the roofs of ordinary dwellings. This would be an additional cost of about $50, making an outlay of $350 first cost.

The accumulating filth would need to be removed every thirty days, and the probable cost of such removal (judging from past experience with scavengers) would be not less than $10 for each time, and for the twelve months would aggregate $120, making a cost of $470 for the luxury of such a cesspool for one year.

Another very important consideration would be the fact that the sewer laterals are being constantly extended, and the ordinance on sewers is so framed that it compels the property owners to make immediate connection therewith, when said sewer pipe is laid in front of and abutting on the premises. Then the property owner is compelled to pay $3 a front foot for the extension of the sewer pipe, and as the property owners and workmen of this city are generally so unfortunate as to own about 100 feet frontage to their homes, here on this one item they are forced to raise $300 for this special tax.

Then the ordinance demands that you immediately connect with the sewer and the plumber's bill for doing this is say $300 more, in all $600 for sewer connections. Then, of course, you must abandon the costly fifth jug in the rear of your premises, as you would no longer wish to use it, nor would you be permitted to do so.

It is needless to say that the wage earner and day laborer (and nine-tenths of Salt Lake men belong to the above classes) cannot possibly meet these large expenses in addition to their heavy taxes for city, county and school purposes.

A hermetically sealed bottle of sewer filth, with connecting waste pipes, extending from the bathroom, the water closet, the bedrooms and kitchen sink, all have two open ends, the one in this case conveying sewage into the sealed jug, and the other ends conveying sewer gas, a deadly poison, back into the dwelling and sleeping rooms of the family. A cesspool is bad enough when its contents can be discharged into the porous earth, and be largely absorbed by the sand and gravel in our sub-soil formation, which afford ready absorbment of the fluid portion, and also a portion of the gases, and some of the remaining gases are rendered inert and harmless by being in contact with the soil.

In the sealed receptacle contemplated by your health officer no such absorption could possibly take place; nay it is intended that none such be permitted.

The doctor may claim that the danger lies in this sewage matter being thus thrown and absorbed into the soil, but let us remember that in the earth cesspool the absorption takes place from six to eighteen feet below the surface of the ground, and that in the system of dry earth closets a shovelful of dry earth securing a covering of vault filth to the depth of three or four inches, will deodorize the mass and hold the gases entirely inert. Then we may safely conclude that the earth cesspool now in use, if properly constructed, is superior and safer to the community, first, from a sanitary standpoint, and secondly, will not be such a crusher financially as compared to the one recommended by the doctor.

And we must take into consideration that the sewer districts now designated will embrace all the most popular parts of the city, and that the dwellings outside the sewer districts are in possession of sufficient land surrounding each dwelling on every side, that no apprehension need be felt as to an abundance of room for the absorption needed from cesspools belonging to those more scattered and isolated dwellings. Again, if this ordinance recommended by the doctor be adopted, then the city must immediately cease to be constructed at least four watertight tanks. These tanks should have a capacity of not less than 1500 gallons each, and be set on wheels with large hose pipe and pump, to be manned by not less than four stout men, in order to remove in the most cleanly and expedient manner possible the contents of these filth bottles.

These sewer transportation wagons constructed as above could not be furnished for less than about $1000, and here would compel the outlay of another $4000 for the four wagons needed, and as the city officials have already declared that their funds are exhausted, and that all improvements pertaining to water, to sewers and cesspools, and so forth, must be made by a special tax levied upon the property owners and a lien upon such property until such special tax is paid—workmen and owners of homes, do you like the picture?

Another and more important consideration.

These filth jugs would have to be emptied, their contents uncovered and stirred up in pumping from cesspool to tank, and as this kind of work is generally done in the night time the density of the atmosphere would prevent the noxious vapors from arising into the upper deep and so the night air, laden with disease germs, would be conveyed through our open windows into our sleeping rooms and there distribute disease and the seeds of death to the occupants thereof.

Remember, gentlemen, improvements are good, but the over-worked and over-taxed professional men and the wage earners and laborers do not desire improvements that do not improve the health of the city and that would, in many cases, compel them to sacrifice their homes and sell the same to meet the demands of the contemplated additional taxes.

Very respectfully and truly your obedient servant,

SEYMOUR B. YOUNG, M. D.

JUAB STAKE CONFERENCE.

The conference of the Juab Stake was held last Saturday and Sunday at Nephi in the stake tabernacle. On the stand were President Joseph F. Smith, Apostle F. M. Lyman, President William Paxman and his counsel, Charles Sperry and James W. Paxman, members of the High Council, Bishops of wards, Father Noble, of Bountiful, and Elder John Beck.

President Paxman was pleased with the labors of the Saints, and exhorted all to diligence. He reported his stake in a flourishing condition. All the societies and organizations are in an excellent condition save the Y. M. M. I. A. and it would be in working order the coming week.

Father Noble related some of his experience in the Church and how he became acquainted with the Prophet Joseph in 1830.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Apostle Lyman delivered a powerful discourse on the general duties of the Saints emphasizing the necessity of having love for one another and being one in things pertaining to our salvation; to seek the Lord and attend our duties and He would lead us in the right path.

President Joseph F. Smith took for his text "Christ's Sermon on the Mount," (Matthew V), and bore a powerful testimony.

SUNDAY.

After the opening exercises and the administering of the Sacrament and the sustaining of the officers and authorities, both local and general, the latter as presented at the General Conference, President Smith delivered a discourse which was listened to with marked attention by a very large audience. He said, we have just voted to sustain the authorities of the Church, general and local, and if there were objections to any they should be made on such occasions as this; if there be none we should give a full vote, not a half one, and sustain them by our faith and prayers and works. Passages from the Doctrine and Covenants were read showing why we should say who should preside over us. Christ's sermon on the mount was spoken on. "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old, thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." If this will apply in this case it will apply in others. We should be pure before our God, for we are told, "Be ye perfect even as your Father in Heaven is perfect," and we can be perfect, for the Lord never requested anything which was impossible. We were foreordained to be like Christ, our example. He then invoked the blessings of God upon all the Saints.

EVENING SESSION.

Apostle Lyman occupied the pulpit and spoke on cleanliness and industry. He advised that the members of the Lesser Priesthood be kept busy. "Beautify your city and your homes. Inform yourselves. Have a desire to be rich in knowledge and means, in goodness, and use the same in the right way. Make a success in whatever you undertake."

President Smith said he believed in short addresses and prayers but did not believe in having set phrases in either. Spoke for some time on the subject of "Prayer." He praised the Saints of Nephi, as did Brother Lyman, for the improvements made on our tabernacle and our excellent choir.

President Paxman indorsed what had been said and thus closed one of the best conferences ever held in the Juab Stake of Zion.

Singing of the doxology.

Benediction by President Joseph F. Smith.

J. D. CALL, Clerk of Conference.
NEPHI, Oct. 20, 1892.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

The union had been arranged for the Fairview, Nashville, St. Joseph and Franklin wards, but owing to some misunderstanding none of them were represented, except Franklin, at the meeting on the 18th inst.

Present on the stand, Superintendent George Goddard and Brother John M. Whitaker of Salt Lake City, President of Onelia Stake George C. Parkinson, the Sunday School superintendency and others.

The exercises opened with the Union singing "Beautiful Day." Prayer by President G. C. Parkinson. Singing, "Hope of Israel." The programme proper commenced with the superintendency and teachers of Franklin Sunday school singing "The Sunday School Invitation." Next was an exercise on Bible history by the primary class at Franklin school, after which the second intermediate class reviewed their lessons on the Acts of the Apostles. Recitation, "A Mother's Farewell," by Ada Mendenhall.

Brother John M. Whitaker then briefly addressed the Union, after which the Stake Superintendency sang "Every One Sowing." Review lessons on the Book of Mormon from Sunday School charts, by first intermediate class; recitation, "Are You Fighting for the Master?" by Clara Pratt.

Superintendent George Goddard next addressed the Union and directed attention to the school, recommending that they be handled with care. He also encouraged every one to follow the example set by the superintendent and teachers in rendering paria assigned. The subject of prayer was also dwelt upon. Song, "Utah's Best Crop," in which the schools joined. "Parting Hymn," was sung to close the morning session.

Benediction by Henry Brunson.

In the afternoon after the singing of a "Jubilee Song," prayer was offered by William Woodward. Singing, "Beautiful Zion." The Sacrament was administered by J. H. Corbridge and William Mendenhall. By request the "Sunday School Invitation" was repeated. A recitation, "Be careful what you say," was rendered by Rosa Marshall. Review lesson on the first principles of the Gospel by the Theological class. Song by Manuel Packer.

Stake Superintendent W. L. Webster regretted very much that a misunderstanding had happened with some of the schools in this district, for those not present are certainly, he said, missing a treat. I. B. Nash expressed his pleasure at having the brethren from Salt Lake City with them. James Herd was pleased to be associated with the Sunday schools and to see so many parents present. He spoke of the responsibilities resting upon mothers. Brothers Goddard and Whitaker followed, giving excellent advice and encouragement. The former also sang "A Dream."

Elders E. Swan and Joseph Gollightly of Preston and C. D. Gosnell of Franklin, the future Sunday school missionaries from this stake, each expressed pleasure at being laborers in the Sunday school cause.

Brother Goddard and others sang to close, and the whole congregation joined in chorus, "Who's on the Lord's side, who?"

Benediction by Joseph Gollightly.

In the evening another meeting was held, at which Brothers Goddard, Whitaker and Kirkup were the speakers. Much good counsel was given.

THOMAS DURANT,
Stake Secretary.

Sheriff J. H. Thompson and Deputy Frank Prothro have returned from their long chase after John See, the wife murderer. They overtook the man they had been following a short distance beyond Durango, Colorado, only to find that he was not See, and bore little resemblance to him. Mr. Thompson is confident that they were on the right trail for two hundred miles, when they lost it.—Silver Belt (Arizona.)

Colonel A. C. Fisk, the largest farmer in Colorado, is harvesting the crops of wheat, oats, rye, potatoes and other products from the 5,000 acres of land he cultivates by the sub-irrigation system in Weld county, near the towns of Fort Collins and Greeley. Charles E. Harriok has gone to supervise the harvest, which is expected to result in 50,000 bushels of wheat, 100 train loads of potatoes, and other things in proportion. Crops in that section are very large this year.—Denver News.

A gentleman who has thoroughly covered the interior of Nebraska within the last two or three months, remarked yesterday that, while the corn crop would turn out pretty well, the general condition of the state as regards crops, etc., will be behind that of last year. He states that the supply of cattle and hogs throughout the state will show a marked decrease from last year. The number of sheep which will be turned to market from the feed lots of the state will in all probability show a fair increase.—Stout City Tribune.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, . . . $2.50
 Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, . . . 1.50
 IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, - - October 29, 1892.

PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
 SALT LAKE CITY,
 October 15th, 1892.

To whom it may concern:

It having been surmised that through recent changes in the DESERET NEWS office the Church had no further direction of or interest in the papers issued from that establishment, we feel it proper to state that the DESERET EVENING, SEMI-WEEKLY and WEEKLY NEWS are still and will continue to be the organs of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and as such are worthy the patronage and perusal of the Saints. The changes that have been made have met with our entire approval; and in recognizing these periodicals as the organs of the Church we shall continue through them to disseminate the official communications of the Church.

Your brethren in the Gospel,

(Signed) WILFORD WOODRUFF,

GEO. Q. CANNON,

JOS. F. SMITH.

NOT THE UTAH WAY.

The Boston Traveler, in an editorial headed "The Utah Mormons," says:

"Polygamy may be dead in Utah, as the defenders of the Mormons claim, but how comes it that we have Apostle Taylor declaring that the manifesto of President Woodruff, advising that no more polygamous unions may be entered into for the present, does not prevent a man from supporting more than one woman? This would seem to indicate what has always been held by those who looked deeper than the mere surface manifesto, that the alleged abandonment of polygamy is a mere pretext to win a better opinion from the rest of the country and to influence politicians in favor of statehood. That it has succeeded is shown in the congratulations indulged in by President Cannon "over the miraculous change in public sentiment." How much President Eliot of Harvard has had to do with this miracle is not said, but he should not be denied the credit or the discredit, as the case may be, of his share. It will be a good thing to give Mormon Utah a long probation.

Intelligence and humanity may be alive in Massachusetts, as public rumor and the census reports still inform us, but how comes it that we have the editor of a respectable newspaper there making remarks in order to argue them, and advocating by implication the violation of one of the plainest duties an honorable man can assume? Does the Traveler writer think that President Woodruff's manifesto prevented, or pretended or was intended to prevent, "a man from supporting more than one woman," if that other woman or women happened to be his wife or wives, and possibly the mother or mothers of his children? If so, his intellect must be pitifully dwarfed, and his sense of humanity utterly depraved. He suspects that what he calls the "alleged abandonment of polygamy" was a mere pretext to win a better opinion from the rest of the country; and he intimates that that better opinion would have been won, from him at least, if the men who had practiced polygamy in Utah had immediately turned their plural wives and their children out of doors, scorned, repudiated, despised, and left to the mercies of a world in which such Christian scribes as he are good enough to be considered respectable.

The Mormons in Utah are as far above the need of a better opinion from his class of thinkers as they are above his method of dealing with the women and children who have claims upon them for support. To the law and to its spirit, even to its very letter, they yield sincere obedience. But that law does not require nor can it compel that they shall withhold support from the women they covenanted to love and cherish, and the children born unto them in such alliances. The Traveler man's notions under the abandonment of polygamy prove what his notions of the practice of polygamy were. He thinks it strange that the men do not hail with pleasure the opportunity heartlessly to cast off and mercilessly to hurl down to eternal sorrow the women whose love they once had won. It is enough to say to him that such may be the Boston way, but it is not the Utah way.

As to "the congratulations indulged in by President Cannon 'over the miraculous change in public sentiment,'"—they do butless spring from a perfectly natural gratitude that the intelligence of the American people had at last come to reject as senseless and such emanations as might be expected from writers of the Traveler stripe; and as to the question of how much President Eliot had to do with this miracle, we are of opinion that the more the distinguished gentleman had to do with it the more entitled he is to a share in the "congratulations."

A BOOTLESS AGITATOR.

The continued attempt to arouse a national willingness to change the name of our country from America to Columbia is only a fresh reminder that it is generally the man who tells of a thing, not the man who does it, that is honored and perpetuated by his contemporaries and thus by later generations. No one disputes that if the right of discovery had prevailed, this continent would have borne the name of the hardy Genoese whose crowning act a hundred million people are celebrating this month. But it so happened that among his officers and a later voyage there was an intelligent Florentine, Amerigo Vespucci, or Vesputius, who on his return to Europe published glowing account of the lands he visited and gave to the world the first formal announcement of the discovery, claiming, so far as the continent of the west was concerned, to have been the first to set foot upon it. His name was given to the new world by a famous German cosmographer, Martin Waldseemüller, through whose works, passing through several editions, it was fastened irrevocably, not altogether by caprice, upon both continents comprising the hemisphere.

After all, the purpose of the present agitation is not worth its cost. Columbus needs no larder recognition in this our day to cause his name to be remembered. If Vespucci comes in for some remembrance too, what matters it; his glory in no wise eclipses that of his commander. The name of the one is preserved by a strange freak of fortune; the fame of the other can never be dimmed and will grow ever brighter through all the ages.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Three weeks from yesterday the voters of the United States will cast their ballots for members of the electoral college, who in turn will express the choice of those who elected them for President and Vice-President of the Republic. No interest attaches to these candidates for electors—their duty is merely perfunctory, and they are only selected to perform a clerical act. But a vast and consuming interest is associated with the number of votes each state will have and the uncertainty as to which candidates those votes will be cast for. Below will be found a table giving this information with reference to the last three elections, and also the membership of the electoral college under the new apportionment:

	1860.	1864.	1868.	1872.
STATES.	Castled.	Blancok.	Blaine.	Cleveland.
Alabama	10	10	10	10
Arkansas	7	7	7	7
California	5	5	5	5
Colorado	3	3	3	3
Connecticut	7	7	7	7
Delaware	3	3	3	3
Florida	4	4	4	4
Georgia	11	11	11	11
Idaho	3	3	3	3
Illinois	21	21	21	21
Indiana	13	13	13	13
Iowa	11	11	11	11
Kansas	6	6	6	6
Kentucky	12	12	12	12
Louisiana	8	8	8	8
Maine	7	7	7	7
Maryland	8	8	8	8
Massachusetts	13	13	13	13
Michigan	11	11	11	11
Minnesota	7	7	7	7
Missouri	8	8	8	8
Montana	3	3	3	3
Nevada	3	3	3	3
New Hampshire	5	5	5	5
New Jersey	9	9	9	9
New York	36	36	36	36
North Carolina	10	10	10	10
North Dakota	3	3	3	3
Ohio	23	23	23	23
Oregon	3	3	3	3
Pennsylvania	29	29	29	29
Rhode Island	4	4	4	4
South Carolina	7	7	7	7
South Dakota	3	3	3	3
Tennessee	12	12	12	12
Texas	11	11	11	11
Vermont	3	3	3	3
Virginia	11	11	11	11
Washington	4	4	4	4
West Virginia	5	5	5	5
Wisconsin	10	10	10	10
Wyoming	3	3	3	3
Total	214	214	214	214

THE INFAMY IS REVIVED.

A recent editorial in this paper congratulated our friends in Idaho over the apparent awakening to justice which the powers that be in that state had undergone, and the seemingly imminent restoration to those disfranchised of all their rights as citizens. In doing so we anticipated as to the supreme court's action, and in that respect find ourselves disappointed, a dispatch from Boise dated yesterday, and which appears elsewhere in these columns, announcing that the supreme court has decided the test oath law to be constitutional. The opinion withholding the right to register and vote is the undivided action of the court.

The religious test, or whatever else it may be called by which the Idaho Mormons were disfranchised, was made a law by the legislature only last year. Its provisions are, in brief, that any man who, since the first of January, 1888, or since he was eighteen years old has been a member of or practiced the beliefs of the Mormon Church or any church or sect that teaches or has taught the doctrine of patriarchal or plural marriage or has taught, counseled or aided any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy or similar marital conditions, is denied the right of voting at any public election in the state. The case which the supreme court has just decided was brought a short time ago, by a man who went before the registrar of Bear Lake county and subscribed to the required oath. It was claimed that in doing this perjury was committed, he being a member of the Church aimed at; and he was subsequently arrested upon that charge. He thereupon applied to the supreme court for a remedial writ on the ground that the law was unconstitutional, not being in consonance with section 9, article I of the United States Constitution and against a provision in the state constitution, both of which points are overruled and the writ is denied.

The court holds substantially that ex post facto laws, or those retroactive in their nature, relate only to criminal procedure, and that the exercise of suffrage is not an inherent right but a privilege regulated by law; also that the law is not in the nature of a bill of attainder, for that the constitution has the right to determine what qualifications shall obtain in the case of any one exercising any privilege or holding any office under the state, and that if any person or class of persons comes within the disqualifying clause and is rejected, he is properly rejected and there is no attainder attaching to it so long as it operates on all alike.

Now, it seems to us that there is a lack of profoundness in the conclusion that the wise and beneficent provision against ex post facto legislation has no other meaning than the protection of a person charged with a crime. There is a special statute in every state and territory aimed at securing such rights to defendants and it is known as a statute of limitations; but even it cannot assist a person to the renewal of the right of suffrage when once that right has been forfeited through the suffering of punishment for certain crimes. It would appear that no matter what construction may be placed upon the office of retroactive legislation, one of the results of certain criminal acts is the loss of the franchise, which cannot thereafter in some cases be restored, and that this is part of the punishment inflicted. If, therefore, such deprivation of rights as the people in Idaho have undergone and are undergoing is a means of punishment, wherein does the honorable court make the conclusion that their disfranchisement is a civil and not a criminal matter harmonize with sound logic, to say nothing of common sense? Does not the case stand thus: The procedure is strictly civil when the Mormon could not be reached if it were criminal, and the effect of this (being punishment) is criminal; but the element of crime has no relation to the procedure (in the case of a Mormon), so that his punishment cannot be reviewed or considered in the light of ex post facto legislation! Is not that about the size of it?

Again: The laws provide and the courts have held that the franchise in this country is property and the best property a man can have. If that be the case, upon what ground does the Idaho court stand when it solemnly declares that voting is a mere privilege to be regulated by the state? What makes the state, and of what is it composed? Is it not those same men who claim and exercise the right to vote who are the creators and upholders of the public edifice, which, the court says, has in turn the right to disfranchise them with or without conviction of crime? And can the thing created become superior to the creator? Would it not sound better to say that the state has the right to regulate but not to deny? Yet there is a reason for the court thinking and acting otherwise in the fact that to regulate implies to be regular, that is, uniform, impartial, not burdening A with conditions to which B is not subjected, and so on. But how could a legislature pass a measure aimed solely at a class and not intended for the annoyance of all who entertain objectionable opinions, if that rule were followed? How could Mormons, who only believe certain things at variance with their Christian brethren, be assailed, and Catholics (for instance) who perhaps entertain certain views of government not strictly in harmony with republicanism, be let alone?

There is a good deal in the opinion that seems at this distance very evasive and uncertain as a legal instrument, and very fixed and definite as a reflex of the spirit of political fanaticism in which the law was born. Those who framed and favored the odious act were determined at those to whom they were opposed should not vote. In the accomplishment of such selfish and wholly unworthy purpose they invoked the aid of the law and have obtained what for the present answers their purpose—a decision affirming its constitutionality. But the end is not yet!

ANCIENT SCIENCE.

The most profitable as well as pleasurable labor of the archaeologist ought to be the unearthing of traces of former but long extinct civilization. It is claimed that the high intellectual and scientific development to which the present age has attained is but a return of what existed in the long agone and had its rise, pinnacle and fall. Ours is at its height, or very nearly so, one would think; and if with the going out of the century or any other adjacent period our great skill and marked accomplishments shall begin to wane, it will be the best but not the only evidence that the idea is correct.

It is now related in current literary circles that Mr. Flinders Petrie, who has been studying for two years at Gizeh, is convinced that the Egyptian stone-workers of 4000 years ago had a surprising acquaintance with what had been considered modern tools. Among the many tools used by the pyramid builders were both solid and tubular drills and straight and circular saws. The drills, like those of today, were set with jewels (probably corundum, as the diamond was very scarce), and even like tools had such cutting edges. So remarkable was the quality of the tubular drills and the skill of the workmen that the cutting marks in hard granite gave no indication of wear of the tool, while a cut of a tenth of an inch was made in the hardest rock at each revolution, and a hole through both the hardest and softest material was bored perfectly smooth and uniform throughout. Of the material and method of making the tools nothing is known.

It is claimed that the ancients had railroads, but this is more or less visionary, the evidence being very scant if existing at all. The fact that we know so little and links of information uniting us with the past are being discovered so numerous of late, is the means of making many people believe, and perhaps before the generation is gone all will believe and many will know.

AS TO STATEHOOD AGAIN.

The organ of the Liberal party attempts no concealment of the fact that the sole necessity for the continuance of that party is to oppose "imminent statehood," which it affects to think would be otherwise very "imminent within the next four months."

The organ of the Democratic party, probably in pursuance of its frankly expressed hope that the Liberal party in this county will not disband until after the next election, desires the statehood question kept prominent. It co-fesses its partisanship in the hope referred to; and yet it proceeds to read the DESERET NEWS, which is a non-partisan paper, and has no partisan hopes, a moral lecture on "insincere avowals made with a sinister purpose" and on a departure from "the policy of fair play which has been characteristic of that [this] paper."

We can hardly conceive the necessity of replying to such insinuations from such a source. Yet the invitation is one that may not well be resisted; especially when it is charged that in our "zeal to state the non-political attitude of the Mormon church officials" we have "gone too far," and that our position is not warranted by the sentiments of a vast majority of the people we "claim to represent."

Let us see.
If there is any one thing that the DESERET NEWS desires, or has desired, out of the political controversy that for more than a year past has been going on in this Territory, it is the welfare and advancement of the majority of the people. That object, and that alone, has with us been ever in view during all the wrangling that partisan cotemporaries and partisan speakers on either side of the political line have indulged in. We have not exposed the cause of Democracy, because the Republicans profess, and have given some evidence of, a patriotic desire to bring about a condition of peace and prosperity. We have not taken up the outcries for Republicanism, because the Democrats have proclaimed, and manifested some sincerity in, a like desire. We believe that either party has the power to help materially in the consummation of so desirable an object; and we certainly believe that both parties, working sincerely for the same object, have the power to accomplish it. If a conscientious adherence to this attitude permits us at this late day to only claim to represent the Mormon people, then have our efforts indeed been woefully misapplied.

Furthermore: The News in declining to champion the cause or candidates of either the Democratic or the Republican party has also declined to lead or participate in active opposition to either the one or the other. But that course has not taken us out of the field of aggressive popular discussion. The common enemy of both the national parties, the obstacle, as we believe, to the harmony and growth of Utah, has not received gingerly treatment at our hands. Not that its candidates have been unjustly assailed or railing accused; many of them have been men of capacity and honor. But they have stood upon a platform whose props have one by one been knocked away, and were the representatives of principles that either called for the continuance of or return to the period of discord and strife, or were summed up in the one word "apollia." Our opposition to this party and policy has been unequivocal and unceasing; believing it to be antagonistic to the best interests of the Territory, we have fought it in all seasons and in every honorable way. We have not even desired its continuance beyond a specified election day in the hope that its strength would draw from another set of candidates and thus render more certain the election of a set of candidates for whom we might have favor. Our "sincerity" in this admits of no question, we think, even though it has not been of the partisan Democratic variety. Nor should we think that in any avowal of ours the Democratic organ could find the "muck of a sinister purpose." Hence to charge us with saying that which "would land the Priesthood and members of the Church in a body in the Liberal party, which has no other platform than Mormon-hating," may be used as a piece of amusing absurdity. If the Democratic organ will look at its inuendo in the light of its own performance it will confess that it has been guilty of colossal impudence.

Coming back now to the main proposition—Liberal opposition to "imminent statehood" and the willingness of the News, speaking for the Priesthood and members of the Mormon Church, to wait for that boon until the non-Mormons shall want it: The position of this paper is consistent, sincere, and in every aspect of the case prudent. If we didn't believe the political atmosphere in Utah would be cleared and purified by the death of the Liberal party; if we did not have the confession of that party that it only lives to oppose statehood; if we did not feel that every honorable man is entitled to have all his doubts as to Mormon sincerity, idle and without foundation though they may be, forever settled and set at rest; if we did not feel that our present condition is much more satisfactory than that from which the Territory has but recently emerged, and is to be cherished as preferable to any possible return; if we did not feel that with each political party so closely watching the other good government will be pretty certain and rank abuses speedy of correction; if we did not believe that the territorial form if well administered can be endured as long and with as little discomfort by Mormons as by non-Mormons; if we did not believe any of these things but believed their exact opposite, then we might join in the clamor for immediate statehood—and not get it.

The Mormon people are patient as well as patriotic. They are not Democrats because of the Home Rule bill, nor Republicans because of the Teller statehood bill. They haven't joined either party in order to hasten statehood. As to how much injustice has been done the Democratic party by the statement of this paper that "in all our view we suspect both parties are playing largely for effect" in the statehood agitation, the organ of that party may recall its own statement, "rather no statehood at all than statehood at Republican hands with the understanding that Utah shall be a Republican"—or words to that effect; and its further declaration that the Republicans would never have presented the statehood bill save to offset the home rule bill; a declaration the Republicans meet by asserting that the Democrats only framed the "grotesque" home rule bill because they were afraid of straight statehood, and still wanted to make a bid for votes. If these various "elucidations" are not "convincing" to the average mind then we do not understand the term; and if they do not warrant the suspicion that both parties are playing with this question for effect, they at least go to show that each party thinks the other is doing that very thing.

We say again, the Mormon people will welcome statehood when it comes, and they will then shirk none of its responsibilities. They are not sighing for a greater burden of taxation, but will not refuse their share of it when their fellow-citizens announce themselves as ready to assume it. Meanwhile they are doing quite well; they are contented and prosperous; they are trying to live their religion and build up Zion; and they have little time and small inclination to rant about, breathlessly seeking an object which they have long lived without and to which a large number of their fellow-citizens have announced themselves as violently opposed. They can wait.

RASCALLY BUSINESS.

It is claimed that another chapter is added to "Two Centuries of Dishonor" by the report which has been made concerning the transfer to the white people of the famous Cherokee strip; it might as well be said in addition that not only the report but the actions to which it refers and a host of others of the same character and in the same vicinity are as disgraceful to the nation as they are contemptible and rascally in the perpetrators. The lands held by the Indians were wanted by the white exterminators, who were as at the beginning of the country, "smarter" and more capable of driving a bargain with but one side to it than were the owners of the soil, and there was no such danger to encounter as in the case of deceiving and defrauding a white man, who knows that the courts of equity are always open and willing to give relief. So the Indian, as usual, had to go.

An able authority on the treatment extended and kept up by the interlopers to the native Americans, a few years ago in a burst of righteous indignation declared the fact was that the United States government had not kept one of its treaties with the Indians. While this is perhaps an exaggeration, it is not as far from the truth as could be wished. Still, we would not burden the government with so much of responsibility for what takes place as that writer does. That it is morally responsible is unquestionable, but that it can control or be properly answerable for all the rascally transactions of its agents and frontiersmen is out of the question.

An exchange says: "As long as the country was in the business of stealing land itself this was probably unavoidable; but more recently it has made many pretensions toward reform, which no one can reconcile with the Indian commissioner's acts. To have made the recent report [on the Cherokee business] complete the commissioners should have stated who did the cheating and who pocketed the profits of the fraud." This is outspoken enough for the most exacting. There can be no mistake made as to the writer's meaning. And yet who can say that it is not substantially just and practically correct? The fact is, we have as a nation got to looking upon the aborigines as intruders instead of taking that unwelcome role upon ourselves; the native's rights to property or redress for grievances become less as his numbers and possessions become less, and every natural indication points to the fiat of fate that he will soon have neither hunting ground nor habitation, himself living only as a sad and fateful chapter in a dark and dreary history.

THE MAYBRICK CASE.

There is something terribly wrong, one way or another, in the case of Mrs. Maybrick, now undergoing a life sentence in an English prison on a conviction of the murder of her husband by poison. If she is guilty, as the jury said she was, then the time and sympathy extorted from the public on both sides of the Atlantic constitute a decided wrong to the people so drawn upon; but if the jury were misled as to the facts, or for any other cause did not do the accused justice, as nine-tenths of the people in England as well as the United States seem to believe, then an outrage upon a defenseless woman amounting to a scandal upon British jurisprudence and a blot upon the civilization of the world has been perpetrated.

In a recent issue of the Review of Reviews (London), its editor, Mr. Stead, has an article entitled, "Ought Mrs. Maybrick to be Tortured to Death?" In the course of which he says that he and Sir Charles Russell have received from South Africa copies of a deathbed confession which in substance exonerates the prisoner, and claims that if the document have no other value it will serve to show the travesty of justice which has taken place regarding her. Mr. Stead demands that if Home Secretary Asquith will not hear the case, then Foreign Minister Roseberry and Mr. Gladstone must; the woman must be released before Christmas or she will die where she is. There has been the sincere hope that the efforts being made on both sides of the Atlantic could net fail to secure her pardon or at least the amelioration of her punishment. Whether the throwing of this new side light upon the case will help or retard its settlement remains to be seen.

A SERIOUS SITUATION.

This paper recently referred to the situation of the Homestead strikers, the charge against them making it already one of the celebrated cases of the country—treason. In his charge to the grand jury, Chief Justice Paxson gave a most learned and perspicuous exposition of the crime named, explaining its elements and pointing out its features; it was unusually lengthy, comprising about 5000 words, and was considered by the local bar as unfavorable to the defendants.

The judge gave some instructions to the jury that carry conviction along with them; and although they seem at times to deal in commonplace things, these are necessary for a more perfect understanding of the whole legal fabric presented to the panel. His statement that "the mutual right of the parties to contract in regard to the wages and the character of the employment, whether by the piece or by the day, whether for ten hours or less, is fixed as any other right we enjoy," and the subjoined statement that "it is the plain duty of the state to protect them in the enjoyment of it," are unanswerable as legal propositions, albeit somewhat prejudicial to the cause of those who hold to the supremacy of the union by which the workers were controlled. He does not stop with this general reference, however, but goes on to make special mention of the interference by the organization, saying: "It is alleged that the advisory committee did more than induce others not to accept employment from the company; that it allowed no persons to enter the mill and even permitted no strangers to enter the town without its consent." The judge refers to the committee's military organization, showing how the authority of the sheriff had been defied, and then deals with the Homestead battle and concomitant circumstances, with which we are all familiar.

The language of the charge is in places quite graphic and throughout maintains a high literary character. Some of the passages are dramatic and pathetic, as witness the following:

"We can have some sympathy with a mob driven to desperation by hunger, as in the days of the French revolution, but we can have none for men receiving exceptionally high wages in resisting the law and resorting to violence and bloodshed in the assertion of imaginary rights, and entailing such a vast expense upon the taxpayers of the commonwealth."

"It was not a cry for bread to feed their famishing lips, resulting in a sudden outrage, with good provocation. It was a deliberate attempt by men without authority to control others in the enjoyment of their right."

Such a state of things existing in any country, his honor concludes, shows that there is a weak spot, which is not in the law itself but probably in its enforcement. If those who are charged with its administration do but their plain duty, all that is needed will be accomplished, and he did not think by reason of a long experience on the bench, that the jury in this case would fail to do theirs.

Treason was defined by his honor as the organization of a large number of men in a common purpose to defy the law, resist the officers and deprive any portion of their fellow citizens of their rights under the constitution and laws. It was shown as a maxim of criminal law that a man is presumed to have intended that which is the natural and probable consequence of his acts, and then the judge closed by saying: "We have reached the point in the history of the state where there are but two roads left for us to pursue; the one leads to order and good government, the other leads to anarchy."

After reading and considering the report of the judge's charge, we are inclined to the opinion previously spoken of—that it was unfavorable to the strikers. Unless this judgment is greatly at fault in the premises, we might go a step further and say that it amounts substantially to a direction to the jury to indict, which, as has already been seen, they did in the case of thirty-one of the strikers. The evidence seems strong, so that convictions are more than probable, and the crime is the highest known to the law. The situation is a most serious one.

IN MEMORIAM COLUMBUS.

Those who think Salt Lake City unequal to such an occasion as fitly observing Discovery Day should have seen the magnificent procession of children this morning. It is questionable if anywhere in the land as great a turnout proportionately has occurred, and quite certain that nowhere do the children better understand what all the parade and display signifies. It is noteworthy that we gave President Harrison the finest reception of this kind he received as he himself admitted; but today we fairly capped the climax—in homely phraseology, we "just fairly spread ourselves" and that, too, in honor of a man who has been in the great beyond a dozen generations past.

Four hundred years ago tomorrow Christopher Columbus disembarked from the "Santa Maria" on the eastern shore of San Salvador, the most easterly island in the Bahama group, off the southeastern coast of Florida. We celebrate the occasion on Friday because he set sail from Palos on Friday, discovered land on Friday, began his return voyage on Friday, and reached Palos again on Friday, March 15, 1493; this seeming to be the explorer's red letter day and its being so close to the real time of discovery, determined us to fix the celebration accordingly, thus allowing for the day as well as the date.

There may be those who do not understand why it is that some places observed the 12th of this month instead of the present date. This is because of the change made in the calendar by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582; he found it necessary to arbitrarily dispose of ten days in order to make the world's chronology coherent, that is, to make time and its measurement from the beginning correspond. The calendar is not perfect yet, but it is practically so, and it is a splendid exemplification of the great learning and profound judgment of the priestly philosopher. Expunging the ten days placed the equinox in its proper position in the year, and the seasons being thus adjusted were made to correspond with the years and parts thereof; but it made the change spoken of, a difference of ten days. It is like setting back the hands of a clock; the time itself goes on, but the measurement of it does not, and in celebrating the 12th of October as it was before the revision, we have to wait ten days and thus fill up the gap which Gregory made for our convenience.

It is a great day and Columbus was a great man. Both deserve all the honors which a grateful people are now bestowing.

AN AUTHOR IN A DILEMMA.

The New York World recently offered a prize of $500 for the best Democratic campaign song. There were several hundred competitors and the choice was made by a committee appointed for that purpose. It turns out that the author is a Republican, holding a lucrative position in one of the departments at Washington, and as such he refuses to give his name, preferring to forfeit the prize if necessary. The World declares that to give the money to a competitor who declines to publicly acknowledge its reception raises a question of literary ethics which can only properly be decided by experts, and the whole matter has been submitted to such a committee. It would seem that in any event the author is entitled to something, since the paper publishes both the words and music of his production.

THE CHICAGO Mail wants "the good work so auspiciously begun at Coffeyville to go on merrily till the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

NANSEN'S POLAR SHIP.

The efforts of the indefatigable Dr. Nansen to reach and explore the North Pole every attentive news reader is more or less familiar with. He has his own ideas of the course and utility of the Polar currents, and his theories, borne out as they are in great measure by his own discoveries and observation, have at least an air of much plausibility. His present intention is to force his way into the great northerly stream, and, trusting himself to a ship which shall be able to resist or endure the tremendous ice pressure that may be encountered, let that stream carry him whither it will. To this end he has been devoting his attention for some months past to the construction of a vessel that shall answer his high requirements. The ship has now so far progressed that an idea may be formed of its general outline. One who has seen it says the slanting sides of the tight little craft strike the eye at once. Under the supposition that the vessel will be "screwed" by the ice, care has been taken that no projecting points or flat surfaces exist. The peculiar design is based on the anticipation that all ice, when meeting the vessel, will be forced down under it, allowing it to be raised so much out of the water. For the same reason the bottom of the vessel is covered with hard and smooth wood—greenheart, 8 to 6 inches thick. Inside, the vessel is provided with horizontal, vertical, and diagonal crossbeams, fastened by hundreds of iron and wooden joints, giving the impression of great solidity. The frame is mostly old oak. Besides the uppermost covering of greenheart, there are two oak skins. The vessel is provided with a steam-engine of 160 horse power. It is rigged as a three-masted schooner and will mainly rely on its sails when in the ice. Its dimensions are: keel, 31 metres; greatest length of deck, 39 metres; greatest width of deck, 11 metres; height from keel to deck, 5.25 metres; when loaded, 4.75 metres; displacement, 800 tons. The hull will be extremely heavy on account of the heavy material used in the construction, yet it is estimated that she will be able to carry 400 tons of coal and provisions, etc. Besides the smaller boats necessary for reconnoitering, etc., two large boats are being built, able to hold the whole crew of twelve men, and provisions for three months.

With such a marvel of solidity, and with the skill and the experience the intrepid Nansen has already exhibited, there are good reasons to expect that the results of this voyage will far exceed those of any that have preceded it. The interest of the whole world will be centered upon it.

A BANKRUPTCY LAW NEEDED.

The time was, in the very remote ages, when an insolvent debtor might be put to death by his creditors; coming along down the shore of time, with the sun of a more perfect Christianity rising higher and higher and an improved civilization growing and spreading among men, the savagery of such laws was finally recognized and they gave way to measures less rigorous. As far back as the medieval period, we believe, or say about the time that the good Queen Isabella disposed of her jewelry rather than go in debt to give Mr. Columbus a world-seeking outfit, the more merciful treatment of only imprisoning the man who couldn't or wouldn't pay his obligations was in vogue, and the race has not entirely gotten rid of this relic of modified barbarism yet; still, it is only in a few places where civilization prevails that this is done, and it is not as a rule invoked in them except in the more aggravated cases.

Few things in this life are more genuinely annoying than for a confiding creditor who may be in need of his dues to be put off and avoided and himself and his business made to suffer through the default of others; but, like almost everything else in this life, there is another side to the question. Perhaps the debtor, through lack of a business faculty or some stroke of misfortune, has become unable to meet his obligations, and as there is nothing criminal in this, there is nothing to be gained by either the creditor or society at large in punishing the debtor; in cases where there is a criminal or fraudulent default or avoidance, it is altogether different and the law amply provides for dealing with such transactions.

The relation of debtor and creditor has always existed and always will so long as men buy and sell. Immediate payments are practically impossible; besides, even if such things could be, they would create more blindness, damage and loss than they would avoid. This is an age of refined civilization and comprehensive enlightenment, one in which transactions are not as a rule conducted on the basis of an immediate exchange, but rather on that of a risk or an experiment. The man who buys a stock of goods, for instance, and opens up a store, takes upon himself a risk at the hands of the people among whom he locates; he must conform to their customs and circumstances if he sells anything at all. If they are a farming class who receive money as a rule only after the sale of crops, he must give them credit till after such sales, and in the meantime must keep up his stock without, perhaps, having the ready cash to do it, so he in turn must have credit from the concerns with which he deals. These latter, and the village dealer also, are thus constantly involved in a risk; the people trusted may not pay a sufficient proportion of their obligations at the appointed time to settle with the greater ones, or the farmers' crops may fall altogether and they be thus unable to pay anything at all, in which case the small concern goes to the wall hopelessly and its fall may seriously jostle if it does not completely overturn some one or more of the places from whence came the supplies. This kind of thing or something similar sometimes happens, but not very often; but if it occurred every day, we still could not dispense with the credit system and its attendant risks. Just fancy a store in which a man has dealt for years and always paid up, refusing further credit because it has been determined to abandon that system of dealing! Or a hotel proprietor demanding the pay for each meal and lodging upon the receipt thereof from a registered patron who presents external evidence of ability to pay! Or a New York merchant refusing to honor a telegraphic order from a reliable firm in Salt Lake until the money arrives, although the goods might be wanted immediately and would steadily diminish in demand corresponding with the delay! Of course no one thinks of such things; and they all go to show to what extent the commercial world places confidence in its constituent parties. Yet this confidence is sometimes misplaced, often than otherwise through unforeseen calamities; and this all makes it necessary for each nation to establish and maintain a comprehensive rule of bankruptcy.

A bankruptcy law was passed in this country in 1841 and permitted to live but three brief years. In 1841 it was revived by Congress, (which has the sole power under the Constitution of dealing with the subject), but this time, through political agitation it did not live so long as before, its repeal taking place in 1843. After the war the rebellion the agitation was again renewed, the pressure at that time being well nigh irresistible through the unsettled condition of business in the country, and as a measure of relief to those who were financially stranded a bill was passed in 1867. It was an ex parte, quibotic and most unsatisfactory contrivance, showing that the legislative as well as the business department of the land was in bad repair. It was afterwards amended—and made somewhat worse if possible—and after a fitful existence of eight years it went the way of its predecessors.

The whole country is in need of a just and impartial system governing bankruptcy, but perhaps we need it worse in Utah than do the people of other commonwealths, for we have not, like most of them, even an insolvency law. When an assignment is made here it is upon the principles of the common law and customs prevailing elsewhere, by means of which the debtor arranges things pretty much as he pleases. The subject has been brought up in several Congresses, but nothing could be agreed upon. Let us hope the next one, or the next session of this one, will take the matter in hand and keep it there until completed.

The reflections on this subject herein contained have reference of course to the greater mercantile concerns which are governed by the law of business as well as the law of Congress and the local enactments. There is no design or intention to either excuse or suggest an excuse for private individuals running recklessly into the meshes of obligations from which they cannot honorably escape, Providential calamities being excluded from the computation of the case. The remarks on the subject of debt at the recent General Conference were full of appropriateness and wisdom, and cannot be too emphatically urged upon the consideration of the people in every community of the Saints.

A FINE POEM.

Elsewhere in these columns appears a poem from the pen of Bishop O. F. Whitney. It was delivered by him with fine elocutionary effect at the Tabernacle ceremonies last evening and received enthusiastic plaudits. It is the story of the Discovery couched in the words and measure of song, and is as finished and well rounded an effort as the talented author has yet given us, which is saying a great deal in its praise. The passage referring to Ferdinand and Columbus and which closes with the question as to which is the lord and which the vassal now, is one of the most striking of the gems of thought which gladden throughout the entire production. The poem is well worth taking care of; it constitutes a valuable and delightful contribution to our memorable celebration of Discovery Day.

THE WORLD MOVES.

In his excellent speech in the celebration ceremonies last evening, Chief Justice Zane said: "A few years ago I never expected to stand in this place and speak to an audience; the fact that such is the case shows that the world moves."

Surely the world does move and necessarily we—Judge Zane and all of us—move with it. Evolution is written on every structure, is blazoned on the public highways, is marked upon the masses with whom we mingle, is even delostely traced in the filigments of the foliage which now greets the gaze wherever the eye may turn. The mind of man here and elsewhere, when uncorrupted by wars and free from the searing influence of lawlessness and vice, becomes a mainpring of energy and a gatherer of wisdom whose beneficent effects are stamped upon the brow of the worker and exemplified in the work accomplished by his hands.

It has taken time and patience and thought and care, mingled with the sweat of blood, to carve out from the materials of the Utah that was the Utah we now have. Who shall not say, All honor to the founders! Who can find it in his heart to be niggardly of praise for those who built upon the foundation and year by year, little by little, as fast as opportunities and circumstances would permit, added to the comfort and beauty and attractiveness of Our Mountain Home until it has become a magnet attracting to its midst the civilization and improved advantages of the east and the west, and until at last nothing attainable by man aided by faith and guided by inspiration is impossible to us! Those celebrations in the nation yesterday which were grander than ours were so only in the advantages which greater numbers and more accessible resources provide, and such were not numerous; while in enthusiasm, in that generous feeling of neighborly regard which prompts people to assemble and commingle their voices in honor of a great occasion, there were none which could truthfully say they looked down upon us.

The Judge is right; he is observant, thoughtful and truthful. Less than the life of a middle-aged man expended upon Utah has made it plain to all observers that the world moves, and that its motion is onward and upward. We are here not to be sluggards, not to clog the wheels of progress or stand idly in its pathway; but to work, to learn, to contrive, to forge ahead, to do something, to be somebody. What has been done is but a beginning; the fruitful future with smiling face and outstretched hand stimulates us to still greater efforts, to yet grander achievements. With a united purpose, with bickerings and jealousies cast aside, "with malice toward none, with charity for all and with firmness in the right," let the grand procession move on!

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

There was a large number of people on the streets through which the children's pageant passed yesterday, and the thoughts which that beautiful performance created were different with different people, while perhaps not varying at all in regard to the general effect. Those of a more reflective turn of mind, whose admiration of the admirable is not altogether sensuous and yet who thoroughly enjoy it from all standpoints, found themselves, among other situations, confronted with an economic problem in the solution of which not merely the little paraders themselves, but those who looked upon them and, in fact, the whole community is interested.

Within the brief span of a decade some of these children will be men and women, most of them will be grown up and all of them who live will be far enough advanced along the highway of life to be occupied with something useful to themselves and their neighbors. While they are thus swelling the ranks of our people, adding to the responsibilities and duties of those who shape or contribute toward shaping our temporal salvation, is it the case that the fields and avenues in which they must look for support and prosperity are increasing in a corresponding ratio? We greatly fear not; we are almost positive that they are not.

This should not be. Our admiration for the children should not rest with only looking admiringly upon them or praising them for their intelligence and comeliness; we and not they are chiefly responsible for what they are to do and be hereafter, and if it appears from a careful review of the situation that enough opportunities for their proper equipment in the struggle for supremacy in the race do not exist, we must provide others. Education is indispensable, but the education of them and alone is not enough; besides, this is at present fairly well attended to. We must have more factories, more mills, more workshops, more schools where practical training in the means of acquiring a livelihood can be had. This community, always at the front among those which encourage home manufactures and foster home products, must take yet other and greater steps in advance and come as near to the point of shutting off importations altogether as is consistent with legitimate commercial welfare.

This is not at all for the purpose of cutting out or crippling trade, for there will always, even under our most complete development and with all our energies at work, be some things which we cannot produce and many others which we cannot manufacture; it is for the double purpose herein suggested, of permitting nothing with which a kind Providence has blessed us to go to waste, and removing from our rising generation the possibility of obtaining employment from that sinister source which is ever on the lookout for idle hands.

We must encourage local industries; must foster home enterprises; must extend our field of operations, until we become as nearly self-sustaining as we can. The need for this, though often told, was never more apparent than now. These reflections, briefly stated, are what occurred to at least a few of those who witnessed the beautiful pageant yesterday.

DISTINGUISHED EVEN AMONG JOURNALISTS.

There are very few men indeed who can both write and speak with surpassing ability, the few who can being mainly newspaper celebrities. Horace Greeley was good at either, so was George William Curtiss; Henry Grady was one of the best the country ever produced, but that all-round, patriotic, companionable and convivial son of the South, and father of the Star-eyed Goddess of Reform, Hon. Henry Waterson, is the best of them all. The latest and in some respects greatest chaplet to crown his massive brow is his grand effort at the dedicatory ceremonies of the Columbian Fair at Chicago yesterday. To make a thoroughly appropriate and capable speech on such an occasion, the orator should have an abundance of time in order that he may be able to say but very little, that is, little in point of word; but it must glow with a fervent heat in every sentence and every peroration should be as bright and insouciant as a Damascus blade. Public speakers are sometimes credited with doing this sort of thing off-hand, and truly enough it does sound like it at times; but analyzed afterward in the light of reason and unstimulated judgment, such rhetorical flourishes oftentimes have no cohesiveness because their metaphors are composed of incongruous material, their flights of fancy do not begin from a pedestal of common sense or land anywhere at all, and too often the more homely but indispensable adjuncts of syntax, orthoepy and measure are mistaked beyond recognition. Not so with Brother Waterson, and yet he had but a few days to prepare himself in.

His speech as a whole is little short of perfection, being exactly, in detail and altogether, precisely what the occasion demanded. Into half a hundred lines he narrows the broad span of history yawning between the landing of Columbus and the dedication at Chicago, seemingly leaving out no material feature attainable by rhetorical imagery; in a few terse sentences our political history as a nation is depleted and is almost as elaborately told as though a lengthy chapter had been occupied upon it; our domestic system, our recuperative power, our active and dormant energy, our matchless resources—all these are woven into a fabric of rarely equaled phraseology, shaded here and there with tender reminiscences, flashing ever and anon with words of genuine eloquence, and ornamented everywhere with a diction of the loftiest and most scholarly type, the whole breathing forth a spirit of national and domestic patriotism rarely equaled.

What could be finer than the following:

The curse of slavery is dead. It was the joint heritage of woe to be wiped out and expiated in blood and flame. The mirage of the Confederacy has vanished. It was essentially bucolic—a vision of Arcadia—a dream of most attractive economic fallacy. The Constitution is no longer a rope of sand.

And those who witnessed our street pageant yesterday will appreciate the following:

At this moment in every part of the American Union, children are making up the wondrous tale of discovery, and from Boston to Galveston, from the little log schoolhouse in the wilderness to the towering academy in the city and town, may be witnessed the unprecedented spectacle of a powerful nation captured by an army of illiputians of embryo men and women. But better than these we have nothing to exhibit. These, indeed, are our crown jewels; the truest though inevitable offspring of our civilization and development; representatives of a manhood vitalized and invigorated by toil and care; of womanhood elevated and inspired by liberty and education. God bless the children and their mothers. God bless our country's flag, and God be with us now and ever.

These two extracts alone would seem to be enough to justify all that is herein said in praise of the great Kentuckian, but nearly all the rest is fully abreast of it. He may now rest with the assured conviction that he stands higher than ever in the estimation of the whole people, that his position as a man of intellectual power and patriotic purpose is henceforth unassailable.

PRISONERS' INVENTIVE INGENUITY.

"Love laughs at locksmiths," so we are told; so does science mock at obstructions and make light even of apparent impossibilities. The jeering and ridicule to which Robert Fulton was subjected did not snivelly cease until his boat moved majestically off against the current of the Hudson. Other devotees of occulted science have had similar experiences, and discouragements have seldom broken them down.

Some time since the nations were placed on the qui vive by the announcement that a Frenchman had discovered an explosive more powerful than any yet known, to which he had given the name of melinite. His name was Eugene Turpin and he must have possessed some of the reckless characteristics of his English namesake Dick, for he allowed his exploits to get too far and the result was he found himself in "durance vile," having been convicted of treason by a court probably organized for that purpose, the French being very sensitive regarding offenses against France.

While confined he has invented a balloon that can be guided by the occupant; also a new fuse for shells used at sea, and a device for the manufacture of hydrogen gas for inflating balloons at a comparatively trifling cost. It is also related that an inmate of the Maryland penitentiary, Tobias F. Hudson by name, has invented an improve socket for an incandescent lamp and made a number of peculiar clocks, one of which keeps the most perfect time.

It has been noticed many times how confinement and absence from the customs and practices of society at large sharpens one's wits and increases one's inventive capacity, this being shown in the many articles constructed by prisoners who, before their incarceration, exhibited no such aptitude. It seems that there are certain dormant qualities in everybody and ordinary conditions have no tendency toward their development. It is not to be assumed that the genius of invention can be displayed only during enforced imprisonment, neither can that condition be recommended as an encouragement to its display. At the same time every humanitarian will rejoice if the poor soul condemned to prison life can thus be quickened in the contemplation of other things than its mere environment and into the evolving of something that may be useful in the affairs of life.

ATTACKING COLUMBUS.

A few days ago the news notes contained an account of a prominent divine objecting to our children being taught to praise Christopher Columbus and hold him in the light of a great and good man, because of certain offenses which the religious charged against the explorer. It is also sought to bring his name into disrepute among Protestant people by showing that he was a devout Catholic. Aside from the contempt which impartial and unbigoted minds will entertain for this proceeding, the judicious will grieve over those who are disposed to be led away by it because of its violation of the ethics of history. Protestantism was unborn in Columbus' day, and, being a devout and God-fearing man, he had to be a Catholic, a Mohammedan or a Jew if he engaged in organized religion at all as his nature prompted, and he naturally chose the form of worship under which he was born and educated.

The sinister work of the iconoclast, of that class of people who would rather find a flaw in a person's record than acknowledge any useful result of his labors, seems to grow with our greatness and take deeper root with our improved intellectuality. Those who take the pains to look at Columbus' efforts in the line of what he finally accomplished, and realize for a moment what herculean difficulties he overcame in order that the New World might be and all that is on it today have a being, will not, if just and reasonable, care very greatly whether the daring discoverer was all that he might have been as a man and a Christian or not; they will feel grateful for what he did that was grand and far-reaching in its consequence and leave the rest to be determined by another tribunal.

If Columbus had not been inspired beyond the men of his day; if he had not been gifted with a perennially unequalled by those of his time; if he had been disposed to yield to discouragements; if he had not had that unpurchasable and invaluable gift of causing others to see and believe as he saw and believed—if any one of these characteristics had been wanting, the continents now swarming with intelligent millions and gigantic enterprises must even then have been discovered some time—but when? As the settlement of Salt Lake valley by the Pioneers of the Mormon Church hastened the advent of the Pacific Railway by a quarter of a century and thus dispelled the doubts of the nation's statesmen as to the country being practically united east and west in this generation at all, so did the discovery by Columbus cut down by one-half the leaseth of barbarism and wildness upon this vast land and put our own generation to the fore by fully two centuries—perhaps more; for Columbus' final failure would have had so depressing and retarding an effect upon what was then the civilized world that it is questionable if another effort had been made until it came with the Mayflower Pilgrims.

In honoring Columbus we honor ourselves; in degrading him we do him no harm and ourselves no good.

MRS. HARRISON DYING.

The dispatches announce that Mrs. Harrison will not survive the day, in all probability; that at the most her earthly career is narrowed to the briefest span. To hope that it may be otherwise might not, in view of the suffering which the esteemed lady must be undergoing, be Christianlike or even charitable, meaning simply a putting off of the inevitable and having but the effect of adding to sorrow already intense enough. Since the decree of the destroyer is written and his grasp upon his victim but a matter of hours, it may be moments, let us look upon it as a condition of mercy that it is so, that the travail as well as the life is briefly limited.

Mrs. Harrison was here with her distinguished husband in May of last year, and the impression which she made upon all who had the pleasure of meeting her was most excellent. Certainly a more matronly and yet youthful appearing woman it would be difficult to find; while her demeanor was all that could be asked, considered as either one of the people or the first lady of the land. She made friends and left admirers wherever she went, and the sympathy which these will feel will be neither feigned nor forgetful.

Mrs. Harrison's maiden name was Carrie Scott. Her father was John W. Scott, and at the time of her marriage he was the principal of a young ladies' seminary at Oxford, Ohio; his wife was similarly engaged. Miss Scott was spoken of as a bright, vivacious, witty girl with bright blue eyes and comely features. She had several admirers, but Mr. Harrison was the only one who received any marked encouragement.

They became acquainted while he was attending a boys' academy at Walnut Hills, Ohio, she being an attendant of a girls' seminary at the same place. He was then nineteen and she seventeen years of age. Later on they went to Oxford, where the acquaintance ripened into love and marriage was the natural sequence. "There was not much style" about the wedding details, only a few immediate friends being in attendance; no bridal presents were given (such a custom not being in vogue then—October 20, 1853), and a brief railroad ride was the only bridal tour. It has been the custom of the family to observe the anniversary of the wedding day from the first one, and on Thursday last they were present in force in the Executive Mansion—four generations congregating beneath its roof, including Mrs. Harrison's father, son, daughter and three grandchildren. It is needless to say that there were no festivities, no congratulations, no enlivening words or actions; all felt that they were standing within the shadow of the reaper and that his work would soon be complete. Sadness was marked on every countenance and gloom prevailed in every quarter. How much deeper and darker must that gloom be now—how much more poignant that sadness, being confronted, as the loved ones are, with the impending separation forever in this life from her whom they all hold so dear!

TWO GREAT MEN.

There are now but few survivors of the fateful field of Waterloo left, and they are scattered far and wide. To find one or more in an obscure town or hamlet of England would be looked upon as a matter of course, and even if one should be heard from in a remote corner of the continent, or in any of the English or German dependencies far away from Europe, it would occasion no surprise; but how many, if guessing at the present abiding place of any of the veterans, would select a town in Missouri as such a location? Yet there is one there, Richmond being the locality having that honor. John Baird is the man's name and he has reached the advanced age of ninety-two years. He was in the British army and talks freely, interestingly and in such a manner as impresses one with their exactness, of some of the incidents of that great battle, of which the world's readers will never tire.

Mr. Baird relates an incident of Waterloo that sheds a different light upon the character of Wellington than what most people, especially those on this side of the water, know of. He says that on the first morning of the great battle, when his command had formed into a hollow square before going into action, Wellington came among them and offered up a prayer. "I can see him yet," says Mr. Baird, "just as he prayed there in that hollow square. He stood with his hat off, his hands clasped in front of him, and his kind, good, soldier face bent a little forward. I never saw a man pray as he did. Not a man of the thousands around him moved a muscle during the three or four minutes he stood praying. When he stopped we pretty near all had tears in our eyes. He seemed almost a father to us."

There was at least one distinguished American commander in speaking of whom not one word of the above quotation need be changed. It fits him as well as if it had been written regarding him instead of one who died before he had made his fame. The general referred to was on the losing side in the war of the rebellion and in less than a year after that sanguinary struggle began he was known far and wide, at home and abroad, wherever civilization prevailed, as Stonewall Jackson. Of this great leader many such incidents as that related of Wellington have been told; in fact, he seldom went into battle without placing himself and his command in the hand of Him who gave it life and asking Him that that life might be preserved in severity "if it was His will," but if not, then "His will be done." While being "every inch a commander," both in his person and demeanor, he was at the same time one of the humblest and most unpretentious of men—brave as a Spartan, skillful as a Hannibal, companionable as a school-boy and as gentle as a child; his soldiers idolized him and his enemies had never a word of reproach for their gallant foe. The reference made to him by Henry Watterson in his admirable speech at the dedication ceremonies was one that struck the right chord and found no dissent anywhere.

POLITICAL WISDOM.

The concluding portion of Hon. James G. Blaine's political article, which appears in the November number of the North American Review and a synopsis of which will be found in our telegraph columns today, contains a statement that will meet with great favor by the masses of the people, and a suggestion that is in all respects worthy of consideration and acceptance everywhere. Says the ex-Secretary:

"It is interesting and suggestive to look over the platforms of the two parties, and see how much they are alike in several vital measures, after the real and decisive issues have been stated. If the parties would aim to discover and define the issues on which there is a vital difference of opinion, and would confine discussion to them, it would not only simplify the contest and be a welcome relief to the two candidates, but would also greatly help in arriving at the truth, which is the ultimate object of popular discussion and popular election."

If it were not for the exaggerations with which the stump-orators and the partisan press fill the air, especially during national campaigns, there is not an observer who would dispute the correctness of the view here taken. Judged by their platforms, by their promises, and even by their performances, the two great national parties are not nearly so far apart in their ideas of promoting the common welfare as the radical politicians on either side would have the public believe. After all, it is the country's prosperity that both are aiming to enhance, and the effect of the policy of either will not be, as the opponents of each party are forever shrieking, the utter ruin and destruction of all our interests.

Instead of endeavoring to simplify and in the plainest manner to delineate the vital differences between the parties—a course which would at once assure and fortify the voter in his espousal of either—the object of the partisans, at least the effect of their methods—is to completely mystify and mislead those to whom they appeal. The result is that even "smart" men find themselves compelled to change allegiance frequently, while in the country at large there is an evergrowing floating or flake vote that is not governed by conviction but is captured by the freshest sensational appeal if not by a less creditable factor.

It ought to be the pride of every American, whether a candidate for office or not, that the expressed will of his fellow citizens at the polls should be the result of intelligent conviction after a thorough understanding of the issues involved. Under the present method of conducting elections this can scarcely be. And in pointing out one method—and a very simple one—by which so worthy an end may be accomplished, Mr. Blaine proves himself not only a statesmanlike politician but a sagacious patriot as well.

BARON HIRSCH AS A JOURNALIST.

Baron Hirsch, the eminent Israelite, is probably the richest man in the world; he is by some called a billionaire, but this is of course a great exaggeration, and is used simply because he is so many times a millionaire that the last named phrase would be as inadequate as the former is superlative. However that may be, he is undoubtedly in comfortable circumstances, can pay as he goes and have plenty left to speculate upon and be charitable with. In respect to this latter there are few men in the world, especially rich ones, who are any more so than he, if indeed as much so. And because of his goodness and the benefits conferred and promised to be conferred by him upon his race, there is a general hope that he will not become reckless and make injudicious investments for no other reason than that he can afford to do so and may not feel the loss in case they should prove disappointing. For this hope there is now immediate cause. The Baron has recently bought out the Pall Mall Gazette of London, paying therefor the big price of $250,000, which, good judges say, is considerably more than it is ever worth. It has fallen off since than any other great paper in the British empire, if not in the world, and may now, therefore, be considered an expensive luxury, one that requires subsidies and bounties as well as patronage to keep afloat.

The Baron should go slow. We all wish him well; but when he recklessly embarks in the newspaper business, and that too with an unlucky one for a beginning, the question is, how much of a shrinkage will his gains have to undergo before he calls a halt and lets go of the business with something of a prejudice against the whole journalistic fraternity lingering within his otherwise hospitable breast?

CHICAGO'S GREAT DAY.

Evidences of the "great time" enjoyed by the Chicagoans on Friday last are beginning to drift westward, principally through the medium of the newspapers. The Times of that city came out in terra cotta colored ink, and the Tribune was mottled in a terra cotta colored wrapper; but the Mail surpassed all that and everything else in its line by appearing on paper whose hue was that of café au lait, or say strong chocolate, throughout. The "trending" is not quite so plain as is its wont, and the general effect, on a cursory glance, is that it has undergone an experience which used to befall western papers very often—running out of white paper and having to fall back upon their job stock and what they could get in the stores. Through it all, however, Chicago enterprise shines forth as brightly and conspicuously as though the background were like unto the driven snow.

THE BATTLE OF THE BALLOTS.

The great contest, national and local, takes place two weeks from today, and it is a reasonable supposition that nearly everybody's mind is about made up as to how he will act on that occasion. The few who still waver are not sufficient in number, we take it, to greatly change the result in any place or at large, but the "spellbinder" and the "organ" will keep up their work till the last day in the evening; then the people may look for a long and needed rest.

A glance at the chances of the two parties through uncolored spectacles is a pleasant diversion at this stage of the proceedings. Both the Democrats and Republicans are confident of winning, and it is as well for us to know beforehand what either has to do to accomplish it.

The Republicans, in order to come out ahead, have only to do as well as they did four years ago, when Harrison carried every northern state but New Jersey and Connecticut, receiving 223 electoral votes against 168 for Cleveland. Of course under the new apportionment the electoral vote is increased, but if the Republicans can carry the same states as last time they will succeed, for they would have 226 votes, or three more than a majority. (The increase is from 391 to 444—fifty-three votes.) It is practically impossible that they will lose all the new votes; and those they may lose, at least those of the new states, will be no direct gain for the Democrats, who have fused with the Populists in all of the states but Montana and Washington. It thus appears that the Democrats have to rely upon states which gave them nothing in 1888 to win, and probabilities thus become a factor in the computation.

It is conceded, especially since the recent state elections, that the entire roll of the South will respond to the Democratic call, giving Cleveland 159 votes, to begin with, leaving him 64 short of a majority. If he again carries New Jersey and Connecticut, the former with 10 and the latter with 6 votes, the gap will be narrowed to 48. He is reasonably sure of at least 5 in Michigan, which further reduces it to 43. His friends and himself are confident of carrying Indiana this time, which would give him 15 more and leave but 28 to be gained to reach the goal. Montana may reduce this to 25, but it cannot be depended on; however this may be, there is still a big deficit, and the only other state which the ex-President came anywhere near carrying was New York; this, with its plump 38 votes, would take him away beyond the winning post, having 11 votes to spare. Carrying the Empire state, therefore, he could do without New Jersey or Connecticut, but not without both, and with both he would not need Michigan or Montana.

While the Democrats are counting strongly on some of the Northwestern states which went Republican in 1888—Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and as stated, a part of Michigan—and of a negative gain by fusion and thus giving to Weaver Kansas, Minnesota and Colorado, it will be seen that the real battle ground is, as usual, New York. While it is possible they may win the states named, and thus be compensated for the loss of the Empire state, such a thing is hardly probable and it is likely that only in Michigan will there be recorded any chances from Harrison to Cleveland in that quarter. It would seem that the managers so regard it, too, for each side is holding 1500 meetings in the former state every week! As to the importance of this one mighty commonwealth the situation may be briefly stated thus: Cleveland cannot win at all without New York; Harrison can win without it but in all probability will not; so that as New York goes, so goes the country.

On the basis of the new registration in New York city, the Republicans either the Democratic majority there down to 55,000, about 3000 less than four years ago; this would mean about 65,000 or 70,000 for the Republicans to overcome at Harlem river, and they came down to it in 1888 with upwards of 80,000. They thus count on carrying the state by 10,000 to 15,000. On the other hand the Democrats, from the same source of information, claim a majority in the city of 95,000, which, with Brooklyn and its surroundings proportionate, would run the total up to about 120,000 and beat the Republicans in the state anywhere from 25,000 to 50,000. These, however, are only figures, which the people can easily, as they often do, change considerably one way or another.

It should be remembered in this connection, that not only the Presidency but every branch of the government, excepting the Supreme Court, is in the issue. Chairman Carter, of the Republican National committee, announces this, saying the election of Cleveland means also a Congress Democratic in both branches. It is hardly probable that the House of Representatives will be subjected to such a revolution as to change a majority of 144 for the Democrats into a minority for that party, though undoubtedly this huge preponderance will be somewhat, perhaps greatly, reduced. The Senate thus becomes the cynosure of the occasion next to the Presidency. In order to change the political complexion of this body, the Republicans have only to lose three members; there are now forty-seven members of that party, forty Democrats and one Populist (Peffer). In this footing Kyle of South Dakota is classed as a Democrat, although elected by the Farmer's Alliance and Democrats jointly and being considered at the time as belonging to the former; but he votes with the latter usually and has received all his committee assignments from them.

Three Democratic senators have already been re-elected—Gorman, of Maryland; George, of Mississippi, and Daniel, of Virginia. The states which were to elect senators in place of sitting Democrats are Florida, Missouri, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, Delaware, Indiana and New Jersey. The first four of these will choose Democrats, and it is considered reasonably certain that all but one of them will. The present legislature of Delaware is Republican by a majority of eight in a total membership of thirty, and the preceding legislature was Republican. The present legislatures of the others are Democratic by heavy majorities. Delaware would seem to be the only really doubtful one in the list. Two Republican senators, Sherman, of Ohio, and Aldrich, of Rhode Island, have been re-elected. The Republicans are certain, or reasonably certain, to control the next legislatures in Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, Pennsylvania, California, Washington and Nevada. The states regarded as doubtful are Connecticut, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota and Montana.

The probabilities and possibilities, the claims and counterclaims being thus placed before the reader he can proceed to post the books for himself, doubtless he will do it as it is done elsewhere, in accordance with his political predilections.

MRS. HARRISON IS GONE.

There is one man in this vast republic who more than any other realizes how unsubstantial, how fleeting and insecure are all the honors mortality can bestow! His name is Benjamin Harrison. Occupying the loftiest position man can hold, with a record in which there is no ground for reproach, with friends whose name is legion, enjoying the comforts of life and the happiness of a domestic home, the President is confronted with a calamity which dissipates all, which leaves him with nothing that is adequate to lean upon or be amply for. The armchair on the other side of the fireplace is vacant, the voice of its long-time occupant is hushed forever, and the solemn quietude sinks deep into his soul.

Mrs. Harrison died at forty minutes past one o'clock this (Tuesday) morning. She had been ailing for several months, but her condition was not considered serious until quite recently. She contracted a gripe in the winter of last year, and while the attack was modified from time to time it never entirely let go, and finally, in September last, it became acute; then the discovery was made that the patient's illness was a dangerous one, the half of her right lung being completely coagulated. From that time on the progress of the destroyer was steady and unmistakable; the periods of relief became briefer and further apart, and for at least a month past it has been known that death was liable to occur without further warning. Of course all that human skill, careful attention and prayerful devotion could accomplish was done, but all to no purpose; the end has come, the dark river is crossed.

Carrie Scott Harrison was born in Oxford, Ohio, fifty-seven years ago. She was the mother of two children, Russell B., born August 12, 1854, and Mary Scott, some two years younger than her brother. Deceased was a comely, matronly looking woman, the picture of health when she visited Salt Lake about eighteen months ago. She was very much devoted to her family and home, and a more highly respected occupant of the White House never lived. We may be sure that after life's fitful fever she sleeps well.

MR. IRVINE ACQUITTED.

The jury in the case of the State of Nebraska vs. W. H. Irvine came into court at 8:40 o'clock yesterday afternoon with a verdict of not guilty. It could not have been anything else, hence the news was not grasped as eagerly nor made so much of as would have been the case had there been any doubt regarding the result. Mr. Irvine is a resident of this city, where he is well and favorably known, his list of acquaintances being lengthy and containing the names of men in every walk of life and of every shade of opinion, all of whom will rejoice that the ordeal is over and the defendant is again free. There may be one here and there who will regret that acquittal was not secured upon the high moral ground of the inherent right of the husband and father to protect his home, that "higher law" which one of the defendant's counsel spoke of during his speech to the jury—an unwritten law but as binding as any within the covers of a book of statutes; these will regret that the jury's verdict did not exonerate, that it only discharged for the reason that the accused was not responsible for his act at the time it was committed; but all will be glad and congratulate, no matter as to the means by which the result was brought about.

NO NEED TO STARVE.

As indicating the productiveness of the earth and its capacity to sustain a heavy population if the vegetarian instead of the flesh diet be resorted to, and as illustrative of the fact that such must of necessity be the tendency as the world becomes densely peopled, the figures of a Scotch scientist are interesting. He estimates that while twenty-two acres of land is needed to sustain a man on flesh, that amount sown to wheat will feed forty-two persons; sown to oats it will sustain eighty-eight persons; to potatoes, Indian corn and rice, 178 persons; and planted with the bread-fruit tree, over 6000 people could be fed.

The accuracy of this surprising calculation is all that is needed to dispel the fears of even the most pessimistic disciple of Malthus. A continuous diet of unadorned bread-fruit may not be especially inviting, but it would suffice to keep body and soul together; and since even the poorest man may reasonably expect land enough for a grave—a plot so small that his ordinary product wouldn't sustain a sparrow—he could yield up his spirit with the serene confidence that out of his dust might be grown a tree from whose generous branches his children and children's children might freely pluck the staff of life until they in turn furnished the foundation for a fresh orchard.

'T WAS A FAMOUS VICTORY.

In the report of the committee of local business men who have been in consultation with the railroad officials on the subject of transportation charges, the citizens of Salt Lake and the people of Utah generally will find matter for the sincerest congratulations. The amended tariff, which is the result of the committee's labor, means a saving to the people of this Territory of the huge sum of $600,000 per annum. It is easy to understand, therefore, how the Chamber of Commerce, when it received this report and was made to comprehend the details of it, should adopt the agreement proposed by the committee, and, warmly thanking them for their efforts, consent to withdraw the suit against the railroads.

The history of the agitation which has resulted so prosperously is not long, but it is interesting. About two and a half years ago the matter of organizing for mutual defense against what was believed to be the extortion of the railway companies was broached and favorably considered. Action was had upon it, too, but there was no really organized aggressive move until about a year ago, when it was decided to push the fight with vigor and carry it if necessary to the utmost legal limit. The developments during the twelvemonth need scarcely be reiterated; it is enough to say the case has been conducted with ceaseless zeal and energy, and that in many respects it was highly sensational, through it all there was one unwavering purpose, and in the accomplishment of this the skill of Mr. Sears, manager of the transportation bureau, was reinforced by the stout courage of Colonel Donnellan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and both were sustained by the hearty support of the large majority of the board of directors. The fight was hot but dignified, and it has been gallantly carried on. That so signal a victory should have been won without further expense of energy and time is due not more to the diplomacy of the committee of arbitration than to the completeness of the arrangements for the attack, and the moral force which always reposes on the side of the right. He who is in the right, and has as well he might to enforce it, has small trouble in having his demands granted.

In the general joy, however, over the peaceful and happy termination of the contest there is no wish to either gloat or criticize. All who have had a hand in it are deserving of public gratitude. Our good friends the railroads performed their part with grace and promptness, and will be remembered favorably. The commercial prospects of Salt Lake City and Utah Territory have been enormously brightened, and our material progress has been accelerated by at least one gigantic stride.

POWERS OF COUNTY COURTS.

A southern correspondent, quoting section 261 of chapter VI of the Compiled Laws of Utah, 1888 (p. 308, Vol. 1) asks for an interpretation as to its meaning. The section reads as follows:

No member of the [county] court must be interested, directly or indirectly, in any property purchased for the use of the county, nor in any purchase or sale of property belonging to the county, nor in any contract made by the court or other person in behalf of the county, for the erection of public buildings, the opening or improvement of roads, or the building of bridges, or for other purposes.

As we understand our correspondent, he wants to know whether under this section a member of the county court may sell to the court or the county any property, such as scrapers, wagons or horse; also whether such member of the court may take a contract or take charge of any public improvement authorized by the court, and do said work or employ his own teams or workmen upon it.

It would scarcely seem possible, in view of the explicit language of the statute, that there could be any doubt of its meaning. The intent of the law, and it is expressly stated, is that there should be no connection whatever, either immediate, or remote, or contingent, between the officials by whose vote county funds are appropriated and those to whom said funds or any of them would come. The design of the law is that all possibility of collusion should be prevented; and if there had been any language that would more explicitly state this intention, there is no doubt the Legislature would have employed it. The only answer, therefore, to our correspondent's queries is that the statute forbids any member of the county court from selling to or taking contracts from the court; and that if any such thing has been done it is illegal.

A friend to whom the foregoing was read this morning stated that he had received, two or three days ago, a similar answer to certain inquiries of the same character which he had felt compelled to address to Judge Varian, United States District Attorney for Utah. The reply is so pertinent and authoritative that we avail ourselves with pleasure of the permission to use it. Mr. Varian, under date of October 22, says:

I note your inquiries of this date, concerning the lawful powers of members of the County Courts, in this Territory, which are stated as follows:

"Can a member of said court lawfully be interested, directly or indirectly, in any property purchased for the use of the county?"

"May a member of said court be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contracts made by the court in behalf of the county for any purpose?"

In reply thereto I have to say that the law seems to be (as it ought to be) clear to the effect that no member of a county court can be interested, directly or indirectly, in any property purchased for the use of the county, nor can any member of said court be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract made in behalf of the county "for the erection of public buildings, the opening and improvement of roads, or the building of bridges, or for other purposes." It is a principle of law, generally enacted by po-live legislation, as in this Territory, that no public officer entrusted with the management of public affairs shall be permitted to deal or bargain with the municipality through himself as a public official. This is true on the ground of public policy, or public interest, which is the same thing.

Applying this principle to the case stated by you, I am of the opinion that it is clearly in violation of the statute for a selectman of a county to furnish supplies, labor or teams in the matter of the opening or improvement of public roads.

Very respectfully,
CHAS. S. VARIAN,
U. S. Attorney.

A DEATH BED INCIDENT.

It is not often that pontifical blessings are bestowed upon heretics, but lately an exception to the rule took place, when his holiness sent his compliments to the empress of Russia. The occasion was this. Some time ago, the emperor and empress visited a hospital for cholera patients in St. Petersburg. In one room was a nun writhing in the agony of death. She had entered the hospital to nurse the sick and had fallen a victim to the dread scourge. The empress took the hand of the dying sister, whispered a few words of consolation, and kissed her. The incident was telegraphed to the pope and he immediately sent a message with his blessing to the empress, and expressed his intentions to remember the imperial lady in his prayers. "You are," he said, "one of the most faithful of my children, although not belonging to my church." The empress wired back that she had only performed duty.

The Roman Pontifex Maximus and the heads of the Russian church shaking hands, as it were, at the death bed of a poor nun, is of more than common importance.

WHAT ARE WE HERE FOR?

Few political aphorisms, elucidations or questions have received wider circulation than the demand of Hun. Webster Flanagan, a delegate from Texas in a Republican national convention. He was evidently not in entire sympathy with the sentimental declarations regarding civil service, and in caucus got so impatient at the way things were going that he rose in his might and wanted to know, "What are we here for if it isn't for the office?"

In the course of time he seems to have received an answer satisfactory to himself, at least, for he now holds the very lucrative position of collector of customs at El Paso, Texas. But alas, with the growth of favorable circumstances, he has apparently conceived of a still more comprehensive definition of his world-renowned conundrum. He has in fact, if the action of the local grand jury is to be considered a criterion, linked his own problem to another—that of the incoming of the "heathen Chinese," and it is more than likely that the two will hereafter sail merrily down the tide of time together.

Two bills of indictment were returned by the grand jury against Mr. Flanagan, his deputy and a Chinaman yesterday, the charge being the aiding and abetting of Chinese in unlawfully entering the United States. It is said by the grand jury, also, that the custom house force has a habit of seizing stock recklessly and without due process of law along the border, and that the Chinese exclusion laws are a dead letter—all of which makes the atmosphere in the collector's neighborhood assume anything but a rosy tinge.

These exposures are calculated to impress Mr. Flanagan that there are certain things "we are not here for," and if matters go on as they have begun, it may soon be in order for him to propound that other famous interrogatory—"Where am I at?"

THE IRVINE TRIAL.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 22.—Y. u. correspondent has been unable to telegraph you for several days, news of the Irvine trial, as the wires were down until Thursday, and yesterday being Columbus celebration, the trial adjourned over the day.

The testimony was in no wise sensational during the week, the bulk of it being as to the defendant's action upon his return from Chicago, after learning from his wife of the doings of herself and Montgomery, which is told below in the address of Attorney Abbott, counsel for Irvine.

Irvine himself was placed upon the stand this week and in answer to the questions put to him by the attorneys rehearsed this story by intervals, there being no material difference between his and Mr. Abbott's recital.

A very affecting scene took place on Monday when little Flossie, the eight-year-old daughter of the defendant, tripped lightly into the court room and rushed into the arms of her father, where she sat in loving embrace for some time. No one knows whether or not Mrs. Irvine is in the city, but the surmise is that she is at the home of her old friends Attorney and Mrs. Abbott.

The testimony is now in, it being concluded by the evidence of experts on insanity, Dr. Knapp, Leonhardt and others testifying as to rational hallucination, mania transitory, etc. This all tended to the advantage of the defense, and no one has a doubt about the acquittal of Irvine on the grounds of temporary insanity. The defense, having admitted the shooting of Montgomery by W. H. Irvine, now lay before the jury the question of the insanity of Irvine at the time of the tragedy. Experts have been placed upon the stand this week, and among them Dr. B. D. Eastman, of Kansas, who has probably had a wider range of practice and observation among the insane than any man in the country. It was his opinion, virtually, that Irvine was insane at the time. The fact that it was shown that insanity had existed in the Irvine family tended to strengthen this opinion, and that all the incidents leading up to the shooting would or could bring on a transitory frenzy which, the witness declared, seldom lasted more than twenty-four hours. Dr. Griffin, Dr. Leonhardt, Dr. Knapp and others also held the same opinion. The testimony of the experts concluded the taking of evidence and the argument is now in progress.

Attorney Adams opened on the part of the prosecution at 2:15 on Thursday afternoon. His remarks to the jury were somewhat caustic to Abbott of the defense and to Irvine also. He endeavored to show that the relations of Irvine and his wife were not so affectionate as the defense would have the jury believe, and in a measure mooted the question of insanity. He referred to Irvine's sound judgment through all of his investigations, such as securing copies of telegrams, letters, a page from the hotel register, etc., and refusing to take his wife back. He could believe that Mr. Irvine, after learning what he did, came to Lincoln to see Abbott, his attorney, solely and that he entertained no hatred toward Montgomery then. He dwelt upon the fact that Irvine went to the Lincoln hotel before he did to the house of this friend upon whose neck he was journeying from Chicago to Lincoln to weep. Of transitory mania, he said that it came upon a person suddenly and not slowly and by degrees. It came like a ball of lightning.

For more than an hour he talked and it was a bitter arraignment of the defendant, who listened intently to every word and showed no signs of any self.

The court room was filled with spectators many of whom were ladies.

On Thursday afternoon, at the conclusion of Adams' address, some discussion was held among the court and attorneys and it was decided to hold an evening session, as the next day being Columbus celebration, no session would be held. J. B. Strode followed for the defense and his address was more an effort of sympathy than anything else. He characterized the case as one of justifiable murder, painting a picture of Irvine's happy home, loving wife and innocent daughter, and holding it up before the jury in the shape of their own homes. He dwelt upon Irvine's good character, even temper, morality, etc., and then exhibited orally the sudden change, passion, and the fury which his discoveries had brought. He made a strong point of the fact that Montgomery had had Mrs. Irvine register in Chicago as his sister, thus deceiving her and her husband, both his friends, and all for the sake of defiling her person and wrecking her peace of mind and her happy home.

At the evening session of the court counsel resumed his address by holding out to the jury that even if Irvine was perfectly sane, he was justified in slaying Montgomery for his treachery. He denied the insinuation of Adams that Mrs. Irvine was to blame and contended that it was through the machinations and the schemes of Montgomery that she fell; that she wronged her husband and herself and wrecked a happy home. Some attention was paid by Mr. Strode to the laxity of our common law in regard to adultery and he used in justification of the deed of Irvine. He closed with a beautiful appeal to the jury whom he expected to safeguard the sanctity of home and the purity of their wives and daughters by freeing the man who seeks their mercy for the act which was committed while he was not himself.

Yesterday being a legal holiday, adjournment was taken until this morning, when the arguments were resumed, Mr. McCullough, of Indianapolis, speaking for the prosecution. The arguments of McCullough were a disappointment to many, especially the friends of the prosecution, and the defense believe that he helped them. He is to be followed this afternoon by Judge Powers and C. O. Wheldon for the defense, County Attorney Snell closing the case.

It is expected that the case will be given over to the jury this evening, and the universal opinion is that they will not be out long.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, October 24.—The Irvine case was argued by the defense at the Saturday night session by Judge Powers and Monday morning Prosecutor Snell closed for the State. The judge delivered his charge which was considered favorable to the prisoner. The jury went out at 11:50 and the court took a recess until two. Considerable anxiety and feeling was shown by the fifteen hundred people in the room who waited for the verdict. During the time the jury was out and on the understanding that one jurymen was hanging out expressions were freely made against the jurymen like "the hardware stores are still open," "lots of rope handy." There was intense excitement by the people.

At 3:40 the jury returned, rendered a verdict of "not guilty," and the audience of two thousand people went wild. Irvine held an informal reception in Judge Hall's room. He will return to Salt Lake City in company with Judge Powers and Mr. Hiatt.

The speech of Powers on Saturday night was considered by Lincoln people the best argument made in the case. It was very beautiful.

MURDEROUS APACHES.

In the News of September 29th and 30th there appeared accounts of a murder on attack by Apache Indians on a family of Latter-day Saints in Mexico. The following additional particulars of the terrible affair were received today:

CAVE VALLEY, Colonia Pacheco, Chihuahua, Mexico.—Some time ago word was received that Apache Indians had been seen passing through this section of country, but little attention was paid to the report, most people contending themselves with seeing that their horses were secure. About five miles below North Cave valley is Cliff Ranch, owned by Brother Heleman Pratt, but occupied by Brother H. A. Thompson and family, consisting of his wife Karen, his sons Hyrum and Engmark, and grandchild Annie. On Monday morning, September 19th, Brother Thompson was absent from home at Pacheco, eleven miles distant. The family had done their morning chores, had breakfast and the boys started to the field to work. This was about 8 o'clock in the morning. They took feed for the pigs as they went to work; little Annie, aged six, followed in order to bring back the empty buckets. After feeding the pigs they observed an Indian coming round the southwest corner of the house. The Indian immediately fired, hitting Hyrum, aged eight. Engmark exclaimed, "Run for the plat!" (which was in the barn where the boys slept). Engmark, whose age is fourteen, started for the house, to get the Winchester rifle, when another shot was fired from the northeast corner of the house. Engmark fell, at once through the body Hyrum stood a few moments and was again shot. One ball passed through his body from the back, the other went in at the left breast, and, ranging downward, came out at the right side.

The Indians then entered the house by the front door. Sister Thompson and the little girl went into the kitchen and barricaded the door, but the Indians soon broke it open. Sister Thompson thereupon ran out at the back. She was shot through the left arm and as she sought the body, but whether by the same shot is not known. Engmark on recovering ran to the chicken coop, there hid and watched the proceedings.

After shooting Sister Thompson the Indians threw heavy rocks at her head, crushing it horribly. One Indian watched the little girl. When she started to run he would trip her down and strike her with his gun scabbard. The Indians stripped the house of everything, even taking two suits of Temple clothes. They also ripped open the feather beds, took a new wagon cover, two saddles, cut up the harness, in fact they left scarcely anything.

Little Annie ran to the chicken coop where Engmark was hiding. After the Indians had gone the children came out of their hiding-places and started for the ranch of G. C. Williams, two miles distant. Engmark soon fainted from loss of blood. Little Annie ran on and saw Brother Sullivan Richardson, who took her in sight of the ranch, then hastened to Cave Valley and gave the alarm. Brothers R. Vance, P. S. and John Williams, N. H. Perry and James Hortensen went with team and on horseback to bring in the bodies and the families of Brothers Richardson and Whiting. A company was organized and started in pursuit, but failed to find the Indians. That night we kept watch while the coffins and burial clothes were being prepared, and on the 20th the bodies of Sister Thompson and her son Hyrum were laid side by side at Cave Valley. Parties have been scouting most of the time but no trace of the Indians has been obtained. Engmark says he saw seven Indians, including one squaw and one boy ten or twelve years old.

Besides stripping the house the Indians took Brother Thompson's horses and other animals that came to water at the Cliff ranch. They did not mutilate the bodies nor fire the place. Engmark says that when the Indians came out of the house and missed him, they seemed in a hurry to get away. As Engmark and Annie passed the house they observed Sister Thompson roll her head back and forth, but both she and Hyrum were dead when the party arrived with the wagon.

Sister Karen Thompson was born September 8th, 1833, at Aaby, Aarhus Amt, Jylland, Denmark; was baptized September 8, 1851; came to Utah in 1853, and lost three children by death on the plains, which she crossed in Captain John Sanders' company. She went to Fountain Green, Sanpete. Brother Thompson took his family to the Sevier in 1865. During the Indian trouble in Utah he was shot twice by Indians—once with an arrow in the thigh and once with a ball in the hip. In 1867 he moved back to Fountain Green, and from there went to Spring City. In 1881 Brother Thompson was called to St. Johns, Arizona, and in February, 1885, moved to Mexico. Sister Thompson and son were faithful members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, punctual in attendance at Sabbath school, meetings, and in other duties. Their sudden death in this manner has caused a deep gloom throughout the Mexican mission.

WILLARD CARROLL.

WEBER STAKE CONFERENCE.

This evening closed two days of the most interesting conference meetings that have been held in the Weber Stake for a number of years past. The conference commenced on Sunday morning, and although the notice was brief and the weather inclement, by shortly after ten o'clock the Tabernacle in this city was filled to its utmost capacity with people from all parts of the county, all anxious to hear instructions from those who have a right to speak as men "having authority."

After the opening exercises President C. F. Middleton, on behalf of the Stake presidency, reported the constitution of the Weber Stake, as such. He said the presidency were united in all their operations and administrations among the people; they worked harmoniously together and there was not a jar between them in anything. He also said the High Council were strongly united as a council, and worked in harmony with the presidency in the labors to promote the interests of the work of God and the welfare of the Saints in this Stake of Zion. He likewise spoke in terms of commendation and appreciation of the faithful labors of the Bishops of the several wards. He represented the Saints in the Stake generally as being in a good condition. The Relief Societies, Associations and Sabbath Schools were prosperous and doing excellent work in their several spheres.

The Bishops who reported the condition of their wards confirmed in a decisive manner the statement of President Middleton.

The speakers at these meetings were President L. Snow, Apostles F. D. Richards, A. H. Cannon and Presidents Seymour B. Young, of the First Council of the Seventies, and L. W. Shurtliff of this Stake, who held the attention of the audience riveted upon their utterances.

The chief topics dwelt upon were the completion of the Salt Lake Temple and the important epoch it forms in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The speakers expressed themselves pleased with the general spirit of willingness manifested by the Saints to contribute to the extent of their ability to furnish the means necessary to liquidate all the obligations the authorities were under, and that when the sacred edifice is dedicated it may be free from any financial incumbrances, and that it may be holy unto the Lord, and that it will be accepted by Him as a house in which He will be willing to dwell. They poured forth volumes of instruction to the Saints upon the necessity of preparing themselves to enjoy the privileges which will be offered them on the 8th of April, 1893, and succeeding days to enter the sacred precincts of the Temple and participate in the dedicatory services. They counseled the Saints to be faithful, humble, and pure and clean in their lives before the Lord; to be honest and true to all their covenants; to be true to each other and to God; to divest themselves of all malice, strife, ill feelings, hardness of heart towards each other; to cultivate a spirit of forbearance and forgiveness; as we are commanded to forgive all men, and especially those of the "household of faith;" that no person can enter that Temple and the dedication and enjoy the spirit and blessings thereof if he is not fully reconciled to his brethren and sisters—otherwise all that he would hear would be to him as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals."

The Saints were exhorted to be faithful not only in attending to their meetings in the season thereof, but also to be punctual and honest in the payment of their tithes, their offerings, and donations for all needful purposes, including that for the completion of the Temple.

The history of the dedication of the Temple of the Lord in Kirtland was reviewed, also the many manifestations of the favor of the Lord to His people on that occasion; and the speakers said they believed that if the Saints will live for them God will be willing to vouchsafe many blessings to them at the forthcoming dedication of the Temple in Salt Lake City.

The speakers held the audience spell bound, and it was interesting, indeed, to witness with what intense interest the people listened to the utterances of the servants of God on these occasions. They were meetings which will be long remembered by all who participated in them.

The authorities of the Church, general and local, were presented and sustained by hearty, unanimous vote.

On Sunday night the officers, teachers and many members of the Sunday Schools of Weber Stake held a union in the Second Ward meeting house; Superintendent R. Ballantyne presided. Elder Charles Wright delivered a lecture on Sabbath school grading in which he showed the superiority of this system to that which prevailed under the old system. Superintendents John Watson, John G. Ellis and J. W. Rex gave sketches of their operations, and the success attending the grading in their several schools. The system worked well and the results thus far attained were satisfactory. The Sunday school workers in this Stake are alive and their labors are devoted to promote the best intellectual and spiritual interests of the young.

Superintendent Ballantyne gave much valuable instruction to the officers and members of the schools. He reminded parents and teachers of the important duty of seeing that every child of school age is properly enrolled, and that pains should be taken to secure their attendance at school. He also read the circular of instructions relative to the statistical report, and urged upon the superintendents and secretaries the importance of punctuality and correctness in furnishing these reports. He requested them to lose no time, but to commence at once to gather up the materials for this important item, which is required of them. From all that was advanced at this meeting it was evident that the Sabbath school work in the Weber Stake is progressing, and that the course of the workers is onward and upward.

Yours truly,

JOSEPH HALL.

OGDEN CITY, Oct. 17th, 1892.

A DRY SEPTEMBER.

The United States department of agriculture and weather bureau says in its monthly review of Utah weather for September, 1892:

Temperature, etc.—The month could be properly characterized as a very dry one, and one above the average September in warmth. The atmospheric movement was sluggish, resulting in absence of storms and a prevailing dryness.

The amount of sunshine was unusual, even for September. The photographic record at Salt Lake City, shows a total sunshine of 325 hours, or about 90 per cent of the possible amount.

There were two hot spells, one from the 14th to 19th, and the other from 28th to the 30th. During the former of these periods the maximum temperature of 102 was reached at St. George, on the 16th; a temperature of 104 reported from Fillmore on the 28th, appears erroneous. During the cold spell on the 21st of the month the mercury at Scofield sank to twenty degrees; the extreme range at Scofield was thirty-seven degrees, the greatest at reported from any station. Grouse Creek had a monthly range of thirty-six, the least range recorded by self-registering instruments.

The average temperature of the Territory was 64.6 degrees; a mean of from twenty stations. The monthly mean at St. George was 79; at Fillmore 71.7; Ogden 69.9; Moab 66.8; Scofield 53.

Precipitation.—Reports agree that the month was one of the driest Septembers ever known. Many localities had absolutely no precipitation, and even where rain fell it was only a few light showers, the greatest amounts being 0.54 inch at Ogden, and 0.49 at Snowville. The average of all stations was 0.09 inches.

Light frosts occurred at Loa on the 10th and 11th; at Levan on the 21st, and at Snowville on the 29th and 30th.

Light thunderstorms occurred at various stations on the 2nd, 20th, 28th, 29th and 30th.

The observer at Levan writes—The month has been unusually dry, with hot days and cold nights. Ranges dry and bare; no snow for stock living out this winter without feeding.

Observer at Escalante writes—The month has been very dry. No high winds; clear sky nearly all the month, with light breezes from the southwest.

Observer at Mt. Carrol—This has been the driest month of the year; only a sprinkle on the 30th.

Observer at Richfield—This has been the driest season known in this county. Crops have stood it well, as the yield is about the average. Cattle ranges on the mountains have been poor for lack of rain.

Observer at St. George—Weather sultry, atmosphere rather smoky. The driest time for over four years.

DEATH OF MRS. HARRISON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 24.—Mrs. Harrison is no more. At 1:40 a.m. came the end, and for the second time in the history of the White House, a President's wife has died within its walls. Mrs. Harrison met death with the patience and resignation of a devout Christian, and her last days were comparatively free from pain. For twenty-four hours the President and family have been almost constantly at her bedside awaiting the end. Last night was without especial incident, but late and early, so frequently that he could have slept but little, if at all, the President was in and out of the sick room, and was never away for any length of time.

As the day waned and the sun sank behind the western hills, the anxiety of the watchers became more and more intense. The shadows deepened, the sun sank to rest, night came and the end was not yet. The telegraph instruments in the eastern part of the building had been steadily ticking all day, bringing from afar and near inquiry from friends of the family. But after 6 o'clock they ticked faster and faster. Some one had sent to Indianapolis a bulletin announcing Mrs. Harrison's death. The premature report spread rapidly over the country from West to East, and there began to flow in upon the wire messages of condolence addressed to the President. Mr. Halford promptly authorized a prompt denial, but it did not overtake the original story, and messages continued to arrive in numbers.

Just after six o'clock Mrs. Harrison suffered another sinking spell, and messages were sent by Halford to the absent cabinet officers, asking them to return to Washington immediately, but the sick woman had yet sufficient reserve strength to rally once more and repulse the attack of the dread visitor who hovered on the threshold. Soon after 9 o'clock the physician announced that the patient might be expected to live until midnight. Even this small grain of encouragement was received with gratitude by the anxious and grief-stricken husband and family. It could hardly be said that the patient was unconscious during the evening hours, for she betrayed some signs of understanding the attempts made to relieve her last moments by partially opening her parched lips to receive the stimulating fluid spilled to them from time to time, but not a drop could she swallow and the power of speech apparently had left her frame forever. In addition the physicians noticed as the evening wore on an increased difficulty in breathing, which was regarded as an ominous sign.

Hour after hour slipped away, each leaving the patient weaker in turn, yet so gradual was the decline that it could not be said positively at any minute that she had materially failed.

The measure of the ebbing tide was respiration, which slowly sunk from fifteen at nightfall to twelve at midnight. The physician had said that if she tided over that hour, she might survive until daylight. So there was a viable air of relief when the gong sounded twelve. The hope inspired, however, was only of a short duration. About 12:30 o'clock the physician discerned a noticeable weakness of the heart's action, followed almost immediately by a slight decrease in respiration. He notified the grief-stricken family that the end appeared very near. This intelligence had the most distressing effect upon the President, and he sustained himself with the greatest difficulty. Mr. Gardner, after carefully examining her countenance and feeling her pulse, sorrowfully announced that all indications justified the belief that the patient could not survive more than half an hour. This was at a quarter of 1 o'clock. The minutes passed with frightful rapidity and half an hour passed. The almost helpless form, however, still retained the sacred spark. The resistance offered by the constitution of the patient was marvellous and surprised to the physician at her bedside.

There was no struggle, no exhibition of pain, but a simple passive resistance that was baffling in its quiet intensity. In a few minutes Dr. Gardner again took up the feeble hand and felt the wrist. The blood still crept through the arteries, but oh, how slowly! He shook his head, and said a brief fifteen minutes must surely finish the struggle.

The agitation of the family could no longer be controlled, and, realizing his utter helplessness to longer cope with the formidable foe, and from consideration for the sacredness of such grief as this, the devoted physician and friend bowed his head and yamed out of the door. Outside of the threshold he took his station and waited. It was not long. The minutes flew like seconds, and, suddenly, there was an expression of heart-stricken woe. The end had come. The President was beside his dying wife as he had been for nine hours continuously, and his was the last of the loved features her eyes had dwelt upon. Her breath was labored and very slow. As the hands of the clock crept towards the next hour it grew fainter yet and less frequent, and as the timepiece marked the hour 1:40 there was an interruption of the feeble breath. A resumption and then a stop—this time to be eternal—and the life of Caroline Scott Harrison had gone out peacefully and quietly and without pain. All of the family in Washington were present at the death-bed, except the three little grandchildren and the venerable Dr. Scott, father of Mrs. Harrison. They were: President Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harrison, Lieutenant and Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Dimmick and Mrs. Newcomer. In addition, Mrs. Harrison's faithful maid, Josephine, and Miss Davis, the trained nurse, were in the room.

The members of the family spent a few minutes around the lifeless clay, and—let the veil be drawn over their deep grief. When they emerged the President retired immediately to his own room, and closed his door. The other members of his family, respecting his evident wish, allowed him to remain unmolested to contemplate his great bereavement and commune with his Maker. The last end offices for the dead woman were performed by her nurse, Miss Davis, who composed the remains for the undertaker. The lights were dimmed and the quiet of the grave lay upon the great white mansion.

The funeral arrangements have been concluded as follows: Religious services will be held in the White House Wednesday morning, after which the remains will be taken to Indianapolis, where the interment will be at Crown Hill cemetery Thursday.

THE SICKNESS.

Mrs. Harrison's illness is the outcome of an attack of grip during the winter 1890-91, while at Cape May. In the summer of 1891, she contracted a cold which caused a cough, lasting the entire summer. During the winter she was well enough to attend to the exacting social duties of the White House, but in January, 1892, the cough, which had never entirely left her, commenced again to trouble her considerably. In the following March she had a second attack of the grip, followed by catarrhal pneumonia. The coughing spells then increased in severity until they were accompanied by bloody expectorations and about the first of May she suffered from hemorrhage of the lungs, which though not severe, caused great prostration. From this time until July 6th, the date of the removal to Loon Lake, the patient did not undergo much change. After the arrival at Loon Lake, she commenced to improve, but the improvement was of short duration and an examination on September 1st, showed that the upper half of the right lung was completely consolidated. Notwithstanding this, she was able to continue drives till September 7th, when she was stricken with an attack of sub-acute pleurisy, accompanied by fusion of a fibro-serous fluid, completely filling the cavity with pleurisy on the right side, necessitating tapping three times.

A consultation was held by Dr. Gardner, Dr. Doughty and Dr. Truener, resulting in the issuance of a bulletin on September 24th, announcing that Mrs. Harrison was afflicted with pleurisy and nervous prostration, and that the result was uncertain. At the time of Mrs. Harrison's removal to Washington, September 20th, her right lung was entirely consolidated. The disease progressed steadily, resisting treatment, until eventually her left lung became involved, and the condition of the patient was hopeless.

The case was complicated from the first by her extreme nervous prostration which persistently resisted every remedy. Certainly nothing within the knowledge of the medical profession that could possibly tend to alleviate her sufferings or lead to cure, was left untried, but to no avail.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

About fifty-seven years ago the house of Rev. John B. Witherspoon Scott, a Presbyterian divine, president of Oxford (Ohio) female college, was made happy by the birth of a daughter, to whom was given the name of Carrie. In course of time there was at Oxford a student named Benjamin Harrison. He passed from the Farmers' college into Miami university and graduated at the age of eighteen. The young student in the midst of his pursuits of learning found himself overtaken in love and Dr. Scott's daughter was the object of his affection. On Oct. 20, 1853, he there made Miss Carrie Scott his wife. The happiness of their lives commencing from that date has known no diminution nor change until death came to separate them.

The prospects in life for the young couple were not bright, but young people are full of hope. Their honeymoon passed under the paternal roof at North Bend. In the following March the young couple went to Indianapolis. The cash capital at the command of Benjamin Harrison when he began his married life and the practice of his profession was $300, an advance on a lot in Cincinnati inherited through his aunt. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison began their domestic responsibilities in the rooms of an Indianapolis boarding house.

In the summer of 1854 Mrs. Harrison paid a visit to her parents and there, on August 12th, 1854, Russell Harrison, the elder child, was born. After this event the proud husband rented a small house in Indianapolis and began life in earnest, the faithful and industrious wife doing her own housework in a cottage of three rooms. Steady gains in fame, practice and pecuniary reward, found Mrs. Harrison preiding over a larger and more portentous house. In the course of two years, her second and last child, Mary Scott Harrison, was born. The couple steadily grew in the estimation of their neighbors and Mr. Harrison achieved fame in politics. In 1891, General Harrison entered the United States Senate and Mrs. Harrison became a member of a distinguished circle of the wives of senators. In Washington, where she resided during six years, she extended her sphere of usefulness.

When the family came to the White House, the first break in the circle was made by the death of Mrs. Russell Lloyd, Mrs. Harrison's sister. Before Mrs. Harrison was taken down with the grip, which ultimately resulted fatally, she nursed all the rest of the family, even to the little grandchildren. Her present illness really began on April 6th, after a brilliant reception.

in the White House, and but few friends have seen her since.

Mrs. Harrison is a distinctive, domestic woman. Her home and family were always first in her thoughts. It is said of her that she was never idle, occupying her spare moments with embroidery, water coloring, and china-decoration, and devoting considerable time to charities, in which she was always greatly interested. Her loyalty to old friends never wavered. In appearance Mrs. Harrison was a type of matronly feature. In figure, she showed generosity of nature. She had a lavish growth of hair, silvered with threads of little over half a century of life and falling in curly waves over a well shaped head, ending in graceful coils. Her regular features and dark expressive eyes formed a picture of ripened womanhood. She had a voice softened by the instinct of a gentle nature, and a gift of conversation, which while animated, was thoughtful. While she shrank from notoriety, the calls upon society was with her second in importance to the duties of wife, mother and daughter, and it was in her domestic sphere that she shone with her brightest light.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The guard around the Executive Mansion to keep out intruders is continued today. It is found impracticable to hold the funeral services on Wednesday, so it has been decided to postpone them till Thursday morning. They will be in no sense public, admission to them being limited strictly to those invited. Only the relatives, members of the cabinet and their families, and a very few intimate friends will be in attendance. As far as the official position of the President will permit, the services will be the same as in the case of a member of a private family. They will be held in the east room and conducted according to the Presbyterian forms, by Rev. T. S. Hamlin, pastor of the church which the President attends. The body will not lie in state. After the services, the body will be accompanied to Indianapolis where services of a more public character will be held in the First Presbyterian church, and the body interred in Crown Hill cemetery.

ALL NIGHT LONG AND TODAY

telegrams of condolence poured in at the White House. None of these will be made public, at present at least, and possibly not at all, if any, only few, including those from persons of unusual prominence, or from other governments. The President is averse to parades of this sort.

THE PRESIDENT'S INTENSE GRIEF.

The President is bearing up remarkably well under the affliction. The traces of great sorrow are plain, but he has nerved himself to face the affliction with fortitude. Those who saw him this morning found his eyes red with emotion, but he constantly endeavored to repress its influence.

After the end came last night, the President retired to his own room adjoining that in which the departed lay, and remained in strict seclusion till this morning, having his dark hour alone. Such members of the cabinet as were in the city called this morning and had a conference with the President. He expressed his wish that public business be transacted as usual, and the members of the cabinet were, therefore, at their desks most of the day. Such of them as can be spared will accompany the remains to Indianapolis.

REMAINS ENBALMED.

This morning Mrs. Harrison's remains were embalmed. They will probably lie in the room in which she died until the private services are held on Thursday. The President is averse to having the White House flag displayed at half mast, so it was not placed on the staff this morning as usual. The flags on the public buildings are at half staff. There is a plain black crepe knut on the White House door, the only outside symbol of mourning.

All the members of the immediate families of the President and Mrs. Harrison are now in Washington, except the President's brother John Scott Harrison, Kansas City, who is now on his way; Carter Harrison of Tennessee and Mrs. Harrison's only brother, John Scott, of Portland, Oregon, who left there yesterday. He will probably not come to Washington but go direct to Indianapolis, which city there is only a bare possibility of his reaching in time for the interment.

A CASKET SELECTED.

Though no selection of body bearers is made, it is probable the corpse will be borne by the White House employees.

About 1 o'clock Russell Harrison, McKee and Hafford visited the establishment of Undertaker Spears and selected a casket. They decided upon one made of Spanish red cedar, covered with fine black broadcloth. It has a copper metallic inner case, hermetically sealed, and is lined with cream tufted satin. The exterior has no ornamentation whatever except an oxidized bar and handles which run full length, and a solid silver oxidized plate bearing this inscription: "Caroline Scott Harrison, wife of Benjamin Harrison, died October 25, 1892."

The traveling case is also of Spanish red cedar, highly polished, with brass handles and corner.

BLAINE SENDS A MESSAGE.

Ex-Secretary Blaine sent a message to the President during the morning, contained in an envelope directed in Blaine's own handwriting and sent up stairs to the President. Among the many telegrams of condolence received are those from ex-President Grover Cleveland, vice-President Morton and Hon. Whitelaw Reid.

VICTORIA'S SYMPATHY.

The following cablegram has been given out:

"BALMORAL CASTLE, Oct. 25.
"General Harrison, President U. S., Washington:
"I have heard with the deepest regret of your sad loss and sincerely sympathize with you in your grief.
(Signed) VICTORIA R. I."

THE POPE'S CONDOLENCE.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—Cardinal Gibbons this morning sent the following telegram to President Harrison: "The Pope, through Cardinal Rampolla, sends you his heartfelt condolence in your present affliction."

DEATHS IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct., 25.—The death in the White House of Mrs. Harrison makes the second case in the history of the executive mansion in which the wife of a President died there. On September 10th, 1842, Letitia Christian Tyler, the first wife of President John Tyler, entered it in delicate health, unable to perform the social duties of the place, but the death nevertheless came as a surprise and shock to the country. The tolling of church bells the following day announced the death. The funeral ceremonies took place in the east room. Two Presidents have also died in the White House. Wm. Henry Harrison, the President's grand father ended his days there just one month after his inauguration. Zachary Taylor, the old Mexican war hero, also died in the White House in July of the second year after his inauguration. There have been a few other deaths in the historic building, of which two were members of the President's family circle. Lincoln's little boy "Tad" died there and so did Frederick Dent, Mrs. Grant's father. During President Arthur's administration the call of death interrupted one of his New Year's day receptions. While the reception was in progress, the Hawaiian minister suddenly fell, and died in a very short time.

IOWA CONFERENCE.

Present on the stand were President Charles W. Stayner, of the Northern States mission, David Stoker, acting president, A. C. Sorenson, of the Indiana Conference, (who was returning home), Elders John E. Lewis, John Christensen, John A. Walker, Geo. F. Marshall, Neils J. Nielsen, Joseph Jepsen, James Cluff and George Beal.

Elder J. A. Walker, who was the first speaker, said we were in a probation trying to work our way back to our Heavenly Father. This could be done only by faith, that being the first step in that direction. He urged the Saints to pray for what they really needed, not as a matter of form.

Elder John Christensen spoke of the plan of salvation and the necessity of complying with the rules laid down by the Savior and His Apostles. President C. W. Stayner made a few closing remarks.

At the afternoon session, after Elder Joseph Jepsen bore his testimony to the truth of the Gospel and invited all to investigate the principles thereof, Elder George T. Marshall addressed the meeting. He said we were all placed on earth for a purpose, not to live a certain number of years and then pass away without having done something for ourselves or our fellow man. God required obedience to the Gospel before we can become legal citizens in His Church and Kingdom. He spoke of the gift of the Holy Ghost which it was necessary to have before we can live in a pleasing way before our Heavenly Father.

Elder A. C. Sorenson spoke of the pre existence of man, our duties here on earth and our future state.

Elder David Stoker said our Heavenly Father was the one who prescribed the way and the means that man should take in order to get back to Him. Man's devices would not obtain for him eternal life. It is just as essential to repent of our sins now as it was in the days of our Savior; the principles of the Gospel were true then and are just as true today.

On Sunday morning Elder John E. Lewis spoke on the first principles of the Gospel. Followed by Elder J. A. Walker, who showed how essential it was to be in possession of the Holy Ghost; that we may be in communication with our Heavenly Father. President Stayer made a few remarks on the same subject.

In the afternoon, Elders N. J. Neilson, George Beal and A. C. Sorenson occupied the time, and James Cluff, a new missionary bore his testimony.

The evening meeting was occupied by President Stayer who delivered a powerful sermon on the end of the world. A good feeling was manifested, and an enjoyable time was had by the Saints and Elders.

A Priesthood meeting was also held at which good instructions were given and satisfactory reports presented from the Elders. The following appointments were made: David Stoker, was unanimously sustained as President of the Iowa Conference and John E. Lewis, as clerk; David Stoker and John E. Lewis to labor in the Council Bluffs mission; John Christensen and George Beal to labor in the Emporia, Kansas mission; George T. Marshall and Jos. Jepsen to labor in the St. John, Kansas mission; Nellis J. Neilson to labor in Decatur, Nebraska mission; John A. Walker and James Cluff to labor in Cosad, Nebraska mission.

JOHN E. LEWIS, Clerk.

HISTORY OF THE LIBERAL PARTY.

The history of the Liberal party since its advent into power in this city has been in many respects an unenviable one. For ways that were dark and tricks that were vain that organization has proven itself one of the most successful that the country has ever seen. The public are familiar with the gigantic election frauds of February, 1890. The methods employed to bring victory to a party that was known to be in business principally for plunder, and that has since shown itself to be an enemy to liberty and good government, were of a character to forever brand the chief manipulators with dishonor and disgrace. Many who then belonged to that organization now blush with shame when they think of the historic run of the notorious Grand Junction registration train, of the imported thugs, hired hoboes, repeaters, tinhorns, and keepers of dives, who all performed their petty parts as outlined by party wirepullers, some of whom were not making their maiden effort in political villainy when they placed, above the Stars and Stripes in the vales of fair and loyal but much maligned and misrepresented Utah.

THE CARPET BAG

Not only compelled to submit to indignities of this sort, the community's will was further thwarted and an additional insult was offered to legal voters by the seating of six bogus councilmen who had no shadow of claim upon the offices which they knew then and realize now they had usurped. With a bravado that could only have been admired if exerted in a good cause, they continued for nearly eighteen months to draw and spend the salaries and enjoy the emoluments of office of the People's councilmen. They took every advantage of the delay for which the law is proverbial and did not have the decency to vacate until the court of last resort had preposterously decided against them and COMPELLED THEM TO GET OUT.

Of the individual members of this council there is full warrant for saying that one of them made records that will scarcely stand the sunlight of open investigation—there was conduct that called forth from their own organ, a short time after the inauguration, the charge that four of them were tainted with bootlegism. When they took the oath of office the municipal treasury was well filled with cash. They entered upon a

RECKLESS CAREER OF EXTRAVAGANCE.

Comparatively little is shown for what they did in the way of public improvements. New offices were created in great numbers, salaries were increased, the public funds were speedily exhausted, city property was sold and given away to mushroom corporations, bonding was commenced and it has been continued until the utmost limit has been almost reached. Notwithstanding all this, the voracity and greed of the office-hunter is as far from satisfied as it was years ago when he captured his first prize and ate his first meal in Tooele—"the republic," where he is reported as having "voted every man (both dead and alive).

HORSE, MULE AND JACK RABBIT

in the Ophir mining district," in order to carry the election, and which resulted in Tooele county becoming practically bankrupt.

The shameful and uncertain condition of affairs which followed Liberal triumph in this city a little over two years ago is still fresh in the minds of the public. A reign of terror was inaugurated such as few mining towns even in the wild west ever experienced. This city became a veritable footpad's paradise, it was the Mecca of highwaymen, safe-blowers and tramps. Gamblers and vile women were welcomed within our gates. A reward was virtually placed on crime. The flag of vice was flaunted upon the principal streets of the city. In broad daylight in the eyes of respectable people. Morality and virtue were scoffed at.

These evils were to be expected; ours was fast becoming a metropolitan city, argued some of the councilmen who sought to carry out the injunction of their political magnate, Judge Powers, "not to be too good but just good enough." In the natural wake came the erection of a variety theatre, the lowest type of its class. To obtain a license giving it the right to dispense intoxicating liquors was something for which a number of councilmen worked unceasingly until they were successful. This done, the motives of some of the gentlemen who called themselves reformers and before the people became apparent. Near the notorious show house referred to houses of illfame were quietly erected by city officers. They were rented direct to the wanton creatures who at that time pilled their infamous vocations on Franklin avenue. One of these gentlemen left the Territory, it is said, to avoid being indicted by the grand jury.

POSED AS PROGRESSIONISTS

PICKARD'S PREDICAMENT.

How the social evil was condoned and officially encouraged the readers of this journal well remember. Mayor Scott, during a somewhat protracted absence from the Territory, designated W. L. Pickard, one of the councilmen, to act as mayor until his return. Mr. Pickard was not long at the helm before he distinguished himself—by getting into a predicament. He made the serious mistake of writing a letter without the necessary post script,

"BURN THIS."

Said letter gave him an unlimited amount of trouble. He tried to explain the matter away but failed signally. It showed the sympathetic relationship and tender feelings which existed between the administration and the class of people the letter referred to. It was first given to the public by THE DESERET NEWS and its publication created a sensation which among other exposures led to the holding of a mass meeting of citizens at the first M. E. church to cry down, and, if possible, stem the tide of vice and crime which threatened to deluge the city.

The letter was written to Chief of Police John M. Young. The substance of it was: "Please take notice that you are not to arrest prostitutes and gamblers while I am acting-mayor." From the time that brief but expressive and now historic document was penned, Chief Young claimed that he had Mr. Pickard just where he wanted him.

Police Scandals.

Perhaps in no other city in the United States have police scandals been so frequent and outrageous as in this during the two years and a half that the Liberal party has been in power. The results have only been natural after all. When the fact is taken into consideration that many members of the new police force were drawn from a class whose avocations are conducted in violation of the law—characters given place and position because or a claim on the party for services rendered—it is no difficult to understand. It is a well known fact that some of the so-called guardians of the peace were guilty of the grossest crimes. They sowed the seeds of dissension in their own ranks. Some of their quarrels and mysterious misdoings in houses of ill-repute and in the dark alleys became a public disgrace. The climax was reached when an overbearing and exacting captain was killed by a subordinate officer. It was thought that this would put an end to hostilities among the constabulary, but it did not and Mayor Scott was obliged to summon the entire force before him and compel them to renew their obligations "to keep the peace" in their own ranks. This action was occasioned by threats to commit murder. The force was divided. There were the "Youngites" as they were known and the "Anti-Youngites," and between the two factions there was almost mortal enmity. More than once fatal encounters were narrowly escaped.

THEY HAD A "PULL"

When the last election was held in February, 1892, and victory was again the lot of the Liberals, great reforms were promised. The least that is said about what followed the better. A mere mention of the and the causes that lead thereto, of Marshal Janney and several trusted as well as a number of untrusted benchmen is all that is necessary.

OFFICIAL DEATH.

School Election Frauds.

At the school election in the Fourth precinct of this city on July 14th, 1890, one of the most flagrant steals on record was consummated. It was so palpable that one of the gentlemen (Mr. P. L. Williams) who was fraudulently declared elected refused to act and honestly and voluntarily allowed Mr. Richard W. Young, one of the opposing candidates who was legally elected, to take his seat. The steal was accomplished by the aid of a clever ballot box stuffer, W. J. Allen, the famous foot racer, puglist, bar tender and all-round sport, with a number of aliases, was accused of the crime. He was arrested and the grand jury found an indictment against him. The evidence appeared to be plain and overwhelming, but he was acquitted.

"Irregularities."

I pass swiftly over the causes and the exposures that led to Recorder Louis Hyams' sudden retirement from official life—in which it transpired that a shortage of some $1751 was regarded not as "criminal but only as carelessness;" also over the strange financial innocence of Assessor Clute, who didn't know that about $20,000 of city funds was included in his private bank account until some one called his attention to it. Recent developments are no less interesting. For more than a year there have been damaging rumors to the effect that a successful system of fraud was being carried on in Sanitary Inspector Showell's department. The insinuations were at first silenced in one way and then in that. The hush, however, was in every instance only temporary. Some one kept "leaking." It became necessary to act, and detectives were quietly employed to "work the case up." They did so. The result of their labors is not yet made public; but its details are said to be astonishing, no less than $13,000 being the sum which it is alleged has been misappropriated by somebody. Mr. Showell claimed some weeks ago that he would prove himself innocent. He has not done so yet, but the legal presumption of innocence must be permitted to remain until the contrary is proved. The papers in the case have been referred to Mayor Eakin for investigation and action, and he would seem to have had ample time to consider them. Can it be that because an important election is approaching he defers any decided move? This is the explanation vouchsafed by some of those who are "on the inside."

A few weeks ago Watermaster Harvey sent an insulting communication to the City Council in which he charged one of the members with "talking through his hat." It is alleged by Harvey's friends that this rash accusation of a heinous offense has caused all the trouble in which he has lately found himself. But it appears that one of the councilmen had been looking into the peculiar way he allowed business to be transacted before he wrote that letter and was preparing a surprise party for him at that very time. It came later and proved conclusively that whatever there had been of "talking through the hat" there were apparently some singular irregularities in the operations of Mr. Harvey's deputy, Mr. Hughes. When I remember that this has not been denied by even the Liberal councilman, I am the more surprised that there should have been a report a few evenings ago which looked very much like an attempt to "whitewash." This case has also been called to the attention of his honor the Mayor, and in due time will doubtless receive attention.

I may on a future occasion have more to say on these and kindred subjects. Before concluding this letter I wish to make one explanation: I know hundreds of men belonging to the Liberal party who are far above any suspicion of approval of or connection with vice or crime of any kind. I believe the party itself desires, in its own way and according to its own notion, the general welfare. I do not deny that it has accomplished this to a considerable degree. But when I give voice to them and it is much credit to confess my amazement that the decent part of the organization should still cling to methods that have yielded such a pitiable record, and through which there have been so many unfortunate results.

Boz.

SCANDINAVIAN MISSION.

Elder N. Borgesen of Lewiston, Cache county, Utah, gives some interesting particulars concerning his experience as a missionary in Sweden. He left Salt Lake City, October 7th, 1891, and arrived after a pleasant voyage in Copenhagen on the 30th of the same month. His first labor in the missionary field was performed in the Gottenburg conference in Sweden. In Halmstad, a branch of this conference, he says the Gospel has been preached for thirty years or more, and many of the inhabitants are familiar with our doctrine. Religious indifference seems to be the general attitude of the people. Elder Borgesen says he has found that a remark made by President Brigham Young in Liverpool is literally true: "This is a time of warning and not of many converts." In the Jonkoping branch some good Latter-day Saints are found. In the city of Norrkoping the meetings are well attended during the winter evenings, and the press is not hostile to the efforts of the Elders. The Swedish people, as a rule, are religiously inclined, but they cannot understand the necessity of a minister of the Gospel holding authority from God. They seem to think that one sect is just as much authorized as any other.

After his release, Elder Borgesen stayed some time in Copenhagen, where he had an opportunity of bearing his testimony to the Crown Prince of Denmark. He says:

"Having granted me an audience, the prince received me very kindly and spoke freely on different subjects, religious and political. He asked several questions about our standing as a community in the United States, our government, laws, etc. The prince referred with enthusiasm to the fact that his royal father was much honored by the high positions which his children had been called upon to occupy among the nations of the earth, and on my suggestion was perfectly willing to see and acknowledge the hand of God in this.

"I mentioned that several of our brethren had been expelled from the country for preaching the Gospel, notwithstanding the fact that the law promises protection to all denominations. He said he had noticed it, but supposed that those expelled had been connected with socialists or other unlawful organizations. I assured him this was not so.

"This ended our interview, and with a hearty handshake his royal highness bade me farewell. 'God bless you,' he said. If you should ever come to this country again you are welcome.' I expressed my gratitude for this gracious assurance, praying that the blessings of the Almighty might rest upon him and his father's house."

The prince is a gentleman with martial bearing, and very popular among the people. He has a clear, ringing voice, and a remarkably retentive memory. He referred to many incidents which happened over twenty years ago.

Elder Borgesen arrived in New York on the steamer Wyoming and went through the experience of twenty days' quarantine. He has had a varied experience in the missionary field.

THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE.

The new garbage ordinance which was recently passed by the City Council and which went into effect on the 21st ult., is creating no small amount of dissatisfaction among certain citizens, principally, perhaps, because they do not understand its provisions. In order that there may be no further misapprehension as to what they are, the essential features of the measure are herewith republished:

It is known as an ordinance establishing garbage districts, providing receptacles for and the removal of garbage and ashes; for the protection of gutters and ditches; for the disposition of light-soil and manure, and for regulating scavenger service. Also for the removal of all privy vaults and cesspools within sewer district No. 1, and requiring all owners or agents to connect their premises with the sewer within said sewer district.

It provides that there shall be established within the limits of Salt Lake City, two garbage districts, said districts to be known and designated as Garbage District Number One (1) and Garbage District Number Two (2).

Garbage district No. 1 is within that portion of the limits of Salt Lake City, bounded and described as follows, to-wit: Beginning at the northeast corner of the intersection of South Temple street and First West street, and running thence due east along both sides of South Temple street to a point midway between First East (State) street and Second East street, and running thence due south along an imaginary line drawn through the center of blocks 74, 71 and 55, plat A, Salt Lake City survey, to a point in the center of block 53, said plat and survey, and running thence due west along an imaginary line drawn through the center of blocks 53, 52, 51 and 50, said plat and survey, to the east side of First West street, and running thence due north along said east side of First West street to the place of beginning.

Garbage district No. two (2) is within that portion of Salt Lake City outside of the limits of garbage district No. one (1), bounded and described as follows, to-wit: Bounded on the north by Eighth North street, and on the northern boundary of the city, on the east by the Reservation line, on the south by Ninth South street, and on the west by Tenth West street.

It shall be the duty of every owner, agent or occupant of any and every building or place of business, within the business garbage district, described in section 2 of this ordinance, to provide or cause to be provided and kept within such building or place of business, a metallic vessel, with handles, for receiving and holding all ashes, sweepings and other non-combustible rubbish that may accumulate on said premises. That said receptacles shall be emptied promptly when filled, and shall be placed in a position easily accessible to the scavenger.

A separate and suitable vessel shall be provided for garbage and liquid refuse; said vessel to be free from leakage and provided with handles. All receptacles for garbage and liquid refuse shall be placed in a position easily accessible to the scavenger, and emptied daily. When placed in front of the premises they shall be deposited before the hour of 8 a.m., and removed as soon as emptied.

Within the residence garbage district, described in Section 8 of this ordinance, and outside the said business garbage district, there shall be provided and kept by the owner, agent or occupant of any and every building, a suitable vessel, free from leakage, in which shall be placed all garbage and liquid refuse that accumulate in said building or on the premises. Said receptacle shall be emptied not less than once during each week in spring, summer and fall, and not less than once in two weeks in winter, in each case often if so directed by the health department.

Within the garbage district described in Sections 1 and 2, ashes and non-combustible rubbish shall not be deposited in the same vessel or receptacle with garbage or liquid substance.

No house slope, rubbish, ashes, or garbage shall be deposited within the garbage districts described in sections 2 and 3, except as herein provided for.

It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to sweep or deposit any paper or other rubbish in any gutters or ditches within the garbage districts, or to empty into said gutters or ditches any house slope or the contents of spittoons.

All sidewalks in front of places of business shall be swept before the hour of 8 a. m., Sundays excepted.

No manure shall be allowed to accumulate in or on any premises within the garbage districts described in sections 2 and 3 of this ordinance, to any quantity greater than two cubic yards, and shall be removed as provided in the ordinance.

No nightsoil shall be deposited or buried in or on any premises within the garbage districts described.

All garbage, manure, nightsoil, ashes and other refuse and offal shall be moved to a place directed by the health department, provided that all carts and vehicles for carrying any nauseous or offensive substances shall be strong and tight, and that the sides shall be made so high above the load or contents that no part of said contents shall fall, leak or spill therefrom, and either the vehicle or vessel carried by it shall be so covered as to be inoffensive. Provided further, that no part of the contents of privy vault or cesspool, except substances other than excrement, shall be removed therefrom, nor shall the same be transported through any of the streets of Salt Lake City, except by means of an air-tight vessel, or in such manner as shall prevent entirely the escape of any noxious or offensive odors therefrom. All dead animals shall be removed in such a manner that they shall be covered from view during the process of removal.

The removal of all garbage and ashes from places of business in garbage district No. 1 shall be at the expense of the city. The removal of ashes, garbage, manure, nightsoil and other refuse matter within garbage district No. 2, described in section 3, and outside of No. 1, shall be at the expense of the owner, agent or occupant.

All privy vaults and cesspools on property abutting the sewer system embraced within the limits of sewer district No. 1 shall be removed, filled up, and connections made with sewer system, within thirty (30) days after the date of the approval of this ordinance.

No person shall empty, or attempt to empty, any vault, privy, sink or cesspool within the garbage districts, except pursuant to a permit therefor received from the board of health; provided that such permit be issued to any applicant providing with the proper vehicle for removing the same.

It shall be unlawful and a misdemeanor for any person or persons, other than persons, companies or corporations holding a permit from the health department, to engage in the business of hauling garbage, manure or other refuse; provided that this condition does not apply to persons hauling their own garbage with their own teams.

All persons engaged in the removal of garbage, manure, or other offensive refuse, shall have the word "scavenger" and the number of the permit in large white letters on black ground plainly painted or attached on each side of the wagon bed.

Any person engaged in hauling garbage, rubbish or decaying matter of any kind through the streets of the city, from the overloading of any wagon, cart or vehicle, or through carelessness or negligence, allows or causes any of said matter to fall and remain in the streets of the city, shall, upon conviction, be fined as provided in section twenty-one (21).

All persons, companies or corporations holding permits shall be entitled to charge and collect not to exceed the following fees for the removal of garbage and refuse matter as contemplated in this ordinance, to-wit: For all portions of garbage district No. 2 as follows:

For each two cubic yards of manure, 75 cents.

For each barrel of refuse (not more than thirty gallons), 25 cents.

For vessels of less capacity than thirty gallons, for each ten gallons, 15 cents.

For ashes per load, 75 cents.

For each load of refuse, 75 cents.

For quantities less than one load shall charge for each bushel thereof, 10 cents.

Any person or persons failing to comply with, or who violate any of the provisions of the foregoing sections of this ordinance, shall be fined in any sum not less than five ($5) dollars nor more than fifty ($50) dollars, and shall, in addition to such punishment, be fined in the further sum of five ($5) dollars for every twenty-four hours of failure or refusal to comply with said ordinance.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder A. C. Sorenson, of Fountain Green, Sanpete County, returned yesterday from his mission to the northern states. He left for this field of labor on June 18, 1890, and was for the last four months president of the Indiana conference. He proceeds to his home tomorrow.

Elder E. H. Anderson, of Ogden, a valued journalistic friend, made the News a brief but pleasant visit this morning. He has been absent about two years, during which time he has presided over the Scandinavian mission. Elder Anderson says he has enjoyed his mission very much. The work is comparatively prosperous in those northern countries, not a few embracing the Gospel. He also speaks very highly of the missionaries who are laboring in the various branches.

Elder David Stoker, of Bountiful, Davis county, arrived in this city on the 21st inst., returning from a mission to the Northern States, for which field of labor he left on May 14, 1892. He had many opportunities, he says, of bearing his testimony to various classes of people, although the general sentiment seems to be indifference towards the Gospel. Elder Stoker acted as president of the Iowa conference for the last month but was released on account of failing health. Otherwise he has enjoyed his labors.

THE STAGNATION in business that is usually characteristic of presidential years has this year proven to be merely a stagnation in politics. By the generality of people the amendment is accepted with pleasure.

MIDDLE TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The Middle Tennessee conference convened at the Hopewell meeting house, Putnam county, Tennessee, on the 15th and 16th of October, President H. F. Stout presiding. Elders present: H. F. Stout, Swen Petersen, J. L. Sevy, R. G. Williams, Benj. Gardner, H. L. Hunter, also President J. G. Kimball.

Saturday there was a fair attendance, but on Sunday the house was filled to overflowing. The principles of the Gospel were expounded by all the speakers and President Kimball gave much valuable instruction. The people paid strict attention during all the meetings and a good spirit prevailed. There were three applicants for baptisms.

Four council meetings were held, during which many good instructions were given by President Kimball.

Elder Swen Petersen, having filled a two years mission, was honorably released to return home. The other Elders were assigned to their respective fields of labor.

This is an old field which has been almost abandoned until of late, but it is now opening up again. Our records show about one hundred Saints whose whereabouts are not known. Any Elder having traveled in this conference during the past few years will confer a favor upon President H. F. Stout by sending the name and post-office address of any Saints or any information that would lead to their whereabouts. His postoffice address is Smithville, DeKalb County, Tenn.

JOHN L. SEVY,

Clerk of Conference.

BOMA, Putnam County, Tenn.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, October 23rd, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir sang the hymn commencing:

How are Thy servants blest, O Lord!
How sure is their defense!

Prayer was offered by Elder W. C. Dunbar.

The choir sang the hymn:

Behold the Great Redeemer die,
A broken law to satisfy.

The Priesthood of the Thirteenth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

ELDER WILLARD DONE

was then called upon to address the congregation. He said, in substance, that it was to him a serious duty to arise before a congregation of the Saints and address them upon their duties, and he trusted that he might be guided by the Spirit of God and be led to offer such remarks as might be beneficial to the audience and pleasing to God. He wished that the spirit of revelation and truth might actuate him and dwell in the hearts of the hearers, that there might be unity of thought and feelings.

The Gospel contains all the principles of truth that exist on the earth, from whatever source they may seem to have emanated, even from seemingly unworthy sources. For truth comes, as we hold, in all instances originally from God. If we compare the dispensations in which we live with former ones, when the Gospel was preached and the servants of God were active in the administration of the ordinances thereof, we find that we are living under a dispensation of the greatest importance. We are told to spread the Gospel among all the nations of the earth, that people may be judged according to how they receive it.

In the dispensation of Adam, a work had to be carried out different from ours. That was the dispensation of the foundation of the work of the Lord on earth. Adam was the progenitor and was called upon to point out to his descendants the coming of the Savior, the Redeemer from sin and death. This dispensation was followed by others. The dispensation of Enoch was very important, but his work was confined more especially to the people of the city which bears his name. Noah was told to preach repentance to the generation in his age, as a means of escaping the coming destruction. We are told that only seven received his testimony.

In the dispensation of Abraham, he was told to leave his country and friends with all the idolatrous influences by which he was surrounded and go and worship God in a land to be given to him. He did so and his work had a widespread influence throughout the ages.

In the dispensation of Moses, his mission was restricted to one people. He led Israel out of Egypt and after forty years they reached the promised land, and founded a nation which has given to the world several sacred records and the lineage through which the Messiah came.

In the dispensation of Christ, He was given His special mission to perform, but it was restricted to the descendants of Abraham, as far as His personal work was concerned. He expressed this in His answer to a Syro-Phoenician woman who asked Him to perform a miracle for the benefit of her child, when He said, it was not meet to take the bread from the children and give it to the "Jogge." After the death of Christ, however, the disciples were told to go out into all the world, but even their mission was limited. And we know that the powers and gifts of the Priesthood were soon taken away from the earth.

In this respect our dispensation differs from all preceding ones, for the benefits of it are to be extended to all, both living and dead, and the work has been established never to be overthrown. The work performed in the Temples is not restricted to those living on the earth, but it is done in order that all may have an opportunity to receive the Gospel or reject it. In this age, therefore, the work of all dispensations is consummated. This is the promise given to us. Nor shall this Gospel again be taken away from the earth, but it shall remain, until all shall have had an opportunity of receiving or rejecting it. For what the Lord has promised is true and will be fulfilled in every detail. The speaker illustrated his remarks upon this subject by saying that when we look at a tree we can see the stem, the branches, the leaves, the fruits, etc., but not the roots, by which the very life of the tree is sustained. So with this dispensation. What we see is the fruitage but the roots penetrate all the former dispensations. It is but the development, the result of them.

It is a great work, we have to do, and the question is: Shall we be willing and able to do it? We know how valiantly our predecessors have fought for it during persecutions of various kinds, but do we also understand the magnitude of our duties, and do we teach our children in order that they, when the responsibility shall be laid upon them, shall be able to undertake them? Do our children understand the principles of the Gospel? This is a question which requires immediate answer. The age of man upon earth is limited to three score and ten years. Few live beyond this and therefore the generation that now has charge of the Church of God must soon pass away and the children will take their places. This requires all the attention of the parents. Our glory and power hereafter shall depend in a certain degree upon our faithfulness in this matter. Upon the parents rests the duty of preparing the children for the duties they have to perform. And if through the lack of training the children shall be led into sin, the responsibility will rest on the parents. Hence the importance of the question, do the children understand their duties in whatever branch of the Priesthood they are called to act? The question cannot be delayed. In certain instances it is apparent that children are not walking in the footsteps of the parents. Sunday schools, primaries, Church schools are established in order to give the children the necessary training. Missionary work is extended in this direction and it is hoped that it may prove efficient.

The speaker concluded his remarks by stating that he felt well in the work of the Lord and he hoped that the Saints might remain faithful in the important work before them.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON.

occupied the remainder of the time and bore a strong testimony to the truth of the remarks of the previous speaker and to the importance of the present dispensation.

The choir sang the anthem:

From afar, gracious Lord,
Thou hast gathered Thy flock.

Benediction by Elder Seymour B. Young.

A COMMITTEE of the labor unions in England has recently published a statement to the effect that the number of unemployed in the various trades during the year ending in August last was 5.02 per cent. as compared to 3.35 per cent. the previous year. It is supposed that the percentage of unemployed among the non-union men was not less than 15. The depression is ascribed chiefly to the decline of ship-building. When this trade, so important to Great Britain, is dull, every branch of business becomes involved. Destitution is feared in many homes of laborers during the coming winter.

17. Woman's . Sphere.

By One of the Sex.

WILL this new department in our old friend and dear companion the NEWS, give as much pleasure to the large circle of woman readers as it will to the writer of these words, who I am happy to say, has been chosen to fill the chair of editor for the Sisters' department? Here we want to meet on the common and yet sacred ground of sisterhood, not excluding any one who has a love for the true, the beautiful, and the development of womankind. We will be still broader and say that we will joyfully include every daughter of Eve, and if through misfortune she has lost all love for the good and the beautiful, we will lovingly seek to show her the upward paths of peace and virtue, while we cling to her hand as she climbs the stony path. Here in our warm and cozy corner, we will talk of all things that are of vital interest to our sex, of the games and plays of childhood, of the school interests and hours of enjoyment spent by girlhood, of the new duties and pleasures of young wifehood, of the cares and needs of motherhood, and we will not forget the wide and far-reaching labors of women who have entered the field of public work. Indeed, the only bound we shall set for ourselves in our weekly visits, will be the bounds formed by time and mortality.

There are so many topics of interest to us that we will not be able to speak of them all each week, but instead, we will take up our subjects in a somewhat arbitrary manner, giving important things important places, and speaking of other of our home labors than of our public interest. Thus, the "food we eat," and the "clothes we wear," and the "lives we live," will appear often upon our pages. Words of advice and comfort to the sick, the sorrowing and the needy women amongst our people will be given oftener than the reports of the elegant costumes or the grand receptions of the rich and well-to-do. Now I shall invite you all to aid me with, first and most important, your kind forbearance for mistakes made, your faith in the good that will flow from this interchange of ideas and purposes, and, lastly, I will most cordially invite you to write to me upon matters of interest to us all. Ask any and all sorts of questions, and we will seek to answer them with all inspiration we can obtain. Address all communications to

MRS. FRANCES RICHARDS,
DESERET NEWS office, Salt Lake City, Utah.

THE CHILDREN.

The mother that is too busy to tell her children a story when that of repeated request is made, it to be pitied, if not blamed. While the hands are engaged in molding bread, in ironing, or in putting in the tucks or plaits of the children's new finery, the mother can, if she will, take her mind from the reflections which are occupying it, and tell the eager inquirer the story of how Columbus went to the king, and of the jewels pawned by the good Queen Isabella, or she can tell the whole Bible through in short and simply worded stories. Did you ever try to tell the Book of Mormon through in that way? Try it, and you will employ it as well as the children. Then the infinite material found in history works up into delightful stories, and you will find no end to your profit and the child's pleasure if you will amuse him and yourself in this way. The child who has never been told stories is deprived of one of his most precious rights. Don't you know that the influence of the mother is of paramount importance to the character of the child? But I am of the candid opinion that the mother who is known only to her child as the woman who feeds and clothes him has not half the influence in the formation of his character that is possessed by the companion he meets in the streets and who fills his vacant and inquiring mind with questionable material. When will our sisters wake up to the fact that they have plenty of time to read and talk to their children if they will only take it from the hours spent in idle gossip, in useless efforts to vie with their neighbors in the matter of clothes and style of living? You, my dear and overworked young mother, just take your little child this evening and when you undress the weary form, tell him the story of Adam and Eve, or Cain and Abel, of Solomon's Fable, and how it was built, of Noah and his brethren, of the good King Benjamin, or Mosiah, of the conversion of King Lamoni, of Columbus, of Amerigo Vesputius, of the Pilgrim Fathers, or of the Boston Tea Party. If you are a little rusty on these things, take ten minutes before you go to bed and read it yourself, and then repeat it to him next night in the simplest and most childlike language. Your reward will be given you in the rest and joy it will be to your own mind; and who can measure the results in the future?

THE GIRLS.

Nothing can betoken the fact of the early coming of the dawn of the Millennium more clearly than the fact that there is such a widespread interest awakened in this country on the subject of physical culture. If our young and blooming girls once learn thoroughly the lesson of health and real beauty, marriage will not serve them as it has so many of their mothers; instead of changing from the rosy, plump, sprightly, laughing girl to a haggard, thin, scrawny, sallow, old young woman, they will rest your eyes with a glimpse of young motherhood, still plump, rosy and sprightly, the laughing gaiety toned down into a smiling, cheerful sweetness that will charm with a deeper fullness than all the sparkling charms of inexperienced girlhood. It is good to know that this work of physical culture is being started in this city, and that some of our most influential young maidens and matrons are eagerly interested in the study. Sound, healthy spirits can easily and happily dwell only in sound, healthy and pure bodies.

THE MOTHERS.

It is to be hoped that a certain innovation in the East will speedily find its way out here. Two firms in New York City advertise to keep all the gloves sold in their establishments in repair as long as there are any gloves left to mend. Think of that! No hunting after the spool of black silk to find it all used up and Sunday at that! No vulgar appearance of finger tips through the torn ends of unsatisfactory gloves! And would you believe it? So popular has this innovation made these particular stores in question that the plan has been adopted by other stores, and then of course the original firm must do something more; and so they are now advertising to keep all the stockings purchased over their counters in good repair as long as there is a heel and a toe to mend. Spirits of our grandmothers! What are we coming to? Can you believe it all? Think of the vista that opens to the delighted gaze! No more stocking baskets, nor gaping heels. No more the weary Saturday night darning of countless heelless heels, toiling toes, and footless feet, and that is not all; if this thing keeps right on—and who says the Millennium shall not appear—think of buying shoes and having them kept in repair and daily called for to be properly blacked. Think of underwear, dresses, hats, furs, jewelry including the woman's notorious watch, and even dishes and tin pans, all mended and kept in repair by the enterprising and obliging dealer! Are you not ready to believe the prophecies of our coming rest from all labor?

Notes on Societies or Associations. RELIEF SOCIETY.

It caused a glow of happiness in every woman's heart to hear the words of President Woodruff on the closing day of Conference. "Inspired men, yes, and inspired women," he said, "noble women, by tens and thousands here in this church; intelligent women, virtuous women, and their sons and daughters have imbibed the same spirit." Such words from our honored President are glorious.

The Societies have begun the work of incorporation. Some of the conservative ones dreaded the change and the burden entailed; but all have gone to work in the right spirit, and a large increase of intelligent experience will be the result of this last move.

W. M. M. I. A.

The classes in the Y. M. M. I. A. Manual are very well attended in this city and in Provo colleges. Certainly some one is being benefited. Where are the young men between the ages of sixteen and forty years who ought to be enrolled in these classes?

The missionaries in this field last year performed so excellent a work that names are being rapidly selected to go throughout Zion in the interest of the Y. M. M. I. A.

Y. L. M. I. A.

It was understood that some sort of a manual specially adapted for the young girls was to be issued this Conference by the authorities here; where is it? It is an undeniable fact that there are ten to one young girls as compared with the young men who attend those various associations. Why is that? There is the same feature in the Y. L. M. I. A. that exists in the Y. M. M. I. A., few or no girls between the ages of fifteen or sixteen years, and the officers who are usually on the other side of thirty.

Will there always be more good women than good men?

THE PRIMARY.

If it were possible for the officers of these associations to take a course somewhere in Kindergarten teaching, much better results would flow from their labors. As it is already, much good is done.

Primary speakers, presidents and officers should try always to put their teaching and preaching in the form of stories. Children do not understand, indeed they are sadly bored, by grown-up preaching, or indeed preaching of any kind. The example of Christ should be sufficient for us. All His sermons, except the grandly simple sermon on the Mount, was illustrated by a story or a parable.

The Primaries are in a thrifty condition, and all Utah can be proud of them.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I heard a Sunday school teacher from the country say, who was here at the late Conference, that he wished the semi-annual meeting could be held in the Stake Tabernacle. He said only about half of those present in the big Tabernacle could hear any way. He was vexed to think he could not catch six words spoken by Brother Maeser, for he was anxious to get all the help he could. He wondered if a smaller meeting just for officers of the Sunday school could not be held in a place where all could hear and enjoy the valuable instructions given here at Conference times.

The Clothes We Wear.

Says the New York Recorder:

Do not wear—a small, flat hat, if you are short and stout.

A high, narrow hat if you are tall and thin.

Very coarse net veils when the fine light ones are so much prettier.

A gown that has been made for you without a careful study of your figure.

A jacket simply because it is fashionable, if it is not becoming to you.

Gloves of brilliant colors. They make the hands look large, and they are not in good taste.

Solled white slippers. They look untidy, to say the least.

From the Mail and Express.—Women are beginning to turn their attention to cloth gowns. No more light dresses will be ordered, and tailor-made garments are consequently in the ascendency. While it is early yet to speak confidently of the incoming modes, it is safe to tell that we are threatened with a complete change of style—a regular revolution in our costume. It seems that we are to return to the fashions of the First Empire, and materials are being prepared with this view. All the dressmakers, both great and small, the milliners and fashion journals are looking up the albums and collections of engravings of Napoleon I. era, and costumes are being made up on these lines. Let us hope that they will be modified, and then it remains to see whether the elegances will accept and adopt the change. Of course bouquets and outer garments will follow suit, and we must expect peleries and long pelisses. It is even hinted that bare arms and low-necked dresses will come in again for dressy wear, but with winter before us the idea is too preposterous to dwell upon.

It is also told that with all this white stockings will be in vogue again, and are being manufactured to meet the expected demand. We shall have to change our style of hairdressing to suit. However, with these on Jits there is one very comforting assurance, and that is, come what will, walking dresses are to be short; the train has been found really absurd for the street, and it is to be reserved for home or evening wear, which is decidedly a rational move.

Tailor-made gowns already to be seen are made mostly with short bodices and are either belted at the waist or finished with a pointed band just below. Many gowns are still made with Eton and zouave coats.

Boston Daily Traveller.—The dress of Americans and of North Europeans is oftener of a hue than it is of black or white, but nevertheless it cannot be said that we apply color to dress. For color, technically speaking, means a mingling of pure hues which enrich each other, and form, by their effect upon each other of contrast and relation, an agreeable and harmonious whole. Of the art of thus combining colors we have neither a knowledge nor an inherited instinct. How many women in a thousand can say, for example, what is the effect of mingling a light tone of a dark color with a dark tone of a light color? or know in what proportions of area the primaries balance each other? or even know what the complementaries are? And yet these are the mere alphabet of the subject.

We know so little about color that we can't tell a harmony from a discord, and our eyes are so unused to it that a bit of pure tone like an Italian woman's neckerchief in a costume fairly frightens us, as red does a turkey. If we venture to indulge the inclination for color which we all have by nature, we are more likely than not to produce a crude motley. The best educated of us, therefore, take refuge in negation following, in this particular at least, Moller's counsel to leave dress to the tailor, while the ignorant flaunt orillies and bring color into disrepute. We have taught ourselves to believe that color is not desirable. We think we don't like it; we say that it is not refined.

This is, of course, nonsense. Nature's colors of sky and landscape cannot be surpassed for splendor; art uses color pure; and the most beautiful fabrics and garments in the world are such largely because of splendid color. The most gorgeous hues royalty has in all ages appropriated to its own costume, and who shall say that the purple of Rome and the colors of the sun of the Chinese emperor are vulgar? No, superrefinement is not the reason we eschew color in our dress, and it would be a contradiction of terms to say that it is an excuse for our uncertainty.

Some people attribute our disinclination for color to the cloudy skies of the north, but, though we may have inherited a tendency from this cause, it is hardly operative in America, where nature is as brilliant as anywhere in the world. Goethe suggests that it may be due to weakness of sight, but this will not explain our ignorance of harmonies. Our puritan ancestry is partly responsible. Our good and great forefathers regarded with complaisance little that did not lie in the moral sphere. Color is purely æsthetic, hence they would have none of it.

The most active influence deterring us from the study of color is undoubtedly fashion. We take our cue from northwest Europe, which knows little more of color than we, and therefore color is not fashionable.

HOW TO DRESS THE NECK.

Not long since the writer was watching two women buy collars. They had short, fat necks, and bought the high, choking collars which fasten with a collar-button closely about the throat. They looked longingly at some turned-down collars, but one said: "No, we can't wear these collars, our necks are too short." That was just where these good ladies blundered. If, instead of encasing their plethoric throats in a tight, white strip of linen, they had bought turn-down collars of medium width, the effect would have been much better. Nothing is more distressing than a fat neck in a high, standing collar. The artistic dressing of the neck is a study in itself.

When the neck is short and stumpy, a narrow collar looks mean, and a high collar appears to threaten asphyxiation. The turn-down collar is trying, to be sure; but it has a look of comfort which is refreshing in these days of chokers. Somewhat coarse lace, when well-adjusted, are an agreeable decoration for the short neck. When the neck is long, gaunt and bony, fly to ruffles. When it is fallow, welcome the feather boa. For the lank neck the hair should never be dressed high; better long plaits and loops of hair to unite the head and shoulders. In evening dress the lank and skinny-necked women should sedulously avoid small necklaces and thin chains, as they only heighten the hard effect. If a heavy necklace cannot be worn, a band of black velvet is the best decoration for a thin neck.

Tulle, chiffon and feathers should be cultivated by the thin-necked women, as these materials have a softening effect. The short, white throat needs no necklace, band or chain of any description, and the effect is much better if left absolutely unadorned. The V-shaped bodice is the most becoming evening corsage for stout women; the square-necked—or, better, still, the round-necked—for this women. Only those who have a perfect throat and shoulders should essay the low, round English bodice.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Keep flowers fresh by putting a pinch of soda in the water.

Boil the clothesline and it will not "kink," as new rope is apt to do.

According to the medical record, castor oil has not failed in any case to remove warts to which it was applied once a day for two to six weeks.

To clean a stove zinc or zinc-lined bath-tub, mix ammonia and whiting to a smooth paste; apply it to the zinc and let it dry. Then rub it off until steel remains.

When scaling fish hold them under water in a pan; then the scales will not fly in your face, but will fall to the bottom, and when the water is poured from them are ready to turn into the slop pail or compost heap.

Five or six quarts of bleached flour can be prepared at a time by taking one tablespoonful of soda and two of cream-of-tartar, or three of baking powder to every quart of flour, sifting it thoroughly three times and put away for use.

To keep water cool for drinking get a common earthenware pitcher, the commoner the better, as it will be more porous; wrap it all around, leaving no inch of it bare, with wet flannel. Keep the flannel wet and the water will shortly be as cold as is good for drinking purposes, almost ice cold.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Most women wear the stunningest dresses they have when they travel.

About the worst thing that can happen a woman is to get married and go to boarding.

Girls sometimes have to marry poor husbands to appreciate what good fathers they had.

Every woman thinks she has a right to select the women her husband should like or dislike.

No woman weighing more than a hundred and fifty should let her hair fly loose around her face.

Girls should not tell their married friends quite so many of their secrets. The married women tell them to their husbands.

Every woman is sorry for some other woman on account of something her husband told her about the other woman's husband.

Every time a woman's acquaintances call attention to a child that is with her on the streets, she pulls out a handkerchief and wipes its nose.

Outdoor speaking and traveling has done so much to develop the masculine tendencies of Mrs. Lease that she is now referred to as "Her Whiskers."

She never asked if her hat was on straight;
She never ran from a mouse;
She kissed all the boys with never a blush;
She's a wee baby girl in the house.

The real patriot Kansas girl does not tell her fortune with daisy petals. She uses a sunflower instead. The gods grant any wish to a girl with a sunflower in her hand.

An Atchison girl came down town the other day with both hands badly stained by putting up fruit, which she pleased a practical young man of the town that she is now wearing a diamond ring.

A woman lost her hat on the Missouri Pacific train coming to Atchison from St. Joe this morning. She took her husband's hat, made peculiar creases in the crown, and after putting it on her head, stuck a long pin through it, and sent her husband out to buy another for himself.

Speaking of funerals, why do sensitive persons who have had no acquaintance with the deceased attend them? Sitting behind me at the church services over the remains of Gilmore was a woman who came entirely from curiosity, as I gathered from her remarks, and who became almost hysterical as the services continued. These people must find such affairs a species of cheap intoxicant I fancy.

The new product from common flax straw, named fibrilla, is generally regarded as likely to have an important bearing on textile interests in the future. By the new process of manipulation, as described, such straw is reduced to a short staple very closely resembling cotton or wool, and when mixed with either is found to add materially to the value of the product in beauty and strength. Twenty-five per cent. of fibrilla mixed with 75 per cent. of wool is said to make a broadcloth superior to that made of wool alone.—N. Y. Sun.

New York Recorder. — There is a Woman's Accident Association in this city, but they don't seem to do a rushing business. I suppose they require a promise that you will not wear high-heeled shoes and risk breaking your necks on the elevated steps; that you won't grip the vital organs in bands of steel and bone, so that a little exercise will paralyze them, that you will refrain from putting belladonna in your eyes to make them bright, and that you will adjust arsenic complexion wafers and hair dyes that cause softening of the brain. With a few such precautions the risk should be an ordinarily safe one.

If girls were brought up to be married as their brothers are brought up to earn a living, there would be less shilly-shallying and more happy marriages. Every girl not an invalid expects to go into a home of her own, and it is just as much her business to keep a house and keep it well as it is her brother's business to provide one. An ignorant, shiftless woman is as reprehensible as a lazy good-for-nothing man.

The German girl gravely begins, while in short skirts and hair braided down her back, to make and put by things for her house, but the American girl must not appear to have a thought beyond her beaux or people will think her forward.

She is not supposed to make a study of the duties of wife, mother and housekeeper until she is engaged for good, and then she masters the rudiments of her trade while the wedding preparations are going on, besides devoting six out of her sixteen waking hours to her lover. No wonder she is so fagged out and nervous by the wedding day that it takes the whole honeymoon to recuperate.

New York World.—Lord Tennyson, who, many people think, was scarcely less a philosopher whose opinions are authoritative than a poet whose words are a delight, said in the course of his career many things about women. If he had been merely a poet the fact would not have been so important, for poets are forced to say "whatever suits the rhyme," but as he was a thinker also it is interesting to see how he interprets the puzzling half of creation.

One thing that he insists upon is the indissoluble bond between them and men.

"The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free; if she be small, slight-natured, miserable, how shall man grow?"

That places quite a burden of responsibility upon women, but elsewhere he remarks:

"As the husband is, the wife is," which again places the burden on the masculine shoulders. Probably the poet meant to divide it.

About the esteem in which she should be held, he speaks in no uncertain manner:

"Who does not honor his wife, dishonors himself," and "It is the low man thinks the woman low."

Somewhat equivocal is this:

"It is hard to wive and thrive in a year."

Which probably merely means that so much good fortune does not befall a man in so short a time.

His various heroines were all a little above the ordinary.

"Her eyes are homes of silent prayer."

"Eyes not down-dropped nor over-bright, but fed with the clear-pointed flame of chastity."

"By common clay, taken from the common earth, moulded by God and tempered by the tears of angels to the perfect form of woman."

"Pure vestal thoughts in the translucent fane of her still spirit."

"Happy he with such a mother! Faith in woman-kind best with his blood, and trust in all things high comes easy to him; and though he trip and fall, he shall not blind his soul with clay."

"She stood a sight to make an old man young."

So much and much more did he say of women. And they in gratitude may well apply to him other lines of his:

"He rested well content that all was well," and "He crowned a happy life with a fair death."

DENVER & RIO GRANDE STRIKE.

The Denver and Rio Grande Railway company have issued from the office of the president and general manager a circular containing their version of the circumstances leading up to the strike of engineers, conductors, firemen and brakemen on the second division of their road inaugurated on the morning of the 15th inst. and now on.

On August 22nd Division Superintendent R. M. Ridgway ordered that train and engine men on trains 61 and 64 must not detain their trains to get meals at Malta or Glenwood; that on leaving terminals they must prepare themselves to go through as it was very desirable that the trains should make fast time.

The company says that on August 24th, two days after the issuance of the bulletin order, Engineer William Gordon was listed to take west bound California fast freight train No. 61, from Minturn to Grand Junction. As the train was ready to leave Minturn, Engineer Gordon called the trainmaster, who was in Minturn, upon his engine and informed him that unless bulletin order No. 23, relating to detention of trains 61 and 64 at Malta and Glenwood by train and engine men taking meals, was recalled, he would not leave Minturn with the train. He used violent language, and stated he "did not care a damn if he never works another minute," he would not go until the order was recalled, and told the trainmaster to go to the office and repeat this to division headquarters. This the trainmaster did at once. In order to avoid contention and disarrangement of the train service, the division superintendent, on being advised by telegraph of the situation, directed the trainmaster to remove the order from the bulletin board, and train No. 61 was then taken out by Engineer William Gordon.

An investigation into the action of Mr. Gordon was ordered by the general superintendent, and was held at Salida at 10:30 a.m. October 3rd.

The following is a verbatim transcript of the proceedings of the investigating board which consisted of R. M. Ridgway, division superintendent, chairman; A. W. Jones, division master mechanic; J. E. Barnes, traveling engineer; G. H. Barnes, trainmaster; I. G. Baker, locomotive engineer (selected by Mr. Gordon):

Mr. Ridgway—Gentlemen, this meeting is called for the purpose of investigating the case of Engineer William Gordon refusing to leave Minturn. until Bulletin No. 23 was recalled.

The following letter from Trainmaster Barnes was read, as well as Bulletin No. 23, copy of which will be found above:

SALIDA, Colo., September 28th, 1892.
Mr. R. M. Ridgway, Sup., Salida, Colo.
Dear Sir—On August 24, as train 61 was getting ready to leave the yard at Minturn, Engineer William Gordon called me up on his engine and informed me that the bulletin in regard to eating on trains 61 and 64 at Glenwood and Malta must be recalled before he would leave the yard. He said that no fireman could fire a hog from Grand Junction to Minturn for him without having something to eat on the road, as they couldn't stand it. He also said that he didn't care a d—n if he never worked another minute; he would not go until it was recalled, and for me to go in office and tell them so, which I immediately done.

Engineer George Gordon was present and expressed his displeasure, but not in such a positive and violent manner as William Gordon.

I only said to them that if they had used a reasonable length of time at these points to eat in, the bulletin would never have appeared. Afterwards in conversation with George Gordon I said that engine men, in fact the whole train crew, were eating too long, and that these trains were important and all should take an interest in making good time with them, and on account of our inability to do so we were losing freight.

G. H. BARNES, Trainmaster.

Mr. Ridgway—Please give us the dead time of these trains.

Answer—Sixty-one has twenty minutes at Malta and fifteen minutes at Glenwood. Sixty-four has seventeen minutes at Glenwood and eighteen minutes at Malta.

G. H. Barnes—This letter is correct, is it not, Mr. Gordon?

Mr. Gordon—It is correct.

Mr. Ridgway—Then Mr. Barnes' report of the case is correct, is it, Mr. Gordon?

Mr. Gordon—As near as I can remember.

Mr. Ridgway—I think you should remember whether or not you said you did not care a damn whether you worked for the company or not, you would not go out until the bulletin was recalled.

Mr. Gordon—I was pretty warm under the collar and thought the bulletin was unjust, and probably I said it.

Mr. Ridgway—I do not think it unjust. We do not want to deprive the men of a chance to get something to eat, but we want to get our trains through on time.

Mr. Gordon—I would like to ask for a little information. I would like to know if when I come out of Grand Junction late and get to Glenwood I am allowed the 17 minutes if I am behind time.

Mr. Ridgway—Certainly.

Mr. Gordon—I have got to oil around the engine myself, and take water, and that takes considerable time.

Mr. Ridgway—Your fireman can oil one side.

Mr. Gordon—I have been in the habit of carrying a lunch with me. I have a family in Minturn. Sometimes I do not carry one out of Grand Junction as I have to have to put up at a restaurant. I will tell you my reasons. If we come out of Grand Junction with a lunch, when we can get to Minturn there is no restaurant open where we can get anything to eat, and the fireman is in no condition to fire an engine on an empty stomach, as he is compelled to do when we come out of Grand Junction and catch the run to Aspen, and he cannot get anything to eat without losing a lot of sleep.

Mr. Ridgway—You will admit that it is not very hard work to fire from Minturn to Glenwood.

Mr. Gordon—Yes, sir; but the hard work is from Glenwood to Aspen, on train 65.

Mr. Ridgway—I do not know why our employes should not carry a lunch.

Mr. Baker—Of course, a man has time enough to eat on the dead time shown on card. I do not think that Mr. Gordon took the right means to have his bulletin cancelled. If he thought it was obnoxious, he should have had one of the men come over and see Mr. Ridgway. I think Mr. Gordon used rather unbecoming language in regard to having the bulletin recalled.

Mr. Gordon—I would like to say further that I did not think that the bulletin was just. I wanted to live up to instructions, but I did not see how we could with this bulletin. I do not like to have a fireman fire an engine for me on an empty stomach. I told the trainmen that we did not want to run this thing into the ground. I know that there has been lots of unnecessary delays at Glenwood, but I claim that I have not caused them.

Mr. Baker—You say that you were not making a personal complaint, but that it was made for the fireman. I think that the fireman should be able to fight his own battles.

Mr. Gordon—If the fireman cleans his ash pan and takes coal at Glenwood, it takes about all the time allowed there. I have often cleaned the ash pan myself for the fireman. I think the bulletin was an imposition on the fireman more than on me. If the fireman cleaned the ash pan and took his own coal, he would not have time to eat. If we could eat at Minturn, it would be a whole lot different; and they can not get sleep.

Mr. Jones—Even if it was so, it does not justify you in disobeying orders.

J. E. Barnes—I think Mr. Gordon did exceedingly wrong in refusing to go out until the bulletin was recalled, even if it was obnoxious to him. I was in Minturn, but did not hear the conversation. The trainmaster told me that Gordon refused to go out until the bulletin was recalled.

Mr. Jones—This appears to be a clear case of insubordination.

Mr. Gordon—Supposing I took a lunch with me; do you suppose I would be attending to my business while I eat it? I know that the fireman could not do it.

Mr. Ridgway—I think a man can eat on an engine as well as he can take out a cigar and light it and smoke.

Mr. Baker—Could not the head brakeman relieve the fireman for a few minutes while he ate his lunch?

Mr. Gordon—I would not like to eat while going through Glenwood canyon. I usually hang out of the window while going through there. I have never struck any rocks there, perhaps it is because I am lucky.

Mr. Ridgway—Well, Mr. Gordon acknowledges he refused to go out and that he said what the trainmaster states in his letter.

G. H. Barnes—There were no messages in regard to the matter. I was the key myself talking with the dispatcher and told him that Gordon refused to go out until the bulletin was recalled.

Mr. Baker—I think you should have had some representative man come to see Mr. Ridgway about the matter. Mr. Ridgway is a pretty reasonable man about letting men eat.

Mr. Gordon—I scarcely ever go over the road but what there is from two and a half to four hours delayed time. I never get any letters in regard to it.

Mr. Baker—Perhaps the engine does a little late running and covers some of it up.

Mr. Ridgway—I presume that these delays are doing local work and meeting trains, and are so reported by the conductors.

Mr. Gordon—Well, so far as I am concerned, I do not want to answer for the shortcomings of other men on the road, but I am willing to suffer for my own. I have always tried to work for the interests of the company, and do not think that anybody can say that I have not. Of course, I did wrong in acting as I did about this business, but at the time I thought I did right, as I did not think a man capable of doing his work on an empty stomach.

Mr. Ridgway—I believe this is all, gentlemen, unless you have something more to say on the subject.

Findings—Engineer Gordon acknowledges having used the language in his conversation with Mr. Barnes at Minturn, as reported, and that he refused to obey the bulletin order or go out until it was recalled.

A copy of the proceedings of the board of investigation was forwarded to the General Superintendent on October 4th, with the following letter of transmittal, signed by Mr. R. M. Ridgway, superintendent of division, and Mr. A. W. Jones, master mechanic:

SALIDA, Colo., October 4th, 1892.
Mr. N. W. Sample, General Superintendent, Denver:

Dear Sir—Herewith were returned papers in case of William Gordon, engineer, with report of the investigation attached.

You will note that Engineer Gordon acknowledges having used the language as reported by Trainmaster Barnes, also that he refused to obey the bulletin order or go out on train 61 of August 24th until it was recalled.

This is a case that merits dismissal from the service, and we would recommend that it be done. Truly yours,

(Signed) R. M. Ridgway, Superintendent.
(Signed) A. W. Jones,
Master Mechanic.

The general superintendent in considering the matter gave due weight to the previous record of Engineer Gordon, and in consideration thereof overruled the recommendation of the division superintendent and master mechanic, and directed that Engineer Gordon be suspended for thirty days.

In conformity with the order of the general superintendent, Engineer William Gordon was notified of the decision, his suspension taking effect from October 2nd, the day he was taken from his run pending investigation and decision.

The case was taken up by the employees of the second division, and apparently secret meetings were held, and at 2:10 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, October 15th, the following message was received by General Superintendent Sample, at his residence in Denver:

MINTURN, Colo., Oct. 14th, 1892.

Mr. N. W. Sample, General Superintendent D. & R. G., Denver:

By action of employees taken at a union meeting at Minturn, October 7th, we as a committee hereby request the reinstatement of Engineer William Gordon and full time from the date of his suspension. This matter to be made known by a bulletin being posted at Salida, Leadville, Minturn and Grand Junction. The bulletin to be conspicuously posted at 7 o'clock a. m., October 15th, and unless such bulletin is posted by such time, we as the engineers, conductors, firemen and brakemen positively refuse to handle trains on second division after 7 o'clock a. m., October 15th.

By order of COMMITTEE.

In accordance with the threat expressed in the telegram the engineers, conductors, firemen and brakemen of the second division which extends from Salida to Grand Junction, abandoned and refused to take out their trains at 7 o'clock in the morning of the same day (the 15th of October), and no trains have moved over the division since that time.

Believing that friendly conferences between employer and employees for the purpose of adjusting differences are desirable, and that to avert a strike, disastrous alike to the company and the men, and in effects greatly injurious to the public, arbitration in this case might be resorted to, the following telegram was sent at 5:16 p. m. to the division superintendent:

DENVER, Colo., October 15th, 1892.
R. M. Ridgway, Salida:

I shall be glad to confer with any committee of our employees for the adjustment of any grievances, and if we cannot agree, am willing to arbitrate matters of difference; in the meantime, the men should return to and remain at work pending the adjustment, either by conference or arbitration. The company has always treated its employees liberally and justly, and the present strike, almost without notice, will not be sustained by railway employees generally, or the public. Give a copy of this message to the committee.

(Signed.) N. W. SAMPLE.

To this the following reply was received by the division superintendent:

Salida, October 15, 1892.

R. M. Ridgway, Salida.

We, the employee of second and third divisions, instruct our committee to inform you that we will not accept Mr.

Sample's terms, and that we will remain out until a settlement is made amicable to ourselves.

(Signed) EMPLOYEES TRAIN AND MOTIVE POWER DEPARTMENTS, SECOND AND THIRD DIVISIONS.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session last night, President Loofbourrow in the chair. The councilmen in attendance were: Rich, Follaud, Hardy, Horn, Moran, Kelly, Evans, Simondt, Wantland, Beardsley, Heiss, Lawson—12.

Absent—Bell, Karriok—2.

The minutes of the previous regular meeting were read, amended and approved.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

PETITIONS

were read and referred as follows:

Alfred Gun asked that he be remunerated to the amount of $2000 for damages sustained to his house on Eleventh East street by city workmen blasting for gravel. Committee on claims.

J. C. Conklin and others asked that a Mr. Jennings be appointed to the position of food inspector. Referred to the mayor.

Joseph H. Walker and others asked that the Council instruct the city engineer to establish a permanent sidewalk grade on Second South street between Main and West Temple streets. Committee on streets.

R. G. McNiece and others asked for the appointment of a police matron for the city jail. Committee on police.

B. F. Whittemore asked that the crossing on Third West street at the Union Pacific depot be repaired. Committee on streets.

A. B. Jones, cashier of the Utah National Bank, again asked for the removal of the City Railway Company's station house at the corner of First South and Main streets. Committee on streets.

NOW OUT OF OFFICE.

M. S. Thompson tendered his resignation as sealer of weights and measures. Received.

SIXTEEN TRACKS.

William Nelson and others represented that sixteen tracks had been laid by the Rio Grande Western on Second South street just west of Sixth West street. On this showing they asked the Council to build a viaduct over the tracks for the safety of school children. Committee on streets.

BAMBERGER FRANCHISE VETOED.

The following from the mayor was read:

Hon. C. E. Stanton, City Recorder:

I herewith again return unapproved the resolution granting a franchise to the Great Salt Lake and Hot Springs railway for the following reasons, to-wit: The amendments made by the City Council do not fully meet my former objections in this: No point from which the proposed road to the west shall start is fixed, which as I construe, gives the grantee the right to select the point of starting and the course of the line, thus throwing the streets of the whole city open for selection.

The franchise granted, by a fair estimate, is worth $250,000, and in view of that fact and the further fact that the property of the inhabitants in the vicinity of the road is injuriously affected, the amount of road required to be built is not sufficient to destroy the speculative features of the franchise. To justify such a grant the grantee should be required to build within a reasonable time a road to some point which would make it commercially valuable to the city. A road of five miles west is of no commercial value to the city, and under the franchise, when five miles to the west shall have been built then the grantees may stop and hold this valuable franchise for twenty-five years for sale or speculation. It a road to Deep Creek is contemplated by the Council, and short of this point no road to the west can be of much commercial value to the city, then the grantee should be required to build to that point within—say three years.

Horn moved that consideration of the matter be deferred until later in the evening. Carried.

PAVING CONTRACT VETOED.

The following was also read:

C. E. Stanton, City Recorder:

I herewith return unapproved the paving contract entered into by the city acting through its proper officers on the one part, and the Culmer-Jennings Paving company on the other part, approved by the City Council on the 11th day of October, for the following reasons:

The board of public works in its report submitting said contract to the City Council for approval says, "We would respectfully call attention to the experimental character of the asphalt which the Culmer-Jennings Co. proposes to use; it being a Utah product and as yet practically untried." This statement alone, in my opinion, is sufficient grounds for the rejection of the contract, notwithstanding in the face of the facts stated the board of public works with but one dissenting voice (that of C. L. Haines, the chairman) concurred in awarding the contract, and the City Council has ratified the same.

To experiment with untried paving material in the very heart of the commercial center of the city to me seems reckless and dangerous to the extreme. The annoyance, inconvenience and damage which the removal and replacement of the imperfect material, should the experiment proposed prove unsuccessful, is of such a nature as can not be measured by dollars and cents nor can any bond be so framed as to furnish adequate indemnity. The community no doubt remembers the experiment made by Geo. Goss a few years since with home asphalt on Commercial street. All must concede that Mr. Goss is a shrewd, cautious and able business man and yet under the guidance of the same expert Mr. Le Sier, employed by the Culmer-Jennings Paving company, as I am credibly informed, he was as sanguine as the Culmer Paving company now are regarding the quality of its material, that the experiment on Commercial street would be a perfect success. The result of the test of one winter most of the citizens of the city no doubt remember and judging from that can form a correct idea of how disastrous it would be to this city if anything like as great a failure as that should occur on three blocks by two in the heart of the city. Again the season is now so far advanced that it would be much better to delay the paving covered by the contract until settled weather in the coming spring, at which time it can be rushed through to the finish without the interruption or delay which has proved so vexatious in the case of State street. Besides the Culmer-Jennings Paving company have paved Richard's avenue, and the test of one winter's frost there may throw much light upon the quality of the material proposed to be used in the execution of the contract.

As suggested, delay under the circumstances cannot work any serious injury, but would be better than to commence the work so late in the season. I think that prudence suggests that the material proposed should be subjected to the coming winter's test before its final adoption.

Respectfully submitted.

R. N. BARKIN, Mayor.

CITY GAS STOCK SOLD.

The following bid for the 787 shares of gas stock owned by the city from E. H. Rollins & Sons, was read: For the 787 shares of stock, $100,000, and if the franchise of the Salt Lake Power, Light & Heating company was extended for twelve and one-half years, they would give $105,000. A certificate check for $10,000 accompanied the bid. As said franchise still runs for twelve and one-half years, such action would extend it for twenty-five years from date.

Beardsley moved to accept the $100,000 proposition.

Hardy said the Council should be a little careful how it moved in the matter. The city had gradually been disposing of all its earning property. If the present reckless course were continued it would be necessary to increase the rate of taxation. That would be a burden on property owners. The city's gas stock was now paying an annual dividend of $26,000 that would pay the interest of a great many bonds.

Horn said he was not in favor of the city owning any property in outside corporations. He seconded Mr. Beardsley's motion.

Wantland also spoke in favor of Mr. Beardsley's motion.

Hardy said that the gas company's net earnings in 1891 were $50,000. The city's proposition of that amount would be about one-third.

Lawson said that Mr. Karriek intimated a few weeks since that $100 per share could be secured, but he was not present for some good reason he presumed. It was a question in his mind, however, if it would not be advisable to defer action for a few days.

Wantland said again that the sale of the stock would be beneficial to the city—which would need the $100,000 and as much more as it could get. The prospect of selling the corner near the city was not very bright at present.

Rich—Do we need the money now?

Wantland—Not tonight.

Rich—How soon?

Wantland—Just as quickly as we can get it.

Rich—You are a member of the finance committee. Will you tell me how much money we have in the treasury?

Wantland (hesitatingly)—Well—

Rich—About $190,000?

Wantland—Yes, I think so.

Beardsley—We have been giving franchisees away here for some time, perhaps it would be a good idea to investigate the matter and see if we cannot get a $5000 bonus.

Hardy—I want to—Simond—I object to Mr. Hardy speaking more than once. I insist on the rules being enforced.

Moran (generously)—I move that Mr. Hardy be given unanimous consent to speak again.

Simond—I object.

Moran—Then he can use my turn.

The chair (smilingly)—You can delegate no such power to a colleague.

Simond withdrew his objection and Hardy was allowed to take the floor. He simply advised that further action be deferred in the matter for one week, and so moved.

The chair stated that he believed that all the verbal motions made were out of order.

Lawson—As this is a matter of public trust involving the disposition of valuable property, as business men and public custodians we cannot afford to sell this tonight. We should take reasonable time to consider this proposition. He moved that the matter be laid over for one week.

MR. PENHALE AMENDS.

Mr. George F. Penhale, a representative of the Rollins' Company, was present and amended his former proposition as to give the city $105,000 cash down and the matter of extending the franchise of the Power, Light and Heating Company to be considered afterwards.

Lawson said that as representatives of 65,000 people the Councilmen could not afford to close the bargain without further investigation. Perhaps the bid would be increased. It had already been increased during the evening by the amount of $5000. He wanted it to reach the apex.

Wantland—I would like to know where the gentleman found that word; also if he included unborn children in his instantaneous census.

“Ray! Ray!” went the president's gavel with the words “gentlemen you must not be personal.”

THE SALE COMPLETED.

The sale was consummated on the following vote: Ayes—Beardsley, Folland, Helsa, Horn, Kelly, Rich, Simond, Wantland—8. Noes—Evans, Hardy, Lawson, Loofbourow, Moran—5.

SANITARY CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

The board of health sent in a communication appointing the following gentlemen as sanitary inspectors at a compensation of $3 per day: L. C. Johnson, Fred Taylor, W. B. Andrew, Mr. Newton, W. S. Hawkes, I. N. Fisher, Frank May, G. B. Mahan, Mr. Druce, Mort G. Taylor. Sanitary committee.

THE MAYOR'S VETOES were then taken up on motion of Lawson. The paving contract veto was first considered.

Beardsley said: I am going to vote against the mayor's veto. We want some work done here. We have got a lot of idle men here, probably 500, to put to work. It would be an act of charity.

Rich—I am in favor of proceeding with paving. I am opposed to the mayor's veto. We are being trifled with by the mayor like school boys. In the interest of facilitating business I suggest that hereafter when bids are received by the Council we simply refer the matter to the mayor and let him signify which company we shall give the contract to.

Wantland—I am in favor of doing the work now.

Lawson—This Council is composed of fifteen men who are under oath to perform their duties honestly and to the city's interest. Yet the mayor overrides our actions invariably. Why should he? Of course he gets a salary larger than all of ours combined, but that does not make a bigger or a better man.

The contract was then again ratified on the following vote notwithstanding the mayor's veto:

Ayes—Beardsley, Evans, Folland, Hardy, Helsa, Kelly, Lawson, Moran, Rich, Wantland—10.

Noes—Horn, Loofbourow, Simond—3.

THIS ALSO WAS REPASSED.

The vetoed resolution granting an amended franchise to the Great Salt Lake, Bountiful & Hot Springs railway was also passed over the mayor's protest. The vote stood:

Ayes—Beardsley, Evans, Helsa, Horn, Kelly, Lawson, Loofbourow, Moran, Simond, Wantland—10.

Nays—Folland, Hardy, Rich—3.

An adjourned session of the City Council was held last night. President Loofbourow was absent and his seat was occupied with dignity and ability by Councilman Rich.

The members in attendance were Folland, Moran, Horn, Lawson, Kelly, Evans, Beardsley, Wantland, Helsa, Hardy, Rich—11.

Absent—Loofbourow, Bell, Karriek—3.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The regular proceedings of the Council are given below.

THEY WILL HAVE LIGHT.

On recommendation of the committee on improvements an electric light was ordered placed at the intersection of Third South and Eighth West streets.

THE “SILENT STEED” NOISANCE.

The committee on streets sent in two reports on the bicycle proposition.

The majority report signed by Councilors Wantland and Hardy recommended that the city attorney be instructed to draw up an ordinance prohibiting coasting and fast riding on paved sidewalks by bicyclers or tricyclers. They believed that the riders of the silent steed should be prohibited from riding on the sidewalks except they complied with certain regulations.

The minority report signed by Messrs. Lawson and Helsa recommended that bicycles be allowed to use the sidewalks up to 9 a. m., but not after that hour.

After considerable discussion the majority report was adopted.

CURRENT STREET IMPROVEMENT.

It is ordered that Current street be graded and otherwise improved.

NATURAL GAS FRANCHISES.

The committee on streets submitted two reports on the matter of granting franchises to the Indiana and Salt Lake Natural Gas company.

The majority report signed by councilors Helsa, Hardy and Bell recommended that franchise be granted, provided the companies produce gas in sufficient quantity for commercial purposes.

The minority report signed by Wantland and Lawson recommended that no franchise be granted either company at present and that the recorder be instructed to communicate with the American Gas and Fuel company, (which has a franchise) requesting them to furnish information as to what progress they were making toward supplying the city with natural gas.

Moran moved to lay both reports on the table as they meant nothing.

Lawson said he admitted that the report which he signed meant nothing. That is why he signed it. (Laughter.) Simondi—Are you speaking in favor of either company; if so, which?

Lawson (warmly)—Mr. President, if that gentleman will pay attention to what I say he will understand me.

Simondi (resentfully)—Oh, you are fresh. I just wanted to know—

The chair's gavel fell with terrific force as Moran said, Mr. President, I think you should make every one pay attention.

Simondi—I will say—

Lawson—I still have the floor, Mr. Simondi. Mr. President, that man is out of order all the time.

Simondi—Oh, you go off, I'm all right.

Lawson—You are, are you?

Simondi (snappishly)—Yes, I am, am I. You can't monkey with me.

The Chair—Gentlemen, this must cease.

The reports were finally rejected.

SANITARY INSPECTORS.

The sanitary committee recommended the appointment of the following inspectors to take the sanitary census of the city: Mort G. Taylor, George Olsen, L. C. Johnston, C. M. Jackson, D. Dunn, D. Camomille, J. M. Fisher, Frank May, W. L. Hawke and H. E. Cottrell. The committee recommended that the wages of the inspectors be $3 per day.

The report was adopted, Mr. Moran and Messrs. Rich, Folland and Hardy voting "No."

FIRE LIMITS.

The committee on fire department reported adversely on the proposition to reduce the present fire limits. Laid on the table until the next meeting.

ECONOMY (?).

Councillors Wantland and Heles of the committee on finance reported:

We your committee report as follows in the matter of the watermaster's accounts: In accordance with the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Council we have examined the records of the watermaster's department and find time books, records of work performed, water measurements, copies of bills, pay rolls and other useful records now being kept in good shape.

We believe that the complaints heretofore concerning lack of records has resulted from the economy exercised in the office by not having a clerk. We recommend that the work of the clerk employed in the sewer department be so arranged that one-half of his time shall be given to the work of the watermaster's office and his time charged half to each department.

Moran—That is a very dimmy report. The committee recommends the employment of a clerk for the watermaster's department. If, as they say, everything is all right, why this recommendation? Let well enough alone. I do not like this way of attacking reports, but when they come in wrong I intend to jump on them and will do so.

Hardy also opposed the report. He said it might be true that the report of the committee was true but Mr. Harvey took no steps to put his office in good condition until his crooked methods were exposed.

When Mr. Harvey asked for clerical help it would be time enough to give it to him.

Evans said no demand for clerical assistance was asked and he therefore opposed the report.

Lawson said that $38,000 were expended annually in the watermaster's department and books should certainly be kept and one or more men should be employed to keep them.

Evans again claimed that the proposed clerical help was not necessary. Mr. Harvey could keep his own books. The report was finally adopted.

A "NATURAL GAS BABY."

Mr. Evans introduced the following:

Resolved, That the New American Gas & Fuel Company be requested to communicate with the council, submitting a statement of the progress being made in producing natural gas at their wells, and to state as nearly as indications would warrant at present when they will be prepared to deliver gas in this city.

Lawson said the resolution was simply the raising of a natural gas baby. The gentlemen who took so much interest in the proposition all had passed over the railroads and could go up and investigate for themselves.

Beardeley said that Mr. Lawson had more natural gas than the Tucarcara well at Lake Shore.

The resolution was finally adopted.

MUST LOOSE NO TIME.

Wantland offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the board of public works be requested to urge the contractors for paving on Main street and First and Second streets and for sidewalks on Main street, to prosecute the work vigorously and to give immediate attention to the work of curbing and grading.

Rich suggested that the Culver company be required to work three shifts and also be given to understand that they would get no extension. This met the approval of the council, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were made:

Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	38 62
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	6 00
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	6 00
R. M. Jones.....	29 14
Neder & Cleland.....	13 05
F. C. Armastrong.....	19 75
A. T. Payne & Company.....	3 25
Geo. T. Bell.....	4 00
J. S. Morse & Sons.....	3 00
The Times.....	3 60
C. H. Farson.....	2 10
The Tribune Publishing Company.....	6 80
Kelly & Co.....	6 10
American District Telegraph company.....	2 10
Herald Publishing company.....	3 60
Tribune Publishing company.....	12 00
Drusell & Frankel.....	3 20
Reese & Fish.....	5 70
Mason & Company.....	55 26
Dever Mercantile company.....	22 50
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	11 65
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	11 65
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	14 96
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	13 32
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	16 63
Salt Lake Lithograph and Publishing company.....	3 40
J. C. Murphy & Co.....	1 60
J. C. Murphy & Co.....	6 00
J. C. Murphy & Co.....	5 00
Inter Mountain Electric company.....	1 15

Barratt Bros.....	1 00
Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company.....	20 00
Mountain Ice and Cold Storage company.....	10 80
Gurnay Cab company.....	10 00
O. H. Parsons.....	3 55
O. M. Dull.....	12 60
North Greenwood.....	12 50
Kelsey & Gillespie.....	60 00
Holy Cross Hospital.....	49 00
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heat company.....	2,930 87
Salt Lake City Gas company.....	116 50
Tribune Publishing company.....	247 90
J. S. Morse & Sons.....	55 00
R. M. Jones.....	45 00
Salt Lake Lithograph company.....	6 00
Utah Oil Tank Line.....	1 00
Eagle Foundry & Manufacturing company.....	26 00
E. O. Coffin Hardware company.....	117 08
G. M. Scott.....	1 75
Sierra Nevada Lumber company.....	306 00
G. M. Scott & company.....	14 40
Morrison, Merrill & company.....	66 96
J. L. Frank.....	18 00
W. F. Rowe.....	14 10
Payne & Lyne.....	2 15
G. M. Scott & company.....	7 40
L. M. Pickard.....	3 55
Toddman & Strain.....	20 00
W. O. Pavey & company.....	6 25
Salt Lake Foundry and Machine company.....	9 85
E. O. Coffin Hardware company.....	1 00
H. H. Hardy.....	56 40
Wolsteinholm & Morris.....	184 45
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	2 16
G. M. Scott & company.....	1 80
Salt Lake Abstract and Title company.....	306 00
Callen.....	12 50
McCoy & Kendall.....	11 00
Grant's Transfer company.....	8 00
Total.....	$4,883 63

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The board of education held their regular weekly meeting last night, Vice President Nelson occupying the chair. There were present Newman, Alb, Pike, Duke, Pratt, Raybould, Dooly and Baldwin.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Mitgley & Sons Co. offered to install their system of heating and mechanical ventilation in the Sixteenth and Nineteenth schools as per plans and specifications submitted by them for the sum of $5075, and in connection with the same Mr. Hengesa, contractor, agree to build the necessary flues and install the Fuller & Warren system of closets and deduct from his contract $250. Committee on sites and buildings.

SCHOOL SITE IMPROVEMENTS.

The committee on sites and buildings made the following recommendations:

First—That authority be granted the committee to employ a gardener to look after the different schools. To see that time, care and building be utilized for walks. That the soil to be removed from the grounds of the lower school be dumped in the proper places on the Lincoln school grounds, so as to avoid moving it twice; to attend also to the proper distribution of the soil at the Franklin school grounds. When a sufficient amount has been hauled to the Lincoln, and generally to put the grounds in order around the Lincoln school, the Bryant school and others occupied for school purposes, Mr. Watson, the contractor at the Lincoln school, will furnish a laborer to assist in the work until the rubbish from the buildings is properly disposed of.

Second—That authority be granted it to have erected a fence in front and on two sides as far as the corner of the building of the Lincoln school, a close board fence six feet high on the remainder and rear.

Third—That there be placed in the basement of the Lincoln school drinking apparatus and sloppers on all floors, and also in all other buildings not otherwise provided for.

Fourth—That cloth blackboarding be placed on the walls of the Lincoln school, so that the woodwork can be furnished and the school prepared for occupancy at the earliest possible date.

Fifth—That the clerk of the board petition the City Council to construct a sewer lateral to the Lincoln school.

That the building to be erected in the Third district be named the Summer School.

Seventh—That the school building to be erected in the Ninth ward be named the Oquirrh school.

Eighth—The committee report that they had examined the bill of William Carroll for architectural services for the Summer school in the Third ward, referred to the committee at the last meeting of the board, and that $1071 be allowed, and that fifty per cent thereof be now appropriated, namely $535.50, as part payment. Adopted.

CONTRACT APPROVED.

The contract and bond of William Lister for the erection of a summer school in the Third ward were approved.

HEATING AND VENTILATING.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that the bid of the Hender & Meyer Engineering company for ventilating and heating the Jackson school in the Sixteenth ward, submitted July 28th for $3200, be accepted. The extra charge for necessary changes will be $125.

The contractors further offer to furnish an electric motor for $500, a water motor for $125 and a steam engine for $390. The committee say: We recommend the acceptance of the offer for the steam engine, $390, making a total cost of the entire plant complete of $3615, and that the president and clerk of the board be authorized to execute a contract therefor."

Adopted on a vote of 7 to 2.

CREMATION SYSTEM.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that the contractor be authorized to substitute the Smead system of cremating closets in the Jackson school, and that the difference in cost, $119, be deducted from his contract. Laid on the table.

MUST BE BRICK.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that the interior walls of the basement of the Jackson school be built of good hard brick, instead of rubble rock, provided that it be done by the contractor without additional expense. Adopted.

JANITORS APPOINTED.

The committee on furniture and supplies reported having appointed janitors as follows: John O'Donnell for building on Sixth street, at $15 a month; Francis Edmunds, Tenth ward vestry room, at $15 a month; William Fowler, vestry room in Twentieth ward at $15 a month; and T. E. Harris of the high school at $80 per month; also that they had rented a large room on Richards avenue from J. S. Richards at $25 a month in which to store the car load of school furniture just received and recommended that the room be kept constantly for that purpose. Adopted.

REMOVAL.

The committee on furniture and supplies recommended that J. B. Bloomfield, the janitor of the Tenth school, be removed. The committee also recommended that Mr. Melander be appointed in his place at a salary of $50 a month. Adopted.

Superintendent Millsap reported the engagement of the following teachers: Mrs. A. J. Gunnell, First school, at $70 per month; Miss Emma Tibbels, Fifteenth school, vice Miss Hall, at $70 per month; Miss Emma Whitney, Eleventh school, vice Miss Kuhn, at $75 per month. The committee on teachers recommended that the engagements be confirmed. Adopted.

The following from Dr. Millsap was read:

I desire to report to you that I have discontinued the primary department of the Thirteenth school, on account of the existence of scarlet fever in the west end of the boarding house adjoining the grounds of the above mentioned department. Reasonable prudence seemed to call for such action, which I hope will not long be necessary.

Approved.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following list of bills was ordered paid:

Salt Lake Building & Manufacturing company, for cut stone.....	$1,467 00
Cannington & Co., supplies.....	48 56
Mason & Co., material.....	31 87
Scott & Co., supplies.....	14 95
Novelty Manufacturing Co., railing states.....	18 50
Otto Eichorn, services.....	12 00
E. H. Stont, drayage.....	26 00
Rogers, Seaborn & Co., insurance.....	34 63
Herald, advertising.....	18 31
Deseret News, advertising.....	9 41
Stout & Drige, moving soil.....	69 00
Lewis & Taylor, repairs.....	31 00
Utah Stove & Hardware Co.....	5 45
James, Spencer, Bateman Co., repairs.....	90 10
T. H. Connelly, painting.....	155 00
John A. Peterson, rent.....	12 00
George E. Blair, rent.....	140 00
Joseph E. Caine, rent.....	300 00
W. K. Malone, expense.....	86 25
J. C. Watson & Bro., freight.....	59 88
Wm. Carroll, architectural service.....	535 50
Total.....	$1,627 40

THE IDAHO TEST OATH.

BOISE, Idaho, Oct. 18.—The supreme court has unanimously sustained the constitutionality of the Idaho test oath law. The decision in which the conclusion is reached was handed down by Justice Hudson at 2:30 p. m., in the case of Joseph R. Sheppard vs. H. Green Greenmatt, registrar of Paris precinct, Bear Lake county.

The case was argued a week ago in Lewiston by Judge C. W. Bennett of Salt Lake, and others. The plaintiff is a Mormon who offered to register upon subscribing to the oath embracing the constitutional provision and ignoring the additional qualifications of the test oath law enacted by the first state legislature. The additional qualification is that an elector shall not since January, 1888, have belonged to any organization that teaches or taught, encourages or encouraged polygamy, the constitutional provision being simply that he shall not practice polygamy or belong to an organization that teaches or encourages it. An application was made to the supreme court for a writ of mandamus to compel the registrar to register Sheppard.

The constitution provides that the legislature may provide additional qualifications for the exercise of the right of suffrage and under this provision the legislature adopted the additional qualification referred to. The principal objection urged to this was an allegation that it was retrospective, ex post facto, and therefore void. The court, however, finds this provision does not come under the character of the ex post facto law, which relates to penal and criminal proceedings which affect private rights, is retrospective and not applicable to civil laws, but to the penal and criminal laws only. The right of franchise was next considered and shown to be a privilege rather than a right over which the law making power, when so authorized by the constitution, has entire authority to prescribe such qualifications as are deemed best. Numerous cases are cited and the history of the Mormon legislature in Idaho is briefly reviewed.

In refusing to grant the mandamus and voting the law to be entirely constitutional the court states that if circumstances have arisen since the laws were passed to make it desirable that the law should be changed, application must be made direct to the legislature. This decision will prevent the Mormons from voting at the election next month.

THERE ARE about as many faces as there are phases to Columbus, according to the public prints these days.

DEATHS.

EVANS.—In this city, October 14th, of cholera infantum, Walter Manning, infant son of Wm. T. and Jane Evans, born September 19th, 1887.

CUMMINGS.—In this city, Oct. 13th, 1891, Alma, infant son of B. F. Cummings, Jr., and Emily W. Cummings, his wife, aged three days.

SERMON.—At South Cottonwood, Salt Lake county, Sunday, Oct. 12th, at 10 o'clock p. m., John L. Sermon, aged forty four years, from congested of the brain.

WILSON.—In this city, Oct. 13, at 3:30 p. m., of Bright's disease of the kidneys, John W., son of William G. and Susan Wilson; aged 7 years, 1 month and 24 days.

PECK.—Fr the 17th inst., at 11:45 p. m. 55 yr. First North, of marasmus, John H., in last stages of John Magnus and Eva Y. Peck; aged 1 month and six days.

STOWE.—At Leamington, Warwickshire, England, September 9, 1892, of heart disease and dropsy, Ann Stowe; born January 21, 1794. She died in full faith.—Millennial Star.

SMITH.—At Snagar House ward, October 12th, 1892, of old age and general debility, John L. Smith. The deceased was 74 years, 8 months and 29 days old. The deceased was born April 16th, 1818, in Lochnhead parish of Lanawood, Edinburg, Scotland.

WALKER.—October 12th, 1892, at Riccarton Salt Lake County, Utah, Hilda Stark Walker, born in Londrakona, Sweden, November 2nd, 1857. She was the wife of Edwin A. Walker, and daughter of Magnus and Elise Stark (deceased). Her age was thirty-four years, ten months and nineteen days.

DAVIS.—At Willow Springs, near Malad City, Idaho, October 5th, 1892, of affection of the liver and other diseases, Richard J. Davis. He was born at Llanwrthol, Glamorganshire, South Wales, September 2nd, 1828, came to Utah in 1853, and has proved himself an energetic member of the Church and faithful to the end.

ELLSWORTH.—In Snowflake, Arizona, September 20th, 1892, of typhoid fever, Orest Ellsworth, son of Edmond and Mary Ann Bass Ellsworth.

He was born in Salt Lake City December 18th, 1864, moved to Arizona with his parents in 1882, and in 1886 married Miss Lucy Oakley, daughter of John and Louisa Oakley. He leaves not only a young wife and three sweet little girls, a father, mother and mother-in-law, who are having a son of her own, looked to him for counsel and comfort, but also many brothers and sisters and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He was a member of the Right-Third quorum, also an acting Teacher.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION.

ESTABLISHED TRUTH AND LIBERTY JUNE 1850.

NO. 20. SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1892.

VOL. XLV.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

"A Subscriber," who accompanies his communication with the necessary guarantee of good faith in the shape of his name, wants to know how the Electoral College proceeds, of what it is composed, how it counts the votes and something of its general procedure. A little book entitled "The Practical Politician," recently issued in this city, gives the desired information; we copy the portion of it regarding the Electoral College, as it seems to be about what our correspondent desires:

Every fourth year—this is one of them—the people in the different states go through the solemn and majestic performance of choosing electors, who in turn choose the President and Vice President. We often hear of Senators having carried such a state for the former office, and while this is practically correct it is theoretically wrong. The intention of the framers of the Constitution was clearly to take the choice out of the hands of the people and vest it in a body of men chosen by the people, those so chosen to be a deliberative and executive body, styled in their aggregate capacity the Electoral College. This was, as hereafter set out, a concession to the Hamiltonian system of government, the supposition being of course that only men of station, ability and influence would be made electors and that they would naturally select two of their own kind or the highest offices. This question soon resolved itself into a more representative shape through the organization and growth of practical politics; that is, the form was preserved, but it became an unwritten law that electors should vote for the men nominated by their respective parties, and they have done so with one or two exceptions as ever since. Of course the conventions which place these electors in nomination make a selection of men well known first of all as staunch partisans, who will vote, if elected, for the candidates of that particular party, already nominated, and thus have the sovereign citizens measurably reduced the chances for a sovereign of another character. To betray the trust reposed in one as an elector would not subject the person so betraying to a criminal or any other prosecution, for there is no law against it; but he would likely receive treatment much more rigorous and long-continued, in that he would be looked upon and treated as a second

Benedict Arnold, and not only political but most probably social ostracism would be his portion for life. Is not this a striking exemplification of the rule of the common people in spite of the actual restraints designed for them by the founders?

Each state is entitled to as many electors as it has senators and representatives combined, in Congress. Each has the same number of senators—two—while the number of representatives varies in accordance with the population, but a state is entitled to no in any event. The electors are nominated by the different party conventions in the same manner that other officers are nominated, but the manner of their election rests exclusively with the legislature. In some states the nominations are made by congressional districts, each one naming its own, and the two at large, represent the senators, are put up by a state convention; in others, the latter gathering names the entire list but in every case (except in Michigan under a recent enactment) they are all voted for in bulk by the people of the state, so that a voter in the First congressional district, for instance, votes for the elector representing the Twentieth district as well and for all others. In this way the candidate of the party which carries the state is apt to and nearly always does get the full vote of the state, though this is not an invariable sequence by any means, since in nearly all elections where more than one man is to be chosen, some receive more votes than others and some are elected while others are defeated on the same ticket. In the election of 1880, the vote of California was divided between Hancock and Garfield, the former receiving five, the latter one. This is the most recent case.

The electors having been duly chosen on Tuesday after the first Monday in November, receive each a certificate of election from the governor. Their official meeting takes place on the second Monday in January next following, at such place as the legislature may appoint, usually the capital of the state. After the customary formula, each elector deposits a ballot containing the name of his choice—or rather his party's choice—for President, and immediately thereafter votes in like manner for Vice President. A certificate in triplicate of each vote is then made out, and one of these under seal is entrusted to a special messenger, chosen by the electors, to be delivered out of hand to the president of the United States Senate in person; another set is forwarded to that official by mail, and the third is filed with the judge of the district court for the district in which the election is held.

The Senate and House of Representatives meet in joint session in the hall of the latter body on the second Wednesday in February next succeeding, when the certificates are opened by the president, and four tellers previously appointed count the votes and read aloud the result; their lists are then handed to the president of the Senate, who makes a formal announcement of the result, if there be a result, and the thing is done—the new President and Vice President are officially introduced to the people. The installation occurs on the 4th of March following, and is usually accompanied by imposing demonstrations.

In case there should be no election, by reason of there being more than two candidates and no one having received a majority of all the electoral votes, the houses immediately separate and the Representatives proceed to elect a President. Each state casts but one vote, and of course the majority of the delegation determine what that shall be. Two-thirds of the states constitute a quorum, but it requires a majority of all the states to elect. In case the House should not be able to choose a President, the Vice President (chosen by the Senate if there shall have been no such election by the electors) becomes President at the time the latter would have been inaugurated.

Our correspondent also desires information regarding the word "plurality" used so often in election returns. The same authority answers this question: There is no plurality when there are but two candidates, as one or the other has then a majority, that is, a preponderance of all the votes cast, unless it should be a tie. When three or more candidates for an office are voted for, the one that has more votes than any other has a plurality, the size of his plurality being determined by the difference between his vote and that of the candidate having the next highest one to him. For instance: A, B and C are candidates for the legislature; A has 500, B 550 and C 600 votes; it will thus be observed that C has not a majority, because he has only 600 out of 1660 votes; but he has a plurality because he leads in the race and the amount of his plurality is 50. This makes it plain enough. There can be no election of President by a plurality because, as shown, the Constitution absolutely requires a majority.

IMPORTANT RULING BY CHIEF JUSTICE ZANE.

Judge Zane this morning set the judicial ball rolling by rendering his decision in the suit of Adam Duncan vs. W. H. H. Spafford and Elmer Spafford, the hearing of which occupied the entire day yesterday.

The action was brought to recover a strip of land two and a half feet in width between lots 1 and 2, block 16, plat B, together with damages in the sum of $1000. The property is situated in the First ward. Its actual value is not considerable, but the main object in view was to obtain a ruling as to the correctness of the land survey, which affects a large extent of property, apart from the land now in litigation. Plaintiff alleged ownership by virtue of deeds to the property and upon dividing lines as made by surveys in 1873 and 1883. The defendant claimed the two and a half feet upon a survey recently made.

Following is the full text of his Honor's decision:

In this action—an action of ejectment—the plaintiff claims that the line is where an old fence was built, where an old water ditch existed, and where stakes were placed—long existing upon the ground—indicating the corner and line, as he insists, between the two lots. The defendant relies upon a recent survey by Mr. Doremus, and the question arises, first, where ought this line to be, in the light of the evidence?

It seems from the testimony of the plaintiff that he took possession, in the name of his father, in 1862 or 1868, of lot 2. At that time he states that the possession was taken up to the line that he now insists on, and that in 1872 the title was acquired under the townsite law from the mayor of the city in accordance with those lines. A ditch had existed for years upon the line here in dispute, a fence was erected and a stake put down; and in 1882 Mr. Charles W. Hardy made a survey and placed his stake on the line where the plaintiff claims it is. His starting points were certain monuments he mentions in his testimony, but which may not have been very reliable. The fence was put up at the time and posts are still standing, although it was a very poor fence at the date of the bringing of this action. After the defendant took possession, it appears, some two years ago, he also erected a fence on the same line. After Mr. Doremus became city engineer, that gentleman discovered that the original survey of the city was very inaccurate. The fences were not in line; the importance of a re-survey was suggested, and he was authorized to make one. In making that re-survey he aimed to ascertain the corners as they were originally put down. But finally, it seems, he made a survey across the city, and took the old fences and some of the stakes. He found stakes in some cases, but not, as he thinks, the original ones. The original stakes were put down probably some forty years ago, according to the testimony. They were not of very durable quality, and had all disappeared before the new survey was made about two years ago; but there were some stakes found along these streets, and he also came across old fences, always, however, in a line. He also inquired of old settlers, and in that way aimed to make his corners correspond as nearly as he could with the original survey. He also aimed to do as little harm as possible, as he said, to persons who had had possession for a long time, and whose fences indicated their lots. In some blocks where it was well established that the corner was not in line he would effect the old corners. So that Mr. Doremus' survey, of course, as indicating the original corners, is not reliable at all; he doesn't regard it so, but deemed it necessary to have a system and to establish these corners. The probabilities are that these will result in causing a great many losses; because it is no doubt the law, well settled, that monuments control courses and distances; and wherever the weight of evidence sustains the original corner as such, and it happens to be out of the line of Mr. Doremus' survey, the original survey must govern in all cases.

Now it seems that this new survey, which was last made, unsettles most of the fences and their lines. It would cut one brick house, according to the evidence in this case, that has been built for some length of time, and remove this line that has been there recognized by the plaintiff at least for about thirty years, and by the parties occupying both lots for twenty years. They have occupied with respect to this line; they have cultivated their lands and made their improvements with respect to this line; and of course it would not do to adopt any such system as would result in interminable litigation, wrong and injustice. The city has no right to settle private disputes between parties. Whenever property owners see fit to recognize his survey it is all right; but where they do not and they can establish by sufficient evidence that the line is not according to his survey, why, that line must stand.

The testimony in this case shows that in 1881 the parties put up a fence. Both Mr. Allen (Spafford's predecessor in interest) and Mr. Duncan had a fence built which they agreed upon. There was a stake put up; that was understood; and it is not sufficient now to say that it was a mere mistake of theirs. They occupied according to it, and agreed, substantially, that it should be the line.

The defendant also insists upon an estoppel. He testified that last spring, I believe it was, when he erected his house, the plaintiff was living on the adjoining lot, and made no objection to it. There is a conflict. Plaintiff states that he was away at Deep Creek, that the building was not commenced when he went away, and that he knew nothing of it until he returned, when the men were shingling the building. As to that there is a decided conflict in the evidence; but there seems to be no substantial conflict as to Mr. Spafford knowing of these old lines. He knew that he had put up a fence on the old line himself; and, as he states, the indications were that the parties on the respective lots had occupied with respect to that line, and they conveyed to him. With that knowledge he chose to take down this man's fence and put his building some two feet and a half on the plaintiff's lot; he then moved his fence about a foot or thirteen inches farther west, taking in all, I infer, fully two and a half feet. He did that with his eyes open. He must have understood that the other man had been claiming that property, and it was according to his claim as he made it when he put up the fence.

The case, I think, is clearly with the plaintiff, and judgment will be entered accordingly.

PROFESSOR ALLEN'S POSITION.

Professor C. E. Allen, clerk of our county court and the nominee for Delegate to Congress of the Liberal party, seems just now to be the idol of at least some Democrats styling themselves Tuscaroras, and not least does he seem to be the idol also of some few Liberal Republicans, while a northern professor—Paul, I think, by name—has been on the part of some the subject of much unfavorable criticism, in such circles being far from the idol of any one.

The first professor above named I believe claims to be a Republican. The second, as I understand, claims to be a Democrat; and I judge by some of his speeches—though as a Republican I believe his judgment is at fault and some statements he has made he would find very hard to prove—that he is in entire sympathy with the great national Democratic party. Now, sir, I wish to ask why is it that Professor Allen, being a Republican, is not found advocating the policies and principles of the great national Republican party? In all of the speeches he for four or five years past, here in Utah, has delivered, not one word, so far as I have learned, has escaped his lips in favor of the McKinley bill, reciprocity or any other great doctrine of the national Republican party. One would think as a "professor" and "first-class" Republican that he would at the very least have some little desire in his heart—more especially as he seems to believe the commoners of the Territory are not educated up sufficiently in American politics to be yet trusted with the government of the Territory—to present to the people of Utah his views concerning the government of which he is so proud to be a member, and especially the superiority of the doctrines of his loved Republican party above the principles, etc., of the Democratic party. It may be, however, that he honestly believes in the slogan of his "glorified Liberal" party—"Country before party." Of course "office before country" never once entered his honest heart!

The thought, however, occurs to the writer that it is both possible and probable that Professor C. E. Allen is human, and like two or three gospel preachers whose names could here be given, who, tempted by the "filthy lucre" of this wicked world when offered more hard cash, gave up the conversion of souls to Jesus and engaged to the real estate business, mining, etc. When the tempting offer was made him (a few more dollars monthly) he gave up teaching "the young idea how to shoot," readily accepted an engagement as clerk for some wealthy miner or broker and very soon drifted into Utah politics which has and is making him so famous. Had it not been for this good fortune who knows but that the Honorable C. E. Allen of today might not now be a college professor or possibly a preacher of a sectarian gospel? OBSERVER.

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 24, 1892.

CONDON'S WILL.

Having taken the matter under advisement for several days, Probate Judge Barton today gave his decision in the will contest case in regard to the estate of Matthew Condon, deceased. The facts were reported in the columns of the NEWS at the recent hearing in the probate court.

The testator was about fifty years of age, unmarried, and formerly resided in this city, his place of abode being the Valley House. He had been engaged in mining pursuits, and in this and in other ways amassed a snug fortune, which amounted to somewhere about $75,000. The whole of this he left to one of his sisters, a Mrs. Gillis, of Eureka, cutting off his father (who is upwards of eighty years of age), his brother and another sister without a cent, and this without any apparent reason. It was on that account—on the ground that undue influence had been brought to bear upon the testator by Mrs. Gillis, and that he was insane at the time the will was executed—that these relatives opposed its admission to probate.

His Honor remarked that this will was contested on the ground that undue influence had been exercised upon the testator, and that he was not of sound mind at the time of making his will. He was of opinion, however, that the proponents had made out a strong prima facie case. The evidence of the attesting witnesses was clear on all material points covered by the statute. It showed that the will was written in the presence of the testator, at his request, and that he dictated a large portion of it; also that he assented to the various items contained therein. It further appeared that the will was first signed by the deceased himself and then by the two attesting witnesses, at his request, and in his presence. Those witnesses swore that at the time of the execution of the will the testator was of sound mind—no much so as ever he was, that he knew his relatives, and that, so far as they could see, no undue influence was used. As to his condition for some time previous to the making of the will, it was shown that he had been weak, that he drank heavily, and was nearly always under the influence of liquor while he resided in this city. His sister (who lived at Eureka) was sent for, and the testimony went to show that from the time she arrived here she endeavored to keep the drink from her brother and have him sober. Finally she took him to her home, and it would appear that after his arrival there he received no stimulants, except such as were administered by direction of his physician.

The contestants introduced some evidence to indicate the extreme feebleness of the testator both in mind and body. As to the fact of his drunkenness previous to the making of the will, if it were shown that at the time he signed that instrument he was of sound mind or had lucid intervals, so that he knew the person whom he intended to be the object of his bounty, and if he had a clear knowledge of his property, he could still make a valid disposition of it. In his opinion, the contestants had failed to prove that the testator was not of sound mind at the time of the execution of the will.

He had carefully listened to the testimony in the case, and while the will seemed rather unnatural in some respects—for it was a great hardship that a son should entirely disinherit his aged and decrepit father who was in need of support—yet, under the law, if he desired to do so, and if he was sane at the time he signed his will, there was nothing to prevent him. So far as the evidence went, respecting the man's brothers having stood over the dead body and using the epithets he did—and that evidence was not contradicted—his Honor thought such conduct must have been the outpouring of a depraved nature. He could not look upon it in any other light. As far as the brother was concerned, therefore, his Honor's judgment was that the testator exercised "the discretion that he had without reserve." The dead man seemed to have had confidence in the sister (Mrs. Gillis) to whom he left all his possessions—that she would provide for the father and other sister. There certainly were some things which threw some suspicion on this matter, and his own mind was not altogether free therefrom as to influence having been used by Mrs. Gillis. There was, however, no proof that she actually used undue influence. It only became such when the influence was carried to such an extent that the testator himself was not his own free agent in making his will. If such a state of affairs did exist in this case it was in evidence, and under all the circumstances, therefore, he held that the will should be admitted to probate.

A SCHEME TO SELL THE CITY WATERWORKS.

The citizens of Salt Lake will doubtless be startled to learn that the largest and by far the most important business deal—to them—ever consummated in the history of the city is quietly and seriously talked of.

It is no less a matter than the disposition of the entire city waterworks system to a wealthy syndicate of eastern and local capitalists.

The scheme has been contemplated for some time, and if reliance can be attached to apparently authoritative rumors it is now pretty well matured.

The utmost secrecy has been maintained regarding it, but there has also been a gradual "leakage" going on from sources that were supposed to be tightly sealed.

If the present plan of procedure is followed as outlined for future action the matter will come up before the City Council for consideration at a date not far distant. What the result will be can only be guessed at, though it is said that a majority of the councilmen will probably use their influence in carrying the deal through. It is further said that the argument will be made in favor of the sale that the city needs the money and must get it from some source. Improvements, it is said, of different kinds are contemplated. To carry them on a good deal of cash is required. The bonding power of the municipality is nearly exhausted, most of the negotiable city property has been sold, and the treasury's contents are still very low.

This is about the status of affairs and taxpayers are becoming alarmed and are asking each other what the end will be.

It was learned last night from a prominent city official that a representative of the syndicate referred to had made an informal offer of $1,200,000 for the waterworks system.

A prominent and able attorney was asked by a NEWS representative today as to whether or not the city could legally sell the system. He responded that so far as the works proper were concerned he did not doubt but what it could. But the title to the water was vested in the people and could only be taken from them by fraudulent procedure. The claim that the citizens had forfeited their right to the water by allowing it to be diverted from its original channels into a distributing system owned by the city was very weak and would not hold good in the courts. The water takers paid so much per annum for the use of the mains for domestic and other purposes and not for the water itself. That belonged to them. He knew it could not be wrested from them. If the attempt was made the people's recourse and duty would be to promptly enjoin the city and he had no doubt but what the courts would decide in their favor. It was a desperate deal and required heroic measures on the part of all citizens without reference to political or other views.

Further developments will be awaited and watched with the most intense interest.

A large number of business men talked the matter over today and were considerably alarmed, and declared that if the deal was forced to an issue they would use every legitimate means to defeat it.

DEATH OF SUSIE S. JACOBS.

Information has been received that Sister Susie Stringam Jacobs, wife of H. C. Jacobs of Ogden, died this morning at 8:30 o'clock. She was taken with severe vomiting on Monday about noon, and the straining caused the rupture of a blood vessel. Paralysis was the result. She never spoke after being stricken.

She was born in Salt Lake City, December 25, 1860.

The foregoing is an utter falsehood, as every reader of the DESERET NEWS knows. The Journal is either immensely stupid, which is a misfortune, or maliciously untruthful, which is a crime.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, - - - $2.50
Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, - - - 1.50
IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, - November 3, 1892

SUNDAY IS HERE.

Without designing to enter into homily, the DESERET NEWS makes mention, and with unfeigned gratification, that we are at the end of another week. One more Sabbath will have come and gone before this paper makes another visit to its readers. And a few suggestions as to how the day should be received and observed—as to what words, thoughts and actions should prevail and what be eschewed—cannot be amiss, especially in view of the frame of mind which many of our people permit themselves to become possessed of during the six days devoted to business pursuits.

Sunday is not only a period of rest, but a time for reflection, for devoutness, for thanks and praise. The first rays of the god of day that burst through the shadows of the east and overspread the sleeping earth with their mellow tinge, should be to us a symbol of that charity which covereth all things and should reach unto all mankind, and which while perhaps forgotten or not thought of during the hurry and bustle and diverting influences of the week, should at least find recognition and practice during the time set apart for repose. Can our thoughts, upon arising in the morning, be more profitably turned than to the record which the past six days have made for us and attached indelibly to our mortal career? Can we do better than single out the words and actions regarding neighbors, friends or it may be enemies, in which unconsciously or designedly we have done them and ourselves wrong, and then consider how we may lay undo such wrong and place ourselves properly before our common Parent? Is it too much to say that a happy Sunday should begin in this way? It is advising nothing that is not good for you and for yours; and in the quietude of the early morn of the day of repose, unassailed by the words of thoughtless or the wiles of designing men, whoever does what is herein suggested and then proceeds manfully to carry it out, will find that he will add joy to his soul, and promote peace in and win a blessing for his household and for all who will follow his example.

This is a critical time in Israel. The gates were never so widely ajar for the entrance of the agents of discord, nor was it ever so easy for the people to lend themselves to influences which come from and lead to darkness. Political contention, embittered with acrimony and tainted with criminality, has become rife; those who should dwell together in unity and deal with each other in a spirit of generosity and Christian forbearance, in too many cases are at sword's points in a figurative sense, and might be in a literal sense were things to continue much longer as they are. This is all wrong. It need not follow that through politics friends shall become enemies, that neighbors shall cease to be neighbors or that the amenities of civilized life should be cast aside. Some there be who seem to think that adopting the politics of the country makes it necessary that we also take up all its evils and abuses, and that to insult an opponent is to exhibit advancement and independence in a marked degree. Think no longer! The Saints should be brethren, and if they be politicians, let them be at least gentlemen.

This suggests some thoughts that may well be considered; they should cause every lover of harmony and union to welcome the return of the blessed, peaceful Sabbath.

HOW SILVER STANDS.

An article in a recent number of the DESERET NEWS on the silver question, in which a double standard and free coinage were advocated, has brought up the question as to whether other nations besides the United States are demetalizers and if so what they are. There are several such nations and three of them are first-class powers, to-wit: Great Britain, Germany and Austria, the others being Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Norway, Portugal, Sweden and Turkey. The nations in which a double standard in one form or another prevails are—Argentine Republic, Belgium, Chile, France, Greece, Italy, Japan, Holland, Spain and Switzerland. There are also a few that have a single standard which excludes gold, thus reversing our attitude and that of the powers first named; these are all the South American countries except the ones named above, and China, India, Mexico and Russia.

It thus seems that it should not require a very great effort on our part to do justice to the white metal, the balance of favor being with it when the whole civilized world is considered, as the foregoing enumeration shows. The movement in the right direction proceeds with almost exasperating slowness, but perhaps to coming will be all the more stable and permanent by reason of that. We can at least indulge in the hope that it will be so.

A COMPLICATION POSSIBLE.

A correspondent of the Louisville Courier Journal raises a very important question in connection with the election of President and Vice President in case the choice of the former were to go into the House of Representatives and of the latter into the Senate. The contingency which has been suggested by many, of such a thing taking place as the result of the pending national contest, makes the subject a very interesting one. It being conceded now that the People's party will have at least a sprinkling of votes in the electoral college, that some of Michigan's vote will be taken from the Republicans and given to the Democrats and that other changes may occur in the Northwest, it begins to assume the phase of possibility that the first-named party may hold the balance of power and dictate who the next President and Vice President shall be, or throw the election into Congress. It is, however, only possible, the probabilities as things stand now not being at all inclined that way.

The correspondent says: "Suppose the electoral college makes no choice and the election of Vice-President is thrown into the Senate, can a person be chosen by that body from the same state as the person chosen by the House of Representatives to be President?" This is a point that has peculiar interest at this time, because if the election should go to Congress it would mean the choice of a Democrat for President and a Republican for Vice-President; Mr. Cleveland would of course be the former, but as Mr. Reid belongs to the same state, could he be legally chosen?

The paper of which the question is asked says, substantially, that the House of Representatives chooses the President from the persons "having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President;" and the Senate chooses the Vice-President from the two highest names of those voted for as Vice-President. That would seem to allow the Senate to choose a Vice-President from the same state as the President; but the first clause of the XII Amendment to the Constitution says that the President and Vice President shall not be from the same state and the last clause says that a person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall not be eligible to that of Vice President. The intention clearly was that the two men should not be citizens of the same state; and it is possible that the Supreme Court of the United States would restrict the Senate's choice, and compel it to select a Vice President from another state than the President.

It will be observed, however, and this is the point which the Courier-Journal fails to make altogether, that there is no inhibition except upon the electors, that the two officers voted for must not live in the same state as themselves; for instance, if the Republican electoral ticket should be successful in Indiana, the electors could and would vote for Harrison for President but they would not be allowed to vote for a Vice President from that state, and if the Democrats carry New York the electors would vote for Cleveland but would have to vote for some one in some other state for the second place. And then the electors, having complied with the law, would have nothing further to do with the matter. If their vote failed to elect the President and Vice President and the election went to Congress, under the letter of the Constitution the House could elect Cleveland and the Senate Reid, for it only prohibits the electors from voting in that way, which they have not done. We agree with our Louisville contemporary that its construction of the meaning of the framers of the part of the Constitution in question is undoubtedly the right one—that they meant to have the two officers come from two different states and so far this has been done; but it does not say that, and herein lies the opportunity of a strict constructionist to make trouble. The disposition to observe the meaning of a statute or merely its naked provisions, is often governed by the point as to which is most likely to be beneficial to the person interested; but when it is a matter affecting the people of the nation in general, a great political party incidentally and a conspicuous citizen particularly, doubtless the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting as a court of equity, will be called upon to either affirm the literal construction of the Constitution or fill up the gap which the framers made regarding what they designed to say.

GRATITUDE IS DUE.

There is an item in the dispatches today to the effect that Chicago bankers have presented a gold medal with a diamond in the center to the Coffeyville, Kansas, liverman whose handiness with the Winchester rifle during the late raid of the Dalton gang made several of those worthless bite the dust. The incident is not without appropriateness; banks and bankers were the especial and favorite prey of the notorious outlaws who have been so suddenly sent to their long account. Of the sections of the country infested by them it can be truly said that no bank was safe from their visitation, nor was any life or number of lives so sacred in their sight as to cause them to shrink from killing, if that were the only alternative method of escape.

Hence while there is considerable basis of sense and logic in the action of the Chicago bankers, there is still more in that of the Texas Bankers' Association which has recently called for contributions from its members for the aid of the families of those citizens of Coffeyville, who, voluntarily giving themselves up to the task of wiping out the desperadoes, were themselves slain in the encounter. The American Banker, too, a journal whose field is expressed by its title, has taken up the good cause, and has headed a subscription list. It would appear that those who are permitted to breathe easier, both as regards their lives and their duets, since the affray spoken of, ought not to be backward in coming forward with a substantial expression of gratitude to those whose bravery on the occasion resulted in leaving several widows and orphans in the Kansas community.

BIG MONEY FOR TROTTERS.

A man more interested in the subject of horse flesh than any other, perhaps, is Robert Bonner, once editor and proprietor of the New York Ledger. He has a magnificent stable of his own, to which he now and then makes a valuable contribution, his acquisitiveness in this direction being insatiable and in others considerable, so that he has the means as well as the disposition to possess new horses. About a year ago Mr. Bonner offered to give $5000 to the owner of any horse that would reduce the world's trotting record to 2:05. This would apparently give the owner of "Nancy Hanks" a windfall; but it seems that it is otherwise, for the former has written to the New York World explaining that his offer was explicitly restricted to records made on the grand circuit tracks from Hartford to Cleveland, which would include Rochester and Buffalo, and that, as only the old regulation sulkeys were in use when his offer was made, ball-bearing axles and pneumatic tires do not count. These new devices, he points out, have revolutionized all harness records and made horses apparently from four to six seconds faster than they were when hitched to the ordinary sulky such as was in use up to a few months ago. Mr. Bonner's offer has a year yet to run, and those who desire to compete for the prize might as well understand the conditions suggested above. The recent innovations do have a very helping effect on trotters, and the gentleman decides—somewhat technically it would seem—that the horse as he is, not as human ingenuity can make him, is what is to determine the race.

GIVE US A CHANCE.

If the News were "in politics" we could have any amount of fun with those of our cotemporaries who are tearing their hair over this, that and the other newspaper article or advertisement, pamphlet, speech, conversation or "influence," put forth or invoked by the different political parties in this part of the world to secure votes on the 8th of next month. With some of our own correspondents, too,—those who express their wonder that we "don't say something" about the respective pamphlets, speeches, etc., above referred to—we could have entered into a merry argument almost every day during the month past. For, to a person not entirely given over to partisanship, it is as plain as daylight that the whole question of criticism or approbation depends solely upon the point of view; and though one calls certain methods of an opponent unfair, illegitimate and even contemptible, similar methods employed by himself or his friends are deemed by him perfectly honest, judicious and regular. This could be pointed out so easily from the abundance of evidence at hand that, as stated above, it could be made an amusing—nay, even an exhilarating occupation.

But the News, as it has repeatedly declared, is not in politics, save as a neutral, independent journal that will not shut its eyes to wrongdoing in any party, nor depart from a straight course to promote the advancement of the principles or the candidates of either. Hence it denies itself the pleasure which cotemporaries and correspondents so frequently offer it, lest to some sensitive observer it might seem to lean a little to one side or the other. With this much of explanation may we not now venture to take a step further?

If so, we should be tempted to say that some of the proceedings, as well as some of the comments, that have been conspicuous during this campaign are such as cannot be defended by either party or be approved by honorable men anywhere. Neither side can claim a monopoly of decency, and, we regret to say, every extravagance of statement or injustice of interpretation on the part of one side has been met by similar weapons coupled with even greater recklessness on the part of the other. Party feeling has been permitted to run, altogether too high; and the flippant and disrespectful use of honored names, by organs and orators on both sides of the controversy, has been such as to give pain to the calmer and better balanced class of the community. We believe the resort to such tactics has weakened the cause of those who employed them. No one who exercises thought and reason has been misled by them, and no one should be. A welcome change, during the remaining ten days of the campaign, would be a recurrence to the dignified, gentlemanly, argumentative discussion of the issues for which the various candidates stand.

NO DALLYING.

The sensational news conveyed to the people of Salt Lake City by last evening's News, to the effect that a plan was maturing by which a corporation of moneyed men was to attempt the purchase and control of the municipal water-works system, has already caused just what it was intended to cause—an awakening of the public to the fact that their servants in office must on the one hand be closely watched where they are inclined to recklessness, and on the other hand resolutely sustained when they are opposed to dangers threatening the general weal. Nothing is so fatal to the efficiency and integrity of public officials as the apathy and indifference of their constituents; nothing is so potent in bringing out their qualities of administration and statesmanship as well-meant criticism of and thorough acquaintance with the plans and policies coming before them for consideration. As to motives that may be hidden or programmes that may be arranged in secret places, there is no reason or justification for such things, and these are to be soundly condemned. To the people who put men in office it is an insult for such men too say "You may not be trusted with full knowledge of our official movements;" and there can be scarcely an exception to the good old rule that whatever scheme would be spoiled through the public's becoming aware of it, ought to be spoiled anyway—it is not good.

Having given the public denunciations of what is in contemplation, the News will be content if the warning is accepted in the spirit in which it was tendered. As to the results of any such negotiations as are said to be imminent we have no doubts. The good sense of the Mayor and City Council will surely be equal to the task of resisting a proposition so monstrous; and the good sense of the community will supply whatever of hearty backing and stern determination that may be necessary. No amount of specious argument can overturn the simple announcement that this city owes to its inhabitants complete preservation against the power of any private parties to control our water supply. The Council might as well entertain a proposition from some grasping syndicate to buy the air above and around us and dole it out through a meter at so much per cubic foot.

THE IAMS CASE.

The case of the soldier Iams is one that should receive the most thorough and impartial investigation, and wherever malice or undue severity have appeared in connection with the punishment inflicted upon him those who so transgressed should themselves be made to feel the heavy hand of the law. The offense with which the soldier was charged was not a 'heinous one, viewed in its proper light, but serious enough to demand some kind of correction; but expressed gratification over the attempted murder of Mr. Frick, the millionaire manager of Carnegie's Homestead iron and steel works; and while this evinced a "will most incorrect to heaven" and a mind more or less depraved, it was not per se a crime. Perhaps hundreds of thousands of people, through perverted notions regarding the wealthy and the force of vicious surroundings, did the same thing that Iams did; and while their language cannot be too strongly condemned nor themselves receive any too much watching at the hands of officers of the law, they have committed no crime because there is no law against it. In the case of the soldier, he doubtless violated a rule of military discipline and should have been severely reprimanded, perhaps fined, and even cashiered, but there was and is nothing in any civilized military code or any regulation authorizing barbarous and brutal punishment. Hanging up by the thumbs is at the best a relic of less favored times and more unsettled conditions; it should not be tolerated in any case now; and when to this is added the infliction of shaving the head as a special mark of disgrace, and perhaps other annoyances we know not of, it would seem to be high time that the civil authorities interposed. Let the punishment fit the crime as nearly as possible in all cases.

THE SENSITIVE GERMAN.

Patriotism which breaks out at the mouth may be gratifying to the one who so indulges, but it is often annoying to others and when those annoyed can make the source of their displeasure pay for his work they generally do it. Joseph Eugene Lemoine, a French journalist, can testify to the truthfulness of the foregoing by reason of a recent experience he underwent. Taking a stroll beyond the border but on what is still claimed as French soil—Alsace Lorraine—the man of letters had the temerity to let his love for La belle France find expression in tones so loud and terms so objectionable to (the German), that he was arrested, tried and fined twenty marks, equivalent to about five dollars of our money. The punishment was not severe, but considering the nature of the offense it was high enough, anyway to restrain the editor from any further hurrahing for France in that neck of timber.

THE FRENCH IN DAHOMY.

The war which is now being waged by the French in Dahomey, and which probably will result in the entire subjugation of that country, is supposed to be worth to France a good deal more than it costs. Dahomey is a kingdom of western Africa on the coast of Guinea, with boundaries to the east not well defined. It is described as extremely fertile and well cultivated, especially around the towns and villages, yielding sometimes as many as four crops a year and never less than two. The French own three ports on the coast and derive quite a revenue from them, the mercantile transactions in 1891 amounting to thirteen million francs. It is thought that the complete subjugation of the country would be worth to the French republic between thirty and forty million francs a year. That the French have no right whatever—except the right of gunpowder—to annex the country would of course not enter as a factor into the calculations of politicians.

THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT.

During the session of the late Legislature of this Territory, it was at times and by different persons asked to enact a measure establishing the Australian system of voting. This was not done, our readers know, and whether we have escaped a condition that would be unwelcome if tried, or missed one that would have been productive of great beneficial results, it is bootless to discuss now. It is enough to speak of the law itself and seek to become familiar with its provisions and modus operandi, so that if we want it by the time the next Legislature convenes, we may be in a position to ask for it understandingly and with some degree of authority.

That the operation of the system is very beneficial in a moral sense cannot be denied, since it is impossible for any person to know how another has voted; a voter may be bribed or coerced by threats of loss of employment or otherwise into acceding to another's demand as to how he shall vote; but as all ballots are prepared in a close room into which no one but the person preparing his ballot is allowed to enter, and he comes out with it in a sealed envelope and hands it to the election judge, the secret of how he voted belongs to himself. We have one feature of that system in vogue now, but the one who seeks to coerce may supply his victims with ballots and see that they cast them, or he may demand and obtain an inspection of the tickets which they have obtained for themselves, none of which could take place under the Australian system; so that in this respect it is much safer and therefore entitled to greater consideration than any other so far put in operation.

But it has its drawbacks, and one of these, as shown by its application in the state of Kentucky, is the greatly increased expense. A recent issue of the Courier-Journal of Louisville says the total cost to the people of that state for the election on the 8th prox. will be not less than $50,000, and may run ahead of that amount, and that, too, when one item has been considerably reduced, that of officers' pay; they formerly received $3 a day and under the new law they will get but $2. The printing expense will be very great. A rough estimate places it at $10 for each precinct in the state, where, under the old system, it was about $3. Now it is necessary to provide ballot books with the name of the precinct printed on the outside and a blank form for the returns on the inside. Stencil stamps and stencil pads must be provided, also cards of instruction, envelopes for spoiled ballots and duplicate returns. The ballots will generally be as large as a half-grown newspaper, and, as the size will vary in different counties, according to the number of local candidates, it is impossible to make a close estimate as to what they will cost. About half a million ballots will be required for the entire state. The printing, or the counties is ordered by the county court clerks, and most of it for the coming election is being done in Louisville. The estimate of $10 as the cost of printing for each precinct of the 1400, in round numbers, in the state, will not be very wide of the mark. Another expense not above named is for election booths, or the retiring rooms previously spoken of, in which the voters prepare their ballots. Of course this item will only figure in the first election, as they can be used thereafter without additional expense except now and then for repairs, which will be trifling. The total cost of the election in each precinct is put at $36.50, which multiplied by 1400, the number of precincts in the state, would make a grand total of $51,100. Rather expensive, but cheaper than detecting and prosecuting frauds at the polls one would think.

THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

The annual report of Governor Thomas on affairs in the Territory is given in full in the DESERET NEWS of October 28th. It is, as will be observed by even a glance, a very comprehensive document, dealing largely in statistics and being tabulated to an unusual degree. The showing as a whole is a very gratifying one, and evinces commendable energy, research and analysis on the part of the Executive. The Governor's suggestions regarding the moral, social and political aspect of the Territory are not as lengthy as has formerly been the case, and there is apparent throughout the lines a disposition to state things fairly and truthfully, while of course something of the old animus remains. On the whole, it will compare favorably with any similar document of recent years, is greatly superior to any that has gone on from Utah within that period, and the Governor is entitled to the praise which such a showing merits. More detailed comment is reserved for a later day.

Only one more week of the campaign. The fates be praised!

NO EXCELLENCE WITHOUT LABOR.

A cotemporary publishes a few facts for the benefit of young ladies and gentlemen with literary taste, who are too impatient, and consequently too much in a hurry, to get their productions before the public. It endeavors to show that fame in the literary world can only be obtained by patient and persistent efforts. Tennyson re-wrote his poem "Come into the Garden, Maud," fifteen times before he was satisfied with it. Thomas Moore considered himself industrious when he had completed seventy lines in a week on his "Lalla Rookh." Kinglake's "Eothen" was rewritten at least five times before it appeared. Buffon spent about half a century on his "Studies of Nature." He had made a large book in five columns. In the first he wrote any fact or incident that happened to come under his observation. The others he filled with extracts arranged in the order needed. Sometimes the author wrote a sentence twenty times before he was satisfied with it, and once he is said to have spent fourteen hours in looking for the right word wherewith to round off a period. John Foster sometimes spent hours on one sentence. La Rochefoucauld spent fifteen years on his "Maxims." The poet Rogers once called the attention of a friend to a few lines on Italy, on which he had been working almost two weeks. Gibbon labored twenty years on his work on Rome. Bancroft spent twenty-six years on his History. Webster worked thirty-six years on his Dictionary. Sir Isaac Newton wrote his chronological work sixteen times. The collector of these data might have added that Pascal is known to have reconstructed some of his Pensees twenty times, and that for depth of thought and elegance of language he is probably unsurpassed in French literature.

Our time is perhaps too busy to act on precedents of this kind, but at all events they are instructive. And as a general rule, what costs the author no pain, is worthless. Gold must be dug out of the ground with great effort; diamonds must be well polished before the brilliant luster is apparent to the spectator. So, valuable thoughts are the products of the work of genius and their presentation in suitable form is dependent on intelligent study and patient practice.

EX-CONGRESSMAN THOMAS FITCH.

A New York paper says: "One of the best campaign speakers who have visited this state from abroad is ex-Congressman Thomas Fitch, of California," and it then goes on to give a quotation from one of his recent speeches there. When Mr. Fitch was in Congress he represented Nevada, after which he settled down to the practice of law as a business and politics incidentally in this city, doing remarkably well in the former capacity at least. He is all that is said of him as a public speaker, having an inexhaustible vocabulary, a facility of expression and grace of delivery rarely equalled. He is known in the West as the "silver-tongued," and some of his flights are truly silvery enough but, to be just, they are not always silvern—just the appearance of it at the time being. His success at the bar has been attributed more to his gift of oratory than to his legal attainments, and no doubt this is just, too. In an interview in San Francisco a year or so ago Mr. Fitch was narrating how long he had been on the Pacific coast, saying among other things that he "didn't count the time spent in Utah," to which the Ogden Standard wittily replied:—"He made it count all the same."

THE GAS STOCK SALE.

A day or two ago the local columns of the DESERET NEWS contained an article regarding the disposal of certain gas stock owned by the city to a Denver firm, the whole transaction saving somewhat of a "deal," not in its exact dictionary sense but as here given, with considerable accent on the quotation marks. We have no charges to make nor were any made in the article spoken of; the facts as well as the surmises, were placed before the public and out of these crystallized a suspicion which is neither vague nor shadowy, that all in that transaction was not as regular and as well considered as it might have been.

When the best stock on the market, said to be paying a dividend which would make it hold almost a hundred per cent premium, or nearly double what its face calls for, as a commercial entity, is sold for an advance of only thirty-three per cent above par, that circumstance alone is enough to engender a healthy suspicion; but when it further transpires, as a cotemporary suggests, that the sale was in the form of a pool into which the City Council should dump the stock held by the municipality at the rate last named, while individual holders were to pull out of the same transaction with $180—or somewhere near what the shares were worth—to their credit, all that was airy and evanescent in the suspicion is evolved into materialization at once.

Perhaps there was a solid reason for the mysterious transaction. Perhaps these figures are all wrong, and deduction from them must as a consequence be wrong. To the outsider who is only permitted to pay taxes and ask unanswered questions there is frequently more or less that is occult or opaque attending every transaction which those whom we serve permit to reach the public at all; but it would seem that enough of this latest move has come to light to justify the Council in making a bare breast of the whole affair. The News awaits their pleasure.

THE NEWS wishes its good friends the Stake clerks throughout all the States of Zion would make a note of and take example from the report of the recent quarterly conference in Tooele as published in this issue. It is neither too long nor too short; it is just right, and gives succinctly all the proceedings that need to be preserved in the columns of the DESERET NEWS. Brother Atkin has our thanks for his model report.

SALT LAKE'S PROSPERITY.

The census bureau at Washington is quite busily engaged at present in sending out statistical bulletins showing up the status of the manufacturing and mechanical industries of the country. The one numbered 254 relates to Salt Lake City, and has just been received at this office. The following showings are made:

TOTALS FOR INDUSTRIES OMITTED IN 1880, BUT INCLUDED IN 1890.
Number of establishments reported.....	14
Capital invested.....	$22,180
Number of hands employed.....	71
Wages paid.....	$20,629
Cost of materials used.....	$23,415
Miscellaneous expenses.....	$10,936
Value of product at works.....	$110,696

To ascertain the amounts for comparison with the totals for 1880, the foregoing figures should be subtracted from the totals for 1890, and the percentages of increase would then appear as follows:

PERCENTAGES OF INCREASE.

Capital invested.....	206.43
Number of hands employed.....	107.24
Wages paid.....	193.05
Cost of materials used.....	104.66
Value of product at works.....	133.12
Population of city.....	115.92
Assessed valuation of city.....	638.19
Municipal debt less sinking fund.....	646.57

Decrease in number of establishments reported, 18.67 per cent, which is caused by the fact that hand trades, such as custom boot and shoe making, the manufacture of bread and other bakery products, and carpentering, do not appear to have been as fully reported as in 1880.

It is claimed that a "striking feature of these returns is the satisfactory increase during the decade in the number of hands employed and the amount of wages paid," the increase being set out as from $459 in 1880 to $652 in 1890, or 42.05 per cent. A great many other statistics, corresponding substantially with the foregoing, also appear; and all tend to show a material increase in our material prosperity.

DESTROYING NATIONAL RELICS.

A few days ago mention was made in these columns of the fact that the private car in which President Lincoln used to visit the army and in which his body was brought back to Springfield for interment, was lying in a wrecked condition at North Platte, Nebraska. It occurred to us that a relic of that dark and dreary period, around which clustered memories so sacred and abiding, should have better treatment in its old age; that it ought to be given a quiet corner in some place where it would be accessible to anyone who wished to visit it, and there, secure from the weather and the vandal, be allowed to sink into dissolution by the abraded hand of time.

But it seems our nation is not alone in the matter of neglecting cynosures of that kind; our cousins across the water are just as bad, perhaps worse. They have apparently lost sentiment regarding trophies of national worth when these are once permitted to tumble into the channels of trade and traffic than we. The hull of the "Foudryant"—Nelson's grand old warship at Trafalgar—was recently sold by order of the British admiralty, the purchaser being a German speculator and the price paid comparatively trifling. The purchaser proposes cutting it up into small pieces and selling these throughout the world as historical curiosities. Several Britons became so shocked at the idea that they started a subscription for the purpose of buying the ship back, but the owner wants £8000 for it, and at latest advices the entire amount subscribed was about one-twentieth of that; so it is probable the sacrifice will be made and fragments of the "Foudryan" with the purchaser's certificate of genuineness attached will be on the market.

SKY-SCRAPING BUILDINGS.

The tall building mania grows by what it feeds on and it is always being fed. It used to be the case in this country, and not so very many years ago either, that an eight-story structure was considered a monster and as big as we would ever have; then, with the inflated condition of things following the war, ground in some places became so high and room so much in demand that one story after another was added until a ten or a dozen story building in some places would look quite squat now, while in some cities, notably New York and Chicago, there are some that are twice that height. All of which merely illustrates again the utter recklessness which seems to have become an inseparable phase of American enterprise.

A hotel is now being erected in New York City that will be, when completed, the tallest structure of the kind in the world. The excavation for the foundation is from twenty-two to forty feet deep and will be solidly lined with rock. Above this the building will rise to a height of 225 feet, there being seventeen stories; it will have 100 feet front on one street and 155 feet on another, so that it will be more than twice as long as it is thick. It will take two years and a million dollars to build it.

Every city should have an ordinance on this subject. Sky-scraping structures should be prohibited as contributing greatly to the dangers and inconveniences of modern life. It is very true that if a man falls from a ten story building, or even one of six stories, it means death just as surely as though he fell from the tallest house in the world; it should also be remembered that the tendency to fall is increased with the height. Thousands of men and any number of women who could view the landscape from the top of any building in Salt Lake City with the utmost composure, would shrivel up and become helpless on the last landing of the Eiffel tower. Besides this consideration is the corresponding and attendant one of the "dandy elevator," not only in the upward and downward movements of the cage but the long and unrelieved shaft as well; also the greater difficulty, the ratio of which increases with the height, in effecting escapes in case of fire or other calamity, and the largely enhanced dangers to the workmen who put up such structures—all these and perhaps other considerations place the matter of the height of buildings within the control of the law-making department, and it ought to act upon its privilege at an early day. Eight stories, or ten at the most, of a reasonable number of feet, are all that ought to be allowed in any community here or elsewhere.

Not to assume the character of alarmists without sufficient cause and thus placing stumbling blocks within the way of progress, we take occasion to say that this subject is not original with us, that it was begun in the very place where the mania rages the most violently—Chicago—some time ago, and is occasionally referred to by the press there now. It is a proper subject for agitation.

THE COUNCIL'S WORK OBJECTED TO.

There are a good many complaints from property owners in this city over the new garbage ordinance. Some even go so far as to say that they will pay no attention whatever to it, and if the officers see fit to arrest therefore, let the arrests proceed. This is the same spirit on a smaller scale as that which actuated the patriots of '76 when they dumped a load of tea into Boston harbor, and later in England caused the people to rise up in revolt against the corn laws—it permits those who are entrusted with the duty of making enactments to go so far in the matter of oppressive legislation and then "call them down," that is, notifies them in a purely democratic manner that they are exceeding their authority.

An old adage fittingly adage is, in effect, that resistance to tyranny is obedience to Providence. The only trouble about its application is that when people imagine themselves aggrieved, or permit demagogues to make them believe that such is the case, if they cut loose from the centripetal restraint of the law as it is and rush off at a tangent, they are like anything else that has departed in like manner—they never stop until violently encountered by some opposing force. Such procedure has been on many occasions resorted to by organized bands of communists, anarchists and others who always yield to the requirements of the law by constraint and under protest; and every such attempt has resulted in the needless destruction of property, the death of many of the malcontents and too often that of innocent parties. Vastly different was the revolt of the colonists, for they, in the name of the law and by its authority, made appeal after appeal and protestation upon protestation, with but the effect of receiving "additional violence and insult," and at last being "spurned with contempt from the foot of the throne."

It hasn't got to be so bad as that, even in miniature, with us yet, though we are free to confess that many acts of the municipal lawmakers do not bear the impress of careful consideration, investigation of the subject legislated upon, or a due regard for the best interest of all classes; perhaps this garbage measure is one of that kind. If it is, the remedy is not in violent or any form of lawless resistance, but in a dignified appeal to the courts through the peaceable and orderly channels of the law. The higher philosophy and profounder wisdom of those who sit in judgment in the courts authorized to test all local enactments are an ample safeguard against arrogant assumption of power and any inflections which usurpers of authority may seek to impose. Let those who are aggrieved, or even those who consider themselves aggrieved, make up a test case whose object shall be the ascertainment of the rightfulness or wrongfulness of this or any other ordinance complained of, but let such resistance go no further.

This is a proper time for defects in the corporation-by-laws to be pointed out, as they are now and have been for several months undergoing revision. Any assistance which the taxpayer may be able to render in making the code all that it ought to be is not only his privilege but ought to be his pleasure, as it is certainly very much to his interest. The compensation being paid to the revisor, as we are informed by a councilman himself, is excessive and goes on every day whether the salons keep him employed or not. It is not for us to say whether it could have been done as well and for less money or not, but while it is under way it would be as well if an occasional reminder from those who pay the bills were put in, so that in the final footings the work done and the amount paid for it will not show a discrepancy beyond all reason, thus giving other grounds for complaint.

We don't like the way some people have of continually "nagging" the City Council and that, too, very frequently regarding measures of which they know but very little and do not understand at all. That kind of thing is productive of no good results and is a custom more honored in the breach than in the observance. But it is a different thing altogether to complain of enactments, the enforcement of which would result in needless hardships to some without corresponding benefits to any. Above all have those who foot the bills a right to demand that no more be paid out for any scheme or purpose than is actually necessary; they can stop this in the manner suggested if they feel disposed to do so, but generally they are not so disposed as long as the outlays come anywhere near reason. As to the garbage ordinance first referred to, there is widespread and apparently well-founded antagonism to it. Some of the objections cited are serious, and these allude to provisions which are unfair as well as cumbersome. All agree that its enforcement will add heavy expenses to the citizens, while some are free to class it as infamous. The matter is not now open to amendment, but it is still within the reach of repeal if an outraged public sentiment demands it. Furthermore, as already stated it is not yet beyond the crucial test of legal interpretation and enforcement; the community is not left without a means of redress.

IT HAS been decided that those surpluses cannot escape duty on the plea that they are to be used as repairs in churches. Hence, observes a light-minded Boston contemporary, a further expansion of our surplusage revenue.

THE REPUBLICAN ADVERTISEMENT.

Says the garrulous and light-headed Ogden correspondent of the Liberal organ: "When the official Church organ of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints goes into this campaign and advises the election of a certain candidate; * * * does this look as if the Church were out of politics?"

We presume the writer bases his latter query upon his former assertion, and that in the former he refers to the DESERET NEWS. If so, we beg to say—without unduly flustering the correspondent by notifying him at all—that his premises being utterly false, his conclusion is grotesquely illogical and hence tumbles to the ground—interrogation point, subordinate sentences, capital letters, rhythmic sequence and all.

The extent to which the NEWS has gone "into this campaign and advised the election of a certain candidate," is this: It has been published in its semi-weekly issue a full-page advertisement, plainly marked as such, for the territorial Republican committee; said advertisement containing nothing disrespectful, nothing malicious, nothing intemperate or improper from the journalistic standpoint, and certainly nothing that could be called objectionable from the Republican or any other advertising standpoint. The NEWS "has gone into this campaign" to this further extent: It informed the territorial Democratic committee of what their opponents were going to do and did so, showed them the matter that had been published, and, with a modest word as to the value of the NEWS as an advertising medium, offered them a page of the SEMI-WEEKLY at the same price—a high figure, it may seem to some, but very reasonable indeed when the circulation of the paper and the number of homes it enters are taken into consideration.

Thus far and no farther has the NEWS "entered this campaign and advised the election of a certain candidate." We will be pardoned for saying that in our humble opinion the two candidates or their friends could not spend their campaign money in any better way than in using the NEWS' advertising columns for the presentation of their respective claims to popularity and for advice as to the ticket to be supported. But to attribute to this paper the views expressed by its patrons in the columns they pay for is too absurd for serious notice; while to charge the Church of which this paper is the organ with being in politics because of the sentiments expressed by certain advertisers is as ludicrous as it would be to say the Church had announced itself in favor of a general purge because some medical patrons are permitted to urge the effectiveness of this or the other special brand of pills.

A CURIOUS circumstance in connection with the recent epidemic of cholera at Hamburg was the departure of all the birds from the city a few days prior to the outbreak. It is an indication of good sense in the German bird that he would rather get a fly than a microbe on him.

DISCOURSE.

DELIVERED BY

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON,

Sunday Afternoon, October 9th, 1892, at the General Conference, held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

I will read a portion of the 16th chapter of Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, commencing at the 35th verse:

"But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or of some other grain: But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him, and to every seed his own body. All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also it is the resurrection of the dead."

In standing up to address this very large congregation this afternoon, I do so "with considerable fear [and trembling, and my trust is that God will help me, through your faith and prayers, that that which I may say may be from Him. It is a very responsible thing for a man to attempt to address his fellow men, unless he can impart some light [and some instruction, and say things that will be of some profit to them. I hope, to be able to do that this afternoon.

Since I have been in this conference, my mind has rested considerably upon the Salt Lake Temple and its near completion, and upon the distinguishing features that we as a people are possessed of, making us a different people from the rest of the religious world. The distinction between us and others who worship God, and who profess to be religious, is very marked in some respects. It is true that there is a union of feeling and of belief between us and the denominations that prevail in Christendom on some of the cardinal points of what is called Christianity. We believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world, and that through His death and atonement we are redeemed. All the so-called orthodox sects entertain this same belief. In common, too, with the most of them, we believe in repentance of sin. We believe also in the resurrection of the body. Upon these points there is a similarity of belief between us and other denominations. But upon many points that we believe in there is an absence of belief in the minds of the great majority of the Christian world. We are distinguished in this respect as entertaining very strange ideas, and some think them almost heathenish. But there is this to be said concerning the doctrine which God has revealed to us: they are the most philosophical of any that are believed among men. I say this with, I believe, a full comprehension of what is meant by this statement. I believe that the religion of the Latter-day Saints is the only religion that will bear the test of philosophical investigation, and that will meet the burning questions of the day. I believe that it is the only religion that will satisfy the yearnings of the human heart, and that will give light upon points that are considered mysterious by the religious world. I believe that the religion of the Latter-day Saints shows in the plainest, in the simplest and in the most conclusive manner the relation of man to God. I do not know any other religion that teaches in a satisfactory manner the object that God has had in placing man upon the earth. I do not know any other religion that teaches concerning the relationship that existed between God and His children prior to the organization of the earth and the placing of man upon it. I do not know any other religion that professes to teach the relationship that will exist between men and women, between parents and children, and between husband and wife, after this mortal career is ended. I do not know of any other religion that gives any distinct idea as to the character of the life beyond the grave, or what shall constitute the glory of man when he becomes immortal and when he receives the fulness of the blessings that God has promised. I do not know any other religion that throws light upon these questions. But I do know that there exists at the present time among men a great deal of uncertainty upon all these points. Some even go so far—and they call themselves intelligent, too—as to doubt the future existence of man, and think that when this mortal career is finished that is the end of man as a living entity. Now, who is there, with the light that is possessed by the religious world, that can explain in a satisfactory manner how it was that Jesus, our Redeemer, in whose name we approach the Father, existed as God in a previous state—that is, that He existed and exercised power and dominion, and then became a little child, born of a mortal woman? Is there any religion on the earth that can give any explanation of this great event? I have not met with any religion that will answer satisfactorily questions that arise connected with the pre-existence and the birth of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But it is supposed to be clothed in mystery—a mystery that cannot be explained, and that is beyond human ken; and if inquiry arises, it is suppressed, because it is considered almost blasphemous to think of such things. So it is with most of these questions that I have briefly alluded to.

In the religion that God has revealed to us, there is light and intelligence thrown upon all these questions. We are not left to grope in the dark and in uncertainty as to why we are here. The object that God had in placing us upon this earth has been made perfectly plain to us; of course, not in its fulness, not as we will be able to comprehend it in eternity, but ufficiently so to satisfy our inquiries and to remove from our minds doubt and uncertainty concerning this important matter. I say that our religion is philosophical, and that it will satisfy intelligent men. They may not believe that which we tell them; but it is the only religion that I know of that attempts to meet these questions and to answer them, and it does so effectually.

I have read in your hearing some words of the Apostle Paul, in which he describes the resurrection. Who can explain this? Was there a minister upon the face of the earth that could give an explanation to these teachings of the Apostle Paul until the Lord revealed? The everlasting Gospel through His servant Joseph Smith? No; for the belief has been general that there is only one place of happiness; that there is only one glory; that there is no difference in heaven; that every human being who is saved goes to one place and is gathered into one gathering, and that those who go to the other place are also consigned there indiscriminately. Is not this a belief that has existed for generations? Of course, the Catholic church believes in purgatory—an intermediate state; but after the soul emerges from purgatory it is, they say, ushered into heaven, and there is no distinction. The murderer who dies on the scaffold, who says he believes in Jesus and repents of his sins, is supposed to be ushered into the presence of God and the Lamb and to have all the blessings of salvation and exaltation which the most faithful men and women have received—to be the companion of the prophets, apostles and martyrs who have laid down their lives for the truth! This has been the general belief; but here Paul distinctly states that there is a difference in the resurrection; that some receive the celestial glory, which is likened to that of the sun; that some receive the terrestrial glory, which is likened to that of the moon; that some receive the telestial glory, which is likened to that of the stars; and as one star differeth from another in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead. This is in perfect harmony with all the scriptures. The whole burden of the prophets who have spoken upon this subject is to the effect that men will be rewarded according to their works, and that they will receive a glory in proportion to their faithfulness. Until Joseph Smith received the revelation from God which is embodied in the 76th section of our Book of Doctrine and Covenants, this was a profound mystery to the religious world. But through that revelation it was made plain to us. Joseph Smith was the means of revealing through the knowledge which God gave to him, that according to man's obedience so would be his reward; that the man who obeyed a certain law would receive the reward that was affixed to that law; that the higher the law the greater would be the glory. And this was the incentive that the Saints had in ancient days to be faithful. If a man could lead an immoral life and gratify all his passions and appetites, and then in the last days of his life, when his passions and appetites were all dead within him, he could profess repentance and obtain forgiveness and receive the assurance that he would be ushered into the presence of apostles and prophets who have suffered death for the truth, what inducement would there be for a man to be faithful to the truth all his days, and then perhaps to lay down his life for it? It is such teachings as these that have led the world into the depths of sin which it has reached; that have encouraged vice and sin in every direction; that have encouraged men even to commit murder; and the result is, many souls have been lost.

God has revealed unto us something different to this. He has shown that if we commit sin we must pay the penalty of the sin. If we live lives of righteousness, we shall receive the reward that is affixed to righteousness. We shall have the spirit of that glory which we shall attain unto; and just as there are grades in this life among men, so it will be in the resurrection. There will be grades of happiness, of glory and of exaltation. You put a man that has not lived so as to receive the spirit of a certain glory with those who have received that glory, and he would be entirely out of his element, and unhappy. God will give to every man a glory that will be suited to his condition. So that if a man obeys every law that God gives, and maintains his integrity, he will receive the highest glory that God has to bestow, even the celestial glory. But there are some who cannot do this. As the revelation that Joseph received teaches us, there are honorable men who do a great many good things, but who have not faith enough to receive the Gospel in its fulness. All of us have met such individuals. We have also seen men and women who gladly obeyed the Gospel when they heard it. They were baptized; they had hands laid upon them, and they receive the Holy Ghost; but they did not have faith enough to go beyond this. It was too great a trial to them to forsake the lands of their nativity and all their old associations and gather with the Saints of God. Such persons will receive a reward in proportion to their obedience. Then you will find others who have faith enough to obey the first principles of the Gospel and perhaps receive the Priesthood and gather with the Saints; but when they are taught the doctrine of tithing they have not faith enough to obey that, or if they do pay tithing, they pay but very little. Persons who have no more faith than this will not get a reward like those who are obedient to tithing. So with all these works that God requires at our hands. There are some men that have not faith enough to go upon missions when they are called, and they offer excuses. They will get their reward according to their diligence and faithfulness; but they will not get the reward of the man who is always willing to do that which he is required to do, and whose life is crowded with good works; who is liberal to the poor, honest in his dealings, just and merciful in his actions, and who is willing to suffer wrong rather than do wrong.

I would like to impress upon your minds, brethren and sisters, that we shall get a reward according to our deeds, and also according to our desires, because sometimes we cannot do that which we would like to do, but we say in our hearts, "If I had, I would do; but because I have not, I cannot;" and having that spirit within us it is acceptable in the sight of God. You remember the words of King Benjamin, in speaking about the poor. He taught that it was an important thing to help the poor, and he said: "Ye who have not and yet have sufficient that ye remain from day to day; I mean all you who deny the beggar, because ye have not; I would that ye say in your hearts, that I give not because I have not; but if I had I would give." There are some laws that we are prevented from obeying that have been declared to be necessary to exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God. What will be the condition of those who do not obey these laws? God, knowing all our desires, if He should see a spirit of willingness and obedience in our hearts, will judge us accordingly. That which we cannot do we are not expected to do. God does not ask impossible things from His children. But He asks us to be obedient to Him and to carry out His laws in our lives; and if for any reason we cannot do this, but are willing to do it, He will accept the offering and the good desires that we entertain in our hearts. There are some who cannot do what they would like in this Temple that we are talking of, as they have not the means; but the widow's mite is as much as the thousand dollars of the rich man, if it is only given in the right spirit. The Lord looks at the hearts of His children. The woman who is poor, but who gives to the extent of her ability, God accepts that and she is blessed accordingly, and will be rewarded just as much in her place as the rich man that has done to the extent of his ability. Our God is a just God, and He deals with His children in justice and mercy.

It should be the aim of every Latter-day Saint to strive to attain to the highest exaltation, and the way to attain that is to obey all the laws connected therewith. Now, God has commanded us to build Temples. The building of Temples and the giving of endowments therein are matters of great curiosity to the world. We have all kinds of falsehood told about our endowments. We have been accused of being disloyal to the government and taking oaths that were antagonistic to the government, and doing things that were very wicked indeed, because, forsooth, we have believed in giving endowments and ordinances that God has revealed. It is this that distinguishes us from every other people on the face of the earth. God has revealed to us the means by which we shall prepare ourselves to dwell with Him in eternity. Is there anything strange about this? Is there anything wrong about it? Are we to live upon the earth like so many animals, and when death comes, to die unprepared for the future? Would this be consistent with our ideas of God and of the importance of the human soul? In the world to-day righteous men do not seem to have any advantages over wicked men. There is nothing to distinguish them. But this was not the case in ancient days, when God had a servant like Abraham, like Isaac, like Jacob, and like other faithful men. He made them promises that distinguished them from the reof the human family, and He rewarded them for their services. It was so in the days of the Apostles. The Savior promised them great blessings. On one occasion he said: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." What a great blessing this was! What dignity! And He not only promised to them these blessings, but He sealed them upon them. We are also told that the Saints of God are to be kings and priests unto the Most High God.

God gave His ancient servants extraordinary marks of favor. He called Abraham His friend, and made great promises to him and his posterity. He told him that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. He repeated this promise to Isaac and to Jacob, and their descendants received the fulfillment of it. He gave to Abraham a promise that he should have the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and that his posterity should inhabit that land. And through the faithfulness of those men their posterity today are marked because of the miraculous care that God has had over them, in preserving them amid the vicissitudes that have befallen the human family, and keeping them as a distinct people, in many respects, up to the present time. I refer now to the Jews. There are also other branches of the House of Israel that have been in like manner preserved, and will be preserved, through the promises which were made to their fathers. There was some use in serving God in those days. There were blessings promised that were very great, and that encouraged the men who served Him to endure all things, even death itself; for they had the promise that they should become kings and have dominion and rule, and their posterity should be blessed in the earth, and they should have great rewards in eternity. These were incentives for them to keep the commandments of God. Where are any people who receive such promises now? Outside of the Latter-day Saints, there are none to be found on the face of the earth. Why is this? Is it because God is dead? Is it because He is not the same today that He always was? Is it because He has become a respecter of persons, and in one generation He will bestow great blessings upon His servants and in another generation will withhold them? No, it is not for any of these reasons. It is because the inhabitants of the earth have not lived up to His commandments and they have not exercised the faith that the ancients had in order to receive these blessings. Can you not all perceive what a difference there is in the world today, outside of our Church, from that which existed in ancient times when men served God and kept His commandments? The Bible is full of promises to them. They were favored individuals, favored families, favored races and favored nations, because they kept the commandments of God. There is certainly something wrong in this condition that exists now in the world. Either God has changed, or else He has died, or gone to sleep, or else the inhabitants of the earth do not live so as to receive His blessings. I prefer to believe that God lives, that He has not gone on a journey, and that He has not gone to sleep. I prefer to believe that the failure to receive these great blessings and promises is due to men.

Now, God has restored the Gospel, through which these blessings are to be received. How shall they be received, and where shall they be received? Why, God has commanded us to build temples, and we have had the same anxiety in relation to building temples that the children of Israel had in the days of David and of Solomon; and we have built temples and have received blessings in them. We have received promises, endowments and keys by which we can go to God as the ancients did, exercise faith before Him, and obtain the promises that they received. It is for this purpose that temples have been built. I said to you the other day that this is the only people on the earth that I knew anything of where every reputable male member of the Church held some portion of the Priesthood and where every man, as fast as he was prepared, received the Melchisedek Priesthood and the power and authority connected therewith. Why is it that God has distributed this power among this people? It is for the purpose of raising them up and making them a holy nation—a nation of kings and of priests. Not three men standing between God and the people. Not twelve men sitting on a platform and being the oracles to the people without the people having the chance to know whether they are the servants of God or not. Not seventy men, nor any number of men. No caste, no distinction, no classing of the people in that way; but every one that behaves himself and serves God, receiving the same as all the rest. Where is there anything on the earth like it? You cannot find it among men. It is the beginning of that great power that will overshadow the earth, and that will lift every man near to his God. No man need be afraid, for he will get all that he can bear. It ought to make us rejoice from the bottom of our hearts that in this respect we are so blessed. Other churches have their preachers, and they are divided into classes. The preachers are lifted up. They explain the word of God to the people, and the people sit and listen. Do they tell them that it is their privilege to know for themselves? No, they do not, because it has become a profession to preach the Gospel for money and to divine for hire. Men are educated in colleges and in universities to give them these distinctions and to lift them above their fellows. That is not God's way, and that is not His design connected with this people. He intends to make us a great and mighty people, and He wants to get us to realize—and the servants of God are striving to that end as fast as they can—our own importance and our own privileges. The First Presidency and the Twelve do not want the people to think that everything depends upon them. They are trying to infuse into the hearts of all the men and women of this Church the dignity of their calling and the closeness of their relationship to God, and to have them feel that they are important in His sight.

We are building temples for the express purpose of bestowing blessings upon the people and preparing this people for eternity. We have come to the earth for that purpose. We have not come here to be like so many animals—to eat, drink and die. That is not the purpose that God had in view in sending us here. We are filled with the aspirations of Deity. We have great and godlike qualities lying latent and undeveloped within us; but they will be developed, for we are the offspring of God, and He wants to make us like Himself. That is why He has sent us here; not merely to eat and drink, but to prepare ourselves for eternity. How shall we live in eternity? I said in the beginning of my remarks that the religious world did not tell us anything about this, for they did not know. Will husband know his wife? Will wife know her husband? Will there be any closer tie between the husband and the wife in eternity than between the husband and a strange woman or the wife and a strange man? "I think not," the religious man will say; "The Savior says there is no marrying or giving in marriage in the resurrection, and I think, therefore, that we will all live separately." Well, how about these delightful associations that we have in this life? How is it that when men are separated from their wives, or when women are separated from their husbands, they frequently die themselves? How is it that mothers, when they lose a loved child, almost feel as though they wanted to die, too, and do sometimes die through grief? Are these affections anything? Are they to be obliterated? Are none of them to survive the resurrection? Are we to be mixed like so many cattle in eternity? Is that the fate which awaits men and women, created in the image of God? Is the procreative power to be lost—that gift which is the greatest that God has given to a human being? Are all these affections that are so delightful and so tender to be crushed out and never have room for expansion? Why, it is the most hideous thought that can be presented to reflecting men and women. No; God has taught us better than this. He has revealed to us that these relationships that are so tender and that make life so delightful will exist beyond the grave. Wife will be united to husband. Children will be united to parents. The family relationship will exist in eternity, and the glory of a man and a woman will be in dwelling in the midst of their posterity and seeing that posterity increase. For after God seemingly had exhausted every blessing that He could give to Abraham, or that human heart could desire, He took him out and showed him the stars of heaven and said to him: "In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore." That seemed to be the crowning blessing—the blessing of all blessings—that He pronounced upon His faithful servant Abraham, after he had expressed a willingness to sacrifice his son Isaac. And this is the blessing that God has promised to every faithful man and woman—that to the increase of their seed there shall be no end. This will constitute the great glory of eternity—the man presiding over his family, and being lord over them. Thus it is that Jesus is called Lord of Lords. He is Lord of Lords because His brethren will exercise this power and authority over their posterity. And then what? Why, the creative power will be given to men. They will not be sitting upon a cloud, thrumming a harp and singing songs. We will not spend our days throughout the endless ages of eternity in any such monotonous employment as this. It is delightful as a recreation. It is very nice to sing and to have music at intervals; but to follow it up through eternity, and that be our sole occupation, it would be the most dreary prospect that the human mind could conceive of. There was a concert here last night. Would you like to have one tonight, tomorrow night, and the next night, and every night for a week, and have to go there to sing and hear singing? Why, you would get so tired of it that you would not know what to do with yourselves. That is not heaven. It is one of the joys of heaven, but it is not the sole occupation of the redeemed. What will be their occupation? The exercise of that creative power that our Father and God has exercised in preparing this earth as the abode for man. He called together the elements and formed the earth as a habitation for man; and man, if he is faithful, will progress until he will do that very same thing for his posterity. Abraham, standing at the head of an innumerable posterity, will find it necessary to have room. He will want to emigrate after awhile from this earth and find a new habitation, for there will not be room enough on the glorified earth for him and his posterity in the coming eternity. Thus it is that the heavens are bespangled with the glorious orbs that we see at night—the creations of God, peopled by the children of God.

And all this God promises to us, if we are faithful. He says, "You shall be kings, you shall be queens, you shall sit upon thrones, you shall sway scepters, and you shall have power and dominion, if you prove yourselves faithful and true to me; and you shall be my heirs, and joint heirs with my beloved Son, Jesus Christ, your Redeemer." We have built temples that within their sacred walls these holy ordinances can be administered and these promises given and sealed upon the heads of the children of men. We have not commenced to do many things that will yet be done in temples. But we have made a beginning. We have begun to seal, by the authority of the Holy Priesthood, wife to husband, and where children are not born in the covenant, children to parents, or where they cannot be sealed to their parents, adopted to others as parents, for it be known, there must be a connecting link between every generation and dispensation from our father Adam down to the present. And that will have to be done in the temples of God. The marriages of our fathers and mothers—that is, those of them who were married before God restored the Priesthood—were not eternal marriages. They married until death should them part. It was a covenant that they entered into. The priest that married them had no more authority from the Lord to marry them than a justice of the peace has. These marriages were recognized by the laws of the land as legal, but they did not extend beyond this time; they were only until death should them part. Now they have died, and the covenant that they made with each other terminated with death; it was no longer binding. How shall they be united for eternity? If the family relationship be the true relationship that shall exist in eternity between the sexes, how shall those who have died be united one to the other in eternity? God has commanded temples to be built in order that that ordinance may be attended to therein. Jesus died for us. He made a vicarious offering for us. He died in our stead, and through His death we are redeemed. In like manner, we can be saviors, to a certain extent. We can act vicariously for our dead. If my grandfather and grandmother died before they had the opportunity of being married by the authority which God recognizes, and which would make their marriage binding for time and eternity, I, as their heir, can go forward in the temple of God, with the heiress, my sister, who may represent the female branch of the family, and we can be united for and in their behalf, acting for them in this vicarious manner. Thus the family relationship that existed and that was dissolved with death, can be re-created and made perpetual and binding throughout all eternity. Thus children can be sealed to their parents, and one generation to another, until the whole family of man shall be re-united and bound together, all being the children of God. Hence it is as the Savior said, that there will be no marrying nor giving in marriage in the resurrection, because this ordinance will be attended to upon the earth in this manner.

These will be some of the labors that we shall have to perform in the millennium, during the thousand years of peace on the earth, when Satan will be bound. We shall build temples, and we shall go forth in peace and in righteousness, doing the works of redemption that have to be done for those that have died in ignorance of the Gospel and without receiving these saving ordinances. We shall find plenty of employment during the thousand years in doing these works, and the earth will be cleansed from sin. Satan will be bound, and he will not have power to tempt the nations of the earth, and we shall dwell in peace and righteousness. There will be no war, for swords will be beaten into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks, and there shall be peace from one end of the earth to the other. And this is the beginning of it here in these mountains. Already we have a foretaste of that spirit which, when it spreads throughout the earth, will bring about that happy consummation, that glorious period of which the Prophets and Apostles have spoken. Already that spirit has been poured upon us, to a certain extent, and we enjoy it; and when we live according to that spirit, there is no quarrelling, there is no contention, there is no disposition to fight, but we are filled with love. This, my brethren and sisters, as I have said, is a foretaste of that which is to come; and though it may seem to you that it is a long delayed day, it nevertheless is near at hand. All we have to do is to bear patiently the trials and the afflictions that we have to contend with, for the hour of our deliverance is near at hand. The Lord is mighty, and this wickedness that now afflicts men and that is so sorrowful to contemplate, will be banished from the face of the earth; for there will be calamities, and scourges and judgments go forth to remove the wicked; and there will be but few men left, the Prophet says. We are required to prepare ourselves for these things. God has not forgotten us, and will not forget us. He is with this people, and is overruling all things for our good, and if we are faithful He will deliver us.

But I want you, my brethren and sisters, to realize if you can—I want to realize it myself—that which God has done for us. How different are all our thoughts and all our anticipations from those that our fathers had who had not the Gospel! We look at things differently. God has thrown a flood of light upon the principles of the Gospel. He has shown unto us that we lived with Him before we came here. We can understand why our Savior should be born as He was, because through the revelations that God has given to us we know that we were born in like manner. We know that we existed in the spirit world before we came here, and that we are really the offspring of our Father in heaven, and that He desired us to come here and receive tabernacles of flesh, that we might be tempted, tried and proved, to see whether we would be true to Him or not. The scenes through which we pass have for their express purpose this testing of our integrity. I tell you that Latter-day Saints ought to be people of the strongest friendships. We ought to be a people that are bound together by ties that are far stronger than death. We ought to have a love for one another that would be like the love of angels. How can I be true to my Father in heaven if I am not true to my brethren? As the Apostle John says, "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" A man that is not true to his brother cannot be trusted. A woman that is not true to her husband and to her children cannot be trusted. Such people God will not trust, and sooner or later they lose the Spirit of God and go out of the Church. And this spirit of divorce that is so prevalent in the world is not of God. There is too much of it among Latter-day Saints. I tell you that where that spirit prevails the spirit of God does not prevail. God intends to have a people who will not break their covenants, a people who will suffer death rather than do this. If they have a friendship, they will not break that friendship. If they have a brother, they will be true to that brother. They would rather lay down their lives than be untrue. They will not speak lightly about their brethren. They will not belittle their brethren, nor disparage them. Neither will sisters disparage their sisters, nor speak lightly of them, nor backbite them. God is going to have a people of this kind. You remember what the Prophet

Joseph said: "O ye Twelve and all Saints! profit by this important key—that in all your trials, troubles, temptations, afflictions, bonds, imprisonments and death, see to it that you do not betray heaven; that you do not betray Jesus Christ; that you do not betray the brethren; that you do not betray the revelations of God."

Yes, in all your knocking and foundering, see to it that you do not this thing." We are now in the midst of politics and all sorts of things, and I think we are going to be tried, or are being tried, as we never were tried; and a good many, if they are not careful, will forfeit their integrity. We have got to be watchful, for I tell you God has sent us here to test us and to prove us. We were true in keeping our first estate. The people that are here today stood loyally by God and by Jesus, and they did not flinch. If you had flinched then, you would not be here with the Priesthood upon you. The evidence that you were loyal, that you were true, and that you did not waver, is to be found in the fact that you have received the Gospel and the everlasting Priesthood. Now you are in your second estate, and you are going to be tested again. Will you be true and loyal to God with the curtain drawn between you and Him, shut out from His presence, and in the midst of darkness and temptation, with Satan and his invisible hosts all around you, bringing all manner of evil influences to bear upon you? The men and the women that will be loyal under these circumstances God will exalt, because it will be the highest test to which they can be subjected. It is not as it was before. We were then in the presence of God. Now there is a veil between us and our Father, and we are left to ourselves, to a certain extent. We are left to be governed by the influences that we invite, and there are any number of evil influences around us, whispering into our ears and hearts all manner of things. If we will open our hearts to receive them, or allow them to enter our hearts, we will think evil of our brethren and of our sisters; we will have malice towards them; we will envy them, and we will say bad things about them. God will test us in all this. I have always thanked God, since I was old enough to understand principle, that I was among a people like the Latter-day Saints. The Lord has helped me to stand anything that the world can do. I have been made perfectly bullet proof, it seems to me, so far as the world is concerned. But it has always been a great source of grief to me to have anything occur between my brethren and myself. I do not want to have any feeling in my heart towards my brethren, or say or do anything that will give them pain. I know there is more integrity among the Latter-day Saints than among any other people on the face of the earth. They are true to each other; they love each other; and many of them would die for each other. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Brethren and sisters, I would like us to keep before us the grand promises that God has made to us and the glorious prospects that are open before us. We may have our trials and afflictions here. But let our eyes look forward with faith to that glorious future that God has prepared for us, and the great reward that He will bestow upon us. For we shall have crowns; we shall have thrones; we shall have dominion; we shall have power. God will give all this to us just as fast as we are prepared for it; and if we enter into these holy temples and receive there the ordinances that He has commanded His servants to give, these promises will be fulfilled to the very letter, if we are faithful. Not one will fail. How was it when you were baptized by one having authority? Did you not have the testimony that your sins were remitted? God accepted the offering. He accepted the administration of the ordinance. He accepted the laying on of hands, and He gave the Holy Ghost to those upon whom hands were laid. And when you come to the altar, and the servant of God says, I seal upon you the blessings of the holy resurrection, with power to come forth in the morning of the first resurrection, clothed with glory, immortality and eternal lives; and I seal upon you the blessings of kingdoms, thrones, principalities, powers, dominions and exaltations, the blessings of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob—when the servant of God pronounces these words upon those who come to the altar, and he seals the wife to the husband, just as sure as God lives, just as sure as the heavens are above our heads and the earth beneath our feet, so sure will those words be fulfilled upon the heads of those upon whom they are pronounced, if they are faithful to the covenants which they make; and they will come forth in the morning of the first resurrection, clothed with glory, immortality and eternal lives. When we lay down our dead, after having received these holy ordinances—our husbands, our wives, our children, our fathers, our mothers—we lay them down without a shadow of doubt in our hearts as to the future. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Under such circumstances as these, death has lost its sting; the grave has lost its victory; it is robbed of its terrors by the glorious promises that God has made unto His servants and His children. Others may fear death. Others may dread the future. Others may think that it is a leap in the dark. But not so the Latter-day Saints! The future is illumined by the glory of God and the promises that He has made to us; and when the time comes for us to lay down these mortal lives, we will do so just as we do when we go on missions and the time comes for us to return home—we will go home, with regrets of course for those we leave behind, but with gladness and joy to think that our missions are ended and that we have been faithful, and we will be welcomed by our brothers and sisters and our families. We will look forward with joyful anticipation to the delightful reunion that we will have with those whom we have left, who have been our fellow-laborers and companions in the afflictions of this life, and it will be a heavenly time. Therefore, I say that death has lost its terrors, and the grave no longer triumphs over people who have received such blessings as these.

Oh! my brethren and sisters, what is there that should tempt us to waver in our devotion to the work of God? Shall we hesitate with our means in building temples and in carrying forward this glorious work? God forbid. Let us devote ourselves with every energy of our souls and with all the means that God has placed within our reach, to the advancement of the cause of righteousness. Let us teach our children to do the same. For the day of righteousness is approaching, and we should do all in our power to bring about that happy period, when sin shall be banished from the face of the earth. I feel as though there is nothing on the earth that I have that I would hesitate to give for this great and glorious cause. God has made my life a constant joy. He has clothed my days with peace and happiness, and has blessed me in every direction, and shall I not worship Him? Shall I not serve Him? Shall I not do all in my power for Him and for His cause? I try to do so. I certainly want to do so, and I want to see my brethren and sisters do so. I want to stir them up to diligence. I want to present before them the glorious Gospel that God has revealed, the glorious promises that He has made to us, and the glorious future that He has assured us of; that we will remember them, and that we will teach our children, and not be led away by the paltry baubles of the world, and by the spirit of the world. God forbid that men and women who have made such covenants as we have, and who have been blessed as we have, should do this! God has given everything to us that we could ask for in righteousness. Is there any knowledge that would be of use to you that God has not given you? He has clothed the past with light. He has illumined the present with glory; and the future—it is beyond the power of human tongue to describe that which God has revealed concerning the future! We may occasionally get a glimpse of it in the vision; but we cannot describe it, nor fully comprehend it.

I am desirous to see this Temple finished. I am desirous that when we go away from this conference we will go with a determination to do all in our power to furnish the necessary means. And not only this Temple, but everything else. For God will reward us abundantly. He will multiply us upon the right hand and upon the left. I can testify of this to you in the name of the Lord, for I know it; and I know that God will bless His people if they are devoted to Him and their eyes are single to His glory.

I pray God, the Eternal Father, to bless you. Oh! this is a glorious Conference. I wish you could stay here a week. I feel as though we were near the gates of heaven. I pray God to fill you with His Holy Spirit. Above all things, be firm in the truth, and steadfast even unto the end, that we may receive the glorious reward that He has promised unto us. Amen.

REFERRING to the size of the Australian ballots to be used in some parts of this glorious country November 8th, it is generously conceded that where the height of the man is five feet or under he will be permitted to use a step-ladder.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

During the past six months your columns were earnestly perused. We consider it a great blessing that we can confess that the murders, suicides, distress and general trouble among all nations are only fulfilling the predictions of our beloved Prophet.

Another term has rolled around, bringing with it consolation unto us all—some have cause to be cheerful because of their soon returning to Zion, others on account of their advancement in the native tongue. Among the foreign Elders and Sisters there has been an unusual spell of sickness, for unknown reasons; although at present good health is enjoyed and appreciated by all. The Hawaiians are full of diseases. They are demoralizing themselves by encouraging elements which develop germs of degenerations.

There has not been a superabundance of rain, but the season will compare favorably with years past.

For years our dwelling houses at Laie have been inadequate to accommodate all the missionaries. Besides, the greater part of them were erected long enough ago to render them unsafe in a violent storm. The traveling Elders at conference time have had to seek lodging among the natives. On the evening of the 29th of August the corner stone of a new mission house was laid with suitable ceremonies. In the stone an artificial cavity was made sufficiently large to conceal a paper containing the names of the foreign missionaries; also a newspaper with a discourse delivered by President Wilford Woodruff at St. George, treating upon the Lamanites, the descendants of Father Lehi. According to the design the building will greatly beautify the surroundings at Laie, and afford commodious quarters for Elders engaged in both the temporal and spiritual part of the mission. The architectural work done by President Noali is very creditable. It is estimated that the structure will be completed by the first of January. It contains a dining room, kitchen, prayer room, six dwelling rooms, and seven bedrooms. The basement of a large tower facing the ocean will be set apart as a private council room. For twenty feet from the foundation the tower is octagonal form. The carpenter work is being done exclusively by the Elders and reduces the expenses of the edifice to the mere cost of the material.

SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF HONOLULU BRANCH OCT. 2, 1892.

A few minutes before 10 o'clock a. m., her majesty, the Queen, was ushered into the church and comfortably seated upon the stand which had been previously prepared for the occasion. The minister of the interior, also two ladies and a gentleman, accompanied her majesty. When the Queen arrived at the church the congregation arose and sang, "Hawaii Ponoi."

After the sacrament was administered the following Elders addressed the meeting: S. S. Hammond, President Noali and A. J. Davis. The Queen and all present seemed to feel that their visit had not been in vain. Good order prevailed, the only inconvenience being the lack of room.

At two o'clock p. m. the house was again filled to overflowing. J. B. Hawke, Jas. M. Horne and several native Elders were the speakers.

In the evening the Honolulu Sunday school gave a review of their labors which was gratifying.

The conference was the largest that has been held in Honolulu for several years.

THE HAWAIIAN CONFERENCE of the Sandwich Islands convened on the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of October, at Laie, President Matthew Noali presiding. On the stand were seventeen foreign Elders and seven sisters. Over five hundred natives present on the occasion was the representation from the different branches.

Two days were set apart for general conference meetings of the Saints, in which the chief topics dwelt upon were the reports of the representatives and traveling missionaries, the condition of the Saints during the past term, their journeyings, etc.; why Elders forsake their homes, in obedience to the laws of God, to redeem fallen man; two great powers, one striving to build up, the other working to destroy; restoration of the Gospel, ancient prophets spoke of it, to be revealed through an angel, being upon the earth in these last days with all the gifts, etc., that was enjoyed in the Gospel dispensations; impossible to enter into the rest of our Lord and not understand it; second coming of Christ, what will precede His coming; the destiny of the wicked; what people will first visit; Laie Plantation as a gathering place to prepare prior to going to Zion, the inducements afforded; fulfillment of the predictions of Jeremiah concerning the children of Israel; amusements, not right to encourage all kinds; Joseph Smith as a fulfiller of Bible and Book of Mormon prophecies; Brigham's right to succeed Joseph; singing, an indispensable exercise in the organizations; Church of God, to purify the nations of the earth. The Melchizedek and Aaronic Priesthoods were thoroughly discussed in Priesthood meeting. The value of the former, what it consists of, that it is not a new thing, and that man cannot attain to the knowledge which will admit him to the presence of God without it, how it was conferred upon Joseph Smith, what the duties are of those who have received it upon these islands, and the mode of officiating in it—all were plainly set forth.

The Y. M. M. I. A. conference was called to order by James M. Horne. President Noali explained the value of this organization: To enable its members to obtain a knowledge of God's work, to prepare them to advocate the Gospel, to become familiar with the things pertaining to this earth, to make the ignorant wise, to be able to contend against sin and to discourage that which is degrading. Kekuewa Nakuaau interested the members for a short time with the Book of Mormon chart, after which the delegates reported the condition of the different improvement meetings. Term report was read by Moke Makuaau. The prepared programme being interspersed with songs, etc., made the conference a grand success. The general officers were sustained. The local officers for the ensuing term are: A. J. Davis, president; I. F. Fisher and Isaac H. Grace, counselors; Moke Makuaau, secretary; Matthew Noali, treasurer.

At the Sabbath school conference John T. Giles presided. Charles Broad treated the "Prophecy of Joseph Smith the Prophet given in the year 1832," and Moke Makuaana gave good instructions "Pertaining to Temples." The various officers reported as to their respective schools. There were a variety of exercises, all aiming to produce good morals. Term report was read by Moke Nakuaau, and the report of the treasurer was read by Matthew Noali. The general officers were supported. The local officers for following term are: John T. Giles, president; J. J. Johnson and Hyrum DeFries, counselors; Moke Nakuaau, secretary; Matthew Noali, treasurer.

A general review of the Y. M. M. I. A. will be held in April, 1893, consisting of songs, etc. Each association will be entitled to enter and contest for the best solo, quartette and an essay on the life of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. Presents will be given to the best and next best.

A general review of the Sunday schools will also be held in April, 1893. Gifts will be awarded to those best prepared. All prizes will be according to the judgment of the committee on arrangements. The members of the two organizations seem to be quite zealous of the reviews.

RELIEF SOCIETY CONFERENCE.

The sisters marched two abreast from Lanililo to the meeting house carrying banners bearing inscriptions appropriate for the society. A whole day was allotted them to exhibit. The principal subjects were: "The Life of Rebecca;" "Life of Sarah, the wife of Abraham;" "Life of Esther;" "Duties of Women;" "Value of the Relief Society;" "Training Children," and "Life of Eliza R. Snow." Libbie Noali was listened to with great interest because of her fluent speaking in the native tongue.

The general officers were sustained. Local officers for the coming term, Libbie Noali, president; with all the foreign sisters as her aid; Kekuewa Nakuaau, Kahuhu, Kahupiaua and Naulani, counselors; Kekuewa Nakuaau, secretary.

OFFICERS AND STATISTICS.

The names of the general authorities of the Church were presented and sustained.

Appointments—Matthew Noali was sustained as president of the Hawaiian mission, with all the foreign Elders as his counselors; C. D. Harding, Church recorder and clerk of conference; John Brown, bookkeeper and store keeper; J. J. Johnson, foreman of the Laie plantation; Joseph H. Thurber, assistant; C. D. Harding, school teacher; Helen Grace, assistant school teacher; Hyrum De Fries, president of the island of Kauai; John Smith, assistant; John T. Giles, president of the island of Oahu; H. E. Duffin and Kalliehu assistants; A. J. Davis, president of the branch of Honolulu; Irvin F. Fisher, president of the islands of Maui and Molokai; Isaac H. Grace, Nawahie and Kamehame, assistants; J. B. Hawke, president of the islands of Hawaii; R. H. Duffin, Henry Hottendorf, Nola, Stephen Keeler and Keana, assistants.

Lake Branch—Matthew Noall, president; Jno. Brown and Jos. H. Thurber, counselors; C. D. Harding, clerk of branch; Mike Nakasun, president of the Sunday school; L. B. Nalnoa and Samuel Lus, counselors; S. N. Kaulonui, president Y. M. M. I. A.; M. K. Kou and Kahiona, counselors; Kapo, president of the Relief Society; Kai and Nawaloa, counselors.

Statistical report for the term ending October 8th, 1892—Foreign Elders and sisters, 24; holding the Priesthood, 915; male Saints 1284; female Saints, 1885; total officers, Saints and children blessed, 4173; new baptisms, 149; re-baptisms, 45; children blessed under eight years of age, 535; received in branches, 195; excommunicated, 8; deaths, 58.

Elders S. S. Hammond and James M. Horne were honorably released to return home to Zion.

Good instructions were imparted daily and the meetings were well attended from beginning to end. The brotherly feeling prevalent will make an everlasting impression upon the minds of us all. The conference news will be conveyed to the other islands by the one hundred and fifty strangers present and we sincerely trust it will result in the reviving of all who have entered into the fold of Christ in this land. The singing was excellent for which the efforts of our president deserve commendation. Laie, Honolulu and Maui choirs furnished the music.

It has been forty-two years since the Gospel was introduced upon these islands. Over over hundred and seventy Elders, acting as ambassadors of Christ from the above date, have labored to redeem this nation.

To the Saints in Zion: You are always remembered in our prayers and we humbly entreat of you not to forget us in your supplications.

C. D. HARDING, Clerk.

October 19, 1892.

BOX ELDER STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of Box Elder Stake of Zion convened in the Brigham City Tabernacle Sunday, October 23, 1892, at 10 a.m.

There were present on the stand President Lorenzo Snow, President George Reynolds of the Seventies, the Stake Presidency, members of the High Council, Bishops of the various wards and Bishop Hiram B. Clawson of Salt Lake City.

The time at the morning session was occupied principally by Bishops A. Valentine and Wm. H. Mecham who reported their wards in a good condition. President Rudger Clawson reported that several of the wards have new, elegant and comfortable meeting houses erected for the people to meet in and others have substantial houses in course of erection. The Lord desired that the Saints should not only build up their wards and immediate surroundings but should also help to support the Stake in which they live and the Church in general. He advised the Saints to manifest a greater interest for the education of their children by sending them to the Church schools.

Patriarch Samuel Smith made some earnest and interesting remarks, advising the people to become acquainted with the principles of the Gospel and live by its precepts.

2 p.m.—A. H. Snow gave a report from the committee appointed at the previous conference to labor in the interest of the Stake academy. They had divided the Stake into districts and visited every ward with satisfactory results.

Bishop Hiram B. Clawson, President Lorenzo Snow and Apostle Franklin D. Richards occupied the remainder of the time. Their instructions were spirited and timely. The people were advised to set aside all strife and ill-feeling and purify themselves so that nothing shall divide them. They advised the people to prepare themselves for the dedication of the Salt Lake Temple.

Monday, Oct. 24.—Two interesting meetings were held. The Church and Stake authorities were presented and sustained by unanimous vote of the conference and the statistical report for the six months ending September 15, 1892, was read.

The time was occupied by Elder George Reynolds, W. L. Watkins, Crandell Dunn, Apostle F. D. Richards and President Lorenzo Snow, whose fatherly advice and instruction were listened to with unusual interest. The speakers advised the Saints to take a course that will be an example to our children and to the whole world. At 4 p.m. closed one of the largest and most interesting conferences ever held in this Stake.

NELS JENSON, Clerk.

BRIGHAM CITY, Oct. 25, 1892.

THE MILWAUKEE FIRE.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 23.—The great Chicago fire on a small scale was enacted in Milwaukee tonight. Three thousand people are homeless, four lives lost, $6,000,000 worth of property swallowed up, and many acres desolated in the boundaries of the city mark the path over which the fire has swept. The police and soldiers are guarding the property and watching the efforts of thieves to steal.

The flames started in the Union Oil company's building on Water street, near Detroit, were fanned by a furious gale, and swept eastward across to ward the Monominee river and nothing could stay their relentless rush. Dynamite was used but without effect. Mighty billows of flame swept over blocks of buildings, jumped across the streets and leaped over the river. Thousands of people viewed the great spectacle. All sorts of conveyances were hurrying about the Third ward loaded with the belongings of people on whose houses the flames were rushing. The entire fire department was powerless. Chicago, Racine and other cities were asked for, and by 10 o'clock engines and firemen from out-of-town were beginning to arrive. More than eleven blocks of solid territory, including much of the most extensive wholesale district, had been burned over. Nearly seventy buildings, two-thirds of which were frame residences, faded into smoke as fast as tissue paper.

The territory burned out is in the shape of an obtuse triangle, with the apex at the base on the river, the upper side of Detroit street and lower Menominee street to the river and the base of Lake Michigan. Roughly stated it is a space two-thirds of a mile wide and three quarters of a mile long. The militia did good service during the night aiding the police to perform guard duty. Captain Davis of the United States revenue cutter Johnson tendered his crew to Chief Foley for use in fighting the fire. They were gratefully accepted and did gallant and effective service.

LEADING INSURANCE MEN

say about half the loss is covered by insurance. They estimate the losses as follows: Bubb & Kipp, furniture, $300,000; J. E. Patten & Co., oils and paints, $25,000; J. E. Kinsinger, wholesale liquors, $75,000; Milwaukee Mirror works, $50,000; B. Lidersdorf, tobacco, $350,000; Guggler Litho Co., $100,000; Rouny Beckham & Co., wholesale produce, $200,000; H. S. Cheffel & Co., wholesale groceries, $200,000; Milwaukee Chair company, $250,000; Northwestern freight houses contents and cars, $300,000; Lake Shore & Western freight houses, $50,000; MoLanden hotel, $25,000; P. Fluger & Co., confectionery, $25,000; Sauer & Son, glove manufacturers, $10,000; fifty smaller business houses, $500,000; F. P. Dushman & Co., drugs, $150,000; Weisel & Vitter, machinery, $100,000; Toepfer & Sons, machinery, $40,000; Bayley & Sons, machinery, $30,000; Intouch Bros., grocers, $250,000; Foraker & Bro., confectionery, $25,000; Delaware & Quentin, toolshop, $25,000; Milwaukee Bag company, $50,000; A. J. Hilbert & Co., flavoring extracts, $40,000; total, $5,775,000.

The fire started between 5:30 and 5:40 p.m. in the store occupied by the Union Oil company at 275 East Water street. At that time three fires in various sections of the city had called many engines, so it was fifteen minutes before response could be made to the alarm from the corner of Detroit and East Water streets. In a short time seven or eight streams were directed upon the flames. There was a series of explosions, but in half an hour after the fire a tug and a dozen engines were playing on the fire. It seemed as if the very current of the Milwaukee river was being emptied on the red brick blocks.

It was stated that the fire was caused by the

EXPLOSION OF AN OIL BARREL

but how, is not known. Thousands of people attracted by the continued alarms reached the conclusion that it was not much of a fire after all, and went home. That was about 8:40 p.m. Only black smoke issued from the building. Fifteen minutes later the tired firemen began to feel the enemy getting out of their grasp. Renewing their efforts they fought with desperate energy. It was useless. A gale blowing fifty miles an hour was driving clouds of heat and smoke into the faces of the firemen, drenching all the water in the Milwaukee river, and seeming only to gain in power as the stream was emptied into its jaws. It was too much for them. As the fire hastily gained a footing in an adjoining store, it got beyond all human efforts to stay it.

At 7 o'clock the big upholstery faclory of the Bubb & Klipp company facing on Broadway almost a full block away, began to blaze. The fire had been started with the wind in the northeast, but it had now veered almost due east, and the merchants in the business section of the east side grew fearful. The flames had jumped across the stores on the east side of East Water street and had taken a new grip in the big Bubb & Klipp factory. Five minutes more and Jacob Wellaur & Co.'s wholesale grocery store, on the east side of Broadway, directly opposite Bubb & Klipp's, was in flames. It seemed as if rolled across Broadway. One instant not a building on East Broadway was in flames, and the next a rolling wave of fire swept across the street and descended on the buildings opposite. In a moment they were wrapped in flames. Thousands of streams of water could not stay the conflagration in its march of destruction towards the west. The walls of a three-story brick building on Broadway formerly occupied by the Cracker Trust, but then vacant, began to totter, and warning voices urged the crowd to keep back just in time. The whole front of the building pitched into the street. A few moments later the sides fell outward with a crash. The people in that part of the Third ward realized that their homes were doomed. There was a stampede of residents into the street, all armed with furniture, cats, dogs and all manner of household utensils and bedding, and vehicles of every description were hurrying away with the belongings of people whose homes were soon to be in ruins.

A MOUNTAIN OF FIRE

Meanwhile the flames had gone over the ground they formerly missed in the store of J. P. Kissinger & Co., and the Milwaukee Art Glass Works, opposite the block in which it had originated. The Wellaur block seven stories high, was soon on fire with the Milwaukee Chair company, a vacant building owned by the Pfister & Vogel Leather company and the wholesale grocery store of Boundy, Peckham & Co., and all on Broad avenue. The next building to succumb was the National Distilling company, the whiskey supply of the state, on Buffalo street. The wind was still carrying a whirlwind of flame on toward Lake Michigan in a direct line with its starting point, and a scramble began.

Chief of Police Janssen ordered the entire force to the fire and they assisted in getting out the furniture and household goods of the luckless families, who were forced to flee from the path cut out by the flames.

A DOZEN FRAME BUILDINGS

along Milwaukee and Jefferson streets, between Detroit and Chicago streets, as well as those on Buffalo and Chicago streets were locked up as if they had been outlined on paper. All these buildings were consumed in half an hour of the time when the flames leaped over Broadway and started in the Wellaur block. Suddenly the wind swept around as unexpectedly as before where it was, in the northeast, when the fire alarm rang. It was now almost due south, cutting out a broad avenue of destruction toward the Milwaukee river and Lake Michigan. In its path lay the big freight sheds and yards of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, together with a round house and its valuable contents of rolling stock. The end of the freight sheds at the corner of Jefferson and Chicago streets was the first to ignite, and the flames soon spread all over the yards, burning freight cars and everything before it. The company soon had a force at work saving its property. Locomotives and freight cars were taken out of harm's way.

Having cut its path over to Jackson street, to Broadway, the fire was now following the south wind down Broadway, down Jefferson. Down Milwaukee street along Broadway it swept to the Weissel manufacturing company's plant at Chicago street and No. 10 engine house on Broadway. When it reached Weissel's place, the department had prepared to attempt to cut it off with dynamite. There were kegs were placed in a building, having been stored there to await the coming of the flames. As each went off in close succession, a cry went up from the thousands who blocked the streets for a radius of a mile that the gas works had exploded.

It was about 9:30 p.m. when the first building on the northeast corner of the Milwaukee gas company's plant began to burn.

THE GAS WORKS

occupy the territory bounded by Milwaukee and Erie streets and the alley between Jefferson and Jackson streets. The gas went out in many parts of the city, and it was feared that the works were doomed, but at 11 o'clock the great oil tanks were still intact. Bethel Home, near the gas works, caught fire, and soon after Wirscha & Hammon's delivery stable on Broadway, containing hundreds of horses, was in the path of the flaming cyclone. Some of the horses were taken away, while a number stampeded. The Laura Catlin Kindergarten also succumbed despite the dynamite. George Topper's iron foundry and Reiberg's vinegar works were destroyed, together with innumerable small buildings, saloons and residences. The valuable property of the Milwaukee Gas company was almost entirely saved. When the fire began to head that way, the tanks were sunk below the level, leaving nothing combustible above the surface. The flames almost encircled the works without communicating to them.

The fire spent itself on the extreme eastern side, when it destroyed Hansen's elevator. At midnight it was thought to have done its work, but the flames are still raging among the acres of burning and smoking ruins. Hansen's malt house within a few rods of the border of Lake Michigan with an adjoining elevator made a brilliant display when they caught. At 12:30 Liedersdorf's block and most of the shops in the block between Buffalo and Erie streets were on fire. It is rumored that some lives were lost in Bubb & Klipp's factory, as many employees were working when the flames descended so suddenly on the big building. Up to 1 a.m. two dead firemen have been brought to the morgue. A woman about 40 years of age, who sought refuge in the Third ward school house, died of heart disease. Her name and address were not learned.

At 2:30 this (Saturday) morning Chief Foley announces that the fire is fully under control.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 29.—The scene in the burned district this morning is one of blackness and desolation. A black pall of smoke hovers over a great area, relieved here and there by lamplike tongues of flame, lapping red, like the tongue of some monster carnivorous animal, hungry for yet more prey. But the destroyer has received the deathblow and is powerless to inflict further injury. Where last night stood the satelty business houses with their wealth of merchandise, little homes of the working poor, and all that goes to make up the life of a great city, is today a heap of hot and smoking ruins. In twelve hours from 8 o'clock last night, was crowded a destruction that will take more than as many months to repair, and much of the work wrought by the flames can never be restored.

Starting in the store of the Union Oil company, in East Water street, the fire swept before a fierce gale consumed over thirteen blocks of business houses and residences, and more than three hundred houses in all, caused the loss of five lives, and $6,000,000 worth of property. It is now entirely under control, but the ruins in places are burning fiercely and it will be several days before the last spark is extinguished. The gas works were in imminent danger, but by good management they were fortunately saved almost intact, and within a day or two the city will have the usual gas supply.

The total loss is now estimated at $5,825,000. The total insurance is estimated at three millions. It is feared that some of the small insurance companies will be badly crippled. It is now known that four lives were lost and four people seriously hurt.

KILLED.

Henry Peddenbrook and Charles Starr, firemen, crushed under falling walls. Mrs. Kalahan and an unknown woman died from the effects of the shock. It is feared that the watchman of Bubb & Klipp company was burned in the factory.

That the loss of life is so small calls for congratulation.

It was shortly after seven that Mayor Souers saw the need of help. At once he telegraphed the adjutant general for militia, and to Waukeesa, Oshkosh, Kaukauba, Racine and Chicago for fire apparatus. Prompt replies were received in every instance, and the firemen from the outside did effective work, as did the militia in the way of guarding property, keeping the crowds back and rescuing endangered persons.

A conservative estimate of the people rendered homeless, based on the recent registration in the burned districts, places the number at 2000, nearly all of whom are poor and have lost what little they possessed and are dependent on outside help. Last night hospitable citizens threw open their homes to them and means are being taken to provide for their immediate wants.

The chamber of commerce will meet to take action today. The Germania society has decided to turn over the receipts of a fair to be held next week. Five thousand dollars have been subscribed by the Democratic candidates for office, and $500 have been received from the Republican state central committee, Illinois. The fifth corpse is that of an unknown man crushed by a falling wall at the morgue.

FUNDS FOR THE SUFFERERS.

A several hundred business men assembled on the board of trade this morning to raise funds for the fire sufferers. In a short time nearly $50,000 in subscriptions was announced, and among them, $5000 from P. D. Armeur, Chicago; $1000 each from Wisconsin Fire and Marine Insurance bank, John L. Mitchell, C. F. Illaley, Cudahy Bros., A. C. Payne, E. P. Bacon, M. Roseau, Fred Pabst; $5000 each from the Democratic candidates and the Brewere association.

A committee was appointed to increase the sum to $100,000. The Exposition building, schools and churches were opened to the destitute. Mayor Somers says that while the people of Milwaukee ask no aid to care for the destitute, they will be grateful for any contributions which friends are inclined to make.

LOSS TO THE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The total loss to the insurance companies is between a million and a half and two millions, divided between about a hundred companies. Secretary Wilson of the underwriters says that all losses will be paid. No company will be crippled.

CHICAGO'S SYMPATHY.

CHICAGO, Oct. 29.—Mayor Washburn this morning telegraphed Mayor Somers, Milwaukee, expressing the deep sympathy felt in Chicago over the calamity which has befallen the Cream City, proffering any aid within the city's power to render. He will await the reply before taking any further official action, though he probably will call the attention of the city council to the matter in a special message on Monday night.

NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The North Alabama Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened at Brother J. M. Parker's, near Quincy, Miss., on the 22nd and 23rd of October, 1892.

There were present of the Elders: President J. G. Kimball of the Southern States mission, and Elder G. A. Smith, from the office at Chattanooga; also President of the Conference O. H. Snow and traveling Elders H. E. Gardner, Geo. A. Holt, Jno. Black, N. P. Jensen, Reht. W. Morris, Jas. C. Lambert, S. C. Chadwick, Geo. D. White and N. W. Miller.

Counsel meetings were held Saturday morning and evening, and also Sunday morning. Reports were handed in and much general instruction was given by President Kimball.

Elder Lambert was released to return home and Elder Chadwick to fill the remainder of his mission in Great Britain.

Saturday morning Elder N. W. Miller spoke upon the subject of baptism and its essentiality, and was followed by Elder J. C. Lambert, who treated upon repentance. Elder G. A.

Smith then spoke upon the necessity of continuous revelation, and Elder Geo. D. White spoke upon the Holy Ghost and its manifestations.

In the afternoon Elder G. A. Holt spoke upon the Kingdom of God, and was followed by Elder S. C. Chadwick who spoke upon the apostasy. The next speaker was Elder H. E. Gardner who dwelt upon Church organization and government. Elder John Black discoursed upon faith and works, and Prest. Kimball occupied the remainder of the time speaking on the general condition of the people, showing that the people of God received similar treatment in all ages, to that received by the Latter-day Saints.

Sunday morning the congregation was larger, and after opening exercises, Elder R. W. Morris spoke a short time, followed by Elder N. P. Jensen, who spoke upon the mode and object of baptism, and President Kimball showed how grossly the Saints had been misrepresented. He invited an inspection of the conduct of the Elders, whose conduct was such that all would do well to follow their examples.

Elder O. H. Snow was the first speaker in the afternoon. He spoke upon divine authority, how it was to be obtained, and how in these days the Latter-day Saints had obtained it. Elder G. A. Smith, quoting the Prophet Daniel, showed that God was to set up a Kingdom in the last days, and that, from the signs of the times we were living in the last days. Elder G. A. Holt then spoke upon the hospitality of the Southern people, and their kindness to the Elders.

Benediction was pronounced by President J. G. Kimball.

Strong testimonies were borne by the Elders and all felt well in their labors. The conference is in a prosperous condition.

H. E. GARDNER,

Secretary.

QUINCY, Monroe county, Miss., Oct. 24th, 1892.

FREIGHT RATES.

There was a well attended meeting of the Chamber of Commerce and members of the Transportation Bureau Tuesday. President Donnellan occupied the chair and S. W. Sears acted as secretary.

The following report was read, received and filed, and the president of the Chamber of Commerce and the Transportation Bureau were unanimously authorized to withdraw the suit against the railroads now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission:

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 24, 1892.

J. W. Donnellan, Esq., President Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce, City:

Dear Sir—On the 31st of August, 1892, the Chamber of Commerce appointed the committee making this report, and assigned to it the duty of negotiating with the transportation companies doing carrier business between this city and other eastern and western points. The object of the negotiations was to bring about an adjustment of freight tariffs, and thus, so far as practicable, secure the removal of unjust discriminations to which the business men and shippers of this city have been subjected.

The committee was duly organized by the election of the following officers, executive committee and sub-committees:

Chairman—T. G. Webber.
Vice-Chairman—W. H. Remington.
Secretary—J. E. Galigher.
Assistant Secretary—S. H. Love.
Treasurer—W. C. Pavey.
Executive Committee—W. H. Remington, George Romney, A. E. Hyde, C. P. Mason, John Clark, George T. Odell.
On Merchandise—John Clark, S. H. Hill, J. E. Galigher, John Watson, G. Osmond, B. K. Bloch, B. Johnson, E. J. Fabian, S. Auerbach, Henry Siegel, Emanuel Kahn.

On Manufactures—W. H. Rowe, Elias Morris, John H. White, Edgar Howe, Alex Rogers, D. R. Townsend, Frank W. Jennings.

On Smelting—T. R. Jones, A. Hanauer, C. H. Officer.

On Mining—A. E. Hyde, J. H. Cunningham, James Glendinning, A. G. Campbell, J. J. Daly, H. H. Chisholm, P. T. Farnsworth.

Wool and Hides—J. W. Summerhays, W. C. Lyne, Henry Cobu.

Farming Implements, Vehicles and Machinery—George T. Odell, C. H. Vinson, George A. Lowe, George A. Snow.

Live Stock and Packing House Products—John H. White, R. F. Sanders, Charles Crane.

Produce—F. W. Hansen, E. G. Hyams, J. Hughes.

Grain—E. R. Clute, Isaac Sears, T. C. Armstrong, Jr., E. E. Rich, W. C. Lyne, Lumber—S. W. Morrison, W. C. Burton, S. L. Lyne, H. P. Mason, Harry J. Hayward, H. A. Woolley.

Salt—D. C. Adams, F. W. Meegan, Thomas J. Almy.

Invitations were issued to freight traffic managers, general freight agents and representatives of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and Rio Grande Western railways and their connecting lines, to meet and confer with the committee acting in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce. There was a unanimous response to this request, all those invited expressing their readiness to meet the committee in person or by authorized representatives. A conference was appointed for the 10th inst. to convene at the parlors of the Knutsford hotel. At this meeting the following railroads were represented:

Union Pacific Railway—By E. Dickinson, assistant general manager; J. A. Munroe, freight traffic manager; S. W. Eccles, assistant general freight agent, and Judge Kelley.

Southern Pacific company—Richard Gray, general traffic manager, and D. R. Gray, freight agent.

Rio Grande Western—D. C. Dodge, vice president and general manager; S. H. Babcock, general freight agent, and J. Brinker, assistant general freight agent.

Denver and Rio Grande—A. T. Wells Jr., assistant general freight agent.

Colorado Midland and Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe—F. C. Gay, general freight agent.

Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and Burlington & Missouri River—G. W. Crosby, general freight agent.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific—W. M. Sage, traffic manager, and J. E. Oglesby, freight agent.

Chicago & Northwestern—J. A. Munroe.

Missouri Pacific—S. V. Derrah, freight agent.

Mr. Richard Gray, traffic manager of the Southern Pacific company, acted as chairman of the representatives of the railroads, and Mr. T. G. Webber of the Chamber of Commerce committee presided over the deliberations of the conference as a whole.

Mr. Webber opened the proceedings by explaining the object of the conference. In doing so he briefly reviewed the circumstances leading up to it, including in his exposition a statement of the fact of the suit having been placed against the railroads by the Chamber of Commerce; the effort of the business men and shippers to find some more amiable way of securing an adjustment of their grievances; their application for a stay of sixty days and their request for the appointment of the committee now acting to confer with the railroad representatives. The chairman further stated that it was to the advantage of both parties to this investigation to avoid the pending litigation. If it could be done consistently with the interests of each, he insisted that Salt Lake had natural advantages that adapted it to be a distributing center, and urged its claims in that connection to be accorded not only equitable through rates, but also just distributing rates. After enumerating various industries which had been injured by unjust tariff discriminations, the chairman presented the following as the order of business of the conference:

First—Local commodity rates to points tributary to Salt Lake: (a) South, over the Rio Grande Western and Union Pacific railway; (b) West, over the Southern Pacific system; (c) Southeast and east, over the Rio Grande Western and Union Pacific; (d) North, over the Short Line and Union Pacific system.

Second—Commodities to be added to the present trans-Missouri westbound tariff.

Third—Class rates approximately based on existing rates from the Missouri river to Colorado common points.

And concluded by laying before the railroad representatives the following statement of demands by the business men and shippers:

The merchandise, farming implements, vehicle and machinery committee ask for special carload commodities to be added to the trans-Missouri tariff; local commodity rates north of Beaver canyon, Nampa and Boise in Idaho, east to Evanston, Wyo., west to Toano, Nev., south and southeast to all points reached by the Union Pacific and Rio Grande Western railways, and modifications in class rates from the east. Also, that present inconsistencies in the trans-continental and trans-Missouri westbound tariffs be corrected.

The manufacturers committee ask certain commodity rates on raw material to place them on a competing basis with factories in Denver and on the coast; i. e., on denim, soda ash, caustic soda, silicate of soda, leather, rosin, chlorate of lime, talc and rags, and commodity rates out on mill stuffs, overalls, jumpers, brick, paper, etc.

The smelter committee ask commodity rates in on coke, lime rock, ore and coal, and rates out on bullion and copper matte.

The mining committee ask lower rates on ore to Utah smelters and to Colorado and Missouri river common points from this city.

The hide and wool committee claim that dealers east and west have advantages over them. They ask that this be corrected by causing the common points in Utah on wool to be extended from Corinne on the north to Juab and Salina on the south and to the Territorial line on the Rio Grande Western Railway. Also that the minimum carload on wool in some instances be raised from 10,000 to 20,000 pounds and that commodity rates be made out on wool and hides and on at least tobacco for sheep dipping purposes.

The live stock and packing house products committee ask commodity rates in on live hogs in double deck cars, and on live stock out, shippers to have the option of routing via Kansas City or Omaha at the same rates. Commodity rates to Colorado and Montana common points on dressed meats and packing-house products.

The lumber committee ask that Salt Lake be made common with Ogden, and a commodity rate from the Missouri river on glass.

The grain committee asked for a rate in from the Missouri river on corn, cornmeal and oil cakes, and commodity rates out on wheat.

The produce committee ask for commodity rates on certain articles to place them on an equality with competing cities east and west now enjoying same, and commodity rates out on potatoes and onions.

The salt committee had no grievances.

Sessions of the conference were held successfully, from day to day, from Monday, the 10th instant, till Thursday, the 13th instant. At these meetings all of the railroad representatives were present, as were also the executive committee, the chairman and some of the members of each of the sub-committees. It will therefore be observed that the interests of the business men and shippers were fully represented, and the claims of the several industries clearly explained and advocated.

After the various features of our demands were set forth in detail and discussed, Mr. Gray, on behalf of the railroads, presented a list of concessions. They were not satisfactory to the committee, which, therefore, declined to agree to or accept them. This led to a resumption of the consideration of the subjects in controversy, which resulted in the presentation of the following from Mr. Chairman Gray:

Mr. Chairman—The representatives of the roads have carefully and thoroughly reconsidered the report made yesterday, reaching what we deem final conclusions so far as we can go. We offer these rates in the spirit of compromise, with the understanding that they take effect when stipulations are filed with the interstate commerce commission withdrawing the present suit now pending.

These adjustments and reductions, as revised, were carefully scrutinized and, after mature deliberation, accepted by the executive committee. The latter then prepared a report of its labors, including in it a statement of what the railroad companies had agreed to do in satisfaction of the demands made upon them in behalf of the business interests of this city. The report was presented to a meeting of the general committee on Thursday evening, the 20th inst., and the following resolution, offered by Mr. George M. Scott, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the executive committee and all of the sub-committees representing the general body of business men and shippers interested in the adjustment of freight rates to and from this city, have met and conferred with the officials and representatives of the several railroads party to the suit now pending before the interstate commerce commission; and

Whereas, The said committees found the railroad officials and representatives willing to make concessions that would greatly mitigate, if not entirely remove, the unjust discriminations in railroad rates to which Utah business men and shippers have been subjected, and although all that was asked was not obtained, as the general result of the conference is satisfactory; be it

Resolved, That we adopt the report of the executive committee and accept the concessions and terms offered by the railroad companies. And we request the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce to withdraw the suit pending by it against the said railroads.

Hereto is appended, as part of this report, the above mentioned report of the executive committee, marked "Exhibit A."

It is proper to state that some of the concessions referred to in the executive committee's report as having been made to the mining and smelting industries, are only indefinitely secured so far as the Union Pacific and Rio Grande Western railways are concerned. It will be necessary for these two companies to consult with eastern connections before the promised beneficial changes can exist beyond themselves. The representatives of these two lines have, however, assured the committee that the connecting roads will without doubt concur in the reduced rates.

While what has been conceded by the railroads is not all we ask for, yet it must be admitted that it is generally satisfactory. Some of the gentlemen interested in the re-adjustments did not secure the reductions in their line of business they hoped for, but they generously sustained the arrangement described in this report. As they regarded the result as good in a general sense, they decided not to stand in the way of an amicable settlement. It is to be regretted that no statement could be secured on first, second and third class rates from the Missouri river to Utah common points, still what has been obtained in other directions is valuable, and will tend to develop the business of this city as a distributing and manufacturing town.

No stipulations have been entered into by the railroad companies as to the length of time the new rates will prevail. Assurances are given, however, that so soon as the suit of the Chamber of Commerce against the interested railroads is withdrawn, the new tariffs will go into effect, and be regularly listed. And in case there should be any attempt at an early or arbitrary breach of agreement, a united movement on the part of the Chamber and business men of Salt Lake would doubtless prevent its consummation.

The public is indebted to the Chamber for having taken the initiative in the movement to secure an adjustment of the freight commissions affecting this city, and is therefore entitled to popular credit.

It is hoped that the Chamber will confirm the action of its committee, and take appropriate steps toward a speedy settlement of the subject of this report. We are yours respectfully,

Thomas G. Webber,
W. H. Rowe,
George M. Scott,
E. R. Oiste,

P. T. Farnsworth,
James Glendinning,
Joseph E. Calisher,
W. H. Remington.

Hiram Johnson,
John Clark,
T. A. Williams,
W. C. Lyne,
J. H. Hughes,
C. P. Woodcock,
C. P. Tossel,
B. K. Block,
H. Siegel,
Francis Japh,
Elias Morris,
Hanson Products Co.,
J. W. Summerhay,
C. P. Mason,
Henry Cohn,
George Osmond,
John Beck,
Henry Dinwoodey,
J. J. O'Jly,
Frank W. Jennings,
A. Hunsauer,

W. C. Paray,
Samuel H. Hill,
George A. Snow,
T. E. Jones,
W. J. De Bruhl,
Emanuel Kahn,
Alex. Cohn,
John H. White,
Fred J. Fabian,
S. H. Love,
S. H. Auerbach,
S. W. Morrison,
A. E. Hyde,
George Homsey,
F. W. Meegan,
H. P. Mason,
Isaac Sears,
Thomas J. Almy,
E. C. Chambers,
S. J. Lynn,
John Watson.

PROVO LETTER.

PROVO, Oct. 24, 1892.

Having in view the fact that your valuable paper reaches the homes of so many who would be glad to hear from the Brigham Young academy and can only do so through this means, I beg to be allowed a small space to pen a few of the doings and sayings in this noble institution.

There are nearly six hundred students enrolled at present, with indications of one or two hundred more by the close of the year. They are coming in every day, and all seem earnest workers.

The M. I. A. normal course is coming to the front rank, doing an excellent work, under the able management of Dr. M. H. Hardy. This is an important factor in the line of scientific educational improvement.

At the Polysophical society the other evening, a rising young scientist attempted to show the pressure of the atmosphere by experiment. Having pumped the air, as he thought, from the receiver, he turned to the audience and invited any two young ladies to take hold of the handles of the sphere and pull it apart. One lady volunteered. The audience waited breathlessly. So far from exercising her strength, the lady parted the globe with one hand. Result: a roaring audience and a confused scientist. The pump had leaked.

Funder's day was celebrated on the 17th inst., in right royal style. Elder B. H. Roberts delivered a very appropriate oration on the life and character of Brigham Young, after which all who desired partook of a gorgeous fruit festival. While this was going on in the basement an impromptu concert was being carried on under the direction of Prof. Gilles. The Academy battalion also cut a fine figure, parading and firing for some time on the campus. The celebration was a grand success.

Overcoats have been "all the go" the last few days, as a slight touch of winter visited us, giving us warning that the main body would bring up the rear in due time.

Mr. Botzum, known to the young people here as "Mama's baby boy," and who lectured in the library, has not failed to amuse his account of Utah with a description of those "horrid Mormons," making it very palatable for radical anti-Mormon readers. We sincerely hope the little duck won't fall and hurt his mother's little darling's face while on his homeward march.

Daring an experiment with oxygen in the laboratory the other day, a student entered as a spectator. No sooner had he entered than an explosion occurred. That student is to be found elsewhere now when such processes are going on.

Bro. Macees' lecture, "The Church School System," at the Pedagogium last week was very interesting. We wish that every Latter-day Saint, especially the young, could have the privilege of hearing like talks by this "grand old man."

Columbian day has come and gone and ere the century rolls round again most of us will be no more. The Academy joined in the celebration with appropriate exercises.

Trusting you will do me the honor to print these items for the good of those who have children here, I am yours truly,
JOSEPH BROADBENT.

THE TRUE DATE OF THE DISCOVERY

[New Orleans Picayune.]

The public press for several days past has been filled with accounts of the celebration of fetees in New York City in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus, which took place on Friday, October 12, 1492. In view of the fact that Congress has declared Friday, October 21st, to be the official anniversary, and it is to be celebrated at Chicago in connection with the Columbian Exposition, some confusion has been caused by the honoring of two separate dates for the same event. Is New York's day or Chicago's day the correct one? By the ordinary calendar reckoning, the anniversary falls on the 12th of October. By the real duration of time the anniversary is on the 21st inst.

The explanation is as follows: Each solar year by which our time is reckoned consists of ordinarily stated of 365 days, or 365 days, 6 hours. In order to get rid of the fraction it is disregarded until every fourth year, when the four quarters are taken up and counted in the year, which is accorded 366 days, and is known as leap year. By the ordinary reckoning the Columbus anniversary comes back every 12th of October. But the ordinary reckoning is not the true one. Each year does not contain 365 days 6 hours, but 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 48 seconds. Thus it lacks 11 minutes 12 seconds of being 6 hours, and by reason of this deficiency it is plain that in a long period of time fewer days would get into the calendar than had actually been measured by the revolutions of the solar system.

The year is measured from the time the sun appears at the vernal equinox until it returns to that point. When the calendar was adjusted, in 325 A.D., the vernal equinox took place on the 21st of March. In 1582, in the time of Pope Gregory XIII, the equinox occurred on the 11th of March. Astronomically it came at the right time, but by the calendar it came ten days too soon. There were not enough days in the calendar, so the Pope, after consulting the astronomers and mathematicians, inserted ten days into the reckoning, so as to bring the spring equinox back to the 21st of March. But in order to prevent a recurrence of this error, he arranged that three of the leap years which occur in four hundred years shall only be counted as common years. The leap years which are thus to be degraded are those which terminate in two ciphers, but whose preceding figures are not divisible by four. Thus 1600 is properly a leap year, but 1700, 1800 and 1900 must not be counted, because while the whole numbers are divisible by four, the two leading figures are not, and they are to be regarded as common years. Pope Gregory made his revision of the calendar in 1582. At the time Columbus discovered America, in 1492, it was counted at nine days, and therefore nine has been added to October 12th to get the astronomical date of October 21st. It thus appears that it would be proper enough to celebrate either date, as far as authority goes.

FUNERAL OF MRS. HARRISON.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 72.

THE FUNERAL SERMON

from the text "Wherefore comfort ye one another with these words" was then preached by Dr. Haines. "God's ways are not our ways," said the preacher, "we cannot understand them. Perhaps we could not understand them if explanations were given. Human intelligence is yet too immature to take in the reach and scope of God's plans. We are shut up to faith and faith is the greatest exercise of the spirit of man. To believers sorrows are not accidents; they are not judgments; they are chastenings permitted in wisdom and kindness. The Lord rejoiceth over death as well as life. Our duty is resignation, but Christian resignation is not mere enforced submission to the inevitable. It is looking up into the face of a wise and loving God saying 'Thy will be done, for Thy will is our well-being.' The constant follower of God has been called to her reward. To ask not of her as dead. Death to God's children is not a wall but a gateway, the entrance upon a larger, sweeter life in higher realms. To die is to gain."

The speaker then dwelt at length upon the beauty and the sweetness which characterized the life of the departed in every relation of life, from that of a quiet, Christian home-keeper, full of charity and loving kindness, to that of a courteous, kindly, thoughtful mistress of the White House, and turning to the bereaved members of the sorrowing family, he spoke words of consolation and comfort, with the assurance of the sympathy of the entire nation, exhorting them to "trust in the Lord and wait patiently for Him."

At the conclusion of the sermon the venerable Dr. Hyde prayed, commending the mourners, and especially the chief magistrate, to the tender mercies of a divine and loving Father; that he might be strengthened in the hour of trial, to bear his burdens and finish the work given him to do.

The choir then sang a hymn and the services were closed with benediction by Dr. Haines, and the cortege took up the line of march to Crown Hill cemetery. Soon after the train arrived at the request of the President, the casket was opened and the sad ceremony of taking a last look at the face of the dead followed. The features were calm, peaceful as in sleep. It was a sad moment for the President and he was nearly overcome.

Along Delaware street, thousands of people skod with uncovered heads. The long line of carriages filed slowly by.

At the cemetery, five miles distant, 5000 people were gathered. The grave was lined with cedars and chrysanthemums.

At 2 p. m. the coffin was lowered into the last resting place. The proceedings were watched by the President with streaming eyes, and ever and anon the sturdy frame was convulsed with poignant grief.

The services were very brief. Dr. Hyde read the funeral services of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Haines offered prayer, and Dr. Hyde pronounced the benediction. Then the cortege returned to the city.

WRECK OF THE ROUMANIA.

Lisbon, Oct. 28.—The British steamer Rumania is reported wrecked at the mouth of Arco river near Peniche. It is said that one hundred passengers and all the crew were drowned. The Rumania was an iron crew steamship of 3387 tons, belonging to the Anchor line, and plying between Liverpool and Bombay. Peniche, near where the Rumania is reported wrecked, is a fortified town of Portugal on the Atlantic ocean, about forty miles north of the mouth of the Tago.

Later—Reports of the loss of the Rumania are confirmed. A later dispatch says 118 persons were drowned and only nine saved. The Rumania had fifty-five passengers and a crew of sixty-seven.

SEVENTEEN DROWNED.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The steamer Towre, bound for Bayonne, was wrecked at Penmarch, Finisterre, last night and seventeen persons were drowned. No details.

THE GALE.

The gale of the past three days has greatly abated. Among the vessels that suffered is the Dutch steamer Shileam. She reports terrific weather. The steamer North Umbria collided today with the schooner Estremadura off Southern point. The schooner sank; the crew were saved. The Cunarder Etruria, from New York, which passed Browhead tonight, experienced violent weather. Owing to the severity of storms she was unable to disembark her passengers or mails at Queenstown, and proceeded to Liverpool. The tender was damaged in attempting to fasten alongside her and the Etruria's master-at-arms was drowned.

STATSRAAD RIDDERVOLD.

CHRISTIANIA, Oct. 28.—The steamer Statsraad Riddervold, conveying mails coastwise from Christiania, stranded and sank near Guinnaes last night during a blinding snowstorm. The passengers and crew were saved.

The hearing in the case of F. A. Wilkie, arrested for embezzling $1,664 of funds belonging to the Baptist church, Boise, Idaho, of which he was treasurer has been postponed. The case is a sad one. He is a young man who has hitherto sustained a good reputation.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elders George Thomas Munford of Beaver, Utah, and R. A. Jones of Henefer, Summit county, Utah, gave us a pleasant call this afternoon, having returned from a mission to England on Sunday, October 30.

Elder Munford left on November 11, 1890, and labored the first year in Nottingham conference and the second year in the London conference. Elder Jones left on the same date and has spent the entire time in the Cheltenham conference. The Elders return in good health and spirits and rejoice in the varied experiences they have had in the mission field.

Elder Joseph S. Groesbeck, of this city, who left for a mission on March 6, 1889, returned on Monday, October 24, during which time he has been laboring in New Zealand. He was first appointed to the southern island where he spent three months, and was then called to go to the northern island. After four months here he returned to the southern island and was subsequently again appointed to the north, where he labored in the Manawatu conference, over which he presided until his release on April 11 of this year. Elder Groesbeck returned home via the Suez canal and spent several months in visiting noted places in Europe. In London he was met by his wife and continued the homeward journey in her company. Elder Groesbeck reports having met with some success during his extended missionary tour and says the mission in New Zealand is in an encouraging condition.

Elder S. S. Hammond, of Manoa, Colorado, called at the News office this morning, having just returned from a mission to the Sandwich Islands, for which part of the world he left Utah on September 23rd, 1889.

Elder Hammond gives a flattering account of his ministerial labors among the natives of the Sandwich Islands. He was treated with the greatest courtesy and respect wherever he went among them, and made many warm and staunch friends. Elder Hammond is the son of Judge F. A. Hammond of Bluff, San Juan county, and was born on the Sandwich Islands himself in 1853, when his parents were there on a mission.

During his own mission he visited every part of the island, including the spot where the celebrated explorer and navigator Captain Cook was massacred by the natives on February 14th, 1779, and where a beautiful monument now stands to his memory. He also inspected the noted volcanoes, both burning and extinct. He had several pleasant and interesting interviews with Queen Lilluokalani, who is very friendly to and proud of her Mormon subjects. She often visits the plantation of the Saints, which is in a very prosperous condition. The Saints have a large school there under the efficient supervision of Charles D. Harding. The health of the Elders and the members of the Church generally is very good on the islands.

The Colorado Coal and Iron Development company has increased its capital stock from $2,500,000 to $6,000,000.

COUNTY SUPT. OF SCHOOLS.

The following letter has been addressed to Secretary Elijah Sells by the U. S. district attorney:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 28th, 1892.
Hon. Elijah Sells, Secretary, City:

Sir—I am in receipt of your communication requesting my opinion in the matter of electing county superintendents of schools, viz., whether under existing laws such officers are to be elected at the ensuing election. By act approved March 10th, 1892, it is provided that a general election shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of the present year, and biennially thereafter for the election of territorial, county and precinct officers.

By act approved the same day and entitled, "An act to provide for a uniform system of free schools throughout the Territory," it is enacted that at the general election for the year 1893, and biennially thereafter, there shall be elected county superintendents of schools for each county; and a subsequent section in the same act provides as follows: "And the terms of office of all county superintendents now in office are hereby continued until the expiration of the full terms of office for which they were elected have expired."

By act approved March 13th, 1890, it is provided "that a county superintendent of schools shall be elected at the general election for the year 1891, and biennially thereafter, and that his term of office shall be two years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

In the light of these provisions of the several statutes bearing upon the subject, there seems to be no room for doubt that this office is not to be filled at the coming election. At least that is my opinion.

Very respectfully,
C. S. VARIAN, U. S. Attorney.

A VOICE FROM THE PEOPLE.

Some of our city officers seem to think they were elected to office because of the immutability of the eternal fitness of things; but the recent efforts of the health officer to establish a nuisance in the shape of a cesspool that would be a menace to the citizens compelled to adopt it, and the recent garbage and slope ordinance, with its discrimination in favor of those in the first garbage district and against those in the second, go to show to some of the onlookers their eternal unfitness for the positions they occupy by the (to them) very fortuitous circumstance of their belonging to a certain political party.

It might not be out of place to call such souls of the city family to a halt, and ask them to please keep quiet while drawing their salaries to the end of their term of office; it were ardently to be desired that they make no more efforts to immolate themselves on the altar of their country—at least that portion of it known as the Salt Lake municipality. Cannot they be induced to let the people who pay them for their herculean efforts rest for a little season, instead of keeping the poor taxpayers on the rack expecting to be startled even out of their sleep by the cry of "stand from under—here's another city ordinance for the taxpayers to nourish with city pay!" In the language of the immortal slang bard, "give us a rest!"

Respectfully,
SALINA.

ELDERS QUORUM ORGANIZED.

The Elders of the Twenty-third ward, heretofore members of the Seventh quorum, met in the Latter-day Saints' hall of the above named ward on Sunday evening, October 30, 1892, and were organized under the title of the Twenty-second Quorum of Elders of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion, with the following named brethren as the officers thereof: James Stacey, president; Carl August Carligen, first counselor; Peter Ohlin, second counselor, and Joseph Burns, secretary.

The brethren were unanimously sustained to act in their respective positions, and were set apart to labor therein under the hands of President Angus M. Cannon, the presidency of the Seventh Quorum of Elders and Bishopric of the Twenty-third ward. The Seventh quorum of Elders have furnished members for two other quorums within a year, viz., the Twenty-first and Twenty-second, and still have a full quorum of ninety-six. Much interest was taken in the meetings of the Seventh and Twenty-first quorums. The newly created quorum starts out with excellent prospects.

President Angus M. Cannon delivered some very timely and encouraging remarks regarding the every-day duties of the people of God; necessity of serving Him with an undivided heart, and the carrying out of His will at all times in preference to our own.

DWARF TRIBES SOUTH OF MOUNT ATLAS.

[Atlantic Quarterly Review.]

On September 2nd last a paper on "Dwarfs and Dwarf Worship," referring to some of the proofs that had come to light that there must be dwarf tribes in Southern Morocco, was read by myself at a meeting of the ninth Oriental congress in London.

A new light was subsequently thrown on the subject of dwarfs by Sir George Humphrey, professor of medicine in the University of Cambridge. Dealing merely with European, i.e. non-racial dwarfs, he divides them into two classes, "true dwarfs" who differ from their race only in size, and dwarfs from rickets who are stunted, and generally malformed and feeble. His statements that neither of these classes transmits its small size to the children, disposes of the theory that the dwarfs met with in Morocco are merely a few families of ordinary dwarfs. Far from being stunted and deformed, through rickets, they are very strong, extremely courageous, and wonderfully active, and are, it is stated, feared by the other Moors. Nor can they be true dwarfs. This class is so extremely rare that France and England possess each only one skeleton, and the chance of meeting with a true dwarf in a sparsely settled country like Morocco would be very remote. If, then, a dozen dwarfs, not stunted or deformed by rickets, have found their way to Northern Morocco, the inference is conclusive that they cannot be "true dwarfs" but must be racial and connected with some dwarf tribe.

But any doubt that might at first seem to exist on this point is settled when I mention that the dwarfs seen in Morocco are not diminutive Moors, resembling their countrymen in everything except size, but are so strikingly distinct from the other people of Morocco, that even if they were not dwarfs, we should have to set them down as a different and peculiar race. Among the points which distinguish them from Moors, Arabs, Jews, Berbers, Negroes and Mulattoes of Morocco are the following: Their wonderful agility, a reddish complexion which is characteristic of almost all dwarf races, and the peculiar woolly hair growing in tufts which distinguishes nearly all dwarf races and their offshoots: They differ even in dress, etc., and shave their faces—an abomination to Moslem Moors. In all these particulars, as well as in size, they are precisely similar to the dwarfs of Central Africa.

So far, at least, as early ages are concerned, the idea is not a new one that dwarf races existed south of Mount Atlas; for it has for some years past been a subject of contention between French geographers and French anthropologists. The former maintain that the place described by Herodotus, where the Nasamonian explorers were captured by dwarf Troglodytes, must have been an oasis in the northwestern part of the Sahara, not far to the south or southeast of Morocco.

The country of the Nasamoniens called by Procopius, Zaba, is now known as the oasis of Msab. According to Herodotus, some young Nasamonian explorers went west for many days until they reached an oasis where they were captured by a dwarf race of Troglodytes, who were all neotomancers, and lived on a river that ran from west to east.

The dwarfs mentioned by Aristotle cannot have lived in Equatorial Africa, as they possessed a remarkably small breed of horses.

The rock-cut chambers in the Atlas, whether intended for storehouses, or for residence, or for refuge, are so uniformly five feet high, that they most probably were made by dwarf Troglodytes.

The views of French geographers on this subject were contested in an able article on the Pygmies of Antiquity in the last number of the Review Historique, on the ground that we can find no trace of there ever having been dwarfs north of the Sahara. By an odd coincidence a letter was received by me in that very month from Mr. Thomas Martin in which he said that having become familiar with the peculiar click in vogue in the speech of South African tribes who have inherited or derived it from the Bushmen, he was surprised in 1888, at hearing in Mogador, a port on the southwest coast of Morocco, some natives from Saa and Sahara using clicks similar to those of South African races. He naturally came to the conclusion that the Bushmen must have in early ages found their way as far north as Mt. Atlas.

The President, in the course of his paper on my pamphlet, drew attention to the peculiar indentation in dwarf skulls at the base of the nose. If this is confined to the skulls of African dwarfs, it would seem to indicate that it may possibly be connected with South African clicks either as cause or effect. He also very properly connects the dwarfs seen in Morocco with the Akkas of the Mombuto country. There cannot be a doubt that there is an extensive district to the south of Morocco, bounding southerly on the Sahara, which is called Akka, and which is said to be the headquarters of the Atlas dwarfs, and, also, that there is another Akka on the shores of the Albert Nyanza, which is also inhabited by a dwarf race called Akka. Which was the original Akka? Quatrefages mentions a tradition among the dwarfs of Equatorial Africa that their ancestors came from the northwest, i.e., from the direction of Morocco.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS.

Opals taken out of the Snake river mines are being offered for sale on the streets of Boise city.

There are between 200 and 300 men in the White Hills, Mojave county, A. T., engaged in mining and other pursuits.

A contract has been let for the building of fifty additional miles of the Yuma, San Diego and San Quintin railroad.

Snowstorms in the vicinity of Mt. Sherman, in Wyoming, caused the Union Pacific trains considerable trouble yesterday.

A movement is on foot to form a new county in Arizona from the counties of Maricopa and Yuma with Gila Bend as the county seat.

Cattle are dying on the Grand county, N. M., ranges, and the losses will be probably heavier than has ever been known there before. The grass is literally dried up.

Haggins' three cars of racers went west yesterday morning attached to the Central Pacific passenger. The horses have been resting here two days after the long ride.

Twelve ears of cattle for John Sparks from Laramie went west yesterday as far as Tacoma, where they will be unloaded and reloaded with range horses for the eastern markets.

During the last year the taxable property to Butler county has increased in value $25,000, and the tax rate has been reduced from $1.30 to $1 on the $100—the lowest rate in the state.

There is some talk around town about the Burlington & Missouri buying the Cheyenne & Northern, but the best informed say there is nothing in the story.—Cheyenne Leader.

A ferocious wildcat weighing over twenty pounds and measuring over four feet long was recently captured by L. D. Gale near San Antonio creek, about six miles from Petaluma.

The funeral services over the remains of John G. Chambers were held in the Fourth ward meeting house, Sunday, October 30th, Bishop E. Stratford presiding. There was a large attendance.

Mrs. Arcadia Baker has recovered $40,000 damages in the superior court at Los Angeles, from the Southern California Railway company for the overflowing of her land by the Los Angeles river, caused by an embankment of the defendant company.

An unsuccessful attempt to break jail has been made at Tombstone, Ariz., by two Mexican prisoners. One of them assaulted the jailer, who knocked him down with an iron padlock. The other tackled the jailer's assistant, but was soon knocked out also.

The new time table or winter schedule on the Central Pacific goes into effect today. No changes in the time of the arrival and departure of passenger trains here will be made, but the time will be lengthened out one hour between Ogden and San Francisco.

F. H. Neff came down from the mines Sunday with a broken arm which he wanted set. He was working around the engine in the saw mill at Atlantic with a pair of wet gloves on. His left hand caught in the belting, drew his arm in under the pulley and broke it.—Wind River (Wyoming) Mountaineer.

Adjutant General Kenney will soon be riding around Denver in style in an electoral carriage. He is negotiating with a Chicago house for a three-seated surrey, the motive power of which is furnished by a storage battery under the seat and which is warranted to go at least thirty miles with one "modification."—Denver News.

B. E. Sealy, of Laramie, Wyoming, has just received the sad intelligence of the death of his brother, Horace, in New Zealand. A party of nine of them were out in a new yacht, the America, and capsize, eight of them being drowned before assistance could reach them. Mr. Sealy had not seen his brother in thirty years.

Work on the first gas well for the Ohio & Utah Gas and Oil company will be commenced in about three weeks. Acting for the company, Messrs. Stephens and Main yesterday ordered the special timbers for the derricks from the Eccles Lumber company. The lumber will be out in Oregon and should reach here in ten days.

The Winnemucca (Nevada) Silver State has the following: Nye county has 600 idle stamps and 300 voters. This county was alive with miners, ranchers and business men before the demonization of silver, and its mines produced an enormous output of bullion. With free coinage every stamp would be pounding away on the rich ores of that county, and the mines and mills would give employment to 3000 miners.

Work is progressing favorably in the new reduction works of the Austin Mining company at the old Manhattan mill site, says the Austin (Nevada) Advocate. The Lander machinery is almost in place on the Union shaft; sinking is resumed at the Patriot mine at Yankee Blade and will soon be resumed at the Union, and plans are being made for the running of the double-track tunnel from Clifton into Lander hill.

While gunning near Lousetown, four miles east of Virginia, Nevada, W. Schaum, a local sportsman, discovered a writhing mass of rattlesnakes in a cleft at the base of a rocky cliff. The hunter procured some grain powder and exploded it in the cleft, killing all of the reptiles, numbering 280. In corroboration of the truth of his story Mr. Schaum exhibited nearly a quart of rattles cut from the harmless end of the slaughtered reptiles. The largest of the rattles measured six feet in length.

James Brooks stole a valuable overcoat from the residence of George W. Driver last week and then vanished. Marshal Metcalf notified the officials of all surrounding cities and on Sunday received word from Deputy Sheriff Brown of Promontory that his man was there.

The marshal took the afternoon train and returned in the evening with the sneak thief. The coat was recovered. Brooks, who is an extremely common tramp, was arraigned before the justice and given the limit, ninety days.

The city council met last evening and the three year contract for the city's street lighting was, on recommendation of the committee on public buildings and grounds, awarded to the Ogden Gas, Light & Fuel company. The company's bid was as follows: 75 to 94 lights, $15; alternating, $13.90; 95 to 114, $14.75; alternating, $13.50; 115 to 134, $14.50; alternating, $13.25; 135 to 154, $14; alternating, $13; 155 to 175, $13.50; alternating, $12.

These figures will save the city fully $1 per month for each light and the contract is drawn greatly in the city's interests.

Charles Bellamy has returned to his home in this city from a trip to Casper, where he has been surveying some asbestos claims for a Pittsburg company. Mr. Bellamy says they intend to work the claims extensively. A large force of men was to commence operations this morning. It is the intention to construct a small railroad from the asbestos claims to Casper and then the asbestos will be shipped to Pittsburg. Speaking of the political situation in Converse county he says that there is no doubt but that the Democrats and Populists will get a handsome majority.—Laramie (Wyo.) Boomerang.

The highest vagrant that ever entered the gates of the workhouse on Backwell's Island says the San Francisco Chronicle, is Peter Kelley. He was arrested last Sunday for loitering about the docks at the foot of Vesey street. At the Tombs court he showed Justice McMahon bank books representing nearly $17,000, and the justice discharged him, warning him not to go back to Vesey street. The next day he was there again. The officer who first arrested him arrested him again on learning from the longshoremen that he had been loitering about for four months. This time Kelly got six months on the island, where he is now, living at the expense of the city while his interest is pillock up in the various banks in which his money is deposited.

Says the De Lamar (Idaho) Nugget: On Thursday Mr. Robert Bruce left De Lamar for his Castle Creek ranch with a four-horse team and a load of empty boxes in which to pack fruit. His team, from some cause, ran away while going down the South Hob hill, throwing him from the wagon. In the fall his leg was caught in the wheel and broken between the knee and the ankle. The leg is very badly broken, the bones having been driven through the flesh and crushed to such an extent that amputation may be necessary. Mr. Bruce was dragged about one hundred yards from the road to which he crawled back after the accident, and laid there several hours before he was found by Elijah Lewis, who went to Silver City and got a team to go out and bring him in.

Mr. Jolly's family lives about two miles north of town. The little daughter walks to school these fine mornings. A few days ago, as she was about to cross the bridge on the ditch at the northeast corner of town, she passed near a large water snake which lay coiled at the side of the road. The snake sprang at her, and in great fright she ran. The snake gave chase, but the child was able to gain on it a little. She ran to an old cabin standing near the roadside, and, as the ends of the logs afforded a convenient ladder, she hastily climbed upon it. The snake ran to the cabin and made two efforts to reach her. It made one tour of inspection clear around the cabin, but finally crawled away. An investigation of the surroundings shows that the snake must have chased the child fully 250 yards.—Grand Junction (Col.) News.

At high noon yesterday occurred the marriage of Miss Hattie E. Miner, daughter of Judge and Mrs. James A. Miner of this city and Charles McQuewan of Grand Rapids, at the Church of the Good Shepherd. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, the prevailing blossoms being white chrysanthemums. On the arrival of the bridal party the organ pealed out the sweet strains of Lobengren's Wedding march and the surprised chorus boys to the number of fourteen took the refrain and, singing as they marched, preceded the party to the chancel. The bride leaned on the arm of her father, Judge Miner, and they were followed by Miss Margaret Zane, the maid of honor, and the ushers. The groom and his best man, Mr. John McQuewan, met the party at the altar and under the wedding bell were pronounced the beautiful and impressive words of the episcopal ritual which made Miss Miner henceforth Mrs. McQuewan. The party then proceeded to the Reed hotel, where a superb wedding breakfast was served. The presents were many and handsome in the extreme. The newly wedded couple left last evening at 8:15 o'clock for the east and returning soon to Grand Rapids, Michigan, will make that city their future home.

The friends of Fred Hall, a light colored negro porter on the Pullman "Yosemite," will for the next five months address letters to him care of Utah penitentiary, which will be his residence until the next sitting of the grand jury, having been bound over in bonds of $1000, charged with attempted rape upon little Ruby Lashun, the eight-year-old daughter of George Lashun.

Hall was arrested on Sunday afternoon by Officer Sleeth and narrowly escaped personal violence at the hands of several outraged citizens. He was arraigned yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock before Commissioner Hulanek. During the taking of testimony all newspaper men and spectators were barred on account of the disgusting nature of the evidence. Hall arrived with his car on one of the morning trains and bowed up to a considerable extent during the day. The little girl was playing near the southeast corner of Lincoln avenue and Twenty-fifth street, about 4 o'clock, when she was approached by the negro, who made several indecent proposals to her. Ruby hardly knew the horrible nature of the requests, was much frightened and tried to run away, but was caught by Hall and dragged toward the old vacant saloon which stands on the corner. The girl struggled and screamed and finally managed to escape from the grasp of the brute. Hall's arrest followed a few minutes afterward. In explanation of his fiendish behavior Hall stated that he was unconscious of any wrong doing and if he did the things stated by the witnesses for the prosecution, must have been entirely overcome by liquor, as he remembered nothing of the occurrence.

Sheriff Oldham has received a telegram from Arthur Neal of Seattle, Wash., requesting him to arrest his wife, Mrs. Jennie Neal, nee Moore, if she put in an appearance in this city, says the Idaho Daily Statesman. She is wanted for robbing her husband, who is running a hotel in Seattle. The amount of which he was robbed was not given in the telegram. This is the second time that Neal has been made the victim of his wife's duplicity and dishonesty. A short time ago, in this city, Neal complained that his wife had robbed him of $5000. He had her arrested, and after a short trial in Judge Kyal's court, the matter was compromised by Mrs. Neal returning all of the money but $1500 of the amount alleged to have been appropriated by her. J. W. Badger, Neal's attorney, charged $500 for legal services, which Neal refused to pay. Suit was brought and a judgment of $300 was rendered in favor of the attorney. Before it could be collected, however, Neal removed to Seattle. A transcript of the judgment has been filed in that city and an effort will be made to collect the amount due. Mrs. Neal remained in this city a short while after her husband's departure and then followed him. By her "winning" ways Mrs. Neal gradually regained the confidence of the wronged husband. A few days ago, so the telegram reads, Neal misused a large sum of money. His wife was also missing. It was afterwards ascertained that she left the city very suddenly the night before with another man and has not since been heard of. Mrs. Neal bids fair to become as conspicuous a figure in the Washington courts as she has been in the courts of this state.

VALUABLE SPECIMENS.

The following specimens have been presented to Professor Montgomery for the museum of the Utah University, of which he is curator:

A huge Gila monster lizard from St. David, A. T., presented by Mr. J. W. Hooper, who is now a student in this university; a tarantula and a vinegaroon by the same donor, who has likewise given a sample of azurite and a fine specimen of coralloidal aragonite; calcspar donated by George McIntyre, student of the mining school; native gold and magnetic iron ore from Deep Creek mining district, given by Mr. P. Dunyon, university student; asbestos from Quebec, by Mr. R. V. Smith, student of the university; stone arrow point, by Mr. Clarence Sprague, university student; a cup made by Arizona Indians and donated by Mr. William May, of Nephi; hematite and elastic rock given by Mr. R. G. Forrester, Castle Gate, and wurtzite and tin ore presented by Mr. E. Covington, of Salt Lake.

NOTES.

It is only since Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage made his visit that the Czar of all the Russias has been noticed to be growing thin and nervous.

It is an open question whether the man who once in a while makes a "grand failure" or the man who is always content with a "small success," does the most for the world he lives in.

In his review of the record of the Liberal party in Salt Lake City, the News' correspondent "Box" seems to have played the Diogenes with the Liberal organ's digestion.

THE RAILROAD building of 1892 in the United States is estimated at a little less than 4,000 miles. This 4,000 miles will bring the railroad mileage of the country up to an aggregate of 175,000 miles.

THE MICHIGAN man who committed suicide by swallowing his undershirt, would seem to have answered every requirement of ingenuity and effectiveness, without being altogether au fait in the matter of good taste.

THE REPUBLICAN office-holder who wrote for the New York World the best Democratic campaign song has received his money for it without revealing his identity. Politics may be able to conceal the possessor of genius, but it can't conceal the genius.

THERE ARE not less than twenty-five factories in the state of Maine where green corn is put up by the hundred thousand cans. More sweet corn and better sweet corn can be raised to the acre in Maine than anywhere on earth.

THE CLERGYMEN are now coming forward with the demand for a single word that shall designate the performance of the marriage ceremony. "If I say I 'married' Miss So-and-So," cries one of them, "it is liable to the construction that I am now her husband." "Married!" is the new verb suggested by one of the fraternity, and it is a sufficient index to his distress of mind.

A CANDID confession of error is as rare as it is admirable in newspaperdom. This, from the Anglo-American, published at the City of Mexico, is worthy of preservation: "The intelligent compositor made of the item a typographical specimen fit for the British museum. The other errors, numerous as fleas, would make a jackass leave his oats."

THE PREJUDICE against the Jews in Russia seems to have become less pronounced lately, this being evidenced by the fact that the press assumes a more friendly tone in reference to the persecuted race. Wienaki Guesaki, whose editor is Prince Galitzin, says that the emigration of the Jews can not be desirable to the government, because they are useful to the state, since they have many good qualities. Another paper demands the solution of the Jewish question without recourse to violence.

A JAPANESE paper deplores the moral condition of the young native girls who receive European education. After pointing out how these girls adopt foreign habits, such as occupying rooms where they live alone, going out with gentlemen in the evening, visiting public places, etc., it asks: "What kind of mothers will these girls make? The Occident can teach us nothing on the subject of true womanhood. But Europe could learn a good deal on this subject from Japan." A severe rebuke, administered not only to modern civilization but also to modern Christianity!

THE NEW ENGLAND pastor who thinks people of his way of religious thinking would have been made short work of by Columbus in the good old days, and that the navigator is therefore not entitled to the adoration he is now receiving, should remember the other circumstance that if Columbus had come to New England two hundred years later than he came to the West Indies and had incautiously let slip a "Pater noster," or an "Ave, Maria," he would run imminent risk of testing his cat-o'-nine-tails and of having his tongue slit. The world's progress didn't all occur between the years 1492 and 1700.

HERE'S A new game—one that will furnish the most amusement at the least expense, and one in which it is said there have been thus far no winners; it comes from Boston, too, and must be intellectual, since it at least requires pen, ink, and paper: A sheet of writing is placed on a table; the player stands. He then is required to write the letter D, and as he does it to swing his right foot in the opposite direction from the curve of the big D. In spite of the fact that the foot is not swinging in the right direction, as soon as the pen begins to describe the curve, the foot halts and turns in the same direction. Try it.

THE PREFECT of the police in Paris has found out that a great number of Germans, Austrians and Italians between the ages of 20 and 45 now live in the French capital. His statistics show 6142 Germans, 1748 Austrians, 531 Hungarians and 10,020 Italians, or altogether 18,441 persons. Most of these are men who belong to the armies of their respective countries. The triple-alliance, then, has a little army of say at least 15,000 men right in the center of France, learning all about the country's topography and much about its fortifications, etc. The discovery cannot be very edifying to the French people.

JOHN M. CANNON has declined to serve as judge of election for the second precinct, Salt Lake City, on the ground that he is a candidate for the office of justice of the peace of the precinct named; but no one has yet been appointed by the Utah Commission to act in his stead.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, October 29th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir sang the hymn beginning:

We're not ashamed to own our Lord,
And worship Him on earth.

Prayer was offered by Elder George Goodard.

The choir sang the hymn:

He died! the Great Redeemer died,
And Israel's daughters wept around.

The Priesthood of the Fourteenth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON

was first called upon to speak. He said he had often been reminded of late of that portion of scripture written by the Apostle Paul, to the effect that if in this life only we had hope we were of all men the most miserable. When he reflected upon the circumstances surrounding the Latter-day Saints, the difficulties they had to meet, it seemed to him that they had everything to discourage them, to make them turn back from the path upon which they had entered in connection with the work of God, unless they had some hope within them concerning the future, concerning that eternity to which we were all hastening. The Latter-day Saints not only had the daily cares of life to endure, but had also to meet the persecution, the oppression, the contumely and the scorn of the majority of mankind. They had already, as a Church, suffered far beyond the power of tongue to describe. The Latter-day Saints were the only people who could have redeemed these desert valleys and beautified them in the way they had been, making them a spot which men coveted above almost any other land on the face of the earth. But this could not have been accomplished had not the hand of God directed them in their work. Doubtless but for the labors of the Latter-day Saints these valleys would still be marked as the great American desert.

The Saints were not, however, treated by the world with that consideration to which they were entitled, which all people, whatever their religious convictions, should receive at the hands of their fellowmen. They could, nevertheless, afford to bear all these things for righteousness' sake; they could rejoice in the midst of their tribulation. But when they saw the spirit of discord and of contention, a desire to persecute, to oppress and divide growing up in the midst of the Latter-day Saints, in their own ranks, stakes, wards and organizations which God had here established, then indeed they had cause to fear and tremble, to seek the guidance, comfort and strength of the Almighty to resist this spirit of division, which, if not checked, would assuredly lead to destruction, even as the Spirit of Christ led to salvation. The speaker went on to deplore this spirit of division, which, he said, creeping into families, created discord and strife where formerly there was love and union. The baneful results of this it required no preceptor for this Church to stand, for the people to continue with in its pale, if they were divided one against another. He instanced how those who in the past had opposed the Prophet Joseph and his work had fallen, and said it should be a warning to us not to allow any spirit to take possession of our hearts which would lead us into the ways of unrighteousness.

As to the doctrines of our Church, there were sometimes discussions and quibblings which should not be; we could not afford to be divided—in opposition in this way one against the other. Among the Latter-day Saints there should be union in all things. If we desired to retain the Spirit of Christ we must not permit temporal affairs between our brethren and ourselves to divide us. If there were differences of opinion between our brethren they must not suffer these to divide them in spirit, but let the Lord be the judge. In all our concerns, whether spiritual or temporal, we must seek to know the will of the Lord and then try earnestly to carry it out.

A sacred piece was here sung by the "Yon Yonson" quartette, and greatly enjoyed by the audience.

APOSTLE HEBER J. GRANT

was the succeeding speaker. He realized, he said, as must every Latter-day Saint, that unless we as a people were united in our faith and labors we could not be acceptable in the sight of our Heavenly Father. He read in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that in the days of old the disciples sought occasion one against another, and for this cause were sorely afflicted. It seemed to him that there were many among the Latter-day Saints today who were guilty of this same thing. A great deal was said at the late semi-annual Conference with regard to fault-finding, and he thought that if we all followed the excellent counsel then given we should profit much thereby. One of the brethren at that Conference spoke at some length on the question of home manufacture, and he understood that remarks had since been made to the effect that this was said in the interests of a political party. Upon hearing this he regretted that he himself had not the privilege of bearing his testimony on that occasion to the truth of what was said, seeing that he happened to be on the other side of the political fence from the brother who spoke. Because if there was any one thing more than another of which he had been guilty, both in his public preaching and by his purse, it had been that of sustaining home industries. Any individual, of whatever political creed, who undertook to claim a monopoly for his party to sustain home industries made a very great mistake; and any one who would imagine that any Latter-day Saint who stood up and advocated the doctrine of sustaining home industries, of furnishing employment for our people, and of building up our own country, was trying to make some political capital out of it, was unworthy of them and seeking occasion against his brother.

Brother Grant next spoke upon the subject of the completion of the Salt Lake Temple and said that each and every Latter-day Saint who had the spirit of the Gospel burning within him or her heart should respond to the calls which had been made upon them in this direction to the best of their ability. Instead of squandering their money or expending it injudiciously, let them give it to this great cause. A man could not do better than bequeath his means in this way. To those who had been blessed abundantly with this world's goods he would say, "Open your hearts and do something for God, that He may open the windows of heaven and pour down His blessings, which shall descend on you and your children after you."

The choir sang the anthem, "Grant us peace, O Lord."

Benediction by Bishop Elias Morris.

When it is considered that the largest existing public library, that of the French government at Paris, contains as yet but 2,800,000 volumes, and that ample space exists in the edifice now rising on Capitol Hill for storing more than twice that number, it will be perceived that the wants of the future are well cared for. While nearly every government edifice appears to have been built only for a few years and its uses have long overgrown its limits, this one, through the enlightened liberality of Congress, will provide room for the nation's books for nearly two centuries to come. The ultimate cost is limited to six millions of dollars, a sum somewhat less than half the cost of the Capitol or of the large building erected for the accommodation of the State, War and Navy departments. The library building covers very nearly the same space as each of these government buildings (about three acres), and is constructed of solid granite, with iron, brick and marble interior. Its ample interior courts and numerous windows will render it the best lighted and best ventilated library of large proportions yet erected.

DENVER, Nov. 1.—In the afternoon, at a meeting of the editors of papers, the organization of an interstate W. C. T. U. press association was formed and officers elected. Miss Sadie Reed of Indianapolis was chosen president. In the convention some discussion was caused from the fact that a Republican club held a meeting in the unfinished Willard hall and a resolution was adopted reciting the amusement and sorrow and recording a united protest that the first meeting held within its walls should be allies of a political party whose policy and principles regarding the liquor traffic were utterly opposed to the spirit and purpose of the organization. The explanation which was offered was that the hall was not yet under the control of the order and was accepted with rejoicing. The reports of the work among the colored people, coffee houses and scientific society followed. The evening session was occupied by reading reports from state presidents.

17. Woman's Sphere.

By One of the Sex.

THE FOOD WE EAT.

Very recently a lady friend told me she heard one of the best and best known physicians in this Territory say that if the "Mormons would keep their Word of Wisdom and all their fasts, the doctors would starve to death." It made me wonder if that day would soon come to Utah.

A great many people fancy that by pouring down each morning, a dish full of half cooked oatmeal with a thick coating of sugar on it and as much cream as they can get, they are fulfilling all that health requires of them in the matter of diet. The truth of the matter is that oatmeal is not the very best daily food for the human being. The Word of Wisdom says that oats are for the horse; yet of course, a reasonable amount of any or all the grains would not injure us, if properly cooked and properly eaten. If you must have oatmeal (and remember that physicians say oatmeal in excess causes skin diseases), cook it at least four hours, and eight is better; then eat it with a little sweet milk, no sugar, and it will be digested by ordinary stomachs without any trouble. While we are speaking of oatmeal, I remember hearing a well known Danish obstetrician in this Territory say that if a woman or child, or I suppose any one else, had a weak stomach and found it difficult to digest anything, let a bowl of extremely thin oatmeal gruel be prepared, strain it carefully and give it to the patient. I have since tried this, using about two tablespoonfuls of meal to a quart of water, and after boiling, strained it, and I took the liberty of adding a pinch of salt. I have certainly found it very comforting to the patients whom I have nursed since that time.

"What shall we eat for breakfast?" cries the impatient young housewife. No oatmeal, no tea or coffee, no meat if we are to keep the Word of Wisdom; no hot drinks of any kind. And what on earth are we to set on the table for breakfast? Let me give you the advice of one of the most truthful and at the same time the oddest doctors that ever lived: "Go without eating, my dear, until you are hungry enough to eat proper food." So, then, supposing yourself and family have gone without their supper and that they all have a healthful and gratifying appetite for the morning meal, put some fresh, not warm, brown bread, some stewed, dried or fresh fruit, a baked potato, maybe, a dish of hominy and milk, a fresh egg lightly boiled, a dish of tomatoes cut up in salt, or oatmeal and milk, in fact choose just a simple bill of fare as will do what breakfast should do and no more, and break the fast. Eat before eight in the morning, and then don't try to eat dinner for at least five hours after. We will talk about our dinners some other time.

THE CLOTHES WE WEAR.

It is certainly gratifying to one who loves mankind to see the earnestness with which women are beginning to take hold of the subject of dress. It is beginning to be actually, fashionable to appear in public without a corset, the costume arranged in such a way as to conceal that fact. I am not acquainted with all the many turns and twists this movement is taking among our people, but I understand from a friend of mine that there already exists in Provo a club for the reformation or bettering of women's dress. This is very good indeed. But in talking with my friend, I asked her why it was that these ladies did not ally themselves with the Young Ladies' Association. Were they not organized to be a Retrenchment Association? And was not that the instructions of that good man, President Brigham Young—to retrench in dress and fashion? She answered, that the energetic Provo ladies thought that this movement had originated with a certain eastern lady who came here to lecture this summer. Of course I could not well enter into an argument with my respected friend, but I sat in my lonely little room that night, and said to myself, yes it is always so: "The children of the world are wiser in their generation than the children of light."

I see by a careful reading of the fashion journals of England and America, that the despots of France have decided that we are really to indulge this new fad or notion of our energetic little American women and assume the empire styles. Some one asked me the other day what the empire styles were. They are what we call now-a-days the baby waist, with the waist line up under the arm-pit, and the dress long-skirted, full, untrimmied, unless a narrow ruffle or two be added at the foot, big round sleeves, and a rather low necked effect. That is what we wear now, varied of course as dreamers choose.

I am willing to take you into my confidence and tell you that I am not in favor of empire styles any more than any other; but I am in favor of women learning some of the rudiments of becoming attire, and then finding out the particular style which will suit themselves, and with slight modifications wear it to the end of their days. I don't know why we should consider it a necessity of our lives to spend most of our time in worrying about our clothes, those we have and those we have not. Let the woman who desires to be happy study her own form, avoid corsets as she would crime, have no skirts weighing upon her hips, and then let the outer dress be made in princess style or empire, in ancient or modern style, only let it be made loosely and without bones, with no bands about the waist. If this is done, no one need fear that their looks or their health will suffer.

THE LIVES WE LIVE.

There is one certain type of woman that I wish to take by the hand and have a good cosy chat with. Are you a woman who thinks that your husband knows more than any other man, or woman either, in this whole world? Do you respect his word as the word of the Lord to you, and wonder why all creation cannot see the immense superiority of your husband over every other living creature? Well, if you are that type of woman, you are not the one I wish to see just now. I may have something to say to you later on; but just now I wish to invite the woman who knows her husband is a pretty good man, one who does about as well as most men do, but who feels in her secret soul that she would do a good deal different if she were head of the house; who feels cross when family prayers are neglected, who worries all the time about the spiritual welfare of her husband, while she feels quite secure in her own; if you are that sort of a woman just come here and let us have a good talk together. In the first place I want to ask you who is the first one mentioned in your prayer? I'll venture to say it is yourself, then your children, and if you remember to say a few words for your husband it is done hurriedly and half mechanically. Now, then, this is all wrong. When men go into conferences and hold up their hands, what is the virtual vow they are making? To sustain by their faith and prayers, by their good words and works, the men and men who are being voted into positions in the Church. What would you think of President Cannon or President Smith if you could hear them pray and knew that they were praying for the Lord to give them light and revelation, to pour out upon them visions and dreams, to bestow temporal and spiritual blessings without number, and then at the close of the prayer just add a few hurried words for President Woodruff that he might be blessed with wisdom to guide the Church, etc. Just take that picture and set it calmly and slowly in your minds; can you imagine either Brother Cannon or Brother Woodruff doing such a thing as that day by day? Ah, no! How their whole hearts are poured out in public and in private, at night when they lie on their couches, in the day when in counsel with their brethren, how deeply are their whole hearts stirred to sustain the noble man who stands at their head and as head to the whole Church. Do you suppose the wives in this Church are thus loyal and devoted to their head and file leader? You can all answer that question for yourselves. I want to say to the wives in Israel, that you don't half appreciate your husbands. It has become so fashionable to say that women have the trials of life, that women suffer, that women are the ones who need the sympathy of the public, that we have begun to think that it is so and this is all nonsense. The man who is a virtuous, true, upright Latter-day Saint, has just as many trials as any woman in the Church. And furthermore, as he is the head he needs more wisdom, more faith, more strength to lead and guide his family. If your husband is a little bit behind you, my dear and over-zealous sister, I should be inclined to think that a good bit of the blame rests on your shoulders. There is one thing about the matter; if you will do your full duty, neither being a slave to your husband nor trying to be his head, if you will pray as earnestly for, yea, even more earnestly for him than you do for yourself, you will have your full reward. Your home will be happy, your children obedient, your life full of comfort and in eternity you will meet with nothing but joy and glory. If you fail—but you all know what failure means in this Church. But once more I wish to raise a warning voice to the daughters of Zion; appreciate and respect the good and noble men who are your husbands, and never let it be said of you that you failed in your duty.

Society and Association Notes. THE RELIEF SOCIETY.

The time will come some day, when these grand societies will find that the best part of their mission is in finding the people who want work done, and then the people who want to get work and bring these two classes together. To simply supply old ladies with tea and sugar is not the whole duty of an officer of the Relief Society. I have heard Sister Zina D. Young say that to feed the idle poor is to do an injury. Looking about, a few carpet rags can be given to one old sister who is to receive help, a quilt to be pieced can be given to another, stockings to mend or knit can be furnished by those who can afford to pay for this work, and almost all those who receive help from the society can be enabled to earn that help, even if the work be not so well done. A feeling of independence is engendered in the heart of one who ear s his or her bread that never comes in any other way.

THE Y. M. M. I. A.

So popular has the little book used in the Manual for the Young Men's association called "The Gospel," by B. H. Roberts, become, that a new edition is called for, and one will be issued soon, with some additions. This is an excellent sign of this new movement among this association.

THE Y. L. H. I. A.

I have learned that the book to assist the young ladies in their work is to be called "The Guide," and that it is being readily pushed by those who are getting it ready for the press. I was old confidently that this Guide is written and being published not by one or two persons but entirely by the presidency of the general board. I am glad of that, for such things should come from the right source, not from individuals.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Some questions have been asked as to whether it would be advisable to get up entertainments for this association or any other charitable purpose; but the answer as to the Sunday school would be found in the fact that a concert was given last April in Salt Lake City for the benefit of the Sunday School Union.

Address all communications to

MRS. FRANCES M. RICHARDS, Care Desert News Office,
Salt Lake City.

The Lives We Live.

From the Woman's Tribune.—A writer in the Medical Mirror relates the warnings and statements of many predecessors that over-heating is the cause of most of the injury so often attributed to brain work. Over-heating caused a clogging of the mental machinery through delayed digestion and imperfect assimilation, and disease came as an inevitable result, which disease was attributed to an overworked brain rather than an overworked stomach. Hard work, mental or physical, rarely ever kills. A reasonable amount of exercise, judicious food, proper protection of the surface with warm clothing, and a determination to let nothing worry, fret or annoy him, the chances are that an individual can do an almost unlimited amount of work. But thing is to be remembered; when weariness comes he must rest, and not take stimulants and work on false capital. This is certain destruction of mental and physical vigor. Following the well known rules for exercise, food and rest, and cultivating content and peace of mind, successful work is assured.

Practical Home Training.

When manual training with its domestic economy department of cooking and sewing was being urged as a necessary part of public school training, teachers and wise men brought forward the argument, "That it is not needful for mothers to teach these things," writes Miss Grace Dodge in a carefully prepared paper on this most important subject in the November Ladies' Home Journal. From every city came the answer, "Mothers do not teach these branches, and our girls are being brought up without practical household training." One summer a lady had 280 girls from offices, stores and factories to board during two weeks' vacation. At the end of the summer she found that but nine of the number knew how to make a bed, and many of them made it a boast that they "never had made a bed in their lives." Some did not even know whether sheet or blanket should be put on first. And these were not destitute girls, but such as represent our self-respecting wage-earners—girls who were boarders, paying a fair price, and yet who were expected to make their own beds. Mothers had not trained them. There are hundreds of bright, intelligent girls of fifteen, sixteen, eighteen, and even older, who have never sewed, and do not know whether a thimble should go on their thumb or forefinger. What kind of wives and mothers are they to make?

Beds and Their Belongings.

Bolsters are made full and round, and no pillows are used with them, with them writes Maria Parloa in the November Ladies' Home Journal. Sometimes the spread is made long enough to cover them, but oftener a long scarf of the same material as the spread is thrown over them. Another way is to cover them smoothly with the same material as the spread gathering it at the ends, and finishing with a tassel. The spreads are made of all sorts of material. If the bolsters be covered smoothly, with a tassel at the end, the material should be of fine texture; but if the spread be made long enough to cover the bolster, or if a separate scarf be made, any light material may be used. For elegant rooms, a foundation of silk is covered with lace, the silk being in the color used in furnishing the room. This fashion appears to be most inappropriate for a bed. Linen and other washable fabrics are often embroidered in colors, making handsome and tasteful covers. India muslin and crepes may be used for the window draperies and spreads in the same manner. Canopies of this muslin or lace are used on brass beds.

Suggestions to a Guest.

Do not let the old saying, "the first day the man is a guest, the second a burden and the third a pest," be applied to you.

Endeavor to time your arrival so that it shall not interfere with your friends' meal hours, and arrange so that your baggage shall be delivered without being a care to them.

Do not outstay your welcome; do not even stay as long as you are asked to.

Allow your hostess time to attend to her household duties; observe the hour at which her husband is likely to return from business, and try to arrange so that he may find his wife alone at that time; you can easily find an excuse for absenting yourself.

Try to be unconscious of any friction which may exist in the household machinery, and by your punctuality do your best toward keeping it in regular motion. Be thoughtful of your hostess, affectionate to her children and courteous to her servants.

The Clothes We Wear.

GOWNS FOR THE SCHOOL GIRL.
Her school dresses may be of serge and cheviot, as they probably out wear other woollen materials, and should be made in a simple manner without any trimming, unless it be mohair braid of velvetten collars and cuffs, writes Emma Hooper in her valuable department "Home Dressmaking," in the November Ladies' Home Journal. The church dress will be of laines' cloth, or one of the new ottoman weaves, made with a jacket bodice, velvet cuffs, revers and collar, and a plastron of surah, the shade of the cloth or in contrast, this being a wonderful season for a harmonious contrast of materials and colors.

ODDS AND ENDS.

The doctor and I walked up the avenue the other day, and met any number of charmingly attired women. We were back of several others who were not so well gotten up.

"They call those places pocket holes," said the doctor, "but why they put their pockets in the middle of their backs is a mystery to me. If they could walk behind themselves a block or two they would either change the location of that gap or stuff it to the brim with a pocket handkerchief or something."

And, really, I have wished several times they would. It is embarrassing to a man to find himself—however innocently—on forbidden ground.

Mutton Chops Grilled.

Cut the chops an inch thick, either from the loin or the best end of the neck; if from the latter, the bones must be shortened a little, writes Mary Barrett Brown in the November Ladies' Home Journal. Remove all superfluous fat and season each chop by pressing in a mixture of salt, pepper and powdered herbs; then dip each chop in warm butter, and grill on a hot, well greased gridiron, over a clear fire, from eight to ten minutes, according to thickness. During the process of cooking the chops require to be frequently turned, in order that they may be done equally, and for this purpose use a pair of steak tongs. By inserting any sort of a sharp instrument into meat that is cooking will provide a ready means of escape for the juices which the meat contains, and thus, being deprived of its best element, becomes dry and tasteless. When cooked, place each chop, just slightly overlapping its neighbor, upon a hot dish; pour over each a dessert-spoonful of hot butter and a tablespoonful of boiling mushroom ketchup, and serve immediately. }

The candy habit is another growing evil. Stomachs clogged with sugar cannot do their work properly, and the result is a good deal more injurious to the race than a man's tobacco consuming proclivities—always excepting cigarettes; they are beyond any vice a woman can contract, unless she smokes them.

To Country Girls.

If your lives have fallen into some quiet, unpretentious place, do not complain that it is dull and commonplace, and that "there is nothing to live for here," as I have heard so many do. Why, dear heart, there is no place on God's earth so bleak and barren, so quiet and lonely, so wind-swept and rain-beaten, but that there is a great deal to live for right there, and when you have grown a little older you will see it with clear eyes; and you will, perhaps, look back to the country village and wish—oh, how you will wish—that you had been happy and contented to that simple life. You will know, then, that it is nobler to live well a humdrum life, than to wear out body, mind and soul in a fever of gaiety and frivolity and to stretch out your empty hands always to something you cannot seize.

Better to sing babies to sleep in the soft twilight that folds down over the cottage home, than to loll in carriages and laugh at the brainless nonsense that men of the world whisper into your jeweled ears. And better—far better to dwell forever away from the lights and the roar, and the temptations, and the sins of the city, with a clean heart and a pure soul, than to let the city's passionate unrest creep into your pulses, and set them beating in a mad chase after—death.—Goodform.

The American Girl's Voice.

During my travels in America, writes Marie Rose in an exhaustive article on "The Girl With a Voice," in the November Ladies' Home Journal, I made the acquaintance of a great many young women who possessed fair voices and were ambitious to earn their living on the stage in opera or in concert. Looking back over my own career, I would like to give a few hints to those who think of embarking in a work that brings many trials, but also rewards and honors, rich and thick. The first thing for a girl to do is to find out if she has a voice. This cannot possibly be ascertained until she is fifteen or sixteen years of age. If she possesses a voice and is ambitious to go on the stage, she should at once put herself in the care of a teacher who knows how to develop the voice without straining it. I have known so many girls who were fitted by nature with good voices, and who might have become famous if they had only begun right, but through carelessness when they were young their voices were strained, and before they were twenty years of age were cracked and metallic-like. There was no melody in them, and yet a practiced ear could now and then detect a note or two of such sweetness as to attest the fact that if they had been properly trained, their voices would have been grand and beautiful.

Developing a Girl's Voice.

A naturally beautiful voice is a beautiful thing, and a gift to be appreciated and cared for "reverently, discreetly and advisedly," but it is a gift which is not given to every one, writes Clara Poole in a helpful article on that most important of subjects, "The Culture of the Voice," in the November Ladies' Home Journal. Proper cultivation, however, and, what is synonymous with it, a right method, can do as much and more, without much natural voice, than the most beautiful voice without them. The moral of all this is, therefore, secure a good teacher, and then work with your teacher. The best teacher is not the one who, at the first lesson, will give you a solo and teach you to sing, after his fashion, "twenty songs in ten lessons." It is, rather, the one who, commencing with tone production, develops one by one, the notes of your voice until each one is perfect, of even quality and quantity, and under your complete control. This will be a work of time, of patience and of care, but the result will fully justify your pains. Having your voice under control, solo and part singing will be a matter merely of reading and of attention with you.—New York Record.

Women on School Boards.

Woman has a hard time defining her position in the world. The civilized family of which she is a part is taught by a series of interesting object lessons. Civilization itself is a great awkward, bungling infant who hasn't yet learned to walk, who hasn't yet a right to the name it bears, and who will learn only when woman herself is the teacher. This sounds broad but it's true—Civilization indeed—the world is a misnomer—uncivilization would be more to the point.

It was the divine wisdom of the Creator that relegated to the finer nature of woman the office of mother of the human race. Then He left her to work out the problem. Of all the dilatory, procrastinating, ought-to-be-ashamed-of-themselves people on the face of the earth women lead the van. The Creator endowed woman more richly than any work of His hand. He made her higher than the angels, and in her heart He planted the only memorial to Himself, the only spark of divinity on earth—a mother's love—absolutely the one imperishable, immortal thing that exists—the one thing incorruptible.

How has she worked on in this plan? The way seems to have been draughted for her and her position has been a relative one—realistic to the draughtsman. She has been wife and mother but not woman. When she began to thirst for education she found obstacles in her way. Only courtizans were educated. It was one of the innovations of the century when women began to teach school. But, I shaw!—you all know about these things—how the girls in Boston were allowed to play the role of eavesdroppers while the boys in the High School recited their lessons. It's a very old story. Civilization has kept pace with the development of woman and that's the reason we are not so civilized as we profess.

It was another innovation when women were put on the school boards. Progress said to the brethren, "Here is your pill—take it—it's a specific for grievous ills." It was a hard lump for the brethren to swallow, but it had to go down. These women voted for school commissioners. Not here in New York—but in several places. The result was good.

Here is the problem. The Creator deputized woman to be the mother and the natural teacher of the human race. He gave her an unclimbered field. When is her work done? When she turns the babies out of the nursery? Say, rather, that she is a creature of growth, the same as those babes themselves, and wherever they are, her interests are and there she belongs.

TOOLEE STAKE CONFERENCE.

Oct. 23 at 10 o'clock a. m., President Gowans called the assembly to order; present on the stand of the Apostles were F. M. Lyman and H. J. Grant; Presidency, Bishops and leading men of the Stake.

President Gowans briefly reviewed the Stake, reporting the condition financially and spiritually as progressive—a marked increase in faith with corresponding good works.

Bishops Thos. Atkin of Tooele and Jas. L. Wrathall of Grantsville, reported their wards favorably.

Apostle Lyman instructed the Bishops and officers in their duties and callings, as also the members, by showing respect to those placed in authority.

Apostles Grant and Lyman addressed the large assembly of Saints, giving words of encouragement, counsel and instruction on a number of subjects closely allied to our temporal and spiritual interests, impressing the importance of our liberality in contributing to the completion of the Salt Lake Temple and the blessings we expect to receive therein.

Bishop F. D. St. Geor of Clover, Israel Bennion of Vernon and Jno. G. Shields of Lakeview, gave satisfactory reports of the condition of their wards. A. G. Johnson, superintendent of the Sabbath schools for the Stake, highly applauded the superintendents and teachers in their respective schools for the good work being accomplished with the youth of this Stake.

Counselors G. H. Richards and C. L. Anderson corroborated the report given by President Gowans and the Bishops of the wards and gave good advice for adoption in our future lives.

President Gowans presented the general authorities of the Church and local officers of the Stake for the approval of the conference, all of whom were unanimously sustained.

Apostles Lyman and Grant occupied the afternoon in their earnest, impressive and instructive manner, treating upon subjects suited to the edification of the Saints, applauding them for their liberality in past demands that have been made in the interest of the Church.

The Tooele ward choir contributed largely to the enjoyment of our conference. The weather was delightful and a goodly number of the Saints from all parts of the Stake participated in the rich flow of the Spirit of the Lord made manifest through His servants.

H. S. GOWANS, President.
GEO. ATKINS, Clerk.
TOOLEE, Oct. 25, 1892.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday night, President Loofbourrow in the chair. The councilmen in attendance were: Karriek Hardy, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Beardsley, Wantland, Heise, Simonds, Kelly, Evans, Folland, Moran—13. Absent—Rich—1.

In the absence of City Attorney Hoge, his assistant, Mr. Coad was present and acted as legal adviser.

After the usual preliminary business had been disposed of the consideration of pending matters was commenced.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Fritz K. Morris asked that an electric light be established at the intersection of Third and 8 streets. Committee on improvements.

S. S. Markham and others asked that the Council annul the franchise granted to the West Side Rapid Transit Street Railway company.

J. Gabbott sent in a bill for $50 for services rendered as water agent in Parley's and Emigration canyons. Committee on claims.

The Board of Education asked that it be allowed to connect the Lincoln school premises with the sewer main.

George Sheppard and others asked that Plum street be put in a possible condition. Committee on streets.

J. W. Haddock and others asked that an electric light be placed at the intersection of Third West and Fifth North streets. Committee on improvements.

E. J. Dorsey & Company and others asked that Joseph Brown be appointed a special policeman without pay. Committee on police.

R. E. McConaughy sent in a bill for $150 for the breaking of one of the legs of a valuable horse owned by him at the corner of Third South and Second East streets. Committee on claims.

Elias Morris complained that his road to the lime quarries was being destroyed by contractor Harkins and asked the city to inquire into and remedy the matter. City engineer and attorney associated.

The Brigham Young Trust company sent in a communication in which it represented that the private cemetery left by the late Brigham Young to his family and descendants had been assessed by Mr. Leonard. The claim was set forth that the lot had never before been assessed and that under the general revenue act of the Territory it was not assessable, and petitioners therefore asked that the collector be instructed to cancel the tax assessed. Referred to the city attorney.

The Pacific Paving company asked that the 10 per cent. retained by the city for three and five years on the contracts for paving in 1891 and on State street this year be placed in city bonds to be held by the treasurer, and the interest coupons delivered to them. Committee on claims.

Byron Groo and others asked that an electric light be placed at the intersection of State and First streets.

FIREPROOF PROPOSITION.

City Recorder Stanton, secretary of the joint committee on city and county building, reported the following resolution passed by the committee on the 25th inst: "That it be the sense of this committee and they recommend to the City Council and county court that the third and fourth floors of the joint building, with the ceilings of said stories and roof trusses, be made fireproof, providing the cost does not exceed $33,000."

Considerable discussion followed and Karriek moved that an expert be employed to investigate and see if those figures were correct, also to see if inferior rock and other materials were not being put into the building.

Bell said if that was done perhaps it would be well to employ an expert, but his opinion was that the work had progressed so far that if anything was wrong, the city would be obliged to come back on the bondsman for the contractors.

President Loofbourrow said the basement was not fire proof. It was not necessary to have it so. It could easily be reached by the fire department in case of a conflagration. The first and second stories were fire proof. The third and fourth stories were not. Architects say that in case of a fire if the third and fourth stories were made fire proof nothing but the roof could possibly be destroyed. He was in favor of making the roof fireproof also, but other members of the committee were not. The bid of Contractor Bowman for fireproofing the two upper stories was $33,094, and for fireproofing the roof $18,864.00. He thought prompt action should be taken. He favored referring the matter to a select committee. Two members of the committee were in favor of fireproofing throughout; one was not.

Beardsley said he was certainly in favor of fireproofing the entire structure.

Moran agreed with Beardsley. He wanted the report amended so as to include the roof as well as the third and fourth stories.

Wantland said immediate action was not necessary on the roof proposition but it was so far as the third and fourth stories were concerned.

Kelly favored leaving the report just as it was for the present. He was, however, in favor of erecting a structure that was fireproof from basement to garret.

Hardy said he was in favor of fireproofing but he thought it was a little singular that one man only should be allowed to bid on the proposed improvement. If competitive contractors were allowed to bid it might be that the work could be done much cheaper.

Bell, a member of the joint committee, said the city reserved the right to make such investigation as it saw fit.

Moran offered a substitute motion, which called for the appointment of a special committee of three with instructions to report back to the council on Friday night.

Wantland said that that would not give the committee sufficient time, and he would therefore vote against the motion.

Karriek said if it went to any committee at all it should go to the old one who was perfectly familiar with all of the details.

Folland said he had heard it intimated that somebody was going to make $20,000 out of the deal. He was not a member of the committee, but he knew that such a report was incorrect. He had taken pains to figure out the cost of material in detail and knew that the bids on some of it was below the market price. But that was not the business of the council but that of the bidder. He said he had also heard that there was a collusion between the architects, contractors and superintendent. This he did not credit.

Moran's substitute motion to refer to a committee to report to the council on Friday night then carried by a vote of 7 to 5.

THE USE OF BICYCLES.

The city attorney sent in a report in which he opined that bicycles were vehicles and therefore could not be allowed to run on the sidewalks. The proper place for them was on the streets. He quoted the opinions of Illinois and Indiana courts to that effect.

Laid on the table to come up with the ordinance on the same subject.

WATER AND SEWER CONNECTIONS.

The superintendent of sewers sent in a recommendation that an ordinance providing for making gas, water and sewer connections on streets proposed to be paved be passed, section 2 of which would be as follows:

"All owners of property on such streets shall be notified at least thirty days by publication in some newspaper printed in the city of Salt Lake before the work of paving any street is begun, and required to make the necessary connections for water and sewers across the sidewalks to the property lines, and in case said property owners neglect or refuse to do the same it shall be done by the city, and the cost thereof shall be assessed upon the property opposite such connections of the parties refusing to make such connections to such depths as the Council sitting as a board of equalization shall deem just and equitable."

He also recommends that the night watchman in the sewer department be sworn in as a special policeman without pay.

City engineer and committee on sewers.

SIDEWALK CONSTRUCTION.

Recorder Stanton reported that the notices of intention to construct sidewalks on the following streets had been published in accordance with law and that no protests had been filed against the carrying out such intentions except for intention No. 27 which he reported enough protests to defeat the same.

No. 26 on both sides of First South street between Eighth and Twelfth East in sidewalk district No. 2.

No. 27 on both sides of Second South between Eighth and Twelfth East streets in district No. 4.

No. 28 on both sides of Second South street between East Temple and West Temple streets in sidewalk district No. 3.

No. 29 on both sides of First South street between East and West Temple streets in sidewalk district No. 1.

No. 30 on both sides of First South street between East Temple and State streets in district No. 2.

No. 31 on both sides of First South street between East Temple and State streets in sidewalk district No. 4.

Referred to the attorney with order draw the necessary ordinances levying the taxes for the completion of the work.

CITY CREEK WORK.

In regard to the work being done in City Creek, City Watermaster Harvey reported progress as follows: The channel has been changed and deepened according to lines and grade established by the city engineer. New lime put in at Ninth West street. Bridge moved and rebuilt at same place. Bridge moved and rebuilt between Eighth and Ninth West streets. The flume that carries City Creek over Eighth West street has been lowered, grade and bridges repaired at that point.

I would recommend that the flume be extended from Sixth West to Ninth West street as that would keep the street from washing away in times of flood. I also recommend that the street be graded and put in a passable condition. Committee on irrigation.

IN FAVOR OF THE U. C. RAILROAD.

The board of public works sent in a bill in favor of the Utah Central Railroad company for $457.51, for widening out and moving track at the mouth of Parley's canyon conduit. Approved.

WOULD BE A BAD PRECEDENT.

The board of public works reported recommending that the curb line on the west side of Main between First and Second South streets in which petitioners ask that the curb line on that block be changed in front of the various properties so as to widen the sidewalk twenty feet where in places it is now eighteen and a half feet, caused by the irregularity of the building line on that block, be denied, otherwise the uniformity of sidewalks would be destroyed and a troublesome precedent established.

After considerable desultory discussion the report was adopted.

ADVERSE REPORT.

The board of public works reported adversely on the petition of George Rumney and Mary Daft, owning 29 and 62 1/2 feet property on Main street, to lay their own sidewalks. Adopted.

The board of public works reported that they had notified the Culmer Jennings Paving company to proceed with the work under the contract on Main, First and Second South streets, the setting of the curb stones to commence at the southwest corner of the intersection of South Temple and Main streets, thence along the west side of Main street to first South street, then be east side, and so on. That grading be done to the extent of lowering the street to the grade of the top of the stone pavement or gutters, and that the work be started at the south line of South Temple street, and that after the work of grading, the stone block pavement, which is to be ten feet in width, extending from each curb, shall be laid as fast as possible. The board also instructed the street railway company that they expected it to grade its portion of the street at the same time and in the same manner as that done by the contractors.

The board then recommended that where property owners had failed to complete the curbing under permits granted them by the city to do their own work, the contractor should proceed to do the work as fast as such places were reached.

The board also recommended that all street intersections be paved with stone blocks, and that all crosswalks be constructed of three parallel courses of flagstone, 18 inches wide by 6 inches thick, laid two feet apart.

The board further recommended that the contractor be ordered not to proceed with the work of laying concrete, base or asphaltum pavement this fall, as the low temperature makes it necessarily a dangerous experiment, and in the board's opinion the work should be delayed until spring.

Wantland said he wanted to rush the work with all possible speed.

Lawson said that the curbing and guttering could be carried on now, but the season was too far advanced for the laying of asphalt.

Simondt objected to the board of public works making any other arrangements than those set forth in the specifications as adopted by the council.

Horn said that the members who were so eager for speed a few weeks ago were now urging delay. He failed to understand why this was.

The report was laid on the table until the next meeting.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

The chair then named Folland, Bell and Moran as a special committee to examine further into the proposition to fireproof the joint city and county building.

An adjourned session of the City Council was held last night. In the absence of President Lathrop, Councilman Simondt occupied the chair. The members in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Karriek, Harly, Moran, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Kelly, Evans, Beardsley, Wantland, Heles—13.

INSPECTORS APPOINTED.

The board of public works reported that it had appointed S. H. Carlisle inspector of curbing and paving of the work to be done by the Culmer Jennings company, at a salary of $100 per month. Also that it appointed T. J. Williams as inspector of the North Temple street conduit at a similar salary.

Rich said he did not see the consistency in employing two inspectors. Mr. Hansen was thoroughly competent and could easily attend to the work. He moved to reject the report.

Horn moved as an amendment that the appointment of Mr. Carlisle be confirmed.

Lawson and Bell objected to the adoption of the report.

Wantland was of the opinion that the report should be adopted; the appointments could be revoked at any time.

Horn thought that the board knew what it wanted.

Hardly referred to the notorious Gus Woods case as an example of what the board wanted.

More discussion followed after which the matter went over for one week.

AS TO STREET GRADES.

City Engineer Doremus sent in a report recommending that a petition for a grade on Main street north of North Temple street be granted, but suggested that at the same time the grade of all the streets in plat E be established at the same time.

PREPARING FOR HIGH WATER.

The city engineer reported that he and the watermaster had made an examination of City creek channel, above the masonry conduit on State street, and found that some repairs should be made in restoring the cobblestone paving, which was damaged through high water last spring. The channel, for a short distance above the conduit, he says, should also be cleaned, and to make room for the gravel which will be brought down and lodged there by the high waters of next season, otherwise the gravel will be carried into the culvert, from where its removal will cost many times as much as it can be taken out for above. Referred to the irrigation committee with power to act.

COMBINATION POLES AGAIN.

The city engineer reported that at a meeting of representatives of the companies interested it was generally agreed that the street car, telephone and telegraph companies could use combination poles without any disadvantage to them. It was, however, agreed that the electric light wires ought to be strung on separate poles, as the great number and weight of the wires strung on the same poles with the other companies would cause much annoyance and possibly many accidents. The matter of underground wires, he said, found no advocates among the representatives of the various companies, and he thought that that question might be allowed to rest for the present. He suggested that the electric light wire be strung on poles along the sides of the streets just within the sidewalk curbs, as thus the danger from the breaking of the wires leading into the various buildings would be less than if the poles were in the center of the streets. Laid over until next Tuesday evening.

A SURVEY ORDERED.

City Engineer Doremus was ordered to make a survey of Social Hall alley with a view to having it converted into a street.

TELEPHONE POLES.

The city engineer reported applications for telephone poles on Sixth South street, between Tenth and Eleventh East streets. Under the present rules the poles would be assigned to positions in the center of the street, and it had been suggested that the poles on this street be placed on the sides of the street on account of the boulevard which was now being constructed on that street. Committee on streets.

SETTLE THE MUDDLE FIRST.

In the matter of a petition for grades on Current street, the city engineer reported that grades on that street alone were impracticable, and that the grades on the abutting streets could not be fixed until the muddle in plat E was settled. Filed.

WANT THEM REMOVED.

The city engineer reported that in order to place the curbs for Main and First and Second South streets the awning posts which were out to the edge of the twenty-foot sidewalks would have to be removed, and in order that the contractors should not be delayed, he asked for instructions as to the removal of those posts. City attorney and city engineer.

UNTIL NEXT SPRING.

The city engineer and street supervisor reported cobblestone gutters on both sides of State street north of North Temple street would cost about $1600, but recommended that the work be not done until next spring, as the big bill ought to have time to settle. Adopted.

FRANCHISE FIRE DEPARTMENTS.

The committee on fire department recommended that three district fire houses were needed, stating that the estimated cost of the three houses fully equipped would be $21,370, and they recommended that this amount be appropriated. The D., A. & M. society, they said, would donate a site for the station house in the southeastern part of the city.

Heiss said the locations as selected were: The southwest district station at Second West and Sixth South; northeastern station at Fourth and L streets and the southeastern station in the southeastern corner of the block owned by the D. A. & M. society. The detailed estimates were: Southwest, $7930; southeast, $8605; northeast, $7635.

Lawson wanted to know why it was that the station proposed to be erected in the southeastern part of the city was going to cost less than the others. He wanted a fair deal. Unless his part of the city was equipped with the same apparatus as the others and at the same cost he would oppose the whole proposition.

Horn—This man Lawson has again shown his small soul and personal selfishness. He is narrow minded—"Rap, rap" went Simond's gavel with the words "you must not be personal, Mr. Horn."

Horn—Well, I'm going to say what I think.

Lawson said that he was willing to concede that his mind was narrow and contracted; that he was incapable of comprehending as much as Mr. Horn, the broad minded, intellectual giant from the Fourth precinct, whose understanding was without bounds and whose charity had no limit; that he did not live on an aristocratic boulevard, but he was as much a councilman as Mr. Horn and his vote would count just as much.

Rich said that the adoption of the report meant an outlay of $22,000, and an annual expense thereafter of about $15,000, simply to protect the insurance companies. He believed, however, that the northeast station should be built. It was needed, but he didn't think the other two were this fall. The southeast and southwest stations could be built later. He moved as an amendment that the northeast station be built and equipped this fall, and that action on the other two stations be deferred until next year.

Folland said that there were various reasons why the report should not be adopted. Competition bids had not been asked for the erection of the houses and because while the council had no information as to the exact location of the houses, men had gone around and secured or tried to secure options on grounds where it was said the stations would be located. He urged other objections to the adoption of the report, that nothing definite had been reported by the committee as to the cost of maintaining the stations, as to plans, etc. The report asked for the appropriation of $22,000, and without knowing definitely as to where the money was to be spent.

Hardy said he had figured out that the present departments cost annually $450,000. The city taxes amounted to $260,000. The question was, could they raise the balance of the money from other sources? If the City Council kept on at its present pace they would bankrupt the city. Appropriation after appropriation was asked for. He couldn't see where the money was coming from. Business men and property holders were asking him daily when the City Council was going to stop its extravagance and when the end would come to the present reckless method of handling the people's money. The situation was becoming alarming. It was time to go slow.

Wantland intimated that the minority (the Democratic members) were talking for the eighth day of November.

This caused Messrs. Rich and Hardy to spring to their feet simultaneously and resent the imputation. They wanted it distinctly understood that they were not making political speeches; it was their accuser who was guilty of that wrong doing. He should be careful what he said. Wantland then took it back and apologized.

On motion of Horn the report was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Beardsley, Bell, Heiss, Horn, Kelly, Lawson, Moran, Simond, Wantland—9.

Nays—Folland, Hardy, Karriek, Rich—4.

Evans excused.

TO PUSH PAVING.

Wantland moved that the report of the board of public works, presented Tuesday night and recommending that no asphalt or concrete paving on Main or First or Second South streets be laid this fall, be returned and that it be declared the sense of the council that the work be prosecuted vigorously according to the terms of the contract. Carried.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were made:

McCoy & Kendall.....	$ 500
Grant Bros.....	5 50
Salt Lake Power, Light and Heating company.....	4 32
G. M. Scott & Company.....	15 79
Kopke & Company.....	604 91
G. F. Culmer & Company.....	21 79
E. O. Coffin Hardware company.....	60 76
J. J. Smith & Company.....	21 56
Spencer & Lynch.....	13 50
Perkins & Co.....	24 62
Spier Bros.....	2 90
Goldman & Company.....	375 53
Lanman's Market.....	121 93
Geo. S. Bell.....	11 20
G. A. Lowe & Co.....	5 13
Goldsmith & Co.....	28 06
Mountain Ice company.....	6 50
J. S. Morse & Co.....	48 55
W. L. Richard & Co.....	3 45
Morgan, Merrill & Co.....	8 50
R. E. City Mountain Bell Telephone Co.....	21 50
Remington, Johnson & Co.....	15 00
E. Wells & Co.....	8 35
Volstead & Morris.....	20 25
Utah Plumbing Supply company.....	15 81
Bridge, Kirk & Co.....	90 00
W. C. Clark.....	2 15
C. B. Savage.....	23 50
Salt Lake Building and Manufacturing company.....	11 11
Eagle Foundry and Machine company.....	24 79
W. G. Clark.....	8 60
Utah Book and Stationery company.....	8 00
Tribeau Job company.....	86 25
E. O. Coffin Hardware company.....	4 90
Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company.....	20 00

Brown & Carter.....	1 12
Moritz & Greenwood.....	1 00
A. F. Doremus.....	1 00
T. G. Armstrong, Jr.....	1 00
Simpson Hill Drug company.....	1 00
Salt Lake Lithograph & Publishing company.....	2 00
Heesch & Elberbeck.....	1 12
I. E. Brace.....	12 75
Sierra Nevada Lumber company.....	86 12
F. Seils Co.....	100 13
D. H. Spencer.....	1 00
McCoy & Kendall.....	1 00
A. W. Gaine & Co.....	1 15
John Regan.....	1 00
G. M. Scott & Co.....	1 00
Continental Oil company.....	1 50
Salt Lake Hardware company.....	12 25
W. C. Pary & Co.....	12 00
Mountain Ice & Cold Storage company.....	20 00
Salt Lake Power, Light & Heating Company.....	20 00
American Fire Engine company.....	174 00
Utah & Montana Machinery Company.....	10 00
H. L. Myers.....	10 00
Remington, Johnson & Co.....	14 00
Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Company.....	7 50
Utah Steam Laundry.....	1 00
Dr. E. W. Tilton.....	3 00
North Pacific and Oil company.....	1 10
Kelly & Co.....	12 50
Times Publishing company.....	40 00
Salt Lake Fuel and Manufacturing company.....	20 00
(deduct from Dubois & Williams).....	25 00
Utah Central Railway.....	65 00
Salt Lake Fuel and Manufacturing company.....	50 00
Rio Grande Western railway.....	20 77
M. G. Taylor.....	1 00
Stiles Drug Store.....	7 13
Utah Central company.....	7 13
Eagle Foundry company.....	51 00
Horizon Mercile Co.....	4 00
Union Pacific Railway.....	200 00
G. M. Scott & Co.....	300 00

Total.....$467 00

The City Council met in special session last night. In the absence of President Looftbourrow, Councilman Lawson was called to the chair on motion of Hardy.

The members present were: Rich, Folland, Karriek, Hardy, Moran, Bell, Evans, Beardsley, Wantland, Simond, Heiss, Horn, Kelly—14.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Recorder Stanton reported that the notice of intention for the extension of water mains on Fifth South street, from Second East to midway of the block had been published according to law. Received and filed and the usual order made.

APPLICATION FOR GAS FRANCHISE.

The following petition for a franchise was received:

To the Honorable Mayor and City Council.

Your petitioner begs leave to present to your honorable body that

Whereas, The municipal corporation—Salt Lake City—has for many years past been a large stockholder in the Salt Lake City gas company, a fact which has prevented business competition in the manufacture and sale of illuminating gas, to the injury of the inhabitants of this city, by the high price we have been and are still compelled to pay therefor—and you company still selling illuminating gas at $2.50 per 1,000 cubic feet, and being authorized by its charter, passed August 18, 1880, to charge $3 for 1,000 cubic feet of only sixteen candle power gas, and

Whereas, Your honorable body has recently disposed of all the city's interest in the capital stock of said company, whereby the city has been released of all apparent necessity of further aiding that monopoly, and is now in a position free to act for the benefit of the whole people so that they may obtain a better and more highly illuminating gas at a more moderate price. Your petitioner therefore prays your honorable body to grant to him a franchise for the manufacturing and sale of illuminating gas in Salt Lake City at a price set forth in the accompanying form suggested for a charter, not to exceed $17.75 per 1000 cubic feet net, of not less than eighteen candle power gas, and your petitioner will ever pray.

WENDELL BENSON.

The draft of an ordinance in conformity with the above petition was presented. It calls for a franchise for twenty-five years, and stipulates that the company shall lay ten miles of mains and be ready to distribute gas within six months after the acceptance of the franchise.

On motion of Hardy it was referred to the committee on Improvements.

BIOCYCLE RIDING.

The city attorney submitted an ordinance regulating the use of bicycles and triocycles on certain streets of the city. The measure was read the first time and laid over for one week.

WANT IT FIREPROOF.

The special committee consisting of Messrs. Moran, Beardsley and Folland, reported as follows on the advisability of fireproofing the joint city and county building throughout:

To the Honorable President and City Council:

It appears that the contractor's specifications of cost to make the city and county building fireproof throughout are reasonable, his estimate is somewhat above the architect's which arises in the cost of placing in position. We find that proper and adequate deductions have been made from the original contract price for materials which will be excluded if iron is used. The construction so far as we can discern is according to the plans. We are of the opinion and deem it best for the city that the building should be fireproof throughout.

Adopted.

Bell said he understood that by the adoption of the report the committee on the joint city and county building would be authorized to go on with the work.

Rich asked the chair if such was the case and was given an affirmative reply, whereupon he moved a reconsideration of the vote whereby the report was adopted. Carried.

Rich said he was unalterably opposed to giving the committee power to act. He had occupied a seat in the council for eight months but knew little or nothing about the joint city and county building. The committee seemed to be doing all the work without official authorization or consultation. The council never appeared to be called upon to do anything but appropriate money. He wanted the basement made fire proof as well as the upper stories. It contained—or would—1,000,000 feet of lumber, and should be properly guarded. He said he had a resolution covering the matter that he wished to introduce.

Simondi—I call the gentleman to order.

The Chair—State your point of order. Simondi—During his remarks he cast reflections upon the committee.

Rich denied it and the chair ruled that he could proceed.

Moran objected to Mr. Rich's resolution. He said it could not be introduced at that stage of the proceedings. Evans said he took issue with Moran.

If the resolution was germane to the subject under discussion it was entirely proper.

The chair allowed the resolution to be read. It was as follows:

Resolved, That a competent architect, who is not in any manner connected with the contractors of the joint city and county building, and in no way connected with the city government, be at once engaged to estimate the actual cost of changing the present plans and specifications of the joint city and county building into a fireproof structure.

Moran again objected to the resolution.

FROM FOLLAND.

Folland introduced the following:

Resolved, That the city building committee be authorized to have the city and county building made fire proof throughout, in connection with the county.

Simondi said he was opposed to fireproofing the building; the city and county would employ janitors who could guard the structure. It could insure it for $300,000.

Kelly said that the value of the records was simply incalculable. Three hundred thousand would hardly be a tithe of what they were worth.

The committee's report was then adopted by the following ye's:

Ayes—Folland, Rich, Moran, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Kelly, Evans, Beardsley, Heiss, Wantland—11.

Noes—Karrick, Hardy, Simondi—3.

Wantland thought with reference to the adoption of Rich's resolution that great care should be manifested. Possibly an outside architect might be employed to supervise the work. As a result some outside newspaper—in Ogden perhaps—would have something to say about it.

Hardy exhibited signs of impatience and took the floor and said Wantland was always afraid of "outside" talk. So far as he was concerned he was afraid of nobody.

Wantland winced and confessed that he was fearful at times.

Karrick thought the resolution was a safeguard. He had done considerable building and invariably found it necessary to watch closely and occasionally "jack up" the architects.

Rich, too, wondered why it was that Wantland was so frightened of the press. Individually he didn't care a cent what the press said about him; he believed that his actions would bear investigation. (Laughter.)

Wantland inquired of Mr. Rich if he didn't think that Messrs. Folland and Moran were capable of bringing in a competent report.

Rich replied that it would be impossible to take men from any walk of life and have them act intelligently on matters in which they had no experience.

Folland said he had been engaged in the iron and building business during his entire life. He had examined the joint city and county building and had investigated the figures. He knew they were approximately correct.

He didn't charge the present architects and contractors with dishonesty; he believed that they were honest; he hadn't lost all confidence in human nature; he didn't think all men were depraved.

Beardsley wanted to know if there was any assurance that an outside expert wouldn't "stand in" with the dishonest men employed on the great city and county building. They might make it worth his while. It was entirely likely that they would pay him more money than the city.

Karrick said the city had some experience with an architect. He referred to Appoyi.

Moran (interrupting)—Yes, because you employed an outsider and gave him $500 because he showed you a painted picture.

Rich's resolution was then killed on a vote of nine to three.

Karrick moved that the city engineer be appointed to "check up" the figures made by the architects and contractors of the building.

Moran said the motion was all baby play. The "checking up" business made him tired. The auditor could do that work. It would simply be a "clerical act," as his honor the mayor would say.

Hardy offered the following as a substitute for Mr. Karrick's motion:

Resolved, That the city engineer be and hereby is appointed to check up and verify the estimates and plans for the proposed fireproofing in the joint city and county building and report his findings to this council as soon as possible.

Carried unanimously.

PARK COMMISSIONERS.

The city attorney submitted an ordinance creating a public park commission consisting of five citizens, whose term of office shall be four years.

Wantland said it was no use to take the measure up. The trees were now dead and a park commissioner would be useless.

Moran said that he thought it would be a good idea to send the ordinance to the mayor and see whether or not that official would give his sanction to the passage of it. If he would not it should be "strangled in its infancy."

The ordinance was read in full the first time.

A motion to suspend the rules and read it a second time precipitated a wrangle in which several members of the Council took part. Some of them became very much mixed and one or two of them made an unsuccessful effort to confuse the chair who made rulings which caused Moran to cross and recross the council chamber a number of times in search of Mr. Evans' pocket adviser entitled "Parliamentary Pointers." When he got it he turned its pages hurriedly and declared that it was spurious and that nothing but "Cushing's" or "Robert's Rules of Order" would be swallowed by him.

It was finally referred to the council sitting as a board of review.

TO BUILD A FLUME.

Mr. Evans offered a resolution authorizing the board of public works to advertise for bids for the construction of a flume from Sixth West to Ninth West streets on North Temple street. The council, however, objected to the resolution, and authorized the watermaster to do the work.

IN THREE INSTALLMENTS.

An ordinance was read fixing the time for the payment of the installments and the date at which they become delinquent in all assessments for sidewalk paving. It provides that sidewalk assessments shall be paid in three installments; that the first installment becomes delinquent in three months, the second in nine months, and the third installment in fifteen months, all deferred payments to bear interest at six per cent.

Under suspension of the rules the ordinance was read a second and third time, and finally passed.

SIDEWALKS ON EAST SOUTH TEMPLE.

An ordinance providing for the assessment of the property on both sides of East South Temple street from J to K streets, for the construction of sidewalks, came up. The assessment is placed at $1.25 per front foot. Under a suspension of the rules the ordinance was finally passed.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Board of Education held their regular weekly meeting last night. Vice President Nelson occupied the chair. The members in attendance were: Young, Alf, Newman, Dooly, Baldwin, Pratt and Raybould.

OQUIRH SCHOOL PLANS.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that the plans and specifications submitted by William Carroll for the Oquirrh school be accepted, and asked authority to contract for the excavations and different classes of work separately as may be necessary. They advised this course for the reason that there is not sufficient funds available at present to pay its estimated cost, and that the building can be constructed more economically in this manner and more satisfactorily than to enter into a contract at this season of the year for the whole building.

Pratt moved as an amendment to adopt the plans of Wm. Carroll, provided the building will not cost over $55,000, including heating and ventilating, and that Mr. Carroll will accept the sum of $1,000 in payment in full for said plans, details and specifications, or any alterations in the same that may be ordered by the board.

Adopted as amended.

FURNITURE ORDERED.

The committee on furniture and supplies reported that in accordance with a resolution of the board they had placed an order for the second car of furniture for the Lowell school at a cost of $2,100.40.

ANOTHER JANITOR.

The committee on furniture and supplies also recommended the appointment of James Lee as janitor of the high school at $60 a month, to date from the opening of the said school building. Adopted.

BETTER INSURANCE RATES.

The committee on sites and buildings reported that many of the new buildings are approaching completion, and the superior manner in which they are being and their distance from other buildings would entitle the board to a lower rate of insurance than is usually accorded ordinary buildings. The committee therefore recommended that the Pacific Insurance Union be asked to make a survey of the buildings and rate them according to their merits, and that the committee be authorized to insure the buildings at from thirty-five per cent. to fifty per cent. of the cost, and that they be allowed to insure the furniture at fifty per cent. to seventy-five per cent. of its cost. Adopted.

Maudie Webster, the principal of the Twentieth ward school, sent in a communication stating that at the end of last school year she was employed as principal of said school, but until the present time she had been unable to assume active duties, but she had done considerable work. Her physician had advised her not to take up the duties until after Christmas. She asked to be allowed half pay until the Lowell school is completed. Committee on teachers.

W. H. Joy asked the board to pay $411.50 to W. S. Simkins, the balance due on the contract for brick furnished the Eleventh school—the sum to be withheld from the Klambeck & Parsons account. Committee on sites and buildings.

The committee on sites and buildings submitted a report recommending that the offer of George R. Emery of two down stair rooms of the church building on Fifth West street for the sum of $60 per month be accepted, and that the selection of a janitor be left with Mr. Emery. Adopted.

The same committee presented the plans, specifications and contracts of P. J. Moran for heating and ventilating the Washington school and recommended that the board sign the contract. Adopted.

The contract of S. C. Sherrill for the erection of the Wasatch school building was also presented with the recommendation that the board accept and sign it. Mr. Sherrill's bond is signed by A. B. Gibson and George C. Kidder which the committee recommended be approved. Adopted.

The committee also recommended that the contract with the Hendy & Meyers Engineering company for heating and ventilating the Jackson school be approved and signed by the officers of the board. Adopted.

The committee on sites and buildings asked for authority to contract for moving the soil from the Washington school site and the Wasatch school site to such school sites where the earth may be needed. Granted.

Monhelm, Bird & Proudfoot sent in a bill for $485.25 for plans and specifications of the Wasatch school building, being 11 per cent. on the contract price of $27,800. Committee on sites and buildings.

Mr. Alf moved that the committee on furniture and supplies be given authority to purchase a carload of furniture to arrive about January 1st. This resolution to take the place of the one passed previously during the evening on the furniture question. Adopted.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Edward H. Evans, building fence, Eleventh ward.....	$ 27 00
Charles Evans, labor, Eleventh ward school.....	15 00
J. F. Mullanpugh, for telegrams.....	10 30
J. H. Kuegel, Jr., recording deeds.....	3 30
Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company, telephone.....	25 00
J. H. Kuegel, stamps for advertising.....	15 00
J. B. Toronto, services rendered as examiner.....	44 00
Bert Thoren, for material furnished.....	25 00
Tribune Publishing company, advertising.....	18 00
S. Reuben & Co., material.....	45 25
W. A. Kinney, attorney for United States Publishing House, note.....	58 75
Kershaw & Odoms, calculating.....	800 00
Total.....	$669 68

BISHOP FUNK DEAD.

Word was received in this city this morning to the effect that Bishop Hans Funk, of Newton, Cache county, had died last night (Oct. 25, 1892). He had been sick more or less all summer with kidney complaint, and six weeks ago was compelled to take to his bed, to which he has been confined, in a very low state up to the time when death relieved him of his sufferings. He has been a useful man in establishing northern Utah. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.

About four weeks ago Mrs. Marinda Halliday, of Richfield, Sevier county, lost $90 in greenbacks, which she was carrying in an envelope in her pocket. She had no idea in what part of town she lost it, but found $10 of it near the Academy hall and a search by Mrs. Halliday resulted in finding of the remaining fifty.

There was a big field fire between Mantle and Ephraim last week. A strip of country two miles wide and four miles long was burned over. Fortunately the fire encountered no ranch buildings in its course. The ground was, however, burned bare of grass and stubble.

DEATHS.

JACOBS—October 24th, at Ogden, Schia, wife of H. Charlton Jacobs.

ALSTON—October 23rd, 1892, of bronchitis, Lola, infant daughter of Christopher and Annie C. Alston. Born September 22, 1892.

TAYLOR—Irene C. Taylor, daughter of Frank Y. and Elizabeth Campbell Taylor; born Sept. 5th, 1891, in the Fourteenth ward, Salt Lake City; died at residence, Sugar House ward, Oct. 24th, 1892, 7 p. m.

JOHANNESEN—At Idaho Falls, Idaho, on Monday, October 17th, 1892, of convulsions and heart disease, Sister Johanneesen, wife of Julius O. Johanneesen, recently of Providence, Canada.

She was born at Skien, Norway, in 1856, joined the Church in 1881, and emigrated to Utah the next year. She died faithful to the Gospel and beloved by all who knew her. Her funeral took place on Wednesday, the 24th, and she was buried in the Latter-day saints' cemetery at Iowa.

OLSON—A. F. Olson, Emery county, October 16th, 1892, Mathilda J. Olson, beloved wife of Rasmus Frederick Olson. She was born February 2nd, 1846, in Denmark. She had when a young girl, she emigrated to Utah in the first large company that left Denmark under Elder Forsgren with her parents and went to Salt Lake, where she was married when quite young. She raised a large family, leaving six daughters and three sons. She was a faithful wife and a loving mother, and greatly respected by all who knew her; and died as she had lived, true and faithful to the covenants that she had made.

The funeral took place on the 18th, and the people showed their love for her by assembling in large numbers at the meeting house, where the services were conducted. Her remains were followed to the graveyard by a large company. The husband and family have the sympathy of the whole ward in their bereavement. —[COM.]

SCHROGIE—In this city, at 6:15 p. m., August 17th, 1892, at his residence in the Eighth ward, from old age and general debility, Archibald Schrogie; born in Talroose, Leicestershire, Scotland, July 14th, 1817. He embraced the Gospel in 1848, and baptized a great many people. His High Priesthood was conferred upon him in 1854. He did a great work in his native land; emigrated to Utah in 1853; has resided in the Eighth ward ever since, and has lived the life of a true and noble Latter-day Saint, and has gone to receive a crown in the Celestial Kingdom of our God. —[COM.]

Glasgow papers, please copy.

THE DESERT WEEKLY

PIONEER PUBLICATION ROCKY MOUNTAIN REGION

ESTABLISHED TRUTH AND LIBERTY JUNE 1850.

NO. 21.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1892.

VOL. XLV.

DEBATE BETWEEN RAWLINS AND CANNON.

The anxiously awaited and much talked of public political debate between Hon. Frank J. Cannon, of Ogden, the Republican nominee for Delegate to Congress, and Hon. J. L. Rawlins of Salt Lake, candidate for the same honors on the Democratic ticket, occurred in the Ogden Opera house last night, before the largest and most representative political gathering of its kind in the history of this Territory. Upwards of 2000 people occupied seats in the body of the house, in the boxes and galleries, while between 200 and 300 more sat either upon the stage or stood behind the wings. The occasion was enlivened by the strains of stirring and patriotic music.

The stage was set with a beautiful forest and mountain scene. On the right, near the footlights, were life-sized pictures of Cleveland and Jefferson and immediately opposite were the likenesses of Harrison and Cannon. Messrs. Rawlins and Cannon occupied seats near the front of the stage, and immediately surrounding them were such leaders of the two great national parties in Utah as were not in other parts of the Territory proclaiming the principles of their respective parties.

When the curtain went up at 8 o'clock cheer after cheer was given, and for several minutes the hurrahs for Cannon and Rawlins were deafening. H. W. Smith took the floor and after repeated efforts silenced the mighty audience. He informed them that it had been specifically agreed upon by the Territorial committees of the two parties under whose auspices the debate was to be conducted that the speakers were not to be interrupted by applause or cheers, but that they be allowed to proceed with their arguments to the end. He trusted that all Democrats present would respect that agreement; he doubted not that the Republicans would do so.

Judge Leonard, for the Republicans, made a similar explanation and request.

According to the rules of the discussion Rawlins made the opening speech, which lasted one hour. Cannon then followed for an hour and a half, Rawlins closing in thirty minutes.

The utmost dignity prevailed during the whole debate, which was entirely free from personal allusions and imitations. The official stenographic report of the discussion contains about 33,000 words, from which it will be seen that the following is necessarily a condensed account.

H. W. Smith introduced

MR. RAWLINS,

who spoke substantially as follows:

A protective tariff is a Republican device. The Republicans say it is a system whereby they compel the foreigner to pay our taxes. My eloquent young friend will tell you, doubtless, how this is accomplished. Major McKinley in his foresight and wisdom did not provide that the foreigner should pay our local as well as national expenses.

All of the continental countries except Belgium and Great Britain have protective tariffs.

It would be quite a draft upon the royal families, who we are given to understand are the rich and the well born and who are indeed the tax consuming aristocracy. Democrats are opposed to the operations of the Republicans' selfishness, which purports to make the foreigner pay our taxes. I might quote to you a long list of articles the tariff on which under the McKinley law actually exceeds the original cost of production 100 per cent. This excess amounts to many millions of dollars annually, and the American people have to pay it and not the foreigner. I expect my young friend will tell, or try to tell you, how the foreigner pays our taxes. Under the McKinley monopoly, Vanderbilt, with his income of many millions a year, pays but little if any more tariff than his stableman. Why? Because this tariff is levied principally upon the necessities and not the luxuries of life. (Vocaliferous applause.) I hope my friends will be kind enough to obey the behests of the chairman and maintain order.

A protective tariff in our country originated with Alexander Hamilton, the patron saint of Republicanism. Our industries were merely illiputians then, but soon these infantile enterprises of steel and iron became powerful giants shipping their products to Great Britain and elsewhere and were amply able to support themselves with protection, which grows upon what it feeds. Republicans originally said they simply wanted the protective tariff until infant industries could be firmly established that they could support themselves without aid from any outside source. But Republicans in their enlightened selfishness fail to recognize such a time.

Our iron and steel industries have been carried on for more than a hundred years. Woolen and cotton goods have been manufactured during the most of our existence as a nation, and still they survive and have survived and prospered.

The Republican campaign book sets forth that our exports have been greatly increased since the enactment of the McKinley bill. It is not true. Protection creates monopolies, monopolies form trusts and trusts limit production and thereby increases the price to the consumer. It operates always in favor of the rich manufacturer and against the poor tradesman. Where is the pauper labor of which we hear so much? The Republicans will probably tell you that it is in free trade England, but that country pays better wages than her protected neighbors. The Democrats in their platform declared that Republican protection was fraud, and so it is.

In Connecticut the operatives in the woolen mills are paid higher wages than laborers are for similar service in the South and in Utah. If Connecticut can successfully compete with the South and Utah, why can she not do the same with England? The labor cost in England, statistics show, is greater in proportion to its producing capacity than in the United States. We are told that English laborers get lower wages than our own. This is true, but it is also true that they get less still in protected Germany. Why should we not pay higher wages in the United States than is paid in any other part of the world? We have a country that is incalculably rich in its varied resources. For centuries hidden treasures have been garnered within our borders by nature. We have a people possessed of marvelous adaptability and industrious habits. The result, so far as we are concerned, of paying higher wages than other countries could not be otherwise. The only way to compare the merits of free trade is to do so by referring to countries similarly situated. Two such countries exist in New South Wales and Victoria. The latter was the more promising of the two. She adopted the protective system and her sister, New South Wales, the free trade policy, and though she was not rich in soil and resources her people prospered and became rich while the opposite was the unfortunate lot of Victoria. We hear much about American protection. Republicans lack originality. Until 1846 England had protection and Republicans copied her methods by instituting protection in the United States. This system of so-called protection originated in Spain hundreds of years ago. Look at her pitiable condition today. The custom spread to England and was carried on there during the days of barbarism and religious tests. Republicans have not even originality. Harrison only echoed the expression of Buckingham when he said that a cheap coat implied a cheap man. McKinley, too, only repeated the same sentiment when he said cheapness and nastiness were synonymous terms. In 1850 Republicans adopted their first platform. Read and compare it with their platforms of today. Under Democratic free trade years ago woolen mills increased, industries sprang up in all directions and distinguished writers and political economists pronounced it the golden era of prosperity.

Republicans tell us that they possess all of the intelligence and that Utah is a white spot on the map, and that is why it should be Republican. Protection, they say, is good in theory but bad in practice—like the ten commandments which are very good in theory but equally bad in practice for protection because they say "Thou shalt not steal." (Laughter.) Republicans can only see 14,500 mill owners in the United States. They are always found legislating for trusts and monopolies. It was the Republicans who took away the stamp taxes. They got a taste of blood and like the wild animal are still hunting for more with which to quench their burning and eternal thirst. It is no wonder that patriotic Republicans are deserting their own party and coming over to the ranks of Democracy. This nation which by the Constitution was designed to be the common weal of all people has become practically the property of private individuals. McKinley did not write the protective clauses of his bill, but the agents of gigantic trusts and monster monopolies did. (Cheers and protracted applause.) It was never the design of those who formed this government that its privileges should be wrested from one class and given to another. But this has been done by the Republicans. It is a pernicious perversion of the principles which underlie the Constitution.

Protection is a merry-go-round used for the purpose of robbing Peter to pay Paul and Paul to pay Timothy. Harrison tells us about our recent reciprocal trade relations with a few little islands; he says something about the number of barrels of flour and pounds of pork we have sold to them. What about it? England laid down her bars to us. She wants our surplus. We are anxious that she should have it. We have nowhere else to send it. My friends, don't you know that even Republicans like free trade? So does the smuggler; all Republicans are smugglers. (Laughter.) They love it (renewed merriment.) The dandy young man that can smuggle a suit of clothes into the United States will do it in order to escape paying the duty thereon. Depew would do it; they all do it. (Laughter and applause.) Who's afraid of free trade? (Voices from the Republicans "We are!" and from the Democrats "It is a good thing.") It brings peace in one hand and prosperity in the other.

No one but a savage would isolate himself and compel himself to produce all he consumed and consume all he produced. (Laughter.) Republicans don't get their principles from running brooks nor their sermons from stones. Republicans go home and look at your maps and see if protection made this world.

Time was called and Mr. Rawlins took his seat amid thunderous applause and prolonged cheering. When the demonstration was over Judge Leonard took the floor and introduced the

HON. FRANK J. CANNON

as "Our Frank." The reception that he was given was a most welcome one and as he advanced to the footlights, deafening cheers filled the building.

He said in part: Yes, Republicans, go home and look at your maps and see if it was not by protection that this earth was formed. Study the laws of attraction and gravitation and see if but for the protection of an all-wise Creator our earth would not have been hurled through space, until it came in contact with another planet and been destroyed (applause); and see, too, if it were not for the protection of Republicanism, our home industries would not be hurled with lightning-like velocity against the attractive forces of free trade England. (Renewed applause.)

A few days ago I was riding on a railway train and purposely inquired of the conductor what the platforms at the ends of the cars were built for (I did this simply for an illustration), and he looked at me a moment and then said, "They are made for the people to go in on." The Democrats also build platforms, but they seldom go in on them. (Laughter.) I was somewhat surprised tonight, as I expected to hear some of the real issues of the campaign presented for your consideration. In this I was mistaken, and although it was not my province to tell you I will take the privilege of doing so. They are tariff, reciprocity, a free ballot and an honest count. (Applause.)

The speaker said he had some later advice from New South Wales and Victoria which proved that manufacturing establishments in free trade South Wales had decreased and those in protected Victoria had increased, and even New South Wales was now adopting protection. Smugglers, robbers, all of them, but adopting protection just the same, because they love their country better than pet theories.

There are two kinds of tariff, he stated, and he had no objection to foreign people paying our taxes if they wished to do so. Why not accomplish two results by our tariff—collect our revenue and protect our manufacturing and agricultural products? Forty-two per cent. of our imports come in free. In 1824 only 6 per cent. came in. England's tariff revenue is 80 per cent. Ours is a little over 21 per cent. I had expected a discussion on the unconstitutionality of the tariff, but as it has not been mentioned, I take it that the constitutionality is now admitted by the Democracy of Utah, which, of course, governs the nation.

The tariff was then discussed. Andrew Jackson's words were quoted on the protection period between 1827 and 1833. Webster was also quoted. From 1833 to 1842 free trade existed. Reference was then made to those years. From 1842 to 1846 protection existed.

In every instance of free trade in America we have incontrovertible evidence of depression, and every protection period shows great prosperity, said the speaker.

In 1881 we had a protective tariff and have had it ever since, and I think we'll have it for another thirty-two years. (Applause.) When the Mills bill was pending Mr. Fox, an English statesman, made a statement, showing that under certain conditions free trade would conquer all only Oregon but the United States, until the very shirt worn by the laborers would wear the livery of Manchester.

Apply it to yourselves. Spend $1.00 more a year than you receive and see how soon the sheriff will sell you out. When the tariff is for revenue we pay the tax. England collects $150,000,000 on coffee, tea and the necessities not produced at home which comes out of the pockets of the poor.

A tariff for protection is different. We say we'll levy a tariff only on goods that we produce at home. Then the foreigner pays the tax. Take tin plate. The Republican party said we can produce it here. Instead of having a tariff on sugar which was for revenue only, as we could not produce enough here to make competition injurious, we put a tariff on tin plate. A tariff of 22-10 cents a pound was put on. The Welsh realized it was a blow at their industry and they at once set to work to defeat us.

The speaker read a letter from Collins & company, hardware dealers in this city, tending to show that there had been a continuous going down in price in the goods they handled since the passage of the McKinley bill. He also quoted from a letter from a Pennsylvania iron firm which said that the price of tin had been downward during that period.

In 1875 we manufactured 1,000 kegs of wire nails selling at 10 cents a pound. The rich and well-born put a tariff of four cents a pound on the nails. The cry of infamous robbery went up. In 1891 we manufactured 400,000 kegs selling at $2.05 per hundred and now we get it for $1.48. Yet the foreigner is now, if he ships in any nail, paying a duty of from $2 to $4 per hundred. If tariff is a tax, should it be removed, then when you buy a keg at $1.48 you should get your nails for nothing and the manufacturer would still owe you 52 cents. Democracy never raised its voice against robbery when we were paying the foreigner $6 a keg, but as soon as we paid $1.48 a keg to our home people they have not been able to put enough brains in the field to tell you how you are robbed.

As to carpets, he quoted letters which said that more than five times the amount of fine woolens were man-factured this year than in 1889 and the price is from 15 to 20 per cent. less.

Reciprocity in our traffic with nations who produce what we do not produce, he said, opened the market for $25,000,000 of our surplus products.

Today there is a crying grievance against the party that demonetized silver. Let me look, not nineteen years back, but less than sixteen months ago. You will find a bill for its demonetization passed by a Republican Senate and buried in a Democratic House. Let them look a little nearer home.

Their platform favors state banks, wild cat money. "The state bank system is the most iniquitous system ever inaugurated."

I wish to speak a little on the "force bill" so called. That is as dead as the home rule bill, but that principle which demands a free ballot and an honest count is not dead nor doth it sleep, and the Republican party has yet a mission to perform while that blessing is not attained.

Look at our two platforms. The plank for amnesty in the Republican platform is derided and sneered at in the Democratic platform. This is one of the issues and it appeals to one and all, whether they be Liberals or People's party men. The Republican party is the party of freedom. It freed the slaves, it gave homesteads to the people, inaugurated a safe currency system and it will give to Utah political freedom.

Every man in the United States is interested in this policy of protection which goes to his home, his workshop and to his field. English statesmen are now crying aloud against the system which has prevailed for half a century. One of them said that England was bringing in $700,000,000 more than she exported, going gradually into slavery, having made 7,000,000 of paupers in its population. Two influences are combating today for ascendancy. We have here the most magnificent resources and the bravest and most intelligent people and all the nations of the world are working for what we possess. It is the duty of every citizen to protect America, to protect his own home against all invasion, call it selfishness, sordidness or anything you please.

Mr. Cannon's speech was as cordially received as his appearance was warmly applauded.

RAWLINS CLOSES.

Rawlins then took the floor to make his closing argument. A summary of it is as follows: You will be astonished, perhaps, when I tell you that we have more paupers in our own great country than there are in England. Fourteen years after the Republicans came into power they gave away 14,000,000 acres of the public domain to the "rich and well born" representatives of great railroad corporations. My friend says that the Republican party emancipated the slaves. He knows, as we all do, that Democratic soldiers enlisted on the side of the Union and marched into battle side by side with Republicans and that by their assistance the country was saved. (Applause.) My friend also says that the Democratic party sneered at amnesty in its platform. I want to tell you and him that he has not read it. (Applause.) I will remind you further that amnesty for a certain class of Utah citizens was asked from his party last year. What has been heard of it since? Nothing. He says the force bill is dead. I say that the people of the United States are intelligent enough to conduct their own elections in their own honest way. The bill was killed, but the Democrats did it with the aid of a few patriotic Republicans. There has been a cheapening in this country of some things, but not from causes that Republicans would have you believe. As the railroad would centralize government so would it centralize wealth and limit the circulation of money to a narrow sphere where a few men can practically control the wealth of the nation.

In 1889 the average price of nails was $10 per hundred weight. Today it is less than $6 per hundred weight. When you lower the tax you cheapen the goods. What my friend says about wire nails I heard in the Salt Lake Theater word for word a year ago from the lips of Roswell G. Horr of Michigan. Of course he is justified in getting his information in this or any other way he sees fit. That is the way the Republicans here have been doing. They listen to and believe all that is told them by men who come to this Territory and learn to repeat their stories.

Democrats believe that only enough taxes should be collected from the people to carry on the actual expenses of the government, the affairs thereof to be economically administered. Democrats want just revenue enough to give good government; Republicans want protection to create monopolies—to control the government.

At this juncture time was again called and a perfect bedlam of cheers ensued as the big gathering dispersed.

INDIAN TERRITORY CONFERENCE.

During the past summer the Elders and their friends have erected a meeting house, the first that has been built in this Territory by the Latter-day Saints. On Saturday and Sunday October 15th and 16th, the first conference of this mission was held. The traveling Elders present were: Presiding Elder H. M. Rawlins, M. L. Nichols, F. B. Woodbury, H. G. Labrum, Lester Stott, Reese M. Harper, J. H. Holmes, Hyrum S. Lewis, Jos. H. Lowe and John A. Lowe, the latter five having just arrived in the mission. There were also Seaborn G. Mabry, local Elder, and a large number of Saints and friends. The Elders from Salt Lake were expected to reach here on the 14th, but owing to the heavy snow storm in Colorado, which blocked the trains, they were delayed one day.

At the first meeting of the conference Elder Woodbury addressed the meeting upon the first principles of the Gospel, followed by Elder Rawlins, who gave a report of the late conference held in Salt Lake city, which he had had the privilege of attending. He exhorted the Saints to be faithful.

Conference was resumed at seven p.m., and Elders Labrum, Harper, Mabry, John A. Lowe and M. L. Nichols spoke on the principles of the Gospel, and bore strong testimonies to its truth.

Sunday morning was the time set apart for dedicating the meeting house. After the opening exercises Elder Rawlins offered the dedicatory prayer. A communication from Elder Andrew Kimball, President of the Mission, was then read. It contained much encouragement and instruction to the Elders in regard to their labors in the missionary field, and also to the Saints. The Elders were instructed to use wisdom, take proper care of their bodies, and to be united in all their labors. After the reading of the epistle Elder Nichols addressed the conference on the necessity of complying with the laws of the Gospel.

At 8 p.m. another meeting was held and the Sacrament administered, after which Elder Nichols explained the purposes for which the Sacrament had been instituted. Elder Rawlins occupied the remainder of the time.

At the counsel meeting, held on Monday, the 17th, reports were given by the Elders from the different parts of the field, after which the new Elders were assigned to their various fields of labor.

Elder H. M. Rawlins is presiding Elder over the mission, Elder F. B. Woodbury secretary, Elder M. L. Nichols assistant secretary and treasurer, and Sister Ann E. Hendricks a assistant treasurer.

At 7 p.m. an interesting entertainment was given by the Elders, consisting of songs, recitations and instrumental music. Although a great many people attended our conference, the entertainment drew in many more. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to present the Gospel to them. During the evening Elder H. M. Rawlins delivered a discourse on the principles of the Gospel to about two hundred people, including those who remained on the outside, being unable to get into the building.

This report would be incomplete without making mention of the kindness and hospitality of our true friends Uncle and Auntie Hendricks, they having generously opened their house to the Elders and Saints who came to attend conference.

Although this has been a very unhealthy season in this territory on account of the heavy rains and high water during the spring, the health of the Elders is very good at present, with the exception of Elder Stott, who is rapidly recovering from an attack of malarial fever, and as the sickly season is now over the prospects are good for proselyting during the ensuing winter.

The News comes to hand regularly, and is read with pleasure by the Elders and afterwards sent out to their friends. It is proving to be a great help in removing prejudice from the minds of the people.

F. B. WOODBURY, Secretary.
MANARD, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory.

GENERAL WEAVER announces that he is sure of carrying thirteen states, which evidently shows that he is either not superstitious or indifferent as to the result.

THE GOOD WORK which Jupiter Pluvius is performing just now is not altogether acceptable to hyphenodria's, but it makes the hardy granger smile broadly.

THE DESERET WEEKLY.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING
COMPANY, LESSEES.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

Per Year, of Fifty-two Numbers, - - - $2.50

Per Volume, of Twenty-six Numbers, - - - 1.50

IN ADVANCE.

Saturday, - November 12, 1892.

A TYPICAL DEFAMER.

The narration of one Mrs. R. B. Macleod of Chicago, who says she has spent two years shadowing Mormon missionaries in Europe and ferreting out information as to their general demeanor and especially their immigration methods, makes an entertaining column and a half in the St. Louis Globe Democrat of the 7th of October. This heroic soul poses as "the only one of all the missionaries who have gone to Europe to investigate the methods of the Mormon Elders who has ever returned to tell the tale;" a distinction to which she is entitled when it is understood that she is the only one who found any tale to tell. Two ladies who went out ahead of her have never been heard from since, she says; she doesn't believe they were murdered [her incredulity must be rare, indeed], but she declares they must be held somewhere by the Elders in out of the way places where they can't communicate with the outside world! This would be amusing if it were not so fat. It is surprising that Mrs. Macleod can consider the Mormon Elders so merciful and half-hearted; she must at least think they are starving these two poor ladies, perhaps also keeping them in rage and darkness and practicing all manner of indignities upon them. It evidently has not occurred to her that her two absent friends may have found that they could do some good by preaching and practicing a little Christianity themselves, and that bearing false witness could not be made permanently satisfactory to the soul, though it might yield notoriety to a lepto and prove temporarily profitable to the pocket.

Four weeks is the average time consumed by the Mormon Elders, says this authority, in making a convert; and the latter are picked up mostly in Liverpool, Queenstown (!) and other shipping points, where emigrants, all unconscious of Mormonism, gather for embarkation for the New World; "they are quartered at the hotels, boarding houses, etc.,"—during the process of conversion, we presume,—"and many of them cannot speak English." These boarding houses or missions "all have printing houses attached," where "the women do all the work and the men stand by and look on." "The converts come now-a-days by way of New Orleans, and in addition to forts in Mexico, they are building a colony in North Dakota." "When the Utah Commission recently declared that Mormonism is dying out and polygamy is not practiced," Mrs. Macleod "intended to attend their meeting" and impart some of her information; but she was too sick to go. She knows of some of the Elders who have fifteen wives—a tolerable evidence that polygamy is still practiced—and this is one of the things she doubtless wished to tell the Commission. "The Elders are all bright, smart men"—in one paragraph—while in another they are "a lazy, shiftless, brutal set." She says they never suspected that she was not a firm convert to their faith—which is certainly a poor tribute to their brightness and smartness, and she told them, perhaps in all the four languages of which she says she is mistress, that she was "a Mormon missionary from Utah who had been sent over to assist them in their work." In reality she was doing all this spying and shadowing and ferreting for a particular purpose, and "a part" of her discoveries "has been turned over to the United States Immigration Bureau." It is to be regretted that the bureau has not possessed itself of the whole of it—the part especially where she confesses herself a liar. It is good in estimating the value of a witness to know in just what category he classifies himself; it furnishes a good basis on which to build in taking further testimony. There would be no difficulty in proving that in all Mrs. Macleod's assertions there is scarcely a sentence that does not bristle with falsehood; but in view of her own estimate of the value of her evidence, such an effort, though in itself a pastime, could be nothing but a work of supererogation.

THIS SIGN CAN'T FAIL.

When the pine trees are loaded with nuts and the bushes are loaded with their weight of "sarvis" berries, the Indian thinks the ensuing winter will be a hard one. The trapper predicts a long, severe season when the muskrat and beaver cover their surface habitation with a great mound of flags and rushes, or burrow deeper into their subterranean home. The hunter draws his conclusions from the down on the wild goose's breast, or the bark-gnawing teeth of the last spring's fawn. The husbandman finds a never-failing indication in the husk and arrangement of the kernels upon the corncob. The outdoor laborer cannot be mistaken in expecting a long spell of enforced idleness through stress of weather if there is a "sweating" of the palms of his hands. All this is coin that passes current among the weatherwise, though sometimes rejected by those with whom "a sign" is only of interest and significance when it fails. But there is one indication whose force will not be lost upon the most skeptical—it is even more emphatic than a raise in the price of coal. In support of the belief that we are about to enter upon a long, cold, stormy season, one needs but to refer to the moving influence, exemplified in three instances of late in this city among a certain class of vagrants or tailor shops: "When the enterprising burglar goes a burgling," he seeks for his plunder a full line of winter clothes.

Mr. Ormsby has met with great success in the electric light enterprise, and between this and the 1st of January, 1893, the inhabitants are likely to see the city lighted with electricity.—Tucson Citizen.

THAT DOLLAR FARE TO CHICAGO.

A few days since mention was made of a proposition by a New York paper for the railroads to establish dollar fares over their roads during the World's Fair. At that time we endeavored to show how extremely improbable it was that the different companies or any one of them would do anything of the kind—that such corporations were not eleemosynary institutions and that while they might and of course would reduce their rates considerably, it would only be so far as would enable them to come out ahead by reason of the greatly increased patronage. We thought we understood the subject well enough by observation and experience to be justified in speaking in that way, and think so yet. The metropolitan luminary spoken of, however, does not; it keeps up the discussion and in such a way as to cause one to believe that it really expects to accomplish the purpose advocated. This is from a recent issue:

When the Mail and Express declared that a one-dollar fare to Chicago, under conditions which it specified was not only possible, but profitable, it did not base the statement on the hazard of dubious estimate or conjecture. Accurate results had been reached by official investigation, and the certified reports were a part of public records. In 1872 the Board of Railroad Commissioners for the State of Massachusetts reported that although the railroads were successfully conducted the total cost of carrying a passenger 100 miles was but eight cents. Abroad, official investigations in England, France and Belgium have determined the total cost of transportation for the same distance is but five cents. Taking the latter figures as a basis, the cost for 1500 miles, the distance specified by the Mail and Express, would be but 75 cents, leaving a margin of 25 per cent profit.

The Mail and Express then goes on to show that the plan proposed is not in any sense a financial impossibility; that if it could once be proved that the railroads could afford to pay for the new additional cars required for the trains for workingmen the other features of the plan would necessarily follow, that the railways could not only afford to pay for the extra cars but would make money out of the transaction. With sixty-two persons in each car, which would just fill them, it would take 615 cars on each line to transport one million people during the twenty-six weeks in which the exhibition will be open. Each car would cost about $3000, or 1,903,000 altogether.

At one dollar per capita, nothing but a deficit is observable in the scheme; for, as Editor Shepard is as far-seeing as he is erudite and moral; he suggests a plan for the amelioration of the condition of his fellow man as well as enabling the railway companies to adopt the Iagoan injunction to "put money in thy purse." It may be taken for granted that the subject has received consideration from top to bottom, with all its dips, spins, angles, sinuities and tracings, and from start to finish. He thus goes on to show that "the average life of a car is ten years. At the acknowledged price, on the mere cost of running these trains, exempted from all share of cost of the railroad and its general expenses, the railroad company would get back at least $200,000 in the first six months, thus reducing the outlay for the additional cars to $1,800,000. In four years this entire outlay would be returned to the company. Hence there remain six years in which the company may use the same cars without cost for their manufacture. Thus it will bring as much money to the profit of the railroads themselves as in good to the direct beneficiaries of our plan.

Nor are the details of the proposed dollar trip neglected or lost sight of. In another article the Mail and Express has a leaded editorial headed "Meals on the Way," in which the wide-awake Faberwelder proceeds to show that enterprising contractors are already on the lookout to provide "square meals" for "our working-men's trains" to Chicago—meaning, of course, for the workmen on the trains, not literally as it reads. These necessary appendages to a successful and enjoyable visit to the Lake city are to be on a scale correspondingly cheap, the suggestion being that they be brought down to an army basis, say twenty-five to thirty-five cents a day per capita, and, even at this surprisingly low figure, our cotemporaries give forth a note of instruction that competition for supplying the commissariat will be lively—showing that purveyors as well as railroads can be generous if they want to. "The meals would be served," says the Mail and E., "not in the cities but outside them; and where temporary structures might be conveniently erected. The trains would stop three times a day at such places, but would make no other stops except for coal and water. Between New York and Albany there would be no stop. Passengers from Albany would meet the train at Albany. This saving in time and outlay to the special train and the gain in local fares to the railways would be no inconsiderable items. The time of the trains thus being fostered, these specials would not at all interfere with the regular trains."

It then goes on to show that while the passengers were at their meals a corps of attendants (at how much a day?) would give the cars a thorough cleaning, thus insuring sanitation which would be fully appreciated. Not a doubt of it; the whole project would be thoroughly appreciated and its inventor receive the benisons of a million grateful people—if it could only be carried out. We repeat, when a railroad from New York to Chicago, a distance of nearly a thousand miles, hauls passengers day after day for several months over the entire distance for one dollar, it will be time to place our houses in order sure enough. Meantime, speaking seriously, the idea does credit to Col. Shepard's heart even if it does not reflect so favorably upon his judgment.

ANOTHER BANK robbery is Kansas! Perhaps the bankers of the frontier will begin to realize before long that it is cheaper to amply reward those citizens who practically end the robbers' career, than to spend money on detectives and officers of the law, who may mean well enough but seldom do as much good as did the people at Coffeyville.

HOW WE ARE INJURED.

The News exceedingly dislikes to be drawn into anything that looks like a political controversy with its cotemporaries, and will not be, except in so far as is necessary to correct a false impression as to its attitude or to call down those who quote it unfairly.

Our attention is called to an article in the Herald of yesterday morning in which extracts from a speech delivered by Frank J. Cannon at Minneapolis in June last are reproduced as being taken from the DESERET NEWS of June 10th. One of them reads as follows.

"When the Republican party declared its platform that it would exterminate the twin relics of barbarism, it fought one with the sword, and it fought one with intelligence. Thank God it conquered!"

Now, the unfairness of this quotation is that it omits all reference to a subsequent correction, published in our issue of the 18th of June. Referring to the strictures upon the speech alluded to, and regretting particularly that they were based upon the News report of the speech, this paper on the date last mentioned editorially said:

What purported to be a portion of the speech delivered by Hon. Frank Cannon in the Minneapolis convention has occasioned a good deal of comment. The language, owing to incorrect punctuation, etc., did not appear in the dispatches as expressed by the speaker. The following is the portion of the speech referred to correctly stated, as it appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune: "When the Republican party declared in its platform that it would exterminate the twin relics of barbarism, it fought one with the sword and it fought one with intelligence, thank God. It conquered with the sword, and when it had finished its work in the South it wrote with the hand of peace, flat fins."

The Minneapolis Tribune has given above the exact words as they appear in the official proceedings of the convention, prepared by its secretary and just issued in pamphlet form. If we add the next sentence, after the words "flat fins," from the same authority, we complete the reference from which the incorrect paragraph was first made up. That sentence was:

Now it has accomplished just as much in Utah by school houses, by newspapers, by law, and by the growth of intelligence. In the younger people of that Territory." [Applause.]

As stated in the outset, our only interest in this affair is to see that we are correctly quoted. To use with deliberation a report which was afterwards corrected as prominently as it was first published, is, to say the least, quite unworthy of either reputable journalism or honest politics.

MERELY A DUTY DONE.

Just a word in reply to the gibes of those who affect to think the News has gone off prematurely in its criticism of some of the City Council's work. Not a sentence has been written or published in a spirit of captiousness and there has not been a single stricture, so far as we can learn, that has not met with the approval of the community because every one has been based upon the naked facts. If there is anything to regret in the premises it is that the light was not sooner turned upon the deal by which the city's gas stock was sold, and that the ridiculously imperfect garbage ordinance was not earlier held up to public derision. In both instances some of the city officials admit that if they had known before what they have since learned, their action would have been different and their opposition more active. It is not yet too late to correct the mistakes in one of these transactions, nor is it improper to emphasize the shortsightedness which it is believed has proved so costly in the other; in this manner may the dangers of precipitation be realized and guarded against for the future.

On similar grounds may the action of this paper be justified in calling attention to the proposals looking to the purchase of the city's water system. It is all very well for high and mighty councilmen and their organ to say no such attempt had been or was going to be made—that the News was parading a shadowy bugaboo. But the News knows better. Such a scheme was in contemplation, figures were quoted, there were negotiations forming and about to be opened, and some of the City Council knew of it. We do not believe, and never have believed, that the Council would make the sale at any price—their good sense forbids such a suspicion; furthermore, they would not dare to; while if the worst came to the worst they would have been legally enjoined from consummating it. But in all this there was nothing to prevent the use of the information at hand in putting the community on their guard, and giving them the opportunity to express themselves in unmistakable indignation at the bare consideration of such an idea. That much has been done. The citizens have been freed from the menace, or at least thoroughly awakened to and warned against it. More than that this paper did not attempt; with that result it is content.

ARMED PEACE ABROAD.

France is in some respects the most wonderful nation on the globe. Her financiers easily lead those of any other nation, her monetary system being infinitely superior to all others, and her method of computation the only perfect one known. With but limited internal resources, she is not only self-sustaining but always has something to dispose of to her neighbors. A French loan not only never lags upon the market, but is virtually taken before issued. In the higher arts and more comprehensive sciences, in the various shades of high-class literature, in inventive skill and mechanical construction, France walks abreast of any country, our own not excepted. But it is in its wonderfully recuperative power that it takes the front rank among the nations of the globe. After paying the indemnity which Germany designed should crush the present generation of Frenchmen to the earth, and keep them there, and which payment was made in exact accordance with its terms—each installment being ready as it became due—the payor had more ready money on hand, dollar for dollar, than the payee! While the coin was changing hands from ruler to ruler one way, it was coming back from people to people the other way. This took but a few years, and then began practical preparations on the most comprehensive scale ever designed for a military system, whose cost has been almost inconceivable. This embraced not only the rehabilitation of the army and navy but the adoption of a far-reaching system of frontier defenses on a plan entirely new to military science, and this is supposed to be as nearly perfect as it is possible for such work to be. France has spent upon her army alone within the time named the colossal sum of eighteen hundred million dollars! The amount absorbed by the navy is not given, but must be nearly as much more, and the cost of the outposts and unnamed items in connection with the entire defensive establishment would doubtless require many figures to represent it. This is "armed peace!"—the penalty which Germany has imposed upon almost the whole of Europe.

Ever since the declaration of peace between these feudal enemies, France has one way and another been preparing herself as if for others and showing that never again will she be found in a struggle in such a shameful state of preparation—or lack of it—as when Louis Napoleon declared war in 1870. It is not overstating the case to say that she is now better equipped for war than at any time during the century. So also is Germany, and Austria, and Italy; so also would be Russia but for the distressing famine which has not yet let go its hold upon the peasantry. It all tends us to conclude that the dogs of war have not been unleashed on several occasions because of the retarding effect which a contemplation of the awful destruction that would ensue has had upon those who sit in authority.

A NEEDED REFORM.

There are two public holidays which we have permitted to become days of merry-making, of pleasure, and in too many cases of indulgence, when if we would but stop to investigate their character, commencing with their origin, we would at once see how utterly inappropriate it all is. These days are Christmas and Decoration Day. They are presumably taken from the common calendar and given a separate and distinct status because commemorative of sacred and sorrowful events rather than those which incite to sensuous indulgence or frivolous observance. One is the reminder of an Immaculate Birth, the other a memento mori keeping before our mental vision the forms that went down in the awful whirlpool of war by means of which a nation was bound together more firmly than before. Are these fitting occasions for mirth, wassail and roistering?

Thelate George William Curtis, who made the "Easy Chair" of Harper's Magazine famous throughout two continents, closed his career in that department with a note of warning which is appropriate to the occasion. The language is simply a plea for Christmas, which Mr. Curtis believes is becoming a sham festival. The tendency nowadays is to make the holiday "a vast and ostentatious expense, a lavish display, a toil-some and exhaustive endeavor to give something to all your acquaintance, a wearisome anticipation and a painful suspicion that somebody has been omitted."

It is observed that a good many people are of this way of thinking, but have not permitted their thoughts to be put into words or actions to make the situation different to what it is. As one writer has it:—"The vulgarity with which some construe the customs and traditions of the day is only to be measured—as they themselves would have it measured—by the size of the diamonds, the cost of the sealinks used in performing the gorgeous rout." A good time to begin a reformation in this respect would be right now with a Christmas but a few weeks ahead of us. The manner in which the day is to be observed will be as it has been for a long time past unless the reformatory agency begins at once and at home. It is a responsibility which we owe to civilization, to society, to the rising generation, to Christianity itself, to check if we cannot at once expunge the vulgar and all but barbarous practices which prevail on what should be a day of grace, peace and repose. Let us reform as to this, not indifferently, but altogether!

POLITICAL PROPHEYSYING.

The chairman of the Democratic National committee, Mr. W. F. Harrity, has an article in the current number of the North American Review, in which he foretells the election of Cleveland and gives the reasons for the faith that is in him. Among the indications upon which Mr. Harrity relies is the historical fact that of late years the drift of public sentiment as shown by the elections for the House of Representatives midway between those for the Presidency has been an unerring forecast of what was going to take place two years later. That the contests for the Presidency have so far resulted in favor of the party which carried the House two years before is undeniable, but that this is a precedent amounting to a criterion is another thing altogether, as that gentleman, being an astute politician, ought to understand. If it were otherwise, and the people this year kept pace with their movement two years ago, Mr. Harrison would not carry over half a dozen states; yet surely no Democrat is so blinded with partisan intonation as to think anything of this kind. Is it not rather the case that reflecting men on both sides of the political line appreciate the reality that the outcome is more doubtful now than it usually is, that it will be so close, in fact, that a few thousand or it may be hundred votes in New York state will determine the choice? Undoubtedly.

Again, Mr. Harrity being a politician by profession and practice ought to know by observation as well as reflection that a free people in partisan politics means a more or less fickle people, a community intent upon having its wishes obeyed and realizing in the fullest manner its own supremacy, so that when things don't go exactly right a change of front, rear and both flanks is a thing to be reasonably looked for. In view of such situation there can be no reliable precedent; each case stands by itself or falls in the same way. The people acted very much like an animated avalanche in 1890; they very nearly swept the party then in power in every branch of the government, out of existence in the popular one, at least they gave the opposition such a colossal majority over all that the latter were practically powerless. That did not show that the people had left the Republican party en masse and gone over to the Democrats to stay; it merely meant that they were dissatisfied with some of the legislation of the preceding Congress and wanted it recorded in an unmistakable way. It also meant that they don't in these times look with special favor upon any party having unopposed control a headquarters. And thus they made the opposition majority in the House of Representatives big enough to emphasize that fact, understanding that with such a top-heavy preponderance there the other two branches of the government would not only be powerless to enact purely partisan measures, but would also be warned if not to some extent awed by such an unprecedented uprising of the sovereigns. It does not follow that by reason of this they are going to go on as they began, but rather the reverse; having accomplished their purpose, they can now afford, and will without prefer, to act with greater consideration and moderation. It may be that they will not completely reverse what they did two years ago and give the House to the Republicans, but that they will materially reduce the Democratic majority is reasonably certain, in fact there are very few Democratic speakers or papers that deny it.

The unexpected happens in politics often more than in any other department of civilized and enlightened life; and it would be otherwise were Mr. Harrity or anyone else able to establish a gauge by means of which the people's forthcoming action at the ballot box could be determined. They will most assuredly do about as they please to do, especially in those states where the Australian ballot system prevails. We may say with reasonable certainty that no artificial contrivance or ordinary issue will change the customary trend in some of the commonwealths, and thus we figure with reasonable certainty that Vermont will go Republican and Texas Democratic. But such information is a lucus a non lucendo—it does not enlighten at all. No human agency can tell us exactly or even approximately how New York will go, and herein is the nucleus of the whole situation; for the Empire state electors will vote for the next President beyond a doubt. If Mr. Harrity's method of determining the outcome were to be entirely relied upon, we might as well say at once that New York will go for Cleveland—one conclusion being equivalent to the other—and who is there, Democrat or Republican, that would care to have a valuable stake, the loss of which could not be replaced, depending upon such an outcome?

It is always safe to be safe, and political prophets would now more than ever consult their interests in the matter of maintaining a reputation by simply announcing that of one thing they are assured—that neither General Weaver nor General Bidwell will be elected President; it will be the present or the previous incumbent to a reasonable certainty. They may add their belief to this and say that the chances favor the one they favor, but just now it is difficult to see how they can go further and be on the safe side.

IT'S FEEBLE, BUT STILL KICKS.

Though not for a moment believing its own words, the organ of the Liberal party continues to utter loud fears concerning the impending menace of statehood for Utah, and to plead in piteous tones the all-overshadowing necessity of solidly supporting the Liberal ticket. The labor of both the political parties, it avers, is to insure Utah's admission, which it interprets as not only the doubling of taxation, but a great many other things as well. Among these "other things," we suppose the organ includes the following: "The men who are working for statehood here are working, first, for office, second, they are working to establish a polygamous state; they are working to restore the Priesthood of the Mormon Church to all the power that it had in the old days. Yes, and a good deal more power than it had in the old days, for with that power the veto of the Governor would be taken away; Fort Douglas would be a garrison to come to the support of the governor of the state whenever any impertinent Gentiles interfered with the rule here."

As before stated, the man who writes that sort of stuff does not believe it himself; he is endowed with at least ordinary intelligence, and no one save a natural-born or an accidental imbecile could possess a brain so puny as to yield to such impressions. To credit it with sincerity in this instance is, therefore, to accuse the Liberal organ of mental weakness. We shall not offer it so gross an insult; it is sometimes more charitable to accept a plea that the vision for the time-being is morally oblique, than to push the case to a conclusion under the other alternative, de ludibrio inquirendo.

The utter absurdity of the condition the Liberal organ foretells is seen in the purposes attributed to those whom it charges with working for statehood. These purposes are,—inverting the order in which that authority presents them,—first, to restore the Priesthood of the Mormon Church to more power than it ever had by taking away the veto power of the Governor though still leaving him with power to call the garrison at Fort Douglas to support him against the interference of any impertinent Gentiles; second, to establish a polygamous state; and third, the offices. The News has before this pointed out that the Mormon Church, Priesthood or people, are not working for statehood, and has given the most positive assurances that they would not do so, until those referred to by the Liberal organ as Gentiles are ready to join in the request. When to this declaration is added the self-evident fact that the Mormon Church is not running the two political parties, the case of our ectemporary falls with a thud. It might with just as much reason be charged that if a two parties in the nation by their national platforms are pledged to the programme here announced for the local organizations of those parties, and are being manipulated in the interest of the Church. The Liberal organ will surely see that its assumption is preposterous.

Day by day the desperation of the Liberal managers becomes more pitiful, and the senselessness of their statehood scheme more apparent. Driven to that last resort for their raison d'être, they give abundant evidence in their varied exhibitions of ground and lofty tumbling that they know their political jig is about up. Having found that they cannot provoke from the audience thunders of applause to accompany their exit, their whole energy is now devoted to the business of seeing that they do not drop out without something of a fanfare from themselves.

THE COMMISSION TO THE FRONT.

The Utah Commission is to be commended for the stand it has taken regarding the coming election. This Territory has not always been favored with strict impartiality in the matter of choosing those whom we would have to serve us, and the result in some cases has been that we got instead those whom we had to serve, which latter is not right no matter whether brought about by fair means or foul, but is infinitely worse when connived at or permitted than in other cases.

The appeal of the Commission is made to the registration officers and judges of election as well as to the voters, and starts out by saying in substance that it is desirous of having and is even determined to have a "fair and square" contest at the polls on Tuesday next; everything like fraud must be put down, and every voter legally qualified must have the privilege of depositing his ballot without restraint, while those who have no such right must just as rigidly be excluded. The most patriotic citizen, the most independent man in the country, could and will ask for no more than this, while the most zealous partisan has no right to anything beyond or this side of it. It is just right and we hope to see it carried out to the letter. There is nothing to be regretful about or to feel sore over when those who are in charge of the election machinery act in accordance with those plain statements by the Commission, no matter whether victory or defeat shall result to those who assist it in its laudable purpose, and in this class will of course be found all upright citizens.

The pronouncements, if such we may call it, then goes on to say that all challenges at the polls should be determined fairly and impartially, with the view to rejecting none that are qualified and keeping out all others, remembering, in the meantime, that one whose vote is challenged occupies a similar position to a man on a criminal charge—all reasonable presumptions are on his side. Formerly it was the case that the burden of proof was placed on the accuser, but the unreasonableness of such a stand, we are glad to see, has been recognized; in view of the fact that a person who claims the right to vote in any precinct can easily establish that right and the one who challenges him may not have proofs ready to show to the contrary, it is commendable that the rule ceases where it does and the fraudulently inclined can be detected negatively.

Attention is called to riotous or disorderly conduct at the polls, in which we had an object lesson here last February. The example given then was not such as to be very discouraging to intending violators, so the paragraph on this subject cannot be considered as surplusage by any means. Some general expressions regarding the purity of the ballot box are then made, and the document closes thus: "The manhood of Utah cannot afford to prostitute itself by frauds in elections." We concur most heartily.

GOING TO THE REAR.

Politics is a sickle-jade; those whom it fawned upon a short time ago are either in obscurity or at the rear, and vice versa, while some, through its rasically treatment or indefensible behavior, are in a different and conflicting place from where they have hitherto been. Half a dozen men who have held cabinet positions under Republican Presidents are now active campaigners under the Cleveland banner, while George Ticknor Curtis and many other life-long Democrats are out for Harrison; and thus it goes. The most conspicuous case of complete occultation, however, is that of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, once the idol of the Republican party and a man whose flashy rhetoric and explosive vehemence were relied upon more than any other similar agency to rally the wavering and bring the doubtful into line. His speech nominating James G. Blaine, at the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati in 1876, was one of those diamond-pointed, sarcastic and sententious outbursts which captivate not for the moment only, but endure and are handed on and down. After this he was on the stump continually till the campaign closed, stirring up the enthusiasm and eliciting the encomiums and applause of admiring throngs. He was a most conspicuous figure then, more so, probably, than the candidate he represented; his name was on everybody's lips and his glowing words were quoted by great and small, by the thinking and the unthinking. What a difference! He is still mentioned occasionally, always by the local press of the place where he lectured, or more widely when some noted lawsuit, but no longer in words that glow or in a connection itself suggestive of greatness. It is now "Bob Ingersoll," "Pope Bob," or, when the patronizing style is not used, it becomes plain "Colonel Ingersoll." This is a falling off for which there is a cause plainly apparent, and it is not entirely if at all political.

Colonel Ingersoll has not contented himself with being merely an unbeliever, but on all occasions where it could reasonably be done, has taken pains to exhibit this weakness in his structure. It has become blatant with with him and is resorted to simply as the drunkard resorts to the wine cup, through the force of habit, a habit which affords him a sort of dogged comfort but is nauseous to those with whom he comes in contact. As our political parties are mostly made up of Christians representing various denominations, Ingersoll has read himself out of favor with all of them and at last receives recognition from none. This is not, as stated, because he is an infidel, for it is conceded that he has the privilege of his peculiar views and no one has a right to molest him therefor; it is because human nature gets tired after a time of being alured and contented and made light of because of its inclination to any belief it may entertain or any reasonable practice in which it may engage, especially when there is no call for such proceeding. Not long since Colonel Ingersoll delivered a lecture on "Shakespeare" at Helena, Montana, for a charitable object, thereby showing that he himself is charitable in one way if not in another; his audience was of course composed of all kind of people and presumably all or nearly all were admirers of Shakespeare. The theme was surely grand and fruitful enough for a lecture by itself; but the lecturer could not or did not forego the opportunity to ridicule theology, making little of those who stood in awe of an "invisible master in the clouds," and so on. Did not such behavior tend toward casting a dark shadow upon what might have been a bright place in his career? Was not what might have been a feeling of admiration because of a charitable deed well performed nearly if not quite overcome by the sensation of disgust which those who entertained religious views must have experienced? Let him be a Pagan, by all means, since that is his preference; but why is it the Pagan cannot enjoy himself so well as when making others miserable? This is one of the "rights of man" which the eloquent Lincoln and all of his kind would do well to pay more attention to than they have done so far.

Colonel Ingersoll's latest lecture is on the subject of "Voltaire," in which he pictures that erratic philosopher as a most valiant foe to superstition. The fact is, if there is any reluctance to be placed upon history, that Voltaire was like most atheists of his day and since; the degree and persistency of his opposition to sacred things depended entirely upon the condition of his liver; when it was sound and there was nothing immediate to remind him of the nearness of eternity, his heterodoxy amounted to blasphemy—but prevail when he thought, as he did at least once before the time came, that death was near, he sent in hot haste for a priest, made confession and was duly shrived. Recovering, he became worse than ever, "kicked out of the traces" completely and finally died as he had lived. It requires the ingenuity of an Ingersoll to find even the germs of real greatness in such a creature as Voltaire—a man who feared death and what follows it as much as the veriest wretch that was ever dragged to the scaffold, and who affected and cultivated irreverence for (we suspect) much the same cause that his more modern imitators do—they can attract more attention that way than any other; this gratifies their vanity and they permit the feeling to grow and become stronger—until they think they are going to die; then the utter hollowness of all they have said and done is realized, and, as we firmly believe, would if it could be recalled before their "leap into the dark" is taken.

ONLY A BEGINNING.

The passer-by who today notices, and mentally wonders at, the removal of the historic old wall on the DESERET News office corner, is respectfully informed that the proprietors of this paper contemplate the erection there of a new, clean, airy business office, to be built of brick, glass and iron. The structure spoken of will be unpretentious and is designed only for temporary use; at no distant day we hope to welcome patrons and acquaintances to an entirely new, spacious and commodious establishment, modern and complete in its appointments—a little further eastward on South Temple street. Meanwhile the immediate requirements of business compel the preparation of additional room to that now occupied, and will render necessary some further changes in the old quarters. Whatever shall be done in this direction will be temporary, for the reason stated; but we trust it will be none the less an improvement.

RETURN OF A REMINISCENCE.

There are a good many men who have been voters for ten, years and more that were not alive when Blondin performed the world-startling feat of walking across Niagara Falls on a rope; these will not, perhaps, be so much surprised as will most of the people who remember that perilous performance—now thirty-three years and more ago—to learn that he is going to give some more exhibitions of the same kind. He must be near the traditional limit of life, but is reported as being quite healthy, active and capable of making the more nervous hold their breath and wish it was all over, as ever. The business seems to have a fascination for him which he cannot or does not care to resist any longer, and it may be that he prefers to end his career "in the harness;" surely, if he keeps it up much longer, he will some day reach the conclusion arrived at by the great defeated Sullivan, that he tried it once too often. Blondin, it should be known, is not his real name; he was so called for professional purposes, the foundation of it being his light hair and eyes.

DANGERS OF THE DEEP.

It is one of the curious facts that here in Utah, where we have rail communication and cheap with every point of the compass and where we are within two days' travel of the mighty Pacific, there are grown-up, middle-aged and even old men who have never been confronted by a body of water which they could not see across! To most of these the vastness of the ocean contains no more of actual impressiveness than the vastness of space, being in either case practically incomprehensible; how could it be otherwise when their knowledge of the vasty deep and the lands beyond it—and this may in many cases amount to more than in that of some who have "been there"—is learned from maps, charts, books, newspapers and conversation? They may and generally do know as a matter of abstract knowledge all about these things and so may they in like manner know all about the World's Fair buildings at Chicago; but it takes that realization that comes through the organs of sight and touch to fully realize their greatness and grandeur.

Those to whom the ocean is ultima thule would doubtless be as sternly impressed with the appearance of a monster iceberg as with the monotonous "highway of nations" across which these sometimes go. At certain seasons of the year, as is well known, the Atlantic route to Europe is crossed by great processions of icebergs. These were especially numerous in 1880, and one that was passed on July 10, in 49 degrees north, 24 degrees west, was supposed to have made the nearest approach to British shores of any iceberg since the glacial period. Fewer icebergs than usual were seen in May and June of this year. They were, however, reported to Washington by 250 vessels; and one of them—seen from a German vessel, in 46 degrees north, 87 degrees west—was 600 feet high and four miles long! In the Antarctic waters this seems to have been a maximum year of floating ice. There, the icebergs are always more numerous and formidable than in the north, yet it is not often that navigators have the experience of an Aberdeen captain who, about the middle of May, in 45 degrees south, 25 west, narrowly escaped running into an iceberg 1000 feet high, and on the next day sailed along an immense ice island 800 to 1000 feet high for a distance of forty miles.

Other reports as extraordinary as the foregoing have been made; to recite them would not, perhaps, be the means of sending a chill through the reader who never looked upon an iceberg in any more menacing attitude than can be taken upon white paper by means of printer's ink, but if he could once see one we guarantee the sensation would be different, especially if it was "head on" in a heavy fog and the ship from which the floating menace was seen was making twenty knots an hour or thereabout. A conclusion between the two—in view of the fact that only about one-third of the iceberg projects above the water—would have about the same effect upon the ship that Robert Stephenson explained to a committee of Parliament his locomotive would have upon a cow that came upon the track—"It would be bad for the cow."

At least fifty cars of condensed milk and evaporated cream are consumed annually in Denver and Colorado, of the value of $1600 a car. This represents $80,000 per year sent from Colorado to the states of New York, Illinois and Wisconsin, for what could be produced in this state to the great benefit and increase of dairy farming.—Field and Farm.

BREAKERS AHEAD.

A cloud of trouble as big as a man's hand, which grows no smaller day by day, hovers over the eastern horizon. The question which has vexed the nation from the time that Jefferson and Hamilton clashed ideas on nationalism in Washington's cabinet, and which eventuated the civil war, is as much alive now as it ever was, and shows that it is still a factor for mischief. The question is, whether a state has exclusive sovereignty within its own lines—that is, whether those lines represent a wall which must not be scaled by the general government without permission express or implied—or whether they are of local significance and the local authority which they hedge about is subordinate to the parent government; whether, in a word, a state has full autonomy within and of itself or is merely a factor in the make-up of the nation at large.

This has been a costly subject to the people of this country. The determination of one phase of it cost the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of lives and thousands of millions of dollars, added to the destruction of property altogether beyond computation. This would seem to be enough to put all sections of the country at rest through a perfect understanding; yet we find that in all respects it is not at rest, any more than it was at any time before or during the dark days of the rebellion.

The present cause of contention is the determination of the Federal authority, under the operation of Federal laws, and pursuant to Attorney General Miller's instructions on the subject, to take a hand in the election next Tuesday. In New York particularly, where there is always more or less trouble beforehand, a real conflict seems looming up. It is given out that United States deputy marshals are going to take charge of affairs at the polls, exercising the utmost freedom in the matter of going into the booths or polling places; from which all persons except election judges and those who are in the act of voting are excluded by the law of the state. In opposition to this proceeding, Lieutenant Governor Sheehan, who is managing for the Democratic party in the Empire state, has issued an address to his partisans, calling on them to resist encroachments upon the state law, and cites a decision of Judge Brewer, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court in defense of his position, that no one, other than those referred to above, had the right to enter booths. Both sides seem determined, and if both persist in their presently avowed purpose a collision would seem to be inevitable.

A similar case comes upon the wires from Dallas county, Alabama, where a United States marshal has appointed deputies to "look after" the election. The chairman of the Democratic county committee at once telegraphed to the chairman of the state committee, asking for instructions; the burden of these was to have the sheriff and his deputies on hand, and wherever a marshal attempts to interfere to arrest him. This causes the United States marshal for that state to defy a sheriff to arrest one of his deputies, and it looks as if here was another chance for a row. There will be one certainly unless one or the other authority gives way, which at present neither seems inclined to do.

The political atmosphere all around has a equally appearance; but surely the good sense and better judgment of the people will enable them to devise some means of avoiding actual hostilities. We are promised some surprises as the result of the election next Tuesday, but let us sincerely trust that bloodshed will not be one of them!

TO RESTRICT IMMIGRATION.

A Chicago divine recently held forth from his pulpit on the evils of immigration, and as a result he has been "catching it" generally from a portion of the local press. One of these does not confine its strictures to the particular clergyman referred to, but makes common cause against all of them so far as the subject spoken of is concerned, saying also that "ministers have very little judgment concerning the practical affairs of life." While not subscribing to that statement, or concurring in the feeling which prompted it, we can but endorse the argument which is presented in opposition to the reverend gentleman's position on the immigration question. He said among other things that "immigration is the father of nearly every national peril;" which causes his orator to remark that "it is equally true that it is the cause of all our national greatness. It is because we have 80,000,000 of population that we are prosperous and happy at home, and respected abroad. As to the vices which Mr. Bartlett [the minister] says the immigrants bring with them, the remark has no application outside of the great cities. Any man who should travel through the great West and wish all the immigrants he met back in Europe would prove himself a monster and a fool."

It is observed that the restrictions on immigration which the preacher suggests are perils in the extreme, as he proposes to allow no immigrants to touch our shores until they take the oath of allegiance, and if Roman Catholics they must forswear political allegiance to the Pope as a condition precedent to landing. This is know-nothingism revived and intensified. It was that such tests might be imposed upon and such humiliating exactions had from those seeking the land of freedom from abroad that the more intolerant and inconsiderate element in the country banded themselves together as a political party and actually appeared in the Presidential race two or three consecutive times. Of course it went down and it was fondly hoped that it might never appear again in any form—there being not enough cohesiveness in such principles to enable them to live as an organized body in a land consecrated to the protection and encouragement of the oppressed of all nations. Sporadic cases like that referred to break out now and then, but the indignation which they incite does but break their force and cut off their effect at once.

Our contemporary says of the proposed restrictions, that any immigrant would cheerfully comply with the requirements spoken of without knowing or caring what it meant; or, if he wished to evade it, would only have to claim that he did not know yet whether he would settle in this country or not. "Then, after their admission to this country, Mr. Bartlett would allow no one to vote who could not make himself understood in the English language. But it would be a shame to impose on immigrants a condition which, if applied to natives, would disfranchise some of our most successful writers, orators and statesmen, not to say divines." There is the rub; for the sake of gratifying the spitefulness and vindictiveness of a few churlish political bigots, we cannot afford to shut the gates upon either honest industry or native talent, whether it comes in the form of a transient caller or one who intends to remain upon our soil in life and in death.

UNFORTUNATE HAMBURG.

The city of Hamburg is complaining because of the threatened commercial stagnation which now stares that city in the face as a consequence of the great cholera scare a short time ago. In a private letter from a resident and business man of the German city to a friend in New York, he says that the Hamburgers lost all fear of cholera several weeks since, but they do fear and have been fearing financial ruin and are at a loss as to how this is to be avoided. Having been placed in quarantine by all the civilized powers, they have, as the letter claims, come near rounding the death-knell to Hamburg's prosperity. "What shall we do if the boycott continues for any length of time?" the writer says; "we shall simply be wiped out; our workmen and middle classes will starve and only the very rich may survive!"

An exchange, noting the above, says very truly that Hamburg's case is a hard one, and should excite widespread sympathy. It is much to be hoped, too, that she will speedily recover from her prostration, and be as prosperous as ever before. But she cannot blame the conduct of the outside world during the awful epidemic that brought her so low. She had not kept her premises in a sanitary condition, and when the plague came she did not take the prompt measures for its suppression and for the protection of the cities having commercial dealings with her that she should have taken. She has been taught a stern lesson, and should now be wise enough to do all in her power to prevent a repetition of her terrible experience of the last three months.

Hamburg is the greatest commercial port on the European continent. She is a free trader throughout, vessels from all nations coming and going at will without let or hindrance. It is situated on the river Elbe, about thirty miles from its mouth, and is connected by rail with all parts of the German empire. It is not regarded as a beautiful city by any means, the streets in the business centers being narrow, dark and dingy, and the houses old-fashioned and badly built. Some of its modern suburbs, however, are well-built and attractive. It has one of the largest theaters in Germany and is somewhat noted for the number and size of its public buildings. Its commerce is greatly aided by its extensive communications from within and without; the Elbe at the point at which Hamburg is situated widens out abruptly and becomes from there on to the mouth virtually an arm of the sea rather than a river. By means of recent improvements vessels of all grades and displacements can now at any season or whether the water is high or low deliver their cargoes and take on freights directly at the warehouses, which was not so until lately, vessels drawing more than eighteen feet of water being unable to come in at all and the others being only able to come near when the tide was in. No sooner has the city prepared itself for still greater strides in the commercial world than the plague descends upon her and it becomes a question not of enhanced prosperity but of merely sustaining itself. The population at this time cannot be far from a quarter of a million.

A NEW MINERAL TREASURE.

Doctor James E. Talmage of this city has just returned from a trip into southeastern Utah, whether he has been in the interests of science generally and of the Deseret Museum in particular. He speaks in pleasing terms of a deposit of magnificent crystals of selenite, or pure crystallized gypsum, which occurs in one of the side canyons of the Dirty Devil (or Fremont) river, in the newly created county of Wayne. This deposit was first made known by Brother John R. Young, who once lived in that region; he brought specimens of the material to this city, and Dr. Talmage, realizing the scientific interest attached to them, took the earliest opportunity of visiting the location. It was his first intention to remove but few of the crystals, leaving most of the formation undisturbed as a natural beauty; but he soon found that the spirit of vandalism manifested by most of those who visited the place would soon destroy the crystals, so he at once took steps to secure legal title to the land, and as soon as this was perfected, operations for the removal of the scientific crystals were begun.

The material occurs in a small cave, which is bounded by a gypsum shell, and this stands in relief on the side of a sandstone hill. Perfect crystals have already been removed, measuring from an inch to three feet in length, and weighing from an ounce to two hundred pounds apiece. One group of superb crystals taken out last week weighs not less than 600 pounds. A number of these magnificent formations are on exhibition at the Deseret Museum, where a News' representative saw and admired them. We were permitted also to examine photographic negatives of the cave and the formations adjacent.

The Doctor states that this material, selenite, has no commercial or money value, as no use has yet been found for it in quantity, aside from the manufacture of plaster of paris, and for this purpose the uncrystallized varieties of "plaster stone" are preferable. The entire value of the crystals in question depends upon their scientific interest, and upon the lessons which they teach concerning the laws of nature and of God, by which they have acquired their symmetry and beauty. It is the intention of the Museum authorities to remove the specimens to this city, then to send the choicest to the World's Fair; afterwards to distribute specimens to all the noted scientific institutions of this and other countries.

It is pleasing to find persons in the community who see worth and interest in other things than dollars and dimes; and who will undertake the development of scientific matters for their own sweet sake alone. Dr. Talmage remarked that he had never yet found time or inclination to prosecute mining for gain of means; and that this is his first personal experience in mining. This involves a constant outlay of means and a steady income of knowledge and satisfaction concerning the wonderful ways of the Creator.

UNOSTENTATIOUS FUNERALS.

The policy of unostentation and cheapness at funerals is one that gains ground and finds favors among the more advanced in intellect and the more thoughtful in every department of life. It has all along been understood that grief that is real and heartfelt cannot be assuaged by pomp and ceremony; the sorrow which a human being feels over the loss of a relative or friend is apt to be too deep-laid for anything merely superficial to reach it; there is more in the presence, the comforting words and respectful demeanor of neighbors and acquaintances, than in all else that men can do, and when to these is added that consolation which only comes through faith in the Gospel and a glorious reunion beyond the grave, all that mere outward ostentation can accomplish seems little more than so much solemn mockery.

It is not that ceremonial attention or fitting adornments should be altogether wanting when we lay to rest all that is earthly of our loved ones; quite the reverse. They should be so attired and surrounded that they will be as beautiful to look upon as anything within the cold and clammy grasp of death can be; but it is not at all necessary that expensive trappings and high-priced adornments be provided, especially when those who are responsible for the cost are poor and in need of all they have—that is, in showing respect, and feeling respect, for the dead, we should at no time entirely forget the duty which is owing to those who still live.

We have said that simplicity in this regard was obtaining favor among the more advanced socially and intellectually, and so it is. A recent conspicuous case was that of the poet laureate of Great Britain, Alfred Tennyson. The services on the occasion of his funeral were, as he wished them to be, of the simplest character. The journey from the home where he had lived to Westminster Abbey is described by one writer as having been accomplished "with a beautiful poverty of ceremony and display." Being averse to hearse, his dislike in that respect was observed and the coffin was carried from the house by old servants and placed in a small cart waiting to receive it. The relatives arranged themselves in the rear and the procession moved slowly to the tomb, those who stood along the roads and streets along the line of march reverently raising their hats and making other undemonstrative tokens of respect. What more could be done? Would he himself have desired anything else?

Another instance in point was the funeral of Mrs. Harrison. All arrangements were marked with the utmost simplicity and most sincere respect. The ceremonies themselves were destitute of glitter and glare either in speech or action. A few words expressive of the worth and character of the deceased added to the faith and hopes of those she left behind, was quite enough and would be in any case. As the poet so truthfully and forcibly expresses it—"Can flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?" We should realize the apportionment of this and let our actions be governed accordingly.

Nowhere in the world is there less excuse for vainglorious display and hyperbolic eulogy than here in Utah among the Latter-day Saints. Such things are not only opposed and urged against in a social way, but the instructions which we receive from time to time as well as the numerous object lessons imparted when one of our leading men or women is laid away, all go to show that vanity or mere show—always objectionable at any time or place—is never so much so as on an occasion calling for solemnity, sacredness and simplicity.

RUNNING CHICAGO DOWN.

Chicago has the reputation of being a place where one can live higher or cheaper than anywhere else on the continent. There are a good many subscribers to the first part of the certificate of character, though the train who are willing to make affidavit to the latter is somewhat abbreviated and altogether tenuous; it may be said that immediately after a great fete or red letter day in the Lake city, there are no visitors at all charitable enough or hardy enough to bear the mildest kind of testimony in opposition to anything of a damaging character, that is said concerning the decisions thereof.

One who "took in" the dedication ceremonies to (presumably) the fullest extent, gives vent to his feelings in the following strain: "About the only thing that visitors to the Chicago celebration were not charged ten prices for was air." This is rather steep; it is at least steep enough to call forth the following vigorous and explanatory denial from the Mail of that city:

"That's not true. Hotel prices were raised somewhat, but transportation of every kind, save that of the hack drivers, remained the same, as did prices of everything desired by the human palate or the ordinary mentality. Admission to concerts, dramatic performances and shows of every name was precisely what it always was. In fact, it would be difficult for our contemporary to specify any desideratum outside of hotels and liver accommodations for which there was the faintest pretext of an extra charge."

Those who contemplate visiting the great show next near—and it is a "fair" presumption that their name is legion or a large part thereof—will trust that the newspaper is right and the complainant is wrong and that things will remain so as far as conditions are concerned. We confess to an inclination to class Chicago's prices during a drawing occasion along with some of her buildings, that is, higher than anywhere else; this opinion, to use the language of the bar, is not a fixed, definite and unconditional opinion, but is only based upon hearsay and what we have read in the papers; it would not require a great deal of evidence to remove the opinion, for two reasons—the disclaimer of our respected cotemporary has almost persuaded us to change our minds, and we are so willing that it be otherwise that but little more is needed to effect a complete effacement of the bad impression. Meantime, let Chicago read up on the fable of the goose and the golden eggs.

PROFESSORS IN POLITICS.

The faculty of some of the Eastern colleges are leading out finely in the matter of engaging actively in politics, and while this may not be called an innovation altogether, it is something in the nature of an awakening and is not without significance. It is claimed to be, and doubtless is, gratifying that men who are by profession trained thinkers have concluded to set an example in the matter of participating in the practical phase of politics, so that others, who may be either thinking or unthinking, can have the benefit of their reasoning and their conclusions.

But it is also shown, on the other hand, that it would be highly regrettable if any of these institutions should become, however indirectly, the particular friend or representative of any party. It would injure the schools—perhaps eventually nullify the effect of the professor's precept. In the reports now circulated it is stated, for instance, that President Eliot and four-fifths of the Harvard faculty are for Cleveland, and that a majority of the Cornell faculty are for Harrison. Also we learn that the proportion of Republicans to Democrats in Dartmouth is as seven to one, that twenty-three of the thirty-three professors at Amherst are for Cleveland, and that the "Cleveland men on the faculty of Yale outnumber the Harrison men four to one."

The source from whence this comes thinks, however, it would be grievous enough if the professors were to cloister themselves in their studies and refuse to take the interest which all citizens should feel in a political contest, and we are disposed to concur. "But unless they remain very steadfast to the purpose of sticking to principles and ignoring partisanship," it says, "there is a danger that the alma mater will be dragged into politics as an instrument for tactical maneuvers."

None of us desires so inconspicuous a result from the faculty's participation as is foreshadowed by the foregoing conclusion; but certainly if the professors permit their minds to be drawn out toward politics at all, they will naturally enough be themselves drawn toward the hustings and the ballot box as the newly awakened interest becomes stronger and stronger; and there would seem to be no sufficient reason why it should be otherwise. The result would seem to be inevitable, however, that an active, aggressive share in partisan politics is incompatible with the calm, argumentative, studious duties required of college professors.

WE LIVE AND LEARN.

We keep on learning something about the land we live in, which goes to show that it will be some time yet before we know it all regarding America. If indeed such a state of information is at all possible. The Columbian Fair dedication at Chicago doubtless did more good than will ever be recorded or acknowledged, chiefly in the way of causing those who thought themselves posted to learn some new things by investigation and "brushing up," and those who were not to find out how very ignorant they really were; while to all classes and among every condition some new "pointers" were acquired by the force of comparison and association of ideas.

In these quadro-centennial days, says a cotemporary, it is worth while to recall the fact that the continent now named America has gone at one time or another by a great many names. The notion that Columbus held of finding a westward passage to India by way of the Atlantic is recorded by the names of New India and India Occidental, found upon old maps as indicating the land discovered by Columbus. America Mexicana was an old name of North America, as America Peruviana was of South America. Then Brasilia was for a time the name applied to the southern continent.

Finally, says the same authority, the origin of the name America has been gravely disputed, though the weight of testimony leaves practically no doubt that it comes from the Christian name of Amerigo Vespucci. Some early authorities, however, gravely contend that the name came from the Peruvian word Amaru, meaning the sacred symbol of the cross, made of a serpent and a stick, and suffix ca, meaning country. Thus derived, America means the land of the holy animal. If those who named it that could only return from the shades and witness one of our great political campaigns, they would surely credit themselves with more foresight than occurred to them at the time.

THE NEW SCHOOL OF ACTORS.

James John Corbett, a young man hailing from California, and who recently acquired considerable fame and an immense amount of cash by battering and beating another bruiser who had never been treated that way before, is playing on the stage and making more money in a week than he ever made as a bookkeeper in a year. What a travesty on professional ethics all this is! Of course Corbett is not an actor, does not, perhaps, understand the rudiments of theatrical business; yet he commands a larger income than any of the great professionals now actively engaged in their calling. With John McCullough and Lawrence Barrett, the great American actors of this generation, dead, and Edwin Booth, of the same school, going the same way very fast, it is natural that we seek new idols in the temple of Theatrics; and what more reasonable than that the scholarly acquirements and intellectual culture of the age should cause us to turn our eyes lovingly to John L. Sullivan and his conqueror! Physical culture and even the ability to slug right and left are not at all detrimental to the makeup of a great actor, in fact, they would be more likely an assistance to him, and a good physique is quite indispensable; but when the candidate for dramatic honors and profits has no other qualifications whatever and can still make more money than those who have toiled up the ladder and reached its top through the force of talent fully cultivated and merit properly applied, it is enough to engender "that tired feeling" as a chronic ailment.

A CARD.

In daily papers published in this Territory versions of remarks made at Provo, on Tuesday evening last, by Mr. J. L. Rawlins, the Democratic candidate for Delegate to Congress, have appeared in which he is credited with making certain statements concerning myself of a most grave character. One of the statements published is in relation to the bonds of $45,000 which were forfeited when I did not appear in court on the 17th of March, 1886. Two of those bonds of $10,000 each were not paid, but were carried by appeal of my sureties to the U. S. Supreme Court, and last spring I succeeded in effecting a compromise by which I was relieved, for a small consideration, from the necessity of paying them.

Concerning this compromise Mr. Rawlins is misled by saying: "It is whispered that a compromise had been effected, and it is said $20,000 of the bonds were remitted, and it has been further said that the relinquishment of the $20,000 bonds was in consideration of the Mormon vote being given to the Republicans." After making this statement it is said that Mr. Rawlins continued: "What do you think when I tell you that in consideration of his bond being reduced $20,000, the Mormon people are to be sold into the ranks of the Republican party?"

Upon these statements being brought to my attention, I addressed a note to Mr. Rawlins, in which I asked him if he had made those statements; if he had not, I asked that he would be so kind, if he had made any allusion to me upon that occasion, to give me his version of that which he did say.

In reply to this, I have received a letter this morning from him, in which he states: "I did not charge in my Provo speech that in consideration of the remittance of the $20,000 you had bargained away the votes of the Mormon people." He does not, however, comply with my request and state what he did say upon this subject, but branches off to inform me where my honor has been assailed in other directions, quite irrelevant to the point at issue between himself and me.

The same afternoon that I addressed this letter to Mr. Rawlins, I received from Ex-Governor West an extract from Mr. Rawlins' manuscript of the speech which he had prepared for delivery at Provo, and concerning which the Governor says that it was "furnished by himself (Mr. Rawlins) from the original manuscript prepared previous to delivery."

That Mr. Rawlins did not stick to his written and memorized speech is very evident if the statements of those who were present at the meeting which he addressed can be relied upon. I am informed by a gentleman of high character and unquestioned veracity, who was present, and who wrote down the words that Mr. Rawlins uttered, that he did say: "What do you think when I tell you that in consideration of his bond being reduced $20,000 the Mormon people are to be sold into the ranks of the Republican party?" This statement, written on the spot, employs, I am assured, "his exact words, taken at the time of delivery; it is verbatim et literatim;" and this agrees with other statements which were made by persons who were present. It appears, therefore, to be a question of veracity between Mr. Rawlins and his hearers, and into the discussion of which I need not enter.

But whether Mr. Rawlins made this statement or not, it has gone out as coming from him, and it is due to the people of Utah Territory that I should make some explanation concerning the relinquishment of the bonds.

It happened to be in Washington last spring, and in conversation with high officials I found they felt that a terrible injustice had been done me in the matter of these bonds, and one of the gentlemen in whose power it was under the law to recommend a settlement, pointed out to me the way by which it could be done, and he and others evinced a willingness to do everything in their power to aid me. A settlement was made, and not a word was said by any one connected with the business concerning votes for the Republican party.

I am sure that those who know me would not believe me capable of any such conduct as bargaining votes to bring advantage to myself. But in order that there may be no doubt in any mind concerning this, I wish to state in the most emphatic and comprehensive manner that there is not the slightest foundation in truth for such a charge. It is unqualifiedly and absolutely false. In all my associations in Washington, there was no transaction that ever gave me so much pleasure as this; not because of the money consideration (and yet that was considerable, amounting, with interest, to about $33,000) but because of the deep interest that was taken in the case by President Harrison and the different members of his cabinet to whose knowledge the case was brought, and who had not forgotten my former association with them in the halls of Congress.

In the manuscript of the speech which Mr. Rawlins prepared for delivery at Provo, he says: "In my opinion, they (the bonds) could not have been made so high as to induce him to come up and face the punishment which he expected would be inflicted upon him."

Had this expression been uttered by

Mr. Rawlins in the heat of debate, it would not perhaps be worthy of notice, although an extraordinary statement under any circumstances from an attorney concerning one who had been his client. But it was deliberately prepared by him in his chamber, and without provocation. How such language can be reconciled as appropriate or professional, apart from every other consideration, I leave to all men of honor in his profession and the public at large to judge.

GEORGE Q. CANNON.
SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 5, 1892.

ELDER HAAG'S DEATH.

The News is kindly permitted to publish the following letter from Don C. W. Musser, sent to the First Presidency of the Church, regarding the death of his fellow missionary, Elder Adolf Haag:

MOUNT CARMEL HOSPITAL,
Near Haifa, Turkey, Oct. 4th, 1892.

Referring to the demise of our beloved brother and fellow worker in the cause of truth, Adolf Haag, I will say he died of typhus yesterday morning at five minutes past four. On the 16th of September, the day after I addressed you my last letter, Brother Haag was again taken ill and, notwithstanding everything that human love and skill could suggest for his good being done, he gradually sank lower and lower until the angel of rest was sent to loosen the bands holding him to this earth of sorrow and pain, and bid his soul "ascend on high and be removed for the labors you have so willingly and faithfully performed." I was with him from the time he was taken sick until his spirit was waited above, and not once did I hear him complain. I did not, I could not think he was so seriously ill; not even when he got so weak I had to feed him and lift him from one bed to the other, did I realize I would soon have to part with my energetic and noble companion. And even now, after seeing his thin, pleasant face fixed in death, after our long visit to the cemetery listening to the doleful music of the village bell made to toll as a mark of respect for the man of God, who had left all behind to follow Jesus—after beholding the body of clay returned to mother earth, and seeing the flowers that were so lovingly prepared to strew on his grave, it is hard for me to realize that he is gone and I am alone. Brother Haag, though here but a short time, had made a host of friends, as evinced by the large concourse of people, all anxious to show their sympathies by coming to the funeral, among whom I saw the German consul and his wife, who, by the by, have been very kind to us. The mayor of Haifa, who entertained us all one afternoon listening to our testimonies, and, in fact, nearly every one in the colony was in attendance.

You will see by the heading of this letter that I am in the hospital. This is a house built on top of Mount Carmel where people come to get the benefit of the fresh mountain air. By order of the doctor I brought Brother Haag here, but it did not seem to be just the thing for him, so last Friday the doctor had us move him back to the colony where he could get to see him oftener, and where he afterwards died in Brother Grau's house. After the funeral the doctor said it would be absolutely necessary for me to return to the mountain unless I wanted to get sick. And as I felt that this was the case, I decided to come right up. I shall stay here a week or so to rest and recruit myself.

I have just finished letters to President Young and to Brother Richard Haag of Salt Lake, and as I know of nothing more of importance to communicate at present I will bring my brief letter to a close.

Praying the Lord to bless you I remain your brother in the covenant of truth, Don. C. W. Musser.

I will add that Brother Herman is well and reports everything in good condition at Aintab. D. C. W. M.

WASATCH STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Wasatch Stake of Zion convened in the Stake house, Heber, Oct. 29 and 30, 1892.

Saturday 10:30 a. m.—There were present on the stand, Apostle Lyman, President Hatch and counselors, members of the High Council, Bishops of the various wards and counselors, Patriarch Thomas Hicken and others. In the afternoon we had the pleasure of having President Joseph E. Taylor and Elder Charles Wilcken of Salt Lake City.

Conference was called to order by President Hatch, who made a few remarks saying he had nothing to report but peace and prosperity in this Stake.

Elder Joseph Lambert, a late missionary, made some good remarks on the studies and obligations of the Saints, pre-existence of our spirits and the necessity of living lives of righteousness.

Elder John E. Moulton, a late missionary also, occupied a few moments, referring to the difference that existed among the children of men. He considered God was just, and the cause of the difference was the result of ourselves either here or in our primeval state, in the manner we kept the commandments of our Father in Heaven, and obedience to known duties.

Apostle Lyman occupied the remainder of the forenoon. He dwelt on the importance of being as energetic in our labors at home as when on missions, the keeping of a brief history of our travels and the events of life, the necessity of reviewing our actions so that we might improve in the future, and said the course we pursue in this life will determine our life in a world to come, just as our actions before we came here determined our position here on this earth.

2. P. M.—After the usual exercises Apostle Lyman gave some instructions to the Bishops relative to making their reports, and the various things he wanted them to refer to. The various Bishops then reported the condition of their wards, which was very satisfactory.

President Jos. F. Taylor occupied the remainder of the afternoon in giving some excellent instructions on the necessity of attending to spiritual duties, referring to the negligence that existed with some who attended to secular labors on the Sabbath day instead of coming to meeting and concluded by saying that any man that will exempt himself from Sabbath meetings, will dry up in his faith and become indifferent towards the work of God. He exhorted the Saints to listen to the warning voice of the servants of God, pay their tithes and offerings and the spirit of God would ever abide with them.

A Priesthood meeting was held at 7:30 p. m., when much valuable instruction was given by Apostle Lyman.

Sunday, 10 a. m.—Elder Charles H. Wilcken was the first speaker. He contrasted the great difference that existed in Heber now and when he lived here over thirty years ago, in the great improvements that had been made. He referred to the first principles of the Gospel and spoke at length on the principle of obedience, making some good remarks on the same.

President Joseph E. Taylor occupied the remainder of the forenoon in speaking on obedience, showing that all our principles are susceptible of being demonstrated, and capable of proof. Referring to the mission of Jesus and the office of the Comforter, he referred to the blessings promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph the Prophet, and how their fulfillment would literally come to pass.

2 p. m.—President Hatch said so far as he knew, Wasatch stake was in a prosperous condition, good health, good crops, litigation almost unknown, and reasonable peace and brotherly love prevailed; and perfect liberty existed. He referred to the stake house and the district school that had just been finished, and thought it spoke well of the liberality and goodness of the people. He hoped in the near future we would have erected a first-class building for our Church school.

The sacrament was then administered, after which the general and stake authorities were presented and unanimously sustained.

Apostle Lyman occupied the remainder of the time in speaking on temple building and the requirements that would be made to finish the temple in Salt Lake by next April conference in 1893. His remarks were truly refreshing, and the Saints felt to rejoice that they lived in this great dispensation and had the privilege of assisting in so great and glorious a work.

HENRY CLEGG, Stake Clerk.

THE PAVING TROUBLE.

There was a special meeting of the City Council and board of public works held on Saturday night to consider the paving squabble. The following officials were present: President Loofbourow and Messrs. Horn, Hardy, Lawson, Kelly, Evans, Wantland, Rich, Pollard, Karriek, Moran and Simondl. The members of the board of public works present were Chairman Haines and Messrs. Downey, Conklin and Clawson. City Engineer Doremus and City Attorney Hoge were also present. President Loofbourow presided.

Wantland stated that the members of the council wanted to meet the board and arrive at an understanding with the company as to the manner in which the paving work should be pushed.

Karriek said he didn't believe the council had anything to do with the contractors. He thought the board of public works had full charge.

Horn said Karriek's statement was erroneous. He thought the council had everything to do with it. The board of public works had the supervision of the work, but they got their direction from the council. The council had ordered the contractors should not do certain things—the contractors were doing just what the council had said they shouldn't do.

Engineer Doremus said that there was not much to say. The contractors had started to work and that was all. They had torn up the west side of Main street and were now tearing up the east side. The curbing, which was the most important part of the work, had not progressed at all, and on the whole none of the work was being done satisfactorily. Mr. Doremus also stated that the contractors needed more room to work in. It would be best to let them grade one side of the street the length of two blocks. The only work being done under the contract so far was the grading and about two hundred feet of curbing. At the present rate of work it would take three months to complete one block. He thought the work of curbing was being done disgracefully slow. They were now working five men setting curbs, but had only had three heretofore.

He stated the contractors had nine men, they said cutting curbs; at the rate good cutters work, 180 feet per day could be gotten out. The contractors stated that they had had these men cutting curbs two weeks. So far, though, they had only got down less than 200 feet. The curbing was not being done according to contract. He advised the council to give the contractors notice under clause 21 of the contract, which provides that at any time during the progress of the work it shall appear to the board of public works and the city engineer that the force employed, appliances provided or the progress and character of the work, etc., are not satisfactory, and in accordance with the specifications, written notices should be served on the contractors, and if the matter was not once remedied, the city should at once take hold of the work and finish it at the expense of the contractors.

The section referred to is as follows:

It is further distinctly understood that if at any time during the progress of the work it shall appear to the board of public works and city engineer that the force employed, the appliances provided, or the progress or character of the work or materials furnished are not respectively such as in their opinion will insure the completion of the work under this contract in the time specified, or are not in accordance with the attached specifications from such work, they shall serve a written notice on the contractor to at once supply such increase of force, appliances or tools, and to cause such improvement in the character of the work or materials to be made, as is requisite to make the same conform to the specifications of this agreement. And if on the expiration of ten days after the service of such written notice upon the contractor personally or by leaving the same with some person at his office or place of business, the contractor shall have failed to give satisfactory evidence of his efforts, ability and intentions to furnish and remedy the specified deficiencies, the city may thereupon enter upon and take possession of said work, or any part thereof, with the tools, materials or appliances, and hold the same as security for any or all damages or liabilities that may arise by reason of the non-fulfillment of this contract within the time herein stipulated, and furthermore, may employ the said tools, materials and appliances as the city may deem proper, to complete the work at the expense of the contractor.

A good deal of unimportant discussion followed, after which C. E. Haines, chairman of the board of public works, stated that as soon as the contract had been approved he had called the board together and had mapped out a plan to govern the progress of the work and that the Culmer-Jennings Paving company had been notified of that plan. He was in favor of pushing the work as vigorously as possible and was in favor of giving the contractors the extra room they asked for and just as much as they could fill up with teams and men. If the contractors failed or refused to do the work as directed, however, the only power they had was to report the matter to the Council.

The following notice from the board to the contractors was then read:

SALT LAKE CITY, NOV. 3, 1892.

Culmer-Jennings Paving Company:

Gentlemen—We are just in receipt of the following resolution passed by the city council on the 25th ultimo, relative to work done under your contract:

"It is the sense of this council that the work shall be prosecuted as vigorously as possible, according to the terms of the contract."

In pursuance of the above we desire to inform you that at a meeting of the board of public works, held last evening, we were instructed to notify you that the work is not being pushed with sufficient vigor, and that we request you to increase the number of men and appliances on the work of grading at once; also that the setting of curbs—ones be pushed at a rate which will insure its early completion; and that all parts of the work be hurried forward in such manner as will enable its completion within the time stipulated in the contract. Respectfully,

A. F. DOREMUS, C. L. HAINES,
City Engineer. Chairman.

Mr. Jennings, one of the contractors, stated that the first delay in beginning work was caused by them having to bring twenty-five block-makers from the East. Then they had to get curbs cutters, but had been putting more men to work each day. They had sufficient curbing on hand now to finish the block they were working on and sufficient stone in the yard to complete the entire four blocks on Main Street. As for the street not being cleaned up, the delay in that matter was caused by the contractor for sidewalks piling his sand and gravel in the street. He then named the number of men he had employed.

Rich inquired how many curbs they had at work on the street, and if it wasn't a fact that the sidewalk contractor had been delayed by them instead of they being delayed by the sidewalk contractor. He wanted to know if it had taken a week to set 200 feet of curbing if it wouldn't take at least three weeks to do a block. At that rate, the work would go mighty slow.

Continuing his explanation, Mr. Jennings stated he was prepared to put all the blocking down on the west side of the street and could have it done by Wednesday night. He couldn't work, though, until the elec-trio light poles were out. His contract, however, provided that he should have a clear and uninterrupted street, and he considered the poles an obstruction. However, if the council so ordered he would go to work Monday morning grading the street for blocking. As for the grading, the works at Price were ready and they were negotiating for a block of ground near the Rio Grande depot to erect a $40,000 plant to push this contract and to do outside work. All he begged for was a clear, uninterrupted street with no delays by the railroad company's blocking. They could and would complete a block of paving within eighteen days. He wouldn't be responsible for the weather, however, and if it got too cold he wouldn't be responsible for the work.

THE NEW ORLEANS STRIKE.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 7.—Governor Foster has the militia in readiness for immediate action, but the belief is well grounded that a strike will be taken until Wednesday, as any serious trouble before would not only complicate the election here, but in other sections. The idleness of such a large body of negroes, and the desperation ensuing upon loss of earnings is feared, and the Democrats will have a hard time to maintain supremacy in consequence, as crowds of strikers and the absence of street cars will serve to keep many of the better element away from the polls. In the mean time the governor is using every means to bring about an amicable termination. Having procured concessions from the merchants, the governor referred the matter to the unions, and they took it under consideration and promised to give an answer by noon today. Up to tonight, however, nothing has been heard from them.

Merchants carried on business today as well as they could, and determined to stand firm. They received promises of support from other orders and organizations, and it is said the executive committee received a letter from Governor Warmouth, the Republican leader in the state and a large planter, saying the planters desired the merchants to stand firm, as victory for the unions would mean the organization of the negroes throughout the South. The supremacy of the blacks is a constant menace to business. Some of the largest planters in the state were in the city today, and said the strike meant so much to them that they were willing to answer the first call for men or money sent out by the merchants. As soon as election is over the real battle will begin, and it is believed the city authorities will throw off a good deal of the lethargy charged against them.

Governor Foster has received an opinion from legal authorities that he can step in to preserve peace without waiting to be called on by the municipal authorities. Merchants say a number of men are willing to return to work, but do not propose to make targets for the union until they are ready for a vigorous defense, and so they declined to take them back for the present. The strike fails to effect newspapers to the extent expected, and the only paper which has so far failed to appear is the Item, the official organ of the strikers, although that is expected to appear tomorrow. During the morning a proclamation was issued by the mayor calling upon all persons to preserve the peace and warning the people that any disorder would be repressed by the sternest measures. The most serious feature of the situation is the suspension of the two lighting companies, the gas and the electricity, and some alarm was felt when the officers of the two electric companies called upon the mayor and said they thought they could furnish light if granted protection for the men engaged to take the place of the strikers. This was readily promised.

During the afternoon the president of the Sugar and rice exchange asked the mayor that protection be furnished those interested. Nearly forty thousand barrels of sugar, molasses and other products lay on the levee at the mercy of the public, and if the mayor could not furnish the force required the exchange, he said, would tender men to be sworn in as special officers. The mayor agreed to commission all such men. The board of trade also urged the mayor to do his utmost to bring about the resumption of the street car travel and to continue the supply of gas, electricity, water and other actual necessities. In reply the mayor announced that his powers were restricted to the preservation of peace, and that he could not force the men to work, but he could and would maintain order. A strong influence was brought to bear on the electric light men, as they being out was such a serious matter, and they were finally induced to return to work. The gas men are still out, however, as are the telephone linemen, but the exchange bureaus are in, as are the Western Union operators, although strenuous efforts were made to bring them out. The Charity Hospital appealed to the directors of the gas company for light today, and offered to furnish the laborers required for the operation of the plant sufficient to furnish the hospital, but the directors refused, fearing for the safety of the plant if the strikers were opposed. The union freight haulers quit at noon, but the men employed in the cotton presses and yards are still at work, but the leaders claim the men simply worked the day out and will strike as soon as positive orders shall be given. The Cotton Exchange is not involved, but if the cotton trade is affected as proposed, the cotton men will join in strong measures, which employers propose to inaugurate Wednesday.

PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE.

The Pennsylvania semi-annual conference convened at the private residence of Brother Morgan Ketchum, Philippi, Barbour county, West Virginia, October 28th and 29th, being held in the state of West Virginia for the reason that there has been no Elders traveling in Pennsylvania for three or four years.

There were five meetings held and our Priesthood meeting, at which there were fifteen Elders present, and all of them had the privilege of bearing their testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel. The first principles of the Gospel were spoken upon in a very intelligent manner, showing that all of the Elders were making rapid progress. President Charles W. Stayner's remarks were very appropriate and listened to with much attention, and there was a good spirit throughout all the meetings.

The reports handed in by the different Elders showed the conference was in a flourishing condition as the following statistics will show: Number of Elders in conference, 11; number of meetings held, 355; number of baptisms, 19; number of children blessed, 19.

At the Priesthood meeting, held at the residence of Brother D. G. Carter, the following business was transacted: The general authorities of the Church and Charles W. Stayner as president of the Northwestern states mission; Joseph H. Denio as president and John Q. Critchlow as clerk of the Pennsylvania conference, were sustained by the brethren present.

Elders Wm. J. Henderson, Brigham Ricks and Myron S. Roundy, late arrivals from Zion, joined the Elders, increasing the number to fourteen. The Elders were then assigned to their fields of labor as follows: President Joseph H. Denio, D. H. Jacob, A. U. Miner and B. Ricks, Wetzel county, W. Va., P. O. address, Littleton. Orson Whitaker and Wm. J. Henderson, Tyler county, W. Va., P. O. Middlebourne.

Oscar Robinson and Thomas Houston, Tucker county, W. Va., P. O. Hannabush.

H. J. Meeks and M. S. Roundy, Calhoun county, W. Va., P. O. Grantsville.

Heber C. Keetch and John Q. Critchlow, Butler county, Penn.

President H. F. Thomas and Elder Geo. W. Johnson were honorably released to return home.

JOHN Q. CRITCHLOW,
Clerk of Conference.

THE WORK IN CALIFORNIA.

In April, 1891, I received a notice from the first council of Seventies to prepare for a mission to California and Western states. I arrived here to fill that mission on the 22nd of last August. The next day I started out and found a few Saints, who were pleased to see me. There was no place to hold meeting in, so Brother John P. Jorgensen proffered his house for that purpose; accordingly I appointed a meeting there for the following Sunday, and notified all the Saints I could find. I held meetings at Brother Jorgensen's for three Sundays, administered the Sacrament, and talked to and comforted the Saints all I could. The third Sunday they unanimously agreed that we should hire a hall, which I did for one month to hold one meeting in it on Sunday, for $10. A number of people who belonged to the Church, but had left Utah for different causes, mostly in search of work, came to our meetings; among them Brother Joseph Nattress and Dr. J. P. Van Denburgh. Sunday morning, October 2nd, I re-baptized Brother Nattress, and in the afternoon of the same day organized the Oakland branch in the Alameda Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, with Brother Joseph Nattress, president, and N. B. Phillips, clerk. On Sunday, the 9th of October, Brothers J. P. Van Denburgh and James F. Jorgensen were sustained as counselors to Brother Nattress, and I set them apart. Monday, the 10th October, I re-baptized Brother and Sister Van Denburgh. Brother Jorgensen was re-baptized last spring.

I can not give you the exact number in the branch but will do so in my next. We have had a few strangers to our meeting. After our first month was up we rented the hall for another month for Sunday mornings and evenings at $15 per month. We hold our meetings in Fraternal Hall on Washington street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets. Where we hold our meetings there are two halls in the same building; on Sundays we occupy one, and the Spiritualists the other, theirs being the largest, they charge 10 cents admission and their hall is filled; our meeting is free, no collections and we only get once in a while a stranger. We have a card in the hallway telling of our meeting.

On the 17th of October I went to Sacramento. I found some Saints there anxiously looking for me. I re-baptized two and baptized three children. I shall return there soon and organize a branch there. There are a very few inquiring after the truth; no one seems to have any time or inclination to listen to religion now; all they think or talk about is the election and politics. After election is over, if the weather will permit, I think I shall try outdoor preaching, and if I do nothing more I will at least have done my part.

With kind regards I remain your brother in the Gospel.

J. L. DALTON.

1158 1/2 East, Fourteenth Street, Oakland, Cal., Nov. 2, 1892.

SOUTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

This conference convened at a place prepared in the woods at Westville, Holmes County, Florida, on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 29th and 30th, 1892. President Alfred W. Peterson of the South Alabama conference presiding. There were present J. Golden Kimball of the Southern States mission, Alfred W. Peterson, President of the conference and traveling Elders John Pearson, Joseph Sorenson, Charles S. Cottam, Frank Croft, Wm. R. Ashby, Jr., Joseph Condie, Warren Harris, T. L. Alder, Carlos H. Loveland, Geo. H. Rogers and W. Owen Ridges.

Four meetings were held and an enjoyable time was had. Those present and within hearing heard much good sound doctrine from President Kimball and the Elders.

Three council meetings were held during the conference in which the Elders gave a report of their labors during the past year, and received much valuable and necessary instruction from President Kimball relating to their labors for the coming year.

Elders Pearson and Peterson were honorably released, having spent two years laboring in the South.

Elder Croft was chosen and unanimously sustained to succeed Elder Peterson as President of the conference, and the Elders were appointed to labor as follows: Elders Croft and Rogers in Lamden, Crenshaw and Butler counties, Alabama. Elders Sorenson and Loveland east part of Holmes county, Florida, and the east part of Geneva county, Alabama.

Elders Ashby and Alder, west part of Holmes county, Florida, and west part of Geneva county, Alabama.

Elders Cottam and Condie, Barber, Dale and Henry counties, Alabama.

Elders Ridges and Harris, Jackson county, Florida.

Conference adjourned for one year.

W. OWEN RIDGES,
Clerk of Conference.

DEATH OF ELLEN W. WINDER.

The public in general, and the friends of Bishop John R. Winder in particular, will be greatly shocked to learn of the death of his wife, which sad event occurred yesterday (Monday) afternoon, at half-past four o'clock. The deceased lady has had several severe attacks of heart trouble during the past three months, and the family had been warned that her death would in all likelihood be sudden, and might be looked for at any time. But no one likes to prepare for the death of a loved one; and the sorrow that came yesterday was quite as bitter as though there had been no expectation of it whatever. Moreover, Sister Winder had been unwontedly cheerful and well during the day; a neighbor had called and the two were engaged in pleasant conversation, when without any premonition, the grim visitor entered and, apparently without a pain, all was over.

Sister Ellen Walters Winder was born at Tiverton, Devonshire, on the 8th of April, 1822, and was married to John R. Winder in London, on the 24th of November, 1845. The couple emigrated to America in 1858, undertaking the tedious ocean voyage with their twin baby girls not yet three months old. They settled in the Fourteenth ward of this city and lived there until 1872, when they moved to the Twelfth ward, where they have resided ever since. Sister Winder was the mother of ten children, five of whom are living; she leaves also so twenty grandchildren, and by all these she will be sorely less missed and mourned than by others to whom she has acted the mother's part in all gentleness and conscientiousness. In her inclinations she avoided everything that had a tendency to display or prominence, while in her home life she was a model, and her example was prized by everyone that knew her. Complying with what would have been her own desire, it has been decided to hold the funeral at the residence—on Third East street between South Temple and First South streets. The house is not large enough to accommodate all who would like to attend, but the family feel that it is "home"—the place where the dear deceased lived and where she died.

A POLITICAL DEBATE.

The joint public debate between Hon. Frank J. Cannon and Hon. Joseph L. Rawlins closed in the Salt Lake Theater last night. That historic structure was probably never filled to such an extent with people before. From pit to dome every inch of space was occupied and hundreds of persons were denied admission. The Republicans sat upon the west side of the building and the Democrats upon the east. Speaking lasted three hours,

Mr. Cannon using the first hour, Mr. Rawlins the next hour and a half and Mr. Cannon closing in thirty minutes. As by tonight the debate will be a past issue only a brief synopsis of the speeches is given. Both candidates were enthusiastically cheered by their respective admirers.

HON. FRANK J. CANNON

was introduced by Charles Crane, chairman of the Republican Territorial committee. Mr. Cannon said in substance: The Republican party of Utah takes the ground that this is the first and only campaign held here based entirely on national issues. No other election is a criterion as to what the political faith of the people is. The two parties have their platforms in the field. On some things they agree. Those points I will not discuss. The proper subjects for debate are tariff, reciprocity, currency, a free ballot and an honest count. The Republicans wish to give to Utah protected wool and amnesty to such of her citizens who have been disfranchised by wholesale proscription. (Applause.)

Protective tariff is to us a charter of our industrial independence. I am in favor of the federation of all nations as favor of the nation, but we are not yet much as any man, but we are not yet prepared for it. All nations are looking towards America today and following in her wake by taking steps tending to the adoption of the protective system. Our friends on the other side say that the more we buy the richer we get, but I tell you if that theory is put into practice the sheriff will sell you out. They say the profits of the protective system goes to the rich and well born. I say in the sense in which they use the term there are no rich and well born in the United States. Men are, thank God, all born equal in this glorious country of ours. As soon as a man—a foreigner, sets foot upon our soil and breathes our atmosphere of freedom, he becomes a better man. The average price of tin is sixty-three per cent less today than it was in 1880. The distinguished gentleman who spoke for the Democracy in a debate the other night said that Major McKinley and his friends practically carried all the tin manufactured in the United States in their vest pockets. I notice that nearly every Democrat in the country wears a tin badge. Remember, then, the tin of which they wear was made was manufactured by Americans (applause) under the McKinley bill. But beneath this principle of cheapness is something nearer and dearer to us. Patriotism demands that we should protect our wives and children, our free school houses and American institutions and we are going to do it too. As to lead the price of it in Mexico is $17 a ton, in England $52, in the United States $77 and the only difference is the cost in labor. Every school house and brick block in Utah is a monument to lead. There are men among the opponents of Republicanism who at the eleventh hour are doing all they can to save their party from the demise that awaits it but I tell you their death bed repentance won't help them. (Laughter.)

The Republican party is in favor of the sheep industry. It has 2500 herders alone to protect in this Territory to say nothing to the owners. You can fool all the people a part of the time. You can fool a part of the people all the time; but you cannot fool all of the people all the time. (Laughter.) Reciprocity is not free trade. It is a principle whereby people are allowed to enter our gates and are compelled to buy from us if they would sell to us.

The Republican party is in favor of sound money.

Only the party that uses force at the ballot box is afraid of the force bill. (Laughter.) Sugar was made cheaper by the erection of the Utah sugar factory at Lehi last year; everybody knows that.

As to alleged church influence being used by the Republican party in this campaign, we deny it. Out of their own mouths our opponents have convicted themselves. If the Republican party is successful in Utah it will not be due to church influence but because the people will simply assert their honest belief, a thing they did not do one year ago when they looted the local Democracy a good proportion of their votes. (Prolonged applause.)

MR. RAWLINS

was introduced by Col. Lett. He said in part: The other night at Ogden our eloquent friend said that if it were not for the McKinley protection bill, attraction would lose its force and the earth would be hurled through space and be converted into star dust. (Laughter.) He now says if it were not for Mexican free trade our mines would all close down. The lead production of our mines is only about 100 per cent of the entire output, the other 9-10 being gold and silver. (Applause.) The price of lead has gone down, the production has gradually diminished since the enactment of the McKinley bill. The Republicans tell us that if the Democracy wins in Utah our mines will close down. They didn't close down here between 1883 and 1886. (Applause.) Since the McKinley bill went into effect the three largest mines in Utah were compelled to suspend business. (Renewed applause.) At Ogden the other night my friend quoted from a letter purporting to have been received by him from the well known hardware firm of E. C. Coffin & Co. of this city. When the gentleman read it I was following him in the Republican campaign book and found that the letter had been copied bodily from the book or the extract in the book from the letter. (Applause.) To the persons who are now engaged in manufacturing tin in the United States the people are compelled to pay $14,000,000 tribute annually.

The shoddy mills have greatly increased in number since the passage of the McKinley bill. England, the area of which is not much larger than Utah, sustains 33,000,000 head of sheep. In all the United States we have 44,000,000 head. The labor cost in the United States is less than elsewhere. Regarding bounties the Republican nominee has said that if the last Territorial Legislature had been Republican instead of Democratic, there would have been sugar factories in every county in Utah. (Laughter.) We Democrats don't believe in bounties. (Applause.) Last year the Lehi Sugar company was paid $42,000 in bounties. If that thing was extended indefinitely it would exhaust the Territory's finances. Democrats believe in home industries, but those industries must sustain themselves. When the farmer is unable to make both ends meet at the end of the year, he has just as much right to go before the Legislature and ask for an appropriation as an organized corporation has.

In 1857 the Republican party joined with the Democratic party in reducing the tariff.

Why is it that the millionaire manufacturers sell their products to foreign countries 35 per cent cheaper than they do to the American people? They are able to do so by the purchased provisions of the McKinley bill. The infamous system of Republican protection which has given to Carnegie wealth beyond the dreams of avarice is crushing the life out of the people. It has created the famous alliteration of tariff, trusts and tramps. The rich it makes richer and the poor poorer. It fills our prisons and poor houses.

Reciprocity is a kind of lulluludinal free trade, extending star off to the little island where Robinson Crusoe was stranded and one or two more such insignificant places.

Mr. Cannon has seen fit to refer to the election of one year ago. That is not an issue of the present campaign. He says that it was not a criterion. I don't know. The Democratic party has not resorted to the use of the Sunday schools (tremendous applause), or the Elders meetings to further their political ends. Neither have they dragged the names of men sacred to the Mormon people in the mire. (Cheers and applause from the Democratic side of the house.) They have endeavored to be honest in their campaign. They have issued no illustrated pamphlets as rewards of merit in the Sunday schools.

The speaker here raised sarcastically to what he termed an unholy alliance between the Republican leaders, Charles Crane and Judge Bennett on one side and Joseph F. and John Henry Smith and Bishop Clawson on the other. (Hisses and expressions of disgust came from the Republican side of the house.) Mr. Rawlins continued. You may sneer and protest but when men "steal the liver of the court of heaven to serve the devil" I have a right to tear off their masks and take them by their horns a d horsus and hold them up to public derision. In Provo the people have been told not to vote for Joseph Rawlins because he was an apostate and an agnostic.

At Mill Creek secret emissaries were sent among the people, I am told, to inform the people the same thing. The way to judge a man is by his last life. To the people I would say if you listened to the admonitions of such men, under such circumstances, Oh, Utah! poor Utah, who has been wandering in the wilderness of despair for forty years, hang your heads in shame. But I say that on the morning you will express your honest convictions at the polls. As to the result no man will yield greater obedience than myself. I want no advantage over a political opponent and will take none. As the light shines through the rifts of clouds after a storm, so do the signs of political freedom in Utah now appear. Men have mistaken the temper of the people with whom they have to deal. No trick or dark device will now deceive them. If I, for any purpose, desired revenge against the people I could have no greater wish than to see the schemes of such individuals as I have referred to, succeed. The Democrats have confined themselves to legitimate discussion in this campaign and with the result I will be content. (Applause.)

CANNON CLOSES.

I am not going to tear away the mask and show the faces of members of the Democratic party, prominent and otherwise, who hold ecclesiastical positions and are covered with hoofs and horns, who have used their Church influence in a certain direction. (Applause.) I have traveled more miles and made more speeches in this campaign than any other man and I never yet have made a personal attack on any member of the other party. I have heard of and read insinuating remarks made by the other candidate against my father, who was his client at the time he referred to and was supposedly under his protection. (Applause.) It belongs to us to show to the nation that we can stand on one broad political plane with the people of the United States. In every word the gentleman uttered in concluding his speech there was a threat against the people of Utah. He substantially said that unless they vote the Democratic ticket on the morrow they would be regarded by the nation as insincere. If that is so the Democratic party lied when it adopted its platform at Provo. (Applause.) One thing the Republican party will not do in this Territory if the Democratic party is successful and that is accuse the people of insincerity. (Applause.) It is said that for forty years we have wandered in the wilderness and that we will hang our heads in the valley of shame if a certain thing occurs. Tomorrow the people have the privilege of redeeming themselves. The Democracy has thought for a long time it owned us body and soul. I know that when the home rule bill was drafted its prospective officers were paraded out. (Applause.) Yes, people of Utah, we have wandered in the wilderness for forty years under the leadership of a Democratic Mes, but tomorrow you will be led into the promised land by a Republican Joshua. (Applause.)

The great gathering then dispersed amidst vociferous cheers for the respective candidates.

At Aspen, Colorado, it is reported diphtheria has become prevalent to an alarming extent. So far about fifty cases have been reported. The death rate is also large. On account of the epidemic all the public schools of the city have been closed for two weeks. A number of cases of scarlet fever are also reported.

A deal has been consummated in Boise City, Idaho, whereby the Maria, Black Hawk and Silver Bell mines at Mineral, owned by the Maria Mining company have been bonded for $100,000 for 90 days to W. Darlington, acting for a company of Colorado capitalists. These mines are the most valuable in the Mineral district.

AN INTERPRETER'S EXPERIENCES.

BLUFF, San Juan County, Utah,
October 30th, 1892.

For the last two days it has been raining nicely, the first we have had since May, except a small shower on the 8th inst. It is cloudy and raining a little yet. In the hot sandy places in our country it may start the grass if it turns warm, otherwise feed will be very scarce this winter.

The Navajoes are peaceable at present although there is always something brewing amongst this warlike tribe. They very recently killed a "bad medicine man" of this tribe whom they think was a wizard. Four children died very suddenly and they claim he did it. It is not so easy to assume the responsibility of being a doctor among them as among the whites. "Kill or cure," we think it is all right; but let one of them among the Indians make one or two failures and they are condemned and put out of the way themselves by being beaten to death with sticks and stones. They show great pluck as they never murmur nor complain while dying in this terrible manner. This makes the second one in my experience. The government will probably look into this affair and try and stop the superstitious custom, but it will not be without some trouble, as the Indians learn slowly that there is a law to which they are subject. This seems to be their hardest lesson. If the agents of the government would try to teach them concerning the law instead of trying to Christianize them—which is only temporary at best, there being no language in this district to properly lay before them Christianity as the gospel—it would be more profitable. But the "civilizers" do not adopt the simple mode of showing them in kindness something about laws and regulations amongst men, but nearly always threaten them with soldiers, etc., and invariably show a will to crush them if they do not yield—this, too, without sufficiently showing them the point. The Indians are very much like other human beings, they are easy to be led, but slow to be driven; and if there were more interpreters and fewer soldiers it would soon work a reformation.

There are, however, many military men who are well disposed towards them. Recently Lieut. Oden Gurovitz, of Fort Whipple, Arizona, with a posse of soldiers from Fort Wingate, N. M., traveled through the Navajo reservation with a view to ascertaining how to increase their water supply and farming facilities. This is indeed a step in the right direction. The Navajoes have suffered greatly this dry season in consequence of which, no doubt, they were in a measure compelled to trespass more or less upon the white settlers by moving off their reservation. Many complaints have been made this summer to the governor of Arizona and the Navajo agent—justly, too; but much charity has been exercised to the poor Indians, the people knowing their situation. There is one thing, however, the people can justly complain about, and that is the unscrupulous liquor vendor. Many serious consequences may result from this unlawful traffic, as an Indian is the most unreasonable and turbulent human being when drunk. I disarmed one at one time who with a Winchester rifle drove his own people away and threatened everybody else, who dared come near. The Indians tried to prevail on me not to go near as he would surely shoot me; but I saw the dangers that might occur to others and I slipped up to him gently, taking an empty bottle in my hand, which I showed him while approaching him cautiously; he thought I had more liquor for him and this served to disarm him. When I got near enough I jumped on him and disarmed him. I sat down on him for three hours; which nearly wore me out. When I had accomplished this nearly forty Indians came sailing out of the hills; they had fled like so many sheep before a lion. On another occasion I dragged a drunken Indian out of the Little Colorado river when dry. He had four bottles of liquor on his person and was completely helpless. A few minutes afterwards, the river raised fully five feet and he would certainly have been drowned.

I have seen an Indian offer $15 for one bottle of liquor. During shearing time they have plenty of money, and when they once get a taste of the firewater; it is quite profitable for dealers to trifle with the law and also endanger human life; but who cares, so long as the money is forthcoming.

Frontier life is not quite so dangerous as it used to be, but it is not unfair to say that many trials and difficulties and dangers still exist. This country ought to be settled up. There are many facilities here. Minerals have been found on the Blue mountain in great quantities, both gold and silver, and the miners are jubilant over their prospects and they are beginning to ship ore to Durango. Assays have been had as high as $1000 per ton. If this Utero-moval question was settled San Juan county would soon fill up, and still add wealth and population to blessed Utah.

Yours truly,

C. L. CHRISTENSEN.

WESTERN NEWS ITEMS:

Mr. John Cook, of Silverton, Colo., is the inventor of a new process for the treatment of silver ore.

Near Phoenix, Ariz., the Schaefer group of silver mine at White Hills has been sold to C. W. Perry and R. T. Root, mining men of Denver, for $250,000.

The creamery at Castle Rock, Colo., is turning out 1,500 pounds of butter a week. This, says an exchange, beats any previous September record since the creamery started.

Miss Cella Broderick, of Leadville, C., who was injured by the falling of the Sprague building in August last, has begun suit against the owner, W. S. Sprague of Denver, for $5,333.

Chas. Berryman, a student at the Agricultural College at Logan, broke his right collar bone Thursday evening while racing with his companion. Dr. Snow reduced the fracture.

Nearly one hundred car loads of potatoes have been shipped from this station up to the present time, says the Idaho Register, and there are one hundred car loads still in the country.

The Caldwell Tribune is authority for the statement that a movement is on foot to organize a military company in Caldwell (Idaho) and thus swell the ranks of the Idaho guards.

Robert Taylor, the sheep breeder, is now in Abbott, Nebraska, feeding $3,400 head of sheep which he shipped there from Rawlins, without the loss of one head, over the Union Pacific railroad.

Most of the shepherds around Wamsatch have left, having started for winter range several weeks earlier than usual. The dry season, it is stated, has caused an unusual scarcity of feed, hence the early departure.

Registration papers have been issued by Governor Willey of Idaho, for F. K. Jerome, who is now supposed to be in California. Jerome is wanted in Shoshone county for forgery. Deputy Sheriff McFadden, of that county, has been dispatched to California in search of the forger.

An fine deposit of asphalt has been found in Summit county. The find has been located and is about ten miles from the railroad, north of Park City. The owners believe they have a big deposit of that famous paving material and are having a careful test made to establish its quality and consequent market value.

It is reported that the Sierra Bonita Cattle company of Cochise county will distribute 4000 head of cattle along the Gila river bottoms. This means disaster to the small cattle owners. There is barely feed enough now to carry over what cattle there are along the river. Trouble may be expected.—Yuma Times.

One day last week Mrs. Sarah Box got a small silver in her finger. The wound at first was trifling, but instead of healing up at once it began to fester and grow worse. The hand and arm swelled and the lady suffered acute pains. The silver of wood seemed to carry poison into the blood with the foregoing result. The lady has been confined to her bed for several days.—Bingham City Bugler.

Al. Dougherty, when crossing the tracks at Rock Springs, Wyoming, on his way home the other evening, about six o'clock, was knocked down by some ruffian and robbed of his gold watch and $1.30, all the money he had in his pockets. He lay senseless until 8:30 o'clock before he recovered sufficiently to tell what had happened. He was cut on the forehead and bruised about the face.

A few nights ago officers made a successful raid on three lottery games in Chinatown, Los Angeles, Cal., capturing the entire outfit in each case and the principal owners of the companies, known as the Con Chung Ti, Lung Lee and Hong Lee. Two representatives of each of the lottery companies were brought to the station, where they deposited $100 apiece bail for their appearance.

William C. Bradley of Willow valley, Nev., (Cal.), a miner, aged 70 years, was found dead a few days ago in the road, where he had fallen when going home. Heart disease caused his death. He was a veteran of the Mexican and Piate wars and won distin-gushed honors for bravery. He served a term as postmaster in this city in the early sixties. He went to California from Tennessee in 1849.

William Parry McCoy was taken suddenly and violently ill in the Globe lodging house, at Denver, and before medical aid could be summoned, died. McCoy was a man of 50 in straitened circumstances. He went to Denver three weeks ago and had been going under the name of James Brown. He came from Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, California, where at one time he was well-to-do and a Knight Templar of high standing.

During the Democratic meeting at Dewayne, Mont., the other night, Ed. Burpin, Utah Northern agent at Divide, got into a row with a Cornishman whose friends started in to help him. Burpin has only one leg and was compelled to defend himself with his pocket-knife. He stabbed the Cornishman seven or eight times, then made good his escape, and is now on duty at his office. The Cornishman is laid up and awaiting the arrival of the doctor.—Lillon (Montana) Tribune.

The other night two footpads attacked Mike Conley, employed on the Montezuma mine at Aspen, Col., and robbed him of $40. He was pretty roughly handled but managed to notify the sheriff within a short time after the occurrence. The sheriff and deputy boarded the outgoing Rio Grande train, and captured the pair at Woody Station. They were brought to Aspen and placed in the county jail under the names of U. S. Fisher and Charles Ashton.

The shipping season in northern Montana has almost closed, the shipments of cattle being a trifle lighter than last year. On Friday the Bear Paw pool shipped sixteen cars from Chinook, and sixteen cars more for the same outfit today. There will probably be one more shipment from Fort Benton, and the shipments from other points will be by McNamara, Kohre, the Sun river and the Home Land, shipments closing early next month.—Stock Growers' Journal, Miles City.

Wm. McGuirk, a young man in the employ of the California Construction company, has been seriously injured while engaged in blasting rock on Mount Olympus. Through the premature explosion of a blasting cartridge McGuirk had the right side of his face badly lacerated and one of his hands torn open. His right eye was so badly cut that it had to be removed, and it is expected that he will lose the sight of his other eye. The attending physicians say his condition is very serious, as brain fever is likely to set in.

Judge Beatty has returned from San Francisco. Regarding the status of the appeal in the case of the Cour d'Alene miners now serving sentences in the county jail in this city (Boise) for contempt, Judge Beatty says that District Attorney Wood had filed his brief with the court of appeals on behalf of the United States, but that the attorneys for the conspirators had not filed their brief at the time he left San Francisco. He, however, thought the brief would be filed in a few days by Pat Reddy, of counsel for prisoners, who is now in San Francisco.

The farmers of Platte Valley have become very much interested in the sugar beet culture, and have a proposition from the officers of the beet sugar factory of Grand Island, Neb., to locate a plant at Brighton, providing the farmers will pledge themselves to raise the required number of acres of beets. A large meeting was held Saturday evening in the town hall, and enthusiastic speeches made and strong committees appointed, instructed to urge every farmer to pledge himself for as many acres as possible. Nearly enough has already been pledged.

J. K. Brim, who came in from Fish Springs this week, reports that the district is booming and that the mines there are developing into great producers. At the Utah mine the ore house is full of first-class ore. The shaft on this property is down 250 feet, and the ore gets larger and richer with depth, some of it being nearly pure horn silver. The Emma has two carloads of ore ready to ship that will run 40 per cent lead and 150 ounces in silver. This mine is making frequent shipments of high grade ore, and is looking well. So says the Nephi Courier.

Says the Winnemucca (Nevada) Silver State: Day before yesterday an old Chinaman was brought up from Rose Creek where he was found lying near the track, having evidently fallen or been thrown from the train. The Chinaman died yesterday from pneumonia, caused by exposure. He left the placer diggings near Utonville a few days ago with over $500 in gold dust. When picked up the gold was not on his person, and it is supposed that he had either been robbed or buried the treasure. The matter should be fully investigated, as it is not improbable that a crime has been committed.

When one of the W. C. T. U. excursion trains stopped yesterday (Nov. 4th), at the Idaho Springs depot, Col., there was quite a crowd of school children to get a view of the visitors. One of the ladies of the excursion, addressing the little ones said, "I suppose you are all for temperance hold up your hands." All except one little girl held up their hands. Turning sharply to the exception mentioned, the good lady said, "Aren't you for temperance?" "No," replied the little tot, "I am for free coinage." The train moved out, while the little ones cheered for Weaver.

Mr. Harry I. Jones, a mining expert and mineralogist from Colorado, has been looking over the mining field here, during the week, and while inspecting some abandoned workings on the southeast slope of Lookout mountain, two miles east of town, he discovered a vein of argentiferous wulfenite, the pay streak of which is over six inches wide. This mineral, besides possessing a real commercial value, is also valuable because of its exceeding rarity, being found only in small quantities in both this county and Europe. Mr. Jones is visiting Bellevue in the interests of St. Louis and Colorado capitalists.—Bellevue (Idaho) Herald.

A correspondent of the El Paso

Times writes from Deming regarding the boundary survey, in the course of which he says: Col. Barlow, chief in charge of the United States boundary commission, now surveying and placing the monuments along the international line, left here this morning, accompanied by his family, for the camp of the commission, to thoroughly investigate the work being done, and also to incidentally supply the members with their pay for the last month. Col. Barlow is enthusiastic at the speed being made in the survey of the line, and estimates that several months will be gained on the original calculations as to the time necessary to complete the operations.

Lieut. Bean with a detachment of ten men and two Indian scouts came in this afternoon from the line. The lieutenant has been scouting along the border in hopes of cutting fresh Indian signs. He left Bowie immediately after the news was brought there of the man being killed by Apaches in the Swissheim mountains. He took the trail and followed them to the line. He believes that there were four bucks, a squaw and two children in the party, and thinks that Kild was not one of them. He thinks it altogether probable that the killing which took place near Morend last Friday was done by the same renegades who, after going into Sonora, went east and crossed the line.—Prospector (Arizona).

Little Antone Woods, the 11-year-old murderer of Joseph Smith, spent the day yesterday apparently happy, under Matron Havens' care at the county jail. His first appearance produced the impression that he had been brought up like a little animal. His parents at least share the moral responsibility of his crime. The only other case in the history of Colorado in which a boy of tender years has used a weapon with such deadly effect is when Adolph Cole, a boy of 12, shot and killed E. S. Beale, a deaf mute, for beating his mother. This occurred on June 21, 1886, at 610 Hallock street. Public sentiment acquitted this boy.—Denver News.

Smith, the man who was sent to the Idaho penitentiary a few months ago for attempting to wreck a train on the Oregon Short Line near Caldwell, has become violently insane. For two or three days Smith acted in a strange manner. He entered his cell a day or two ago, stripped off all his clothes and beat his face and breast with his fist until he was covered with blood. The guard, attracted by the noise, entered Smith's cell and found the crazy convict deliberately giving himself a shampoo with the blood that flowed freely from his bruised face and breast. Smith was speedily overpowered and has been taken to the insane asylum at Blackfoot.

A few days ago, says the Reno (Nevada) Gazette, the flooring of the storage room of the Riverside flouring mill gave way and precipitated between 18,000 and 20,000 bushels of wheat to the ground. It appears that the netter support was not sufficient for the weight upon the flooring, hence the accident. The pile of grain so suddenly dumped is as large as a small haystack, and a considerable portion rolled into the ditch thirty yards from the building, and was carried away. The scene at the mill on this day was one of unusual bustle and activity. Sixty men are employed shoveling the grain into sacks and carrying them into the mill. Excepting the flooring the building is not injured. The loss in grain, damage to the building, etc., is estimated at from $3,000 to $4,000.

A week ago, says the Ploche Record, a young man named M. P. Jorgenson, who was well and favorably known in this section, lost his life in a somewhat singular manner. It appears that he and some companions left Helena on a hunting trip to Pahrnagat lake, and were returning when the accident occurred. Jorgenson told the driver of the wagon in which he was that he would lay down in the bottom of the vehicle, and in changing position his pistol dropped and exploded, the ball entering his body above the navel, and ranging upward, entered the heart. He never spoke, death being instantaneous.

Kit Carson, Jr., is on trial at Las Animas, Colorado. He is a son of the famous scout of that name. The crime with which he is charged is the murder of his mother-in-law, Mrs. William Richards, wife of old Billy Richards of Nine Mile. He is also charged with an assault with intent to commit murder on his father-in-law. It was the 10th of last December, about a year ago, that Nine Mile bottom was thrown into a fever of excitement by the commission of what is believed to be one of the most bloody crimes ever committed in that section. In the afternoon of that day young Kit Carson came to the house of old Billy Richards, and soon after Mrs. Richards lay dead with a bullet in the back of her head, and a bullet through his hips, and young Carson was a fugitive from justice.

An unusual amount of interest has been created in Western Colorado during the past two months over the mining outlook in this vicinity, says the Denver News. Many new discoveries have been made which are of such a character is richness that many prospectors and speculators have come in from other camps. The output is greater than ever, and here, as well as in the Pitkin district, shipments will be continued all winter. At the latter camp the outlook is even better than here. The Jim Blaine has just uncovered on the second contact an immense body of ore which runs 47 ounces in silver and 50 per cent in lead. The Cleopatra and Little Tycoon have bodies of ore which promise with further developments to show ore worth hundreds of dollars. The Hindu, in the same locality, is making extensive developments and has thousands of tons in sight, which is valued at $140 per ton, while some ore from this property runs up to over $1,800 per ton. These mines are mostly owned by parties for Halifax, N. S., and Boston, who have the greatest faith in their future.

CANAJOHARIE, N. Y., Nov. 8.—A train went bound on the West Shore railroad struck four men today and killed two of them instantly. The others will die. It is said the men were under the influence of liquor.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—I called today at both the Democratic and Republican national headquarters to obtain the very latest estimate of both party managers on the eve of the great battle. As the representative of the DESERET NEWS I was courteously received, and the party managers at both places seemed interested to obtain the latest tidings as to how Utah will probably cast her vote. Mr. Harrity, chairman of the Democratic committee, readily handed out the following official opinion as to how he thought Cleveland would win the election: Solid South, 159; New York, 38; Indiana, 15; New Jersey, 10; Connecticut, 6; Wisconsin, 12; Michigan, 6; total, 244. "I acknowledge that Wisconsin and Connecticut are doubtful," said Mr. Harrity frankly, "but we can throw them out and still win by three votes."

Chairman Carter of the Republican committee would give no figures for the press, merely saying that the Democratic claims were preposterous, and that Harrison would surely win by a safe majority. Late today, however, members of the Republican committee furnished a table showing that they expect Harrison to secure 231 votes. In the list of states claimed is every Northern state except New York, which they concede is doubtful, and every Western state except Nevada, which they concede to Weaver. They allow Weaver nothing else whatever. They claim nine votes in Michigan. The same bulletin of the Republicans claims that West Virginia and Delaware are as doubtful as New York is for the Democrats. As this is the first admission yet made by the Republicans that New York is in doubt, the Democrats are jubilant. They point to the narrow margin (nine votes) between defeat and victory on the Republicans' own admission and say that Indiana's fifteen votes alone can be relied on to wipe that out, to say nothing of Connecticut or any of the western states where the Democratic fusion with Weaver is counted on to take the votes from Harrison.

Bets on New York state going Democratic are now freely offered at 2 to 1, with few takers. Governor Flower insists that Cleveland's plurality over Harrison in this state will be 50,000; other Democratic leaders say 20,000 and many even bets are made on the latter proposition.

At the Republican headquarters I met that staunch republican Colonel Shaughnessy, and asked him for an opinion on the result. He said frankly he thought Cleveland would carry New York state, but that he thought the Republicans could win without her. Bets are about even on the general result, though a few wagers were made today at the Hoffman House of $1000 to $900 on Cleveland. Odds are 10 to 8 on Cleveland's carrying Indiana.

The city is very quiet, old politicians say quieter than ever its before in history on the day before an election. It is impossible to gain any idea as to the result from reading the papers. The Democratic organs claim that Cleveland's election is certain.

the Republicans say there is no manner of doubt that Harrison will be the man of destiny. As far as public opinion can be indicated by the bets being made, it must be admitted the preponderance leans to the side of Cleveland.

MORTALITY STATEMENT.

Following is the monthly report of the health department of this city for October. Population (estimated), 80,000. Annual death rate per 1,000, 12:40:

Cause of Death.	No.
Accident.....	1
Asphyxiation.....	1
Bowels, inflammation of.....	1
Bright's Disease.....	2
Bronchitis, Capillary.....	1
Cholera Infantum.....	10
Consumption.....	3
Convulsions.....	1
Croup.....	1
Diphtheria.....	1
Etiocolitis.....	5
Heart Failure.....	1
Hemorrhage, Cerebral.....	1
Heart Disease.....	4
Insanition.....	2
Jaudice.....	1
Malaria.....	4
Malnutrition.....	1
Meningitis, Cerebro-Spinal.....	2
Operation.....	2
Pneumonia.....	2
Peritonitis.....	1
Pleurisy.....	1
Paralysis.....	1
Puerperal Fever.....	1
Septicemia.....	3
Typhoid Fever.....	3
Senile Debility.....	4
Total.....	92

AGE.	SEX COLOR.		Total.
	Male.	Female.
Under 1 year.....	16	23	39
Between year and 5 years.....	6	8	14
" 5 " 10 ".....	3	2	5
" 10 " 20 ".....	1	0	1
" 20 " 30 ".....	1	1	2
" 30 " 40 ".....	2	0	2
" 40 " 50 ".....	2	1	3
" 50 " 60 ".....	4	0	4
" 60 " 70 ".....	2	2	4
" 70 " 80 ".....	2	4	6
" 80 " 90 ".....	1	2	3
" 90 " 100 ".....	0	0	0
Unknown.....	6	1	7
Total.....	45	47	92

Still born (not included in death rate) 8.
Residents of the city (1 year and over) 51;
non-residents (under 1 year) 11; unknown, 0;
total 62.

Physicians in attendance at 51 deaths; no physician in attendance at 11 deaths; total, 62.

Received for interment from points outside of city limits, 12.

HOW SPONGES ARE GATHERED.

[Scribner.]

Arrived at what he fancies may prove a profitable ground, the captain of a sponging schooner sends out a boat to investigate, meantime standing off and on until a discovery is reported. Then all hands, save only the cook, or, if she is a large vessel, the captain and cook, tumble into small boats and the fishing—if fishing it can be called—is begun.

The vessel has towed astern just half as many boats as she has men in her crew, and now two men are assigned to each boat. One of them stands well aft and souls with a long oar, while the other bends low over one of the gunwales in a most constrained position, and with his head buried in a water-glass eagerly scans the bottom as he is moved slowly over it. The water-glass is simply a wooden bucket, having a glass bottom, that is held an inch or so below the ruffled surface, and in these clear waters plainly reveals all submerged objects to a depth of forty or fifty feet. As a further aid in overcoming ripple or moderate waves, each small boat is provided with a bottle of oil so hung over the bow as to slowly drip its contents into the water.

Through his magic glass the observer sees darting fish, richly tinted sea-fans and feathers, branching coral, gorgeous anemones, bristling sea-porcupines, and the myriad other curious tenants of these tropic waters. While seeing this he makes no sign, until a small dark object that, to the untried eye, differs in no respect from the loggerheads surrounding it, comes within his range of vision. Then, without removing his gaze, he reaches for the long-handled sponge-buck or rake lying behind him, and using it with one hand, quickly tears from the bottom a black, slimy mass, that he triumphantly pronounces to be a sheep-wool or grass sponge of the first quality.

VENICE.

[Lippencott's.]

If one enters Venice by night when the moon is making a path of silver down the Grand Canal, flooding with light the palaces whose dazzling reflections in the water render it hard to tell where the reality ends and the image begins, piercing the dim mazes of the side-canal, lifting the Rialto into heights of ethereal splendor, and transforming into fairy-like structures even the little bridges, one has, of course, seen the sea-city in a way that fills and enchants. Black gondolas with a lamp at their prow steal silently out of the shadows, draw up at marble stairs for a single figure to alight, then pass again into shadow. What silence, what mystery, what beauty! Even on a night without a moon, Venice is full of charm. The familiar domes, turrets, bell-towers are etched against the dark blue star-spangled sky; the lights on the Piazzetta twinkle magically; from the Piazza comes a strain played by horns and clarionets, breathing the human passion and feeling of the moving crowds going up and down the square and the groups eating loaves at Florin's; the boats hang up their blue and crimson cressets flickering in long lines across the bay; the men-of-war in the harbor send up signal rockets which seem to run along the rigging as they gem the night with violet, gold, white and scarlet; the evening gun sounds from the training-ship and around us blows the wind from the Adriatic which the fishermen say is the "sea calling."

But, in spite of the subtle beauty of these impressions, one really sees Venice only when one sees her color. Yet perhaps on coming down the Grand Canal at mid-day, one's consciousness is not so absolutely of intense color as of transience. All the surface seem to give out vibrations of light. The water, the palaces, the sky, the farthest reaches of the lagoons, are all opalescent.

But fairest to me was Venice one afternoon towards sunset, when I was returning in a gondola from the Lido. Midway in crossing the bay Achilles dropped his oar, and for a time we floated with a feeling of being suspended between the gently heaving sea of glass and the far-off sky, each suffused with softest rose-color. In front of us was Venice, the iridescent domes and minarets of St. Marks seeming to be drawn up into the amber and crimson of the sunset, the lovely outlines intensified and etherealized. Dark and rayless the Campanile reared its solemn height above the aerial mosque, and all the many turrets and spires and towers of the city that took shape against the mellow blendings of the west. Then at our left across the sea of rose and pearl rose the Euganean hills, their pyramids, towers and cones standing out in clear relief above the shining water-line against the gem-like blue of the sky.

NOTES.

FROM ONE or the other political party there is going to be a big demand for crew-meat less than one week hence.

ALMOST FOUR tons of paper will be required for the 11,874,000 ballots to be used in New York state. This would seem to assure a heavy vote.

PHOEBE COUZINS is reported as having said in London (England) the other day that the time had come for the women to use dynamite if they could not get their rights any other way. Phoebe talks like an exasperated mine owner.

THE CHICAGO patriot whose ambition wasn't satisfied until he had registered seven times in one day last week, received the judge's admonition, "Fined $50," with the observation that seven aliases was his unlucky number anyway.

THE LAST child of the Emperor of Germany, at whose christening there was so much pomp and such a display of royal clemency, is not only the first girl in a family of seven, but she is the first daughter that has been born to a sovereign of Prussia in a hundred years.

GENERAL ADLAI E. STEVENSON, the Democratic candidate for Vice President, gives to the public his letter of acceptance, a synopsis of which appears in the telegraphic columns of the NEWS to-day. This is the last literature of the kind the public will see for about four years.

THE FREQUENCY of burglaries in this city and the large measure of immunity enjoyed by the offenders suggest that perhaps it would promote the general welfare if the police would stop the hot pursuit of clues and begin the hot pursuit of burglars.

THIS MORNING'S dispatches announce that Col. Ham will address a Democratic rally in New York this week. Although coming from Georgia, where Gen. Weaver and Mrs. Lense fared so poorly, it is understood that for this occasion Mr. Ham will be served without eggs.

JAMES McCORMICK, of Seymour, Indiana, is within a few days of 100 years old and is not preparing for funeral yet by any means. He claims to distinctly remember a conversation with George Washington, but lets it off without appling his story by claiming to have been an officer in the former's command.

J. WESLEY HILL, the clerical seamen thief who recently conferred a boon upon the city of Ogden and the Methodists of Utah by moving to another field, has been unwinding one of his gory tales on the "Monstrosities of Mormonism" before his new flock in Montana. Of course the effort to remove his own than the gable of a parrot can be called the product of his brain; and from the published synopsis which has been received it is evident that Rev. Hill is still without the decency to use quotation marks or to tell where he got his striking passages.

WHATEVER EVILS and weakness may be charged against the Turks, they must be credited with at least one good idea. Every Mussulman, however high his rank, from the sultan down to the lowest dervish, is compelled to have a trade. The grandfather of the present sultan was a toothpickmaker. The boatman, porter or groom is eligible to the grade of pasha. The butcher of today may be the generalissimo of tomorrow, and the lowest slave may become grand vizier.

ONE OF our Esquimaux (lady) visitors to the World's Fair has presented her lord and master particularly and this part of the globe generally with a daughter. The offspring was duly christened Columbia Susan. Not a strictly euphonious or decidedly taking name, except the first part of it, but it shows the good sense of the parents all the same. They did in the new land a great many things they are not accustomed to and it is the part of wisdom in them to partake of the simpler ones; hence Susan, Esquimaux, or Gladys, or Hazel, or Greenland, or even Maude, might have proved fatal.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Ex-Secretary Blaine came over to the White House in a cab this afternoon, and had an interview with the President for the first time since his return to Washington.

ASHLAND, Ore., Nov. 7.—Captain Thomas Smith, prominent Oregon pioneer, died here last week, aged 51 years. Captain Smith came to Oregon in 1851, and was a conspicuous figure in the early history of the state. He was a member of the territorial legislature and was a captain of volunteers in the Rogue river Indian war in the early fifties. About two years ago he was stricken with partial paralysis and has been helpless since.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, Nov. 7.—Several large bands of Pine Ridge agency Sioux, who were recently paid money for cattle turned over to the government for rations, have left the reservation and are now camped near Charles and Hay Springs, Neb., where they are buying large quantities of supplies from the railroad stores.

A VIKING BOLD.

Bjarni, son of Heriulf Bardsen, sailed his clinker-built ship through a fog and inadvertently discovered America 500 years before the Genoese gained these shores.

This is as certain as anything, taken on the word of a poet, can be. Saga and legend—there is no other proof beyond a certain large credibility. But if one is to accept King Alfred on the evidence of the Chronicles, there is no reason for refusing to acknowledge Bjarni, the son of Heriulf. The matter has been threshed out by the antiquaries and professors. Torfeus and Rafn, Miller, Anderson and Gravier, among a score of others, have argued the question to the bone. These learned men do not agree on details. But there are no longer any dissentient voices on the main fact at issue—that the vikings sailed into American harbors in the tenth century. It is possible that future research may upset this theory, but at present it is sound and accepted. So says the Mail and Express.

There is an ill-regulated theory that certain Irishmen precede Columbus in his voyage of discovery. It has been bolstered up with certain specious facts by a learned man of Dublin. The professors will have none of it, however.

The vikings were stark and savage adventurers, sailing in all waters and robbing in all lands. They entered every port in England; they ravaged Scotland; they sailed up French rivers—Charlemagne wept at seeing their dark ships. They carried their forays into Africa. They were pirates, robbers, corsairs, thieves. The Norse Sagas read like a Newgate calendar, done by John Milton. Through all the black turbulence of crime and knavery there is heard a note of high quality—heroic, Homeric. There is something of this in the saga of the Worm Sea—a sea the Norse men fancied, where worms which would bore through the timbers of the ship until she sank swarmed in all the waves.

"Bjarni Grimalson was driven with his ship into the Irish Ocean, and they came into a worm sea and straightway began the ship to sink under them. One boat they had, which was smeared with seal oil, for the sea worms do not attack that. They went into the boat and then saw that it could not hold them all. Then said Bjarni: 'Since the boat cannot give room to more than half of our men it is my counsel that lots should be drawn for those to go in the boat, for it shall not be according to rank.' This thought they all so high-minded an offer that no one would speak against it. Then did they so that lots were drawn, and it fell upon Bjarni to go into the boat and the half of the men with him, for the boat had not room for more. But when they had gone into the boat, then said an Icelandic man who was in the ship and had come with Bjarni from Iceland, 'Dost thou intend, Bjarni, to separate from me here?' Bjarni answered, 'so it falls out.' Then said the other, 'Very different was thy promise to my father, when I went with thee from Iceland, then thus to abandon me, for thou saidst we should both share the same fate.' Bjarni replied, 'It shall not be thus. Go thou down into the boat and I will go up into the ship, since I see that thou art so desirous to live.' Then went Bjarni up into the ship, but this man down into the boat, and after that they continued their voyage until they came to Dublin, in Ireland, and told there these things. But it is most people's belief that Bjarni and his companions were lost in the worm sea, for nothing was heard of them since that time."

By kindly acts of this sort these pirates proved themselves akin to Byron's corsair, with his one virtue, and Mr. Gilbert's operate orphans. What manner of ship they sailed in you may see by visiting the museum in Christiania or by reading a book published by Prof. Anderson, of the University of Wisconsin. One of them dug out of the blue clay where it had lain for ten centuries may stand for a model. She is 78 feet long at her greatest length; 17 feet a her greatest width. She has twenty ribs; draws less than four feet of water; is clinker-built; carries one forty-foot mast; has sixteen slits on either side through which the twenty-foot oars swung. The only peculiarity the marine editor would notice is that her rudder was on the right side—the starboard side, if you please, and thence, "starboard." The rudder was a large wooden blade fastened to a piece of timber projecting a foot from the side of the vessel.

II.

Red Erik was outlawed in Iceland, and sailing abroad to find a new home discovered Greenland. It was not an especially fertile land, but said he, "People will be attracted thither if it has a good name." He established a colony there in 986 A. D. Among the colonists there was a man named Heriulf Bardsen. After a few months his son Bjarni determined to follow him. He sailed westward with his sea rovers into fog and tempest, and in the end came to a land where low wooded shore hills crowded down to the sea. This land he knew well was not Greenland. He was in search of a father and not of a continent, so he put to sea again.

In a few days he came to another land, low-lying, flat and wooded. This, again, he knew was not Greenland, for there were no glaciers. He stood out to sea in a southwest wind for two days, and sighted land again—this time a white, mountainous land with glaciers. Four days more they sailed, and came to Greenland. Bjarni's search for a father ended more happily than Japhet's. He settled in the colony, and sold his boat to Leif. Leif, with a crew of thirty-five men, set out to explore these lands seen by Bjarni.

They sailed to the white, mountainous land with glaciers, named it Helluland and sailed on. They came to another land and named it Markland and sailed on. A northwest wind bore them on for two days, and they came to a land with a island lying to the north of it. Between these a tide raced, and they sailed with it into a river, and then into a lake. They went ashore and camped for some time. They built houses and passed the winter there. There was salmon in the lake and deer in the wood. The climate was milder than that of Greenland, and day and night were more nearly equal. Tyrker, a German sailor who was with the party, discovered one day grape vines and grapes in the woods. In the spring they sailed back to Greenland.

The land they called, by reason of the grapes they had found, Vinland, or wine land.

A third trip was made by Leif's brother, Thorwald. He sailed up the river into the lake and found the huts of Leif. He and his men spent two winters there. They met a party of natives one day and slew all of them but one, who escaped. A few days later there came a fleet of skin-covered canoes, filled with natives. There was a fierce battle and Thorwald was slain. They buried him on a cape that jutted into the sea north of the river's mouth and sailed away to Greenland.

The next expedition was on a large scale. Karlsefne, a wealthy Norwegian, led out a colony of sixty men and five women. They found grapes and fields of wild corn, fish and deer. They traded with the high-cheeked, coarse-haired natives. That winter Karlsefne's wife had a child, who was called Snorri. Scandinavian antiquaries say that the sculptor Thorwaldsen was one of his descendants. In the spring the colony returned to Iceland. One more attempt was made to colonize Vinland, but it was unsuccessful.

After the year 1013 it is not probable that it was visited by Europeans until Columbus drew the attention of Spanish adventurers to the forgotten land.

III.

There is little adventure about these early voyages of the vikings. They are as much a part of authentic history as the doings, good and ill, of King's Knut or Charlemagne. The last writer of authority on the subject is Mr. Edward John Payne, of University College, Oxford. In the first volume of his "History of America," published a week or two ago, he shows how inevitable it was that the Norsemen, in the swing of the great Arctic current, should be led to America.

Their voyages are noticed in no fewer than seventeen ancient Icelandic documents. Mr. Payne points out that Adam, of Bremen, writing in the twelfth century, speaks of the new-found island in the great seas as a matter of certain knowledge from Danish sources, and mentions the voyages of Frieslanders thither in the preceding century.

The chief significance of these discoveries, sung in sagas and pictured in fabulous maps, lies in the fact that some knowledge of them must have been abroad in Western Europe; that at all events some remembrance of them survived to the time of Columbus.

A number of fanciful attempts to identify the landing place of the Norse discoverers were made a number of years ago. At one time the old mill at Newport, R. I., was pitched upon as a ruin of the settlement, but it was found that the mill had been built by Gov. Benedict Arnold, and this theory went to the ground. The Dighton rock and other stones, scratched with Indian hieroglyphics, were assumed to be records of these Norse adventurers, but a very little inquiry upset the assumption.

There is little probability that the harbor into which Bjarni Bardsen sent his high-prowed boat will ever be identified. One fact stands out of all the latter of theories and arguments: he discovered America. What part of America he discovered is a matter of less amount. That Columbus may have heard of this vaguely as one hears the gossip of seamen, is more than possible, but there is small reason to believe that he was influenced by it.

The fact that northward among the icy seas there was an island—Vinland, Nya Land or the New Land as the fourteenth century mapmakers called it—played no part in his calculations. When he sailed his caravels out against the pink dawn it was with an assured conviction, and a heroic purpose to find—"India, gold and rhubarb, mastic and slaves."

His greatness is seen in those long years of study which established his faith that the way to India lay across the unsailed western seas. He died unconvinced of the fact that he had found a new continent. He regarded himself not as the discoverer of a new world, but as a missionary of the gospel to the Indies, and as one who was to conquer the opulent East for Leon and Castile.

These two discoveries are not to be compared.

The Norse corsairs, coasting from Norway to Scotland, from Scotland to Iceland, from Iceland to Greenland, were caught in the grip of the currents that race toward the North American shore, and their discovery was one of the inevitable, unreasonable things of chance.

The dogmatic, sublime Genovese set sail with an assured purpose and upon a well grounded conviction. He did not gain the Indies, to be sure. This merely proved that his chain of logic was too short; not that it was badly linked. So for the present his name will not be written out to make a place for that of Bjarni, the son of Heriulf Bardson.

VANCE THOMPSON.

PRIZE ESSAYS.

If one were to study the characteristic features of a locality, with a view to making it his home, the foremost consideration would undoubtedly be the moisture or rainfall.

When the Pioneers were en route for this country, Utah was described to them as a barren waste, almost devoid of vegetation. Upon entering Salt Lake valley they found this to be true, and it did not require a great length of time to ascertain the cause.

Utah lies in the very heart of the arid region of the United States, and it is not surprising that early travelers who had crossed it regarded it as undesirable, if not entirely unfit for human habitation.

Of the 82,000 square miles contained within the boundaries of Utah, only a small percentage can be brought under cultivation.

Unlike the largest portion of Uncle Sam's domain, Utah, with the exception of a small tract lying at the base of the Wasatch mountains between Farmington and Brigham City, depends entirely, for her farm products, upon irrigation.

The farming districts lie, for the most part, along the principal rivers or mountain streams. These are subject to great fluctuations resulting from the snows piled up in the mountains during the winter, which melt in May and June and swell the rivers to such proportions that great damage is sometimes done to property and crops.

Careful observations have shown that there has been an almost steady increase in the rainfall since the first settlement of this Territory. It is now 1.4 inches greater than during the first years of the settlement.

Several theories have been advanced to account for this fact. Some have said that it was owing to the interposition of Divine Providence in behalf of the Latter-day Saints. Some think it is due to the laying of railroad tracks and telegraph lines, but fail to show in what way this would affect the climate. Others incline to the volcanic theory, and still others to the climatic theory. But evidently the true explanation lies in what is known as the theory of human agencies.

In 1850 the area of Great Salt Lake was 1750 square miles, while in 1865 it had increased to 2166 square miles, showing that there had been a very material increase in the volume of water contained in the Lake.

It is also ascertained that there has been an increase in the amount of water carried by the rivers into the Lake.

It has been frequently noticed that wherever a settlement is established there follows an increase of the water supply.

Now let us inquire how man has modified the conditions by which the water supply is regulated or controlled. All the moisture that falls in Utah, either in the form of rain or snow, returns eventually to the air. A part is absorbed by vegetation and soil, only to be given again to the air; another part runs from the surface in streams; and still another part sinks into the ground and afterward emerges as springs.

A part of the water in the streams is taken up by the porous soils, and the remainder flows into Great Salt Lake.

Now the theory of human agencies supposes that man has modified these conditions in three different ways: First, by the cultivation of the soil; second, by the raising of herds; and third, by the cutting of trees.

By plowing the soil man has made it more porous and absorbent, so that a smaller percentage of the shower runs off. The farmer has also diverted the water from the streams and for irrigation purposes, has spread it over the land, from which it is absorbed by the air.

Cattle, horses and sheep have ranged over large sections of country and have destroyed or reduced the native grasses, thus removing all obstruction from the way of the water in finding its way to the streams instead of sinking.

The cutting of trees has also had the effect of increasing the streams. The removal of the foliage allows that part of the moisture which formerly fell on it and was thence evaporated, to reach the ground and run off in rills.

But the greatest source of increase in moisture lies in the ever extending area of vegetation, especially in the planting of trees. Every tree is a natural artesian well drawing daily two tons of water from deep down in the earth and scattering it as vapor through its leaves. This is the main source of dew. It is believed that the rains falling shortly after cutting the first crop of lucern are mainly due to the moisture given off by the lucern in becoming hay.

Accordingly Congress passed a law known as the "Timber Culture Act" for the encouragement of tree culture. The object is to increase the area of timber land for the purpose of augmenting the fall of rain.

Utah is almost wholly dependant upon local evaporation for her rainfall. Situated as we are, remote from large bodies of water, and surrounded by towering ranges of mountains, the moisture carried by the winds is nearly all precipitated before reaching the Great Basin. And since the circulation of the moisture within the Great Basin is almost purely local, we may conclude that the farmer has been instrumental only in making that circulation more rapid, by removing obstructions.

If it is true that human agencies have been the cause of the increase in the water supply, the prospect for the future is indeed bright. For we may predict a still greater increase as the West becomes more thickly peopled.

This subject is worthy of study, for by systematic efforts the work of the farmer may be rendered still more effective in increasing the amount of moisture.

P. C. EVANS, Lehi, Utah.

THE SOUTH POLE.

There sailed from the northern port of Dundee on Sept. 6, two of a small fleet of four whaling vessels—the other two sailed on the 8th—the fate of which will be followed with considerable interest. The mission, it is true, is mainly a commercial and prosaic one; but there are circumstances surrounding it which invest it with something of the halo of romance, says the New York Advertiser. The vessels are not bound for the icy waters of the north, which, within certain well defined limits at all events, are fairly familiar to mariners. Their destination is the Antarctic seas, a region of the globe to which there still clings much of the mystery and fascination which ever belongs to the unknown.

The voyage may, indeed, be said to be almost entirely one of discovery, and it is this fact which has attracted so much attention to the departure of the four Dundee whalers, and which will cause many, both in this country and elsewhere, to look with more than usual anxiety for their safe return.

For a number of years past the "industry" associated with the shores of Greenland, and which at one time was of considerable importance, has been steadily on the decline. There was much capital invested in it, but latterly there has been little or no return, and often there has been a very serious loss.

Enterprise, however, knows no limits and it cannot find scope in any part of the world. It is only in accordance with the fitness of things that this last expedition to "new ground" should have been fitted out by British capital and be dominated by British pluck. Men experienced in such matters believe that the harvest which is now denied them in the far North will be found in the far South, and should this opinion be confirmed the discovery will be one of considerable importance. The strange thing is that serious attention has never been directed to this region before. It is true that half a century ago a London merchant did make some sort of an attempt to explore, from a commercial point of view, the Antarctic ocean, and obtained from the government of the day a grant of the Auckland Islands, the south of New Zealand, as a basis of operations; but this first attempt proved a failure, and he never made another. Whatever may be the ultimate result of the present expedition, it will certainly not be a disap-done till every effort has been made that can be made to insure its success.

The great silent sea into which the four Dundee whalers will sail is, as we have said, comparatively unexplored. While toward the North Pole the limits of the unknown have been pushed back considerably farther than 80 deg. north latitude, the south Polar region within the Antarctic circle is, with certain small exceptions, still blank on the world's map. Sir John Ross, half a century ago, carried out perhaps the most systematic examination of the expanse that has been made; but the challenger during the famous cruise only just crossed the Antarctic circle, so that there is still ample opportunity for the wresting of some of nature's secrets from their hiding places in the vast icefields of the south. The area selected as the destination of the whalers lies between the meridian of Greenwich and west lon. 90 deg. It is accessible from this country by a direct routing between the continents of America and Africa of some 7,000 miles in length.

The vessels have been equipped as steamers, but it is intended that most of the passage shall be made under sail; and, with an average speed of five knots an hour, the voyage will, it is calculated, be accomplished in two months. Four months will be spent on anchoring to complete cargoes, and the vessels expect to reach home again about the month of May. Each ship will carry a crew of forty men. All the commanders are experienced navigators, and the surgeons on board have been supplied with instruments which will enable them to record fully the results of meteorological and magnetic observations, to take soundings, bring up specimens of the sea bottom, collect flora and fauna, and so on. The expedition, therefore, has another and more important interest than a commercial one, and it is quite possible that, from a scientific point of view, the results may be of considerable value. It is just possible, too, that Antarctic explorations, which have been neglected for some time, may receive a fresh impetus from the discoveries of the whalers.

In past years many British lives have been lost in voyages of discovery in icy seas, and some of the most fascinating stories of British heroism center around the same cheerless regions. But nature there is still very far from being an open book, and this further attempt to throw a little fresh light on its unread pages is hailed with the greatest satisfaction. Perhaps the most flattering circumstance in connection with the expedition so far is the fact that the enterprises of the Dundee shipowners has stimulated representatives of another nation into action. A powerful steamer belonging to Norwegian owners is also about to proceed to southern seas. And so the shrinkage of the world goes on.

PHOENIX, Ar., Nov. 8.—A large band of Yaqui Indians attacked the hacienda of Alexander Lacey, near Ortiz station, Sonora, Mexico. Lacey defended the place and finally drove the Indians off after they had wounded Mr. Lacey, killed two servants and compelled twenty-one others to accompany them. Soldiers are in pursuit.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The following table gives the electoral vote of the various states under the present apportionment, and shows how the vote will probably be cast according to the latest returns of yesterday's election:

STATES.	ELECTORAL VOTE.	CLEVELAND.	HARRISON.	WEAVER.
Alabama.....	11	11
Arkansas.....	8	8
California.....	9	9
Colorado.....	4	4
Connecticut.....	6	6
Delaware.....	3	3
Florida.....	4	4
Georgia.....	13	13
Idaho.....	3	3
Illinois.....	24	24
Indiana.....	13	13
Iowa.....	13	13
Kansas.....	10	10
Kentucky.....	13	13
Louisiana.....	8	8
Maine.....	8	8
Maryland.....	8	8
Massachusetts.....	15	15
Michigan.....	14	14
Minnesota.....	9	9
Mississippi.....	8	8
Missouri.....	17	17
Montana.....	3	3
Nebraska.....	8	8
Nevada.....	3	3
New Hampshire.....	4	4
New Jersey.....	10	10
New York.....	36	36
North Carolina.....	11	11
North Dakota.....	3	3
Ohio.....	23	23
Oregon.....	4	4
Pennsylvania.....	32	32
Rhode Island.....	4	4
South Carolina.....	4	4
South Dakota.....	4	4
Tennessee.....	12	12
Texas.....	16	16
Vermont.....	4	4
Virginia.....	12	12
Washington.....	4	4
West Virginia.....	6	6
Wisconsin.....	12	12
Wyoming.....	3	3
Total.....	444	277	147	120

MR. WITHERS' DRESS COAT.

Wm. Withers, Jr., is the quiet man who leads the orchestra at the California theater, and when not marshaling his musicians is writing music in his room at the Brooklyn hotel. He is so retiring that few can claim to know him well, although his musical genius has for thirty-five years given him standing among the composers and leaders of the country, says the San Francisco Examiner.

Mr. Withers is 55 years old now, yet looks to be not more than 40, and would appear even younger except for an episode that occurred on the evening of April 14, 1865, at Ford's theater, in Washington. That evening Withers almost had the unpleasant distinction of being murdered by Wilkes Booth after the latter had fired the fatal shot at President Lincoln and was rushing madly from the stage to an entrance where a confederate had a horse in waiting.

Mr. Withers' most valued treasure is a dress coat, now in part destroyed by the moth that corrupts all wool, but on the back of the coat can be plainly seen two clean-cut silts, made with a sharp edge. O're, high up, as though a stroke for the wearer's neck, had missed it by a little and descended upon the garment. The other cut, nearly over the center of the space under which the wearer's right shoulder blade would be, is longer but equally well defined, and made with the same sharp steel.

Wilkes Booth made both those silts, and the wonder is that his victim was not fatally slashed, instead of being only nicked through the upper cut.

The coat was new when Mr. Withers put it on to lead the orchestra on the occasion of Abraham Lincoln's visit to the play, but the coat has never been worn since, so great was the sentimental devotion of the musician to the great man who won for friends all who came to know him.

Every one knows the story of Lincoln's assassination while sitting in an upper box of Ford's Theater enjoying "Our American Cousin," but few have learned what occurred just after Booth had fired the cowardly shot, because William Withers is the only man who can tell the story, and he does not often do it.

"When the fatal shot was fired," he says, "I thought some property man had fired a pistol. Just then I heard a heavy fall on the stage and the people began to yell: 'Hang him! Lynch him! Stop him!' and I saw a man running across the stage toward me. When he got near I saw his eyes were almost starting from his head and there was the most fearful expression on his face I ever saw.

"I recognized Wilkes Booth and at that instant he put down his head and came rushing on, saying: 'Let me pass! let me pass!'

"I was standing where I could not move much, the passage was so narrow. He came on and when he got near struck me with a bowie knife and kept saying 'Let me pass! I felt the cut and turned a little. Then he struck the knife into me again near the back of my neck and I fell. When I was down he rushed to the stage door grasped the knob with both hands and dragged the door open. I saw 'Peanut' John standing outside holding a bay horse. Then Booth pulled the door shut.

"Very soon Detective Stewart ran over men and out of the door after Booth. The crowd came up on the stage and grabbed me and wanted to hang me right there, but some who knew me shouted that I was not the man. I was arrested, however, and taken to jail, when Mayor Wallack examined me.

"I thought I was severely cut, but when I took off my clothes I found that the knife had only pierced my clothing and cut the skin a little. The cuts were as clean as though a razor had made them and I have never understood how I escaped. The knife was found in front of the Patent office, where Booth had dropped it as he rode away after the murder.

"I had seen Booth before the show, standing near the Tenth street entrance to the theater, and after the performance began saw him again standing against the rear wall of the parquet circle, and then noted that he had gone into the balcony. After President Lincoln came in Booth stole down the balcony until he could look through a hole that had been bored in the box door and locate the President exactly. Then he had opened the door a little, taken careful aim and fired the shot. He burst through the box and jumped fourteen feet to the stage.

"It was such an experience as I never wish to have again. It made me sick for weeks and I get excited now when I think of it. I taught little 'Tad' Lincoln to play the drum and was always kindly treated by the President. The whole shooting and escape were done in a few seconds and unexpectedly. Booth had evidently made his plan carefully and was prepared to resort to any means to avoid arrest. I keep that old coat now and value it more than everything else I have."

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, November 6th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn commencing:

Our God, we raise to Thee
Thanks for Thy blessings free
We here enjoy.

Prayer was offered by Bishop Harrison Sperry.

The choir sang:

Look up and put your trust in God.

The Priesthood of the Fifthenth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

APOSTLE HERBER J. GRANT

addressed the congregation. He said it was always a source of pleasure to him to meet with the Saints. He did not expect to be called upon to speak today, but he wished now as always to have the Holy Spirit to guide him. Some speakers always commenced by an expression to this effect, but he did not mean it as a matter of form only. He knew that there was a tendency to carelessness among the Saints. They fail to supplicate the Lord in behalf of the speakers. Even he, himself sometimes forgot to do this. He also knew that no Elder stood up to speak on occasions like this without wishing to be sustained by the faith and prayers of the hearers. And it is well that this should be so; for by feeling our own weakness, we realize the necessity of having divine aid. The experience of one who speaks in a meeting of Saints is different from that of those who speak to people on business matters or politics. This can be done without that feeling of timidity which nearly always comes to one who stands before a congregation of Saints. The speaker was thankful for this, for he knew that the Lord would sustain in their weakness those who looked up to Him.

In speaking to the Saints of their duties, Apostle Grant said he had often felt admonished himself more than by listening to others, because of the presence of the Spirit of God has given different talents to different members of the Church. Some have the gift to write in the defense of the work of God; others to speak and expound the doctrine. If we will use faithfully the talents we have, we shall be rewarded. But if we neglect what we have been endowed with, punishment will follow. There is joy and satisfaction in doing good. One that labors for the advancement of the kingdom of God, be he ever so humble, can stand erect in the midst of adverse criticism, because he is satisfied in his own heart. It is better to so live that the conscience is void of offence, than to have the approval of a whole community. Peace in the heart is more precious than the applause of those who do not know the heart. The speaker had had some experience in this regard.

Referring to our mission on the earth, the speaker pointed out that our conduct before we came in this world has, to a certain extent, an influence on our existence here, just as our lives here will influence our future state. This was revealed to us through the Prophet Joseph. Some come on this earth apparently without much energy to do good. It is important that we should be diligent in our work and gain the approval of God.

At a previous meeting the speaker had urged that the Saints should make an effort to aid in the completion of the Temple. He would now urge the Saints to labor in all directions to do their duties. If we, to the best of our ability, keep the commandments of God, that is all that is required of us. We should attend to our prayers in order that a channel may be open between us and our Heavenly Father, whereby to obtain blessings. If we do this, we can never be lifted up in pride, but will be kept humble and always thank God for what we receive, realizing that health, food and all blessings come from Him. No feeling is more Godlike than this intense gratitude. Missionaries have always testified that the joy obtained by faithfulness is greater than human tongue can express. We should cultivate that spirit and always have in our heart a desire to praise the Lord. But this we can not have, unless we are prayerful and faithful. We are on the earth for the purpose of working out our own salvation. If we enter an institute of learning in order to obtain a certain degree, we must perform the labors necessary. But it is equally necessary in the school of life to practice in our daily life the knowledge we have. No amount of testimony can save us, but work. Some testify that they know by inspiration the divinity of this work, and yet they are neglectful in carrying out what they know. Others go on year after year attending meetings and never practice what they hear. Yet they boast of going to meetings. But what good is that to them? It is like always going to dinner and never partake of the food. We should not be only the hearers of the word of God, but doers.

As Saints we are admonished to be kind, forgiving, loving, etc. Nothing will give more joy than to forgive, as nothing is more hardening to the heart than a spirit of unkindness. The speaker read from Doctrine and Covenants concerning the duty of the Saints to forgive one another. He wanted to correct a wrong impression which he understood had got out among the Saints. He had referred to the passage just read in his speech last Sunday, and some had thought that by so doing, he aimed a hit at the speaker who preceeded him. He now wanted to say emphatically that this was a misunderstanding. He had never had any such intention. There was no occasion for it whatever.

Another matter he also wished to briefly refer to. He agreed perfectly with the speaker who during the conference had urged the Saints to encourage home industry. There might be difference in opinion as to political issues, but on this question there ought not to be divided opinions. This has nothing to do with politics.

The Saints should not find fault with the speakers who endeavor to lay before them the principles of life and salvation. It is the duty of the Elders to do this, and also to speak upon those subjects that concern their temporal benefit. When the speakers stand before the congregation, they seek to be guided by the divine Spirit and the hearers should not find fault with them when they speak according to the dictates of that spirit.

The speaker closed with an earnest appeal to the Saints to correct their own faults first, before thinking of correcting those of others.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON

then spoke, endorsing the remarks of Apostle Grant and explaining the necessity of being guided by the Spirit of God both in thoughts, and words and in every act of our life.

The choir then sang the anthem, "Jesus, I my cross have taken."

Benediction by President Joseph F. Smith.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—On the 5th instant representatives of the Santa Fe, Burlington, Rock Island, Rio Grande Western, Denver & Rio Grande, Colorado Midland and Burlington & Missouri met at Denver and appointed a committee to confer with General Passenger Agent Lomax, of the Union Pacific, to demand a modification of the existing circulars on an interchange of business, which practically shuts the complaining roads out of a large stretch of territory in the far west, and report at a meeting in Chicago on Nov. 17, and that if such modifications were not secured, these the roads mentioned agree to discontinue business relations with the Union Pacific. This means that these lines are ready for a very bitter war in the passenger business.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Last night, Governor Jones of Alabama telegraphed Attorney General Miller asking him to direct the United States marshal to be governed in his orders to his deputies by the principles laid down in Judge Brewer's decision, that they had no right within the guard-rail. The attorney general this morning replied, declining to issue such instructions, quoting the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Siebold case, and saying that he proposed to be governed by that court rather than by a subordinate court. He, however, would instruct the marshals not to enter the polls unless necessary.

17. Woman's • Sphere.

By One of the Sex.

THE CHILDREN.

I am asked if I am in favor of telling children fairy stories. I think I shall have to answer that question with a decided "no," that is, I do not think it wise or necessary to tell such things to the children of Latter-day Saints. Surely there is no need for thus entering the domain of what might be called by some fancy, but is in reality the dominion of falsehood and unreality. Notwithstanding the eloquent appeal made for such things by the gifted Charles Dudley Warner, and many others, who assert that a child is robbed of one of its greatest charms in being denied the recreation of fairy stories, yet I still protest against them. I have read many of these arguments, and to me they were full of sophistry. What if there is moral in the tale of Bluebeard! that is small excuse for making every child a coward and filling hours of happy childhood with grim visions of horror and bloody strife. If children must needs have stories of horror, let them have the story of Nero and the Christians, for the moral is still there and there is no necessity of telling the child afterwards that "it is not a true story." It has always seemed to me as something ridiculous for parents to tell their children not to tell lies, and then for mothers to tell impossible stories of Jack and the Beanstalk, of the Giant Killer and all the rest of the lot. The Bible, the Book of Mormon, discoveries, science and literature are full of material with which to weave the most entertaining and moral stories. Then, adds my questioner, do you object to fiction or stories that are the result partly of imagination? That is quite a different matter. Our gracious Savior taught most of His lessons and precepts by the aid of stories, or as they were called, parables. But mark the distinction! A parable or a fictitious story is always one of probability, is one that could easily be true. The fairy story could never by any possibility be true. Indeed, I should object to telling little children even stories that were not true. Let them wait until their minds are capable of judging and measuring standards, and then if fictitious stories are read, see to it that they are of the right kind.

READING FOR GIRLS.

If we are going to allow our older children to read fictitious stories, let the reading be entirely under the control of the parents. Young people who attend school, study hard, and who are developing into manhood and womanhood, certainly crave some lighter food for the mind. And I notice that in these days they get it. Some parents are so strict, or so prejudiced on this point that they will not let their children read anything but the papers and church works. Such parents may be sure, if their children are intelligent and inclined for study, that these very children will by some means or other get light literature, and if not read openly, it will be read just the same. Is it not better therefore for parents to give such light food as the mental system craves, and control the food supply in this way? Then the next question is, what books shall we buy for our young sons and daughters growing up around us? Again comes this terrible prejudice, which now takes another form. Says the too-conservative parent, a dull book must be a moral book. If sermons are moral, are they necessarily dull? Again we find another sort of parent, who reads a book himself and if the heroine is made to appear as a martyr to her mother-love, or a mother is introduced who gives up honor, wealth, a decent life and even life for a worthless child, this one grain of truth is deemed sufficient to leaven the whole tissue of false sentiment and the book is handed to the girls and boys to read. The truth is, that the whole tone of a book must be moral and virtuous, must be so faithful a picture of life that the reader arises with a sense of his own duty stronger within him, or it is false. A book that makes girls think love is worthless unless gilded by a title, or unless that love is proved by the sacrifice of honor or life, such a book is false at its core and is a poisonous weed to plant in the minds of our youth. Some of our good parents will be wanting to get presents for the holidays for their girls. Let me offer a few suggestions as to the selection of books. If you will buy the books written by Louisa M. Alcott, Miss Mulock, George Eliot, Walter Scott, Dickens, and Lew Wallace, you need not fear to see your children read and re-read them. Of course these are not the only good writers, but, if you must have fiction, they are of the best and safest.

MOTHERS.

I wish mothers could be made to realize their great need for sleep. Women who get along with six, and sometimes less, hours of sleep, broken oftentimes with the calls of their children, drag themselves around day after day, and year after year, with tired eyes, wrinkled faces and a general feeling that life is almost too heavy a burden to be borne. Such mothers live on the stimulus of tea, and think they would die without it, and they certainly live a death in life as it is. Do you know mothers who pride themselves on petting their children, on not having a good night's sleep in twelve years, who allow their children to sap every nerve and fiber of their beings and glory in their martyrdom? Oh, if such mothers could be made to love the immortal souls of their children as well as their mortal bodies; could quietly impress upon the little ones that night was made for sleep, not for innumerable drinks and even bits to eat; if they could sleep every night at least nine long unbroken hours, you will find them in the morning cheerful, bright, hopeful and good-tempered. I know one woman whose children are all glad to let mother sleep in the morning, for she is so much easier to live with through the day. Mothers, if you would keep the Word of Wisdom, sleep nine hours a night, and open your windows to breathe fresh air; you will need small doctoring in your families, and would bear your burdens with glad hearts.

OUR HUSBANDS AND FATHERS.

Have we got anything to say to them? Yes, one thing. Let us have fresh air to breathe. We go to meeting to hear you preach, and after you have a few hundreds of us shut up in a stove-heated room, you carefully close all the windows and leave us to breathe poison over and over again until we return home sick and with a most dismal headache. I heard a wise physician say the other day that he was asked why he did not attend his meetings. He replied he should, when houses were built in which he could sit for two hours without jeopardizing his life and health. If the air in our close houses could only be colored when it becomes poison, what a mass of color would float about! And bedrooms! Let the colds, catarrh, and various diseases of the winter testify to the need of fresh air in bedrooms. And one inch of lift for a window, let me tell you, will not supply enough air for one human being, let alone six or eight. Be generous with that which God gives so freely. And when we have caught poison from foul air, let us call it poison, not colds.

COLDS AND CATARRH.

This certain physician of my acquaintance is a most peculiar man, and his greatest peculiarity is that he dares to tell the truth. He saw me buying some heavy winter underclothing the other day, and laughingly said that I was laying plans to give him plenty of work. His family, he said, never wore heavy clothing, but he was always delighted to see other people put on heaps of woollens, it made business for him. He did not care to doctor his own family, he said sarcastically, but of course others—well, I knew his business. I did not buy the woollens. A gentleman who stood near was speaking about cold; the doctor remarked that one of our leading men sent for him some time ago who was very ill indeed with a heavy cough and "cold." When the doctor was asked what should be done, he offered to cure the invalid in forty-eight hours. "Oh, yes," said the invalid, "you will feed me on opium." "No, I won't," answered the doctor, "I will give you anything. You must fast and pray for forty-eight hours, and as you are in the country and get fresh air, you will get well immediately." The man took the advice, and was completely cured in the time specified.

The gentleman by my side listened to that story, and then said unbelievably, "Well doctor, what would you do for me; I have the catarrh exceedingly bad. What can I do to cure it?" The doctor laughed cynically, and answered, "I know of only two things that will cure catarrh, and those two things are death and fresh air. People are about as afraid of one as the other."

Address:

MRS. FRANCES M. RICHARDS,
Care DESERET NEWS,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

The Clothes We Wear.

Says a London letter in the New York Recorder: "Present fashions in feminine attire are more graceful and attractive than those of any other period in the century."

Inasmuch as these are the words which Alma Tadema uttered only a few days ago we must all accept the verdict as a foregone conclusion, and which I am quite willing to do on the strength of my own judgment as well, for the grace and elegant simplicity of this season's gowns and garments appealed to me long before the great artist gave me his pleasant opinion on the subject.

There never was a time, moreover, when so little material was required to make a gown, skirts being so sharply gored and bodices so short that only four yards of double-width material are required, and eight or nine of single width.

One of the most striking characteristics in the cut of new gowns is the wonderful width that is produced across the shoulders, and which is exceedingly becoming to tall, slim figures, but which should be somewhat modified for stout people. All the Paris models are made with immensely large sleeves, tight-fitting from the wrist to several inches above the elbow, and very large above this point, the fullness falling away from the shoulders in graceful folds over the elbow. These are made in the richest colored velvets, and in all kinds of soft, silky materials. Large, full capes are worn with both morning and evening dresses, and as a wrap for evening or a cloak for walking or driving it is most effective. It must be well made, and should fit closely over the shoulders, the fullness below being secured by a pleat introduced into the centre of the back. The cape fastens with a chain at the neck in front, but should be so cut as to fall back over the shoulders, thus giving full effect to any color or smartness that may be introduced into the dress bodice.

The dress waist belt is, I am glad to say, going out, though the general effect of this fashion is still retained, as the trimming of the bodices follows the form of the corselet, the result of which is far more satisfactory, seeing that the trimming is laid on a well fitting bodice, and that the line of the belt has not to be kept by soft folds of silk, which may or may not retain their original position.

Skirts are made to come up over the edge of the short, round bodices in front, and being headed with braid or passementerie of some sort, it is impossible to see where the skirt ends or the bodice begins.

Only the skilled modiste can produce perfect results. The same care in the fit of the skirt as well as the bodice is required. Many women are very clever in renovating last season's gowns, and by a careful study of the fashion books they can show their maids and little dress makers how to convert last year's dresses into fashionable modern costumes. But let them beware of arranging last year's skirts over last year's bodices. Better let the skirt and bodice continue in their relative positions unaffected by the mode of the day till old age at last steps in to debar them from participating any longer in social life.

And just a few words right here, before I describe any of them—There are no trains on street gowns! Every skirt fashioned for street wear by leading modistes clears the ground, and the much-discussed train appears only on frocks fashioned expressly for house wear.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE VEIL.

The bag veil, that is, the one draped under the chin, continues to be liked, but in arranging it one must be sure to fasten the end smoothly at the back, so that a lump of lace, which is always awkward looking, does not result, writes Mrs. Mallon in the "Small Belongings of Dress" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. Women of good taste prefer quieter veils than many of those shown.

A ROSEBUD COSTUME.

The material used for this pale, is a rose-colored delaine, the skirt, which fits rather smoothly in front, having just sufficient fullness in the back to make it graceful, writes Mrs. Mallon in an article upon "Dainty Evening Costumes" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. At the lower edge is a kilted flounce of pink chiffon, and over this are arranged loops and knots of pink ribbon of a deeper shade. The bodice is high, fits the figure gracefully, and has for its decoration a plaited frill of chiffon—each group of plaits being caught with a knot of ribbon, the whole strip being worn as a fichu might be, and draped in at the waist, where it is caught by the waist ribbon of pink. The full sleeves are of the chiffon, tied at the elbows with a band and knots of ribbon, long gloves of pale, rose-colored undressed kid coming up to meet them.

The Lives We Live.

"Joe. Howard" in the N. Y. Recorder remarks: The Bible says somewhere, "The way of a man with a woman is past finding out." I don't know how that is, but I certainly think the ways of women with men of certain grades and description are past understanding. Precisely why this man should choose this woman and that woman consent to be chosen; why oftentimes, as between two, the woman selects the one that everybody else would reject; why certain men who are ignorant, coarse, brutish, indeed, find favor with women who have opportunity to consort with men of high degree—these are things which puzzle human nature every day.

Servants consider themselves a much abused race. As a matter of fact, they own the earth.

The girl grown to womanhood is to be likened to the bud changed to a full blown flower. There will be a time when she must fade and when her petals of beauty will fall, but it is possible to delay this period of decadence to a very considerable extent. A young woman fully matured and starting on her most essential period of life has in her own hands the power to lengthen or shorten the duration of her journey to old age. Looking about, one occasionally sees a hale old lady with white hair, some few wrinkles and other minor evidences of the progress of time, but with a comparatively good complexion and sprightliness and general vigor which are not in keeping with her years. In contrast you will find a score or more of women, of the same age and in the same atmosphere of life, who are faded and pinched, devoid of energy, and either grossly obese or decrepit. The one has taken proper care of herself during the early years of her maturity while the others have relegated to nature the task, unassisted, of taking care of them. "Beauty sleep" is a thing most essential for a young woman. It makes her fresh and vigorous and gives her a healthy complexion. Too much artificial light has the effect of straining the eyes, making them appear heavy, dull and congested. Social occasions occurring at late hours are essential to pleasure and relaxation of the mind, but get your early sleep whenever you can. The matter of rest aside from sleep, is also important. A day of shopping ages a woman more than a week of ordinary home duties, and should be followed by a day of comparative rest. Make it a rule that from whatever source fatigue may come it is necessary to give your nerves a chance to regain their strength, and rest will do this.—New York World.

A clever woman whose forehead is beginning to be framed in gray, describes a crumb of pleasure and of consolation in finding that the fashion journals that formerly, while telling girls how to be beautiful, threw in a paragraph or two for her class, entitled "How to Make Wine Jelly for the Sick," "How to Mix a Mustard Plaster so That it Will Burn Without Blistering the Skin," or "Don't Gossip," are now plainly sensible of her existence and its worth. She now finds herself a constant object of attention. She is told how to improve her form, how to steam out her wrinkles, how to freshen her complexion, what manner of dressing best becomes her, how to reduce her redundant flesh. This consideration implies that she is expected to keep herself attractive, that she fills a place, that society still has use for her, and can't give her up. This recognition may be a little tardy, but it is none the less welcome. With a little cheering up, how attractive and good-looking the matrons have become.

Did you ever try—

A mixture of alum, glycerine, vinegar and water for mosquito bites?

Salt or ashes for removing discolorations from coffee cups or other dishes?

Cleaning the lint from a clothes wringer with a cloth saturated in kerosene?

Alcohol to remove grease stains from the children's white aprons, skirts, etc.?

Pulverized chalk and ammonia for removing stains from marble basins and closet bowls?

To clean a gilt picture frame by using a sponge wet with hot spirits of wine or oil of turpentine, then leaving it to dry?

To cook onions, cabbage or turnips without having the odor escape to all parts of the house? If you have, then you probably failed, even if you had a dish of vinegar on the stove.

To do over the much used baby carriage, staining with equal parts of solution of extract of logwood and solution of saffron in diluted spirits of wine, with a solution of tin thrown in for tone?

To remove your sallow complexion take plenty of exercise with the arms and the upper extremity of the body. Keep your digestion in good condition, and do not use a lot of drugs advised by persons who know nothing of their ultimate effects. Nature is very kind in helping one to vigor and giving a tone to the complexion; so help her along in her efforts.

DR. MARTIN LUTHER.

On Oct. 31st, in the year 1517, Martin Luther nailed his theses to the door of the Schloss Kirche at Wittenberg. It was the official declaration by Luther of his rebellion against Rome. This is the event that Protestant Germany has just been celebrating in the presence of Kaiser Wilhelm and other sovereign princes of Germany, who, with official and ecclesiastical dignitaries went in procession to the old church, entering the very door on which the reformer nailed his theses against the doctrine of indulgences and his arraignment against the church.

Trumpeters stationed on the tower of the church played, as the procession crossed the historic threshold, "Ein Feste Burg." Luther's grand chorale, which was the battle song of the Reformation and the comfort of Protestantism through the decades. After the services in the church, the members of the imperial, royal and princely families proceeded to the house in which Luther lived while at Wittenberg and inscribed their names on the visitor's album there.

THE OLD CHURCH RESTORED.

The celebration, says the N. Y. Recorder, marks the completion of the renovation of the old Schloss church, which has been restored at the cost of the Emperor, to its original form and features. In the celebration the Protestant churches of Prussia and Germany took part, and memorial services were preached from their thousands of pulpits. England was represented by Queen Victoria in the person of the Duke of York, her presumptive to the throne of Great Britain. For both these countries, England and Germany, as well as for America, the anniversary is of noteworthy historical interest. It is well, just after the splendid pageants that have been held in honor of Christopher Columbus for discovering a new world, to call to remembrance the great deed of Martin Luther, who, though he did not discover a new world, upset the old one for Luther's reformation broke the power of an all absorbing and tyrannical church, that, supreme everywhere, had forgotten its splendid mission; it released the barriers that had stemmed advanced thought and intelligence and paved the way to the achievement of political liberty in almost every country that it touched.

THE MARCH OF THOUGHT.

The Protestant empires of Germany and England and the great Republic of the West owe their rise to leadership in the realms of literature, scientific discovery, of human progress and thought and liberty to that event which Germany and the Protestant world has celebrated at Wittenberg. Without Luther's great Reformation what? "Had there been no Luther," says Froude, "the English, American and German peoples would be thinking differently, would be acting differently, would be altogether different men and women from what they are at this moment." "Once more a true sense of nature and fact," exclaims Carlyle, "for which these centuries and many that are to come yet will be thankful to heaven." "He created the German language," says Heine; "he was not only the greatest, but the most German man of our history." "His image," says Krauth, "casts itself upon the current of ages as the mountain mirrors itself in the river that winds at its foot—the Mighty fixing itself immutably upon the Unchanging."

THE ANCIENT CHRONICLE.

Those who have read the charmingly interesting "Chronicles of the Schoenberg-Cotta Family" will remember that passage in the diary of the narrator, dated Wittenberg, Nov. 1, 1517—"All Saints' Day:

"Yesterday evening, as I sat at the window with Gottfried in the late twilight, hushing Gretchen to sleep, we noticed Dr. Luther walking rapidly along the street toward the Castle church. His step was firm and quick, and he seemed too full of thought to observe anything as he passed. There was something unusual in his bearing, which made my husband call my attention to him. His head was erect and slightly thrown back, as when he preaches. He had a large package of papers in his hands, and, although he was evidently absorbed with some purpose, he had more the air of a general moving to a battlefield than of a theologian buried in meditation. This morning, as we went to the early mass of the festival, we saw a great crowd around the doors of the Castle church, not a mob, however, but an eager throng of well-dressed men, professors, citizens and students, those within the circle reading some writing which was posted on the door, whilst around, the crowd was broken into little knots, in eager, but not loud, debate. Gottfried asked what had happened. 'It is only some Latin theses against the indulgences,' by Dr. Luther," replied one of the students, "inviting a disputation on the subject."

And on Nov. 20 is the entry in the diary:

"It is wonderful the stir that these theses make. Christopher cannot get them printed fast enough. Both the Latin and German printing presses are engaged, for they have been translated, and demands come for them from every part of Germany. Dr. Tetzel, they say, is curious, and many of the prelates are uneasy as to the result; the new Bishop has dissuaded Dr. Luther from publishing an explanation of them. It is reported that the Elector Frederick is not quite pleased, fearing the effect on the new university, still in its infancy. Students, however, are crowding to the town and to Dr. Luther's lectures more than ever. He is the hero of the youth of Germany." Again in February, 1518, the diary goes on: "Christopher returned yesterday evening from the market place, where the students have been burning Tetzel's theses, which he wrote in answer to Dr. Luther. The students kindled this conflagration in the market place entirely on their own responsibility. They are full of enthusiasm for Dr. Luther, and of indignation against Tetzel and the Dominicans."

THE GREAT SCHISM.

This was the beginning of the struggle which led to the great division in the Christian world. It was occasioned by the building of that magnificent edifice of ecclesiastical splendor—St. Peter's Church in Rome. Indulgences were to furnish the necessary means. The sale of these had been intrusted for a great part of Germany to Albert, Archbishop of Mayence and Magdeburg, and he, crippled for want of money, secured a loan from the wealthy Fuggers of Augsburg, and gave as security part of the profits arising from the sale. As Julius Koestlin says, in his "Life of Luther," "Behind the preacher of indulgences Tetzel, who announced God's mercy to the paying believers, stood the agents of that commercial house, who collected their share for their principals." Tetzel's advent, however, only marks the point where the revolution against Rome, the revolt against the abuses that had grown up within the Church, was pushed from the quiescent to the active stage. As Bishop Hurst remarks in his "Short History of the Reformation:" "The sale of indulgences aroused Luther's nature to a high pitch of excitement. He was now ready for his mission. He went over the whole case against Rome, as he saw it, and arraigned the Church in a bill of charges, which he called his 'Ninety five Theses.' They were directed principally against the sale of indulgences, but they included the whole burden of Luther's soul. He insisted that the Church taught the truth, but that there were excrecences which must be removed."

The life of Luther takes us back more than 400 years. Nine years before Christopher Columbus set sail from Palos to discover a new ocean route to Cathay, Martin Luther was born at the little village of Eisleben, the son of a peasant who had been a slate cutter in Mohra, and then a miner in Eisleben. In 1498 he was sent to a school at Eisenach, just below the Wartburg. In 1501 he attended the university at Erfurt. In 1505 he entered the Augustinian cloister at that place; in 1506 he became a monk; in 1507 he was ordained a priest, and in 1508 he was appointed professor of philosophy and later of theology at the University of Wittenberg, then a small town of only 3,000 inhabitants. It was in Wittenberg that Luther did most of his greatest work, and the little town is crowded with historic places connected with his life.

From Wittenberg he made his first visit to Rome, from which he returned full of bitterness of spirit against the abuses in the Church that reigned unchecked. It was there that he lectured and drew thousands of students from every part to Germany to listen to him. It was there that he published his Thesis, nailing them to the door of the Schloss Church. It was there that during the next three years, while engaged in disputes with Cajetan and Eck, he wrote and brought out several of his most important works, among them his "Commentary on the Galatians," his "Address to the Christian Nobles of Germany" and his "Sermon on the Liberty of a Christian Man." It was there, in 1520, came his open breach with the Pope, when he burned the Papal bull of excommunication which began:

"Arise, O Lord, and judge thy cause! Remember the reproach which the foolish cast against Thee all day long. St. Peter, St. Paul, the congregation of saints and the whole Church are called upon to arise. The foxes would lay waste the vineyard of the Lord; a wild boar has entered therein; a savage beast would pasture there."

Then Luther was condemned as a heretic; his writings were to be burnt, and every one was "commanded to seize Martin Luther and deliver him to the Pope at Rome."

Eck was sent to deliver the bull, but he was received with great hostility. In Leipsic he had to take refuge in St. Paul's Church, and the students sang satirical songs for his benefit. In Erfurt the students attacked him, seized the printed copies of the bull and threw them into the river Gera. In Wittenberg Luther himself "took the bull by the horns," and on Nov. 10, 1525, he publicly announced that the bull of excommunication and the Papal books of canonical law would be burned on the following morning at 9 o'clock.

At the appointed time students, masters and doctors were assembled at the designated place at the Elster Gate, near the Augustinian Monastery. An advanced student prepared the place, piled on the faggots and applied the fire. Then Luther cast the Roman decretals, together with the Papal bull, into the flames, exclaiming: "Because thou hast offended the Holy One of the Lord, be thou consumed with everlasting fire." Then Luther returned with his friends to the city, while several hundred students remained at the fire, feeding the flames with Papal writings, and others paraded the streets, deriding Eck and the Papal bull. "Thus by his bold actions did Luther let loose a storm which raged over all Germany—a storm which could not be quieted till the Judgment Day."

HIS HOME IN WITTENBERG.

It would take too long to follow Luther's life in detail. In 1521 he appeared before the Diet of Worms. Then came his concealment in the Wartburg, where he began his translation of the Bible, the first part of which, the New Testament, was published in 1522. He returned to Wittenberg in 1522; in 1525 he married Catharine Von Bora; lived at Wittenberg until the year 1546, when he died while on a journey, at Eisleben, at the age of 63. The house in which Luther lived with his wife and family still exists in Wittenberg. It was formerly a portion of the old Augustinian Convent. "In accordance with the order of the Elector, Luther remained in the monastery building, and which had been vacated by all the monks. Here Katie established her household. To-day"—we are quoting from Dr. Rein—"this stately dwelling still stands, close to the gate and to the city walls, altered within, but firm and towering without, a genuine German home, from which have issued streams of blessing for the whole world."

A TIME OF PESTILENCE.

Luther released himself from his vows and entered the marriage state on June 13, 1525, at the age of 41. Catharine Von Bora was of an old and noble family, and had been a nun in the cloister of Nimptsch, near Gesinia, in Saxony. Though Luther's enemies derisively reminded him of the old legend that from the union of an expelled monk and a runaway nun anti-Christ would be begotten, his married life was a happy one. Two children were born to him—a son, Hans, and a daughter, Elizabeth. In 1527 the plague broke out in Wittenberg, and Luther's infant son was stricken, but recovered. Luther wrote concerning these days: "Thus there are conflicts without and fears within. One comfort, nevertheless, we have over against the ragings of Satan, and that is the Word of God, by which we may save the souls of the faithful, even if Satan should destroy their bodies. Pray for us that we valiantly endure the visitation of God and overcome the devil's might and craft, be it for life or death. Amen."

Ein' feste Burg.

It was during these troublous times—perhaps that very year—that Luther wrote the grand old choral, "The Battle Hymn of the Reformation," "Ein' feste Burg ist Unser Gott," which was played by trumpeters from the tower of the Schloss Kirche of Wittenberg when Kaiser Wilhelm and the Protestant princes enter the doors of the church on which Luther nailed his ninety-five theses;

A Stronghold sure our God is he,
A trusty Shield and Weapon;
Our help He'll be and set us free,
Whatever ill may happen,
The old malicious foe
Intends us deadly woe;

Armed with the strength of hell,
And deepest craft as well,
On earth is not his fellow.

Much has been written about this grand old choral, and the probable date of its composition. That it belongs to Luther's Wittenberg days, however, is sure, though the "mighty stronghold" is probably the remembrance of the Castle of Wartburg, in which he was concealed under the name and guise of Yunker Georg for several months in the year 1522. Some authorities believe that Luther wrote the choral while on his way to the Diet of Worms in 1521, whither he had been summoned by the German Emperor and others in high authority to say whether he would recant or not. His friends used every endeavor to dissuade him from going, reminding him that John Huss was burned to death under similar circumstances. To one of these friends Luther wrote: "Were there as many devils in Worms as there are tiles on the roofs, I would go, and not be afraid if Huss was burned to ashes, the truth was not burned with him."

"And so he went, fortifying himself during the journey by the composition of that noble hymn, by which alone his name would have been preserved to posterity." So says one authority.

Some think, however, that it was composed at the close of the second Diet of Worms—that of 1529—which revoked the religious liberty granted in the previous one of 1526, against which five sovereign princes and fifteen free cities "protested," and so earned the name of Protestants. But we do not incline to either of these opinions, for the reason that Luther went to work with systematic earnestness and did not trust to inspiration alone. "Ein' feste Burg" is founded on Psalm xli.—"God is our refuge and strength, a very pleasant help in trouble," and he wrote not only the words, but the music. "The hymn," says a recent writer, "was sung over the reformer's grave, and the first line was afterwards cut on the tombstone. Thus much regarding the hymn itself, but the tune was almost certainly composed by Luther. We say 'almost certainly,' for though it has been asserted positively that he wrote the tune, it is but right to say that doubts have been raised on the point. We cannot discuss the matter here. It must be sufficient to state that the evidence is largely in favor of the reformer's having composed the tune. The melody is certainly a noble one, full of the spirit of the words to which it was adapted."

LUTHER, POET AND MUSICIAN.

However, leaving discussion aside, it is certain that Luther was intensely fond of both music and poetry, and long before Shakespeare he said: "He who despises music, as all fanatics do, will never be my friend." And again, "For I would fain see all arts, especially music, in the service of Him who has given and created them." We are indebted to Charlotte Winkworth and her Christian singers of Germany for much interesting information about Luther's poetic work. In 1526 it was, the year after his marriage, and while residing at Wittenberg, that Luther first felt the want of German Psalms and hymns to fill the place of the Latin hymns and sequences, and he at once set to work to supply it. And in the years when he was composing most of his hymns, it is recorded, four printers in Erfurt alone were entirely occupied in printing and publishing them. They were sent everywhere, "carried all over the country by wandering students and peddlers." "The whole people," wrote a chronicler of his day, "is singing itself into the Lutheran doctrine."

With the assistance of Conrad Rupp, choir master of the Elector of Saxony, and Johann Walther, then choir-master to Frederick the Wise at Jorgan, whom he invited to reside with him, Luther, while at Wittenberg, selected the tunes most suitable for his purpose and provided them with new words. Besides a large number of translations from the Latin, thirty-seven hymns are ascribed to him, as well as several chorals, the best known of which are "Ein' feste Burg ist Unser Gott," and his Christmas carol, "From Heaven Above to Earth I Come." "It is my intention," he wrote to Spalaten, "after the example of the prophets and the ancient fathers, to make German psalms for the people; that is, spiritual songs, whereby the Word of God may be kept alive among them by singing. We seek, therefore, everywhere for German poets."

HANS SACHS HEARS THE CALL.

"We seek; therefore, everywhere for German poets." And it was from Nuremberg that the first response came. From Hans Sachs, the chief of the Master-singers. Luther had many adherents in Nuremberg, whose citizens were among the first to hail the new doctrine. In the same bill which had condemned Luther as a heretic the learned Willibald Perkeheimer and the town clerk Lazarus of Nuremberg had fallen under the ban of excommunication. The City Fathers, too, were in arms against the Papacy. Hans Sachs wrote unweariedly during this religious conflict. In answer to Luther's call, he set to work composing hymns, he paraphrased the Bible in song after song, and his verse, sung in nearly all the Master-singer schools of Germany, spread the Lutheran faith among the most earnest and energetic workmen of the land.

THE NIGHTINGALE OF WITTENBERG.

During fifty years Hans Sachs did poetic battle for the cause of Luther and the Reformation. But, of all that came from his busy brain, he has left nothing more poetic and beautiful than his "Greeting to the Nightingale of Wittenberg," with its inspired call to the people to awaken; "Wach auf Es naht gen Tag den Tag," which Wagner has introduced so felicitously as a choral in the third act of his opera "Die Meistersinger." This was Sachs's greeting to Luther, the singer and poet of the Reformation:

Awake! The dawn of day is near.
I hear, ringing loud and clear,
A wondrous-throated nightingale
Whose voice is heard o'er hill and dale.
The night stoops to the Occident,
The day breaks from the Orient,
And morning's purple glories loom
Out from the depths of cloud and gloom.

Sachs' poem "The Wittenburg Nightingale," is proof sufficient that Luther was known to the people of Germany, not only for his reformatory work but for his hymns and chorals, written to advance the new faith. Sachs was accustomed to call things by their proper names, and he would not have styled Luther a nightingale because he nailed theses to the church door at Wittenberg, or for his dispute with Eck at Leipsic, or his burning of the Papal Bull at Wittenberg, or his appearance before the Emperor at the Diet of Worms. No! Sachs styled Luther a nightingale because he sang sweetly, because he was "a wondrous-throated nightingale," whose voice was heard everywhere singing the doctrines of the new faith unto the hearts of the people.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

The regular monthly meeting of the Priesthood of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion convened in the Assembly Hall at 11 a. m. today, Saturday, Nov. 5th. President Angus M. Cannon presided. Present also upon the stand—Counselor Joseph E. Taylor, Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, Patriarchs William J. Smith, Joseph Horne, and Alons H. Raleigh, President Elias H. Morris of the High Priests' quorum, and other High Priests and Elders. All the wards of the Stake were properly represented excepting West Jordan.

The home missionary corps was fairly represented, also the Seventies by several of the Presidents of the quorums.

Eleven quorums of Elders were represented by their presiding officers, viz.: The First, Second, Fifth, Seventh, Tenth, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first.

The Sabbath schools of the Stake were represented by Superintendent Thomas C. Griggs.

Seventeen young men received certificates authorizing their ordination to the office of Elder, they having been recommended by their respective Bishops as being worthy of such ordination.

The usual business was disposed of, after which remarks were made in the following order, by the brethren named.

PRESIDENT A. M. CANNON

referred again to a matter mentioned by him at last month's meeting, respecting the circulation among the Saints in this Stake of certain theories and speculations relative to the coming of the Messiah, and stated that the author thereof, who was present in this meeting, had written him an open letter requesting him to read the same to the assembled Priesthood. President Cannon read the letter in question, which was a protest against his remarks at the last Priesthood meeting and a further exposition of the views and doctrines of the writer. The President then remarked that this meeting was not a court, nor had any attempt been made to try the circulator of the theories mentioned. He had simply been requested to stay away from these meetings until he should show proofs of his standing in the Church, which many questioned. The speaker had not declared that Mr. —'s theories were false, for this was not the place to try him or his doctrines. He believed, however, that they were false, and had expressed himself to that effect. He said this much as a matter of justice to the gentleman, who seemed to think that he had been tried and condemned by the Priesthood meeting, which was not the case.

President Cannon spoke of the pictorial card lately published by Mr. Jas. M. Crookwell, containing the portraits of the Church leaders, living and dead, which publication had been sanctioned by the First Presidency. He thought it a very admirable production, well worthy of the patronage of the people. He also referred to the "Star Course" of lectures that were to be given in the Salt Lake Theatre under the direction of Mr. Charles Ellis during the coming winter, spoke very favorably of the project and its promoter, and advised those present to attend the lectures.

BISHOP O. F. WHITNEY

asked the question, which he hoped would not be deemed superfluous, as to what constituted full fellowship in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The reason he enquired was that two kinds of recommends were now being used by the Bishop, one for members "in full fellowship," and one which did not contain those words. He wanted to know where the line should be drawn, who were worthy of a recommend of the first class and who were not?

BISHOP ELIAS MORRIS

stated that his custom was to recommend persons as in full fellowship who faithfully paid their tithing, attended their meetings and lived up to the mark of their calling and profession as Latter-day Saints. Those who were not faithful in such things might receive from him a certificate of membership for removal, but the words "in full fellowship," would be omitted.

BISHOP A. A. WOOLLEY was of the same opinion as Bishop Morris. He considered that a man who was worthy of a certificate of full fellowship for removal to another ward was worthy of a recommend to the House of the Lord. He would issue or withhold one as readily as he would another.

APOSTLE A. H. CANNON

gave expression to his views as to what class of Church members were worthy of being recommended as in full fellowship, which recommends he was satisfied, were obtained at times too readily. He thought that men and women in full fellowship should be at peace with their neighbors, that they should be keepers of the Sabbath, faithful tithesayers, prayerful, pure-hearted, zealous Latter-day Saints. Bishops ought to be careful about issuing recommends, for they could be held accountable as they permitted unworthy persons to enter holy places upon their certificates. The speaker also touched upon the ill-feeling and dissension that were prevalent among the Saints, which he deeply deplored, and earnestly exhorted those present to use their influence to promote peace and kindness among the people of their several flocks.

COUNSELOR JOSEPH E. TAYLOR

referred to the apportionment of means voted for at a special Priesthood meeting during the late general Conference for the completion of the Salt Lake Temple, and stated that pending further and more particular instructions in relation to the matter which were about to be issued, the Bishops should take time by the forelock and be getting ready to collect subscriptions for that purpose.

The meeting adjourned until the first Saturday in December.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday night, President Loomis in the chair. The councilmen in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Karrick, Hardy, Moran, Horn, Lawson, Kelly, Beardsley, Wantland, Heles, Evans—12. Absent—Simonds, Bell—2.

THE PROCEEDINGS. PETITIONS.

Henry W. Lawrence and others asked that the City Street railway be granted no further time in which to extend its line to Tenth South and West Temple streets. Committee on streets.

J. R. Montgomery asked for the appointment of a sealer of weights and measures. Referred to the mayor.

FOR AN ELECTRIC PLANT FRANCHISE.

The following petition was read and referred to the committee on improvement:

To the Mayor and City Council of Salt Lake City:

Gentlemen—The undersigned, on behalf of themselves and other business men to be associated with them, respectfully ask that a twenty-year franchise be granted to them by said city to operate an electric plant within the limits of said city for the purpose of supplying telephone service, electric light and power to the inhabitants thereof at such points and in such quantity as may be required.

If said franchise be granted, we will proceed immediately to organize a corporation for the purpose aforesaid, with sufficient capacity and capital to supply all the demands of the inhabitants of said city for telephone service, light and motive power, and we hereby promise in advance for said corporation:

First—That all machinery and construction will be of the best kind and may be erected upon the supervision of the city engineer or electrician.

Second—That the corporation will furnish a better light at from 10 to 25 per cent. less cost than is furnished by the plant now supplying the city.

Third—That it will erect smoke consumers in connection with its boilers.

Fourth—That it will place safety switches at all buildings where its light is used.

Fifth—That if so required by the City Council or city officials it will use the present poles upon which to string its wires or it will where necessary erect new poles and will wherever practicable put its wires underground.

Sixth—That it will furnish to the city at such places as the city government may determine in and about the City Hall fifty incandescent lights of sixteen candle power each, all night service and one arc light of 2000 nominal candle power during the life of said franchise.

Seventh—That it will conform in all other respects to the ordinances of Salt Lake City in reference to furnishing telephone service, light and power by electricity.

Eighth—That if the franchise granted be not accepted within thirty days after the same is granted, work begun within six months from the date of the franchise, said franchise shall be void or voidable at the option of the City Council.

C. F. ANNETT.
W. G. VAN HORNE.

CITY CREMATORY.

Beardsley offered the following:

Whereas, The city crematory is now completed and ready for the burning of garbage and animals and as there have been no provisions for the hiring of necessary labor for operating the furnace; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this council designate who shall have direct control of the operating of the crematory such as hiring of labor, purchase of fuel, necessary tools, etc., to be under the direction of the City Council.

Referred to the sanitary committee and city attorney, with power to act.

MAINTAIN THEIR DIGNITY.

An ordinance making the City Council conservators of the peace and conferring police power upon them was read a first, second and third time and then defeated on the following vote:

Noes—Beardsley, Evans, Folland, Helms, Karrick, Kelly, Loofbourou, Wantland.

Yeas—Hardy, Horn, Lawson, Moran, Rich.

WANT THEM ON SIDE.

The street committee recommended that the city engineer be instructed to have telephone poles placed on the side of the street on Sixth South street. This is the only street for some distance south that has no street car line on it, and it is the intention of the committee to make that street a boulevard. Adopted.

INSPECTOR APPOINTED.

T. J. Williams was appointed inspector of construction on the North Temple street aqueduct at a salary of $100 per month.

CURRENT STREET GRADE.

The committee on improvements reported, recommending that the petition of Messrs. Harrison, Cummings and other property owners on Currant street be granted. The petitioners proposed to level off the ground just east of Capitol grounds, and who asked that the city give them the present street, in consideration of which they would make a new street on the slope which they would fill up. Adopted.

TO GRAVEL SIXTH WEST.

The supervisor of streets was ordered to repair Sixth West street, and was instructed to call upon the Rio Grande Western Railway company to furnish the gravel in accordance with the provisions of the franchise.

SIDEWALKS ORDERED.

The committee on streets recommended that the petition of George M. Cannon that block 67, plat A, Salt Lake City survey be sidewalked, be granted.

The engineer submitted the following estimates:

East side of Second West street, between First and Second South streets, $1290 or $3 per linear or front foot.

East side of First West street, between First and Second South streets, $1995 or $3 per linear or front foot.

North side of Second South street between First and Second West streets, $2130 or $3 per linear or front foot.

South side of First South street between First and Second West streets, $1995 or $3 per linear or front foot.

Adopted, and the recorder authorized to advertise the intention of the completion of the work.

RICH WANTS INFORMATION.

Rich moved that the street supervisor deliver to this council, at its next regular meeting, the total amount of expenditure for the street department this year, giving dates and places where work has been done, the cost of each separate part of work, the amount spent in each precinct, and what work has been done by resolution of the City Council or what has been done by the street committee without resolution being passed therefor.

Wantland—I move to lay the matter on the table.

Lawson—I second the motion.

After a protracted period of uncertainty as to whether Rich could speak to the motion or not it was put and voted down.

Rich said that $90,000 had been spent on the streets; he did not object to that amount if it had been equitably distributed, but he had good reason to believe that it had not. He had learned from a reliable source that $40,000 of that amount had been spent in the First precinct where the chairman of the street committee (Mr. Wantland) lived. It was that kind of business that he objected to and intended to stop. In vain he had tried to obtain official data in relation to the matter, but obstacles had been placed in his way by paid city officers. Even Mr. Wantland himself had worked to balk him in his investigation. Unless there was an end put to such suspicious and disreputable methods, he demanded the resignation of Mr. Wantland as chairman of the committee on streets.

Wantland denied that $40,000 or any other undue proportion of the $90,000 spent on the streets had been used in the First precinct. Mr. Rich was talking for political effect. The eighth day of November was close at hand and his declarations make good campaign thunder.

Rich resented this insinuation and said he wanted it distinctly understood that he was working in the interest of fair and good government.

Evans said he didn't think it was all for political effect. He believed that it was a scratch for gravel more than anything else and should not be ignored. He knew that his precinct had been neglected and that Mr. Wantland's had been almost macadamized. He discountenanced such unfair operations.

More discussion followed after which the motion was voted down.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The following appropriations were made:

S. Gallies	$217 00
F. W. Dennis	23 00
E. Hoge	28 85
E. D. Hoge, rent	30 00
John Gabbott	26 00
Total	$350 65

UTAH'S FAIR BUILDING.

The World's Fair commission held a meeting yesterday afternoon after the NEWS had gone to press. After the transaction of some routine business, Vice-President Mackintosh submitted the following report regarding his recent visit to Chicago:

Gentlemen—Pursuant to your request I visited Chicago in company with the secretary, leaving here on the morning of Oct. 17th and arriving at Chicago on the afternoon of Oct. 19th.

I found the rooms at the Palmer house, previously engaged by the secretary, awaiting us, and I at once opened Utah headquarters. His excellency, Governor Thomas, by special invitation, was present to attend the opening exercises as the guest of the national commission, and upon his invitation the secretary and myself accepted honorary positions as members of his staff, and took an active part in the dedicatory ceremonies.

National Committeeman Lannan had preceded us, and owing to his untiring efforts every resident of Utah who called at Utah headquarters was provided with admission tickets to the ceremonies at the grounds on Oct. 21; in fact, as far as is known, no Utah resident who was present in Chicago during the dedicatory ceremonies was neglected.

Treasurer Wells was also present and rendered valuable assistance.

